QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give what ever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

Student: Q. What book is best for an understanding of the Bible?

A. Probably for the student and general reader, there is no book better than Moses Hull's recent publication, "Our Bible, Who Wrote It, When, Where and How?" It is an impartial, commonsense view and that of one who has made a life study of the Bible. The author began by accepting the scriptures as the sacred, inspired word of God, and by the critical study of the text itself, evolved to the broadest field of free thought. In this respect his work differs from that of those who, equiped with scientific learning, approach from without, and attack with the forces of destructive criticism. He works from within, outward, and if he shows partiality, the reader is conscious that he inclines to the old belief, and would have it true were it possible to sustain it. He only discards it because he finds it insupportable. The book gives the results of "higher criticism," and the voluminous investigations of German scholars, without the tedious prolixity, which almost debars the public from reading their works.

R. D. Bradley: Q. What is the organic strength of Spiritualism?

"Is Spiritualism on the increase in this country? It would seem so from the annual report of the National Spiritualists' Association of the United States and Canada, recently issued. This association was incorporated in 1893 and has its permanent headquarters in Washington. Its objects are 'the organization of the various Spiritualist societies of the United States and Canada into one general association, for the purpose of mutual aid and co-operation in benevolent, charitable, educational, literary, musical, scientific, religious and missionary purposes, and enterprises germane to the phenomena, science, philosophy and religion of Spiritualism.'

According to the annual report of this association, there are at the present time 650 local associations in the United States and Canada, 16 state associations and 52 camp-meeting associations, devoted to the interests of Spiritualism. A bona fide membership of 150,000 is claimed for these associations. The report further shows that 350 lecturers, ministers and platform mediums are now engaged in promulgating the doctrines of Spiritualism, and that "the number of psychics now before the public for various phases of phenomenal manifestations is 1,500, while some 10,000 persons utilize their mediumistic gifts in their homes." The Spiritualists have 82 churches in the United States and value their public buildings, camp-meeting property and real estate at $1,250,000.

"The foregoing figures would seem to indicate that, all things considered, Spiritualism, notwithstanding the furious attacks that have been made upon it, is not not only holding its own, but gaining ground."

Mrs. McArthur: Q. Can thoughts be photographed?

What influence has the mind over the body?

Jacob Fulmer: Q. What are the "N"-rays?

A. It has been claimed that thoughts may be indicated on the sensitized film, but the results said to have been obtained have not been readily reproduced. It may be possible, but it has by no means been proven. As the surface of the photograph films is prepared for the reception of the actinic rays only, it is not probable that they are affected by the "N"-rays, a name given to unknown vibrations, beyond the "X"-rays.

The influence of mind over the body is exceedingly great, but not as supreme as is taught by a certain school. The true statement is that during earthly life, the spirit and physical body are mutually related, and so perfectly interdependent that they appear inseparable. Sometimes the body dominates the spirit, and again the spirit is in the ascendency. If there are instances where the spirit triumphs over physical conditions as of pain and disorganizing disease, there is constantly presented cases where by disease or age the spirit is depressed, and almost completely obscured.

Eversham: Q. What is distinctively the Spiritual Idea?

A. The basic principles of what may be called the New Spiritualism, Modern Spiritualism, as distinguished from the old, may be thus presented:

That beneath all the fleeting phenomena of the world is the realm of pure spiritual energy, out of which and by force of which all existence flows. If the body of man may be likened to a fragment broken from the world of matter, so his spirit is a fragment broken from the realm of spiritual force, and enabled to sustain its identity. It is not from "matter and its attributes," but from the infinite spiritual energy that creation flows as an outward expression of an inward conception.

Modern Spiritualism is distinguished from that of the past by its acceptance of the doctrine of law; that the spiritual realm is governed by laws as fixed and determinable as those which rule physical matter. The spiritual manifestations of the past were regarded as fortuitous or dependent on the wishes of irresponsible agents and varied in degree of presentation from Divine Inspiration to witchcraft and voodooism. Modern Spiritualism utilizes all these varied and often conflicting manifestations by reference to common and fundamental principles and laws, thereby eliminating miracle, and furnishing data by which judgment may be formed. From a vast number of observations made by competent and impartial investigators, which may be verified, it accepts the statement as fully demonstrated that the intelligences which control mediums are departed friends, as they claim; spirits who once lived on earth, and who return because held by the strength of their love, or desires.

The methods of communication vary, the physical manifestations being quite distinct from the psychical. In order to have such manifestations, a medium, or sensitive, has always been held necessary. In preceding ages the seer, priest, prophet and magician stood between the spirit world and man, and religious systems were based upon their utterances, or thereby supported. There is no evidence that the greatest of these surpassed the modern medium, but there is abundant proof that the present phase, by its clear and comprehensive grasp of the whole, exceeds the past as much as chemistry does alchemy, or astronomy, astrology. A better understanding of these laws and conditions has yielded, and will continue to yield a higher, better and more trustworthy order of sensitives.

If death makes no change except of condition, the individuality being perfectly preserved, communications must be like their source, good or bad according to the moral status of the controlling spirit.

Man is a spirit, flesh-clad, and as such walks the courts of Heaven, and stands in the presence of the Universal Spirit, in earth-life, as much as he will after death. Hence the knowledge, attainments and experience of that earth-life, form his character for the future existence. As a spirit the powers of a spirit are his, incipient, but when he acquires the knowledge, capable of wonderful achievements.

The individualized spirit is the reality and highest type of creative energy It is divine, is endowed with infinite capabilities, and thereby all mankind are united in brotherhood with a common destiny. The object of Spiritualism is the complete cultivation of man, physically, intellectually, morally, spiritually.

Woman's Influence.

Louisiana has been having a local option contest and the Courier-Journal says:

"One of the most unusual features of the day was the presence of a corps of women workers at Frankfort avenue and the railroad crossing. The women wore American flags pinned in their belts and buttonholed the voters as they appeared. The women worked valiantly all day and were greatly disappointed when they learned the election in their precincts had gone against them."

The presence of women on such occasions is a feature that is growing less and less "unusual." Women realize that every political question at stake in an election concerns them more or less vitally, and if they cannot influence an election directly, they will do so indirectly.

The women who stood all day at that voting precinct are to be commended for their patriotism and good citizenship. But I wonder if they did not feel the degradation of disfranchisement as they "button-holed the voters," and begged them to vote for the interests of the home, which is "woman's sphere." Some day women will learn that the easiest, the most dignified and the most effective way of influencing politics is through the casting of a ballot, and when she once performs this act—as simple as the mailing of a letter—she will wonder that she ever opposed suffrage for women.

"IN THE WORLD CELESTIAL."

"In the World Celestial," by Dr. T. A. Bland, is a most valuable contribution to the literature of Spiritualism. It reads like a beautiful romance, and skeptics will so regard it, but the author says that it is a true record of the actual and most wonderful experiences of a well-known literary man for whose veracity he personally vouches. Accepting it as true, it verifies the proverb, "truth is stranger than fiction," and the love romances of earth are tame as compared to those enjoyed in the celestial world.

The heroine of the book, Pearl, passes from earth while yet a girl, leaving her sweetheart, Paul, to mourn her as dead. Many years pass. Paul becomes a scientist and literary man, and he is an agnostic. He is then induced to investigate spirit phenomena. Pearl appears to him. He sees and talks with her. His skepticism gives way, and his psychic powers unfold. Pearl now has him entranced by spirit chemists, and leaving his physical body he visits her in the celestial world, returning after ten days with perfect memory of all that he saw and heard in that realm of the immortals. With Pearl as his guide he visits great cities, attends grand receptions and listens to lectures, sermons and speeches by famous men of the past. After an extended tour through the heavens they visit and inspect the hells or purgatories. His descriptions of heaven are transcendently beautiful, and those of the hells are realistic and thrilling to the last degree.

With Pearl still as his guide, he spends the tenth day in a visit to earth, as a spirit. He attends two seances, witnessing trance control and also materialization from the spirit view-point. This is very interesting.

Rev. H. W. Thomas, D. D., the world-famous liberal preacher, has a brilliant introduction in the book, in which he says, "That the beautiful story given in this book, is in substance true, the author believes, and those who have known him longest and best esteem him most for his high intellectuality, integrity and nobility of purpose."

LILY DALE.

Notes of the City of Light Assembly.

Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn's discourse on Thursday, Sept. 1, was based on "The Signs of the Times," given by her audience.

In the evening the Willing Workers held their last social and sale of articles remaining from previous exhibits. Psychometrists and mediums gave volunteer readings of ten minutes each, and were all crowded with eager applicants anxious to invest a dime for what they might receive.

Sales proceeded slowly, as it was understood that everything would be "sacrificed" a little later by a celebrated auctioneer. Chairman Lillie took the new role with the same genius and aptitude with which he does everything else and the rare combination of business tact, with his usual jovial overflow of good spirits, produced a vast amount of merriment as one by one the curious wares passed under his dexterous hammer, carrying promised luck to the purchaser and the coveted coin in unexpected measure to the coffers of the Willing Workers. Mrs. Cadwallader, president protem, read a most flattering report of the season's work.

On Friday evening at six o'clock they served an old-fashioned New England boiled dinner, which was generously patronized by the hungry multitude and pronounced a decided success in as much as everything in the line of eatables was disposed of.

Friday was Grand Lyceum Day, and given over exclusively to the children. Mrs. Tillie Reynolds, state superintendent, Mrs. Cadwallader of Philadelphia, together with Mrs. Peterson and Miss Green of the City of Light conducted the exercises.

Mr. Barber of Titusville and Mrs. Moore of Buffalo, made stirring speeches in behalf of the work in which all Spiritualists should be interested. Miss Green talked of the need of co-operation on the part of parents and the encouraging success that had attended the efforts of Mrs. Peterson and herself during the summer season here. Conneaut and East Aurora were also represented.

Mrs. Cadwallader and Fannie Allyn spoke entertainingly to the children. An interesting letter from John W. Ring of Galveston, Texas, was read, full of valuable suggestions and a desire to co-operate in the most effectual way and by the adoption of wisest methods for carrying forward the lyceum work, and the education of the children.

Mr. Ring fills the position of National Superintendent and is editor of The Progressive Lyceum, a bright little paper which was liberally distributed among the children and read with interest by the older ones. Thanks to Mr. Ring.

The march of the children and teachers around the grounds, carrying beautiful flags and banners, and led by the brass band, was a pleasing feature of the occasion. It is hoped that another year arrangements will be made at an early date for a grand convention of lyceums from different cities—a demonstration that will not only afford encouragement to present workers, but exert an influence in favor of greater effort on the part of societies where lyceums do not already exist.

An entertainment was given by the children in the evening, under the direction of Mrs. Cadwallader and Mrs. Allyn, and the little folks astonished and delighted their audience by the quality and variety of their remarkable productions. Money was contributed to give them a treat of ice cream and cake on the following day, which was greatly enjoyed and duly appreciated.

The dance in the evening, the last of the season, under the auspices of Profs. Lillie and Zebley, was a joyful occasion, and largely attended by people from the outside.

On Sunday morning a beautiful revolutionary picture of Betsy Ross making the first American flag, daintily framed by President Pettengill, was presented to the lyceum by Mrs. Cadwallader, and formally received by Miss Green, our lyceum teacher, who invited Mrs. Allyn to voice her acceptance, which was most eloquently done. An American flag was used for veiling the picture, and after it was removed, an old soldier in the front row, asked the people to rise and salute the flag, and every heart responded while the stirring strains of the "Star Spangled Banner" from the orchestra, floated out on the still morning air.

Miss Edna Grant, who has been very generous with her songs, and who has a voice of exquisite sweetness, favored us with two solos.

Subjects presented for Mrs. Allyn's lecture were "Reincarnation," "The Origin of the Soul," "The Aura Which Surrounds Us," and "Conditions Existing Between Mortals and Spirits." After a poetical invocation she handled the different subjects in a manner surprising and satisfactory, with great versatility of thought along the varying lines. Her subjects for improvisation were "Red, White and Blue," "Betsy Ross," "The Newsboys," and "Patriotism," all of which were dexterously combined and rhymed in magical fashion to the great delight of her listeners.

Sunday afternoon a flute solo was the prelude to Mr. Wright's lecture and the sweet bird-like notes will echo long in our memory. The speaker dealt with "The Value of Phenomena in Spiritualism."

On Sunday night the crowds, who went to the station to say good-bye to the outgoing multitude, mingled glad anticipation of reunion another year with their farewells and robbed them of their sadness. Returning at the sound of the auditorium bell, a goodly congregation gathered for the final love feast. Mr. Lillie presided and gave a general invitation to all who had a parting word to say, to come to the platform, to which the friends readily responded. Heartfelt recognition of the services of our new chairman, and the deepest appreciation of the efforts of President Pettengill whica had led up to the splendid success in every department of the work, was voiced by every speaker. It was the general verdict that this had been the happiest and most satisfactory season ever enjoyed at Lily Dale. That every possible endeavor should be made to strengthen and sustain our worthy president, not only by a concentration of good wishes and sympathetic thoughts but with financial support as well.

President Pettengill came forward with her soul shining in her countenance and thanked the friends for the spirit of loyalty and devotion so universally expressed, and for their hearty coperation in the labors that had achieved such satisfactory results. Frequent and prolonged applause greeted her remarks and her friends realized that with all her extreme modesty she has splendid ability to talk to audience.

Chairman Lillie conveyed his gratitude to the people by the expression of similar sentiments, and while he claimed that the gift of talking was centered in the other half of his family, his experience here clearly proves that there is not a hopeless monopoly in that direction, and that Brother Lillie is thoroughly equiped for the responsible position he fills with so much credit to himself and to the association.

The Monday morning train for Buffalo was late and the happy throng gathered at the station improved the delay with an ovation, a general expression of popular homage to C. Fannie Allyn, who had suddenly become a public favorite following her short week of activity at the City of Light.

The season of 1904 has ended. The great bed of cardinal geraniums bloom just as brilliantly, the snowy lilies in rich profusion send out their subtle odors and fill the atmosphere with a delightful fragrance; the mammoth hydrangias are at the meridian of their perfect beauty; the birds sing in the branches overhead, the sun shines and the air is soft and balmy, but the preachers and teachers have vanished, the auditorium is empty, the musicians and children have gone. The rustic seats are vacant, the grounds are deserted, and a sense of solitude and loneliness broods over the place. Only the memories remain. Blessed memories of the truths to which we have listened, of the brief season of nearness to hearts that were dear, and these will abide through all the years to come.

"The Present Age and Inner Life; Ancient and Modern Mysteries Classified and explained." By Andrew Jackson Davis. We have a few copies of this work by the celebrated seer. Cloth, $1.10.

Chesterfield Camp.

On the morning of August 5 my son Byron, daughter Lillian and myself boarded the train for camp, and after a five hours' ride through beautiful country scenery arrived in camp and after locating in a cozy two-room new cottage in a quiet but convenient location, took in the situation.

It had been ten years since I occupied the platform there and marvelous changes had taken place. A large, finely-ventilated auditorium had been built, with good accoustic qualities and seating an immense crowd, and on Sundays it was more than filled with people from far and near. On one Sunday I was informed twenty-seven hundred passed through the gate and many jumped the fence at various points.

The big crowds were perfectly orderly and I was told that without a policeman or watchman no theft had ever been committed there, showing that as you trust men they become trustworthy.

The president everyone looked up to—they had to—he was six feet and a half tall. Judge Mock was dignified when presiding, but a jolly good fellow when off the platform or "fiddling" for an impromptu dance. He said he was not a violinist, but "simply a fiddler." They had an orchestra play for the regular dances, camp dance Tuesday evening, public dance on Thursday evening, which were largely attended.

The secretary, Mrs. Jessup, was a worker, superintending nearly everything in a pleasing manner. The boarding-house was well kept.

Mrs. Gillespie was an all-round worker and the society showed wisdom in engaging her for the season. Beside her able lectures, she took charge of the lyceum and conducted it on new lines, teaching physical culture, facial and voice expression and general deportment, as well as intellectual cultivation. There were over sixty children enrolled, I was told. It met every morning at nine o'clock.

She also had charge of the weekly entertainments, which were good, especially the "old-time concert," in costume, which was most excellent, ending with the Virginia reel.

The conferences were held at 10:30, at which were discussed the various practical questions of the day. Father Mendenhall was usually present, and added much to the interest of the discussions.

There were a greater number of mediums on the ground that I ever knew at any one camp, and a most unusual and delightful harmony seemed to prevail among them. I heard good reports of their work.

I only had one sitting which was with a trumpet medium. I had never attended a trumpet seance, as all I had been cognizant of required darkness and I dislike dark seances; but Maggie Vestal gave them in the light. I engaged a family sitting; we had perfect daylight. Maggie held the large end of the trumpet on the palm of her hand, the small end was at my ear. The first one coming was Dr. Sterar who was president of the Onset Bay camp the many years I spoke there. He talked of the old days of our work and on occasions would laugh a loud ha! ha! My daughter having heard some claim it was ventriloquism, closely watching her lips which did not move, remarked, "No one can laugh like that without opening the mouth." Various spirits talked with me, finally my mother, and I asked her, "Who has joined you recently?" She replied, "Abbie, and she wishes to talk to you." Abbie was a sister of whose transition I had received news only the day previous. She then spoke in a weak voice—the others could be heard in any part of the room. I said to her, "I am surprised at your coming so soon, not believing these things possible." She replied, "Mother told me and helped me come. I want my jewelry divided between Mary and Eliza." Her daughter and niece who had been her companion from childhood. She continued, "Poor James, he sits there so lonely." This was her aged and feeble husband. I had mentioned the matter to no one. I might write much of this truly wonderful seance.

The platform tests were good, given by Marian Carpenter, and her lectures pleasing. Maggie Waite is well known and always does good work. Frank Ripley gave fewer but more terse and direct. He acted as chairman in the president's absence with good acceptance and was a very useful all around man on the platform. Of it he was a big boy, not "old boy." Moses and Mattie Hull spent a day there working for the Pratt Institute. Of their success I did not learn. I also listened to the lectures of Harry Moore and was delighted to observe his growing radical tendencies. His lectures evinced study, sincerity and a braver spirit than many possess. He is a growing young man with a pleasing personality. Mr. Colville spoke the last day of our sojourn, but I need not speak of him. All Spiritualists know him. He is himself a spiritual phenomenon.

I was employed to fill a vacancy on the platform and also held a reception in the auditorium which the campers seemed to enjoy. I answered questions from the audience after they had listened to songs by Lillian and Byron's recitation of some of the poems both spiritual and comic selected from his new booklet, "Fun and Philosophy in Verse," which created a big demand for it.

JULIET H. SEVERANCE, M. D.

Chicago, Ill.

MR. AND MRS. E. W. SPRAGUE.

N. S. A. Missionaries' Report for July and August, 1904.

During July we visited Clyde, Delphos, Van Wert and Southworth, Ohio; also Jackson, Rockford and Snowflake, Mich.

We organized two good societies, one at Clyde, Ohio., with Mrs. A. B. French as president and Miss Kittie Grover, secretary; the other one at Delphos, Ohio, Mr. A. C. Pratt, president, and Jessie Pratt, secretary. Both societies have first-class officers and the membership is composed of earnest Spiritualists. These societies will grow strong and become permanently established if they are properly cared for by the state association.

The N. S. A. missionaries should not be expected to become responsible for the continued growth of the societies they organize. The state associations should attend to that, and have state missionaries and state officers visit them often to encourage them.

The Ohio State Association, through our efforts, has two more good societies, and ten dollars charter fees added to its treasury, free of cost.

At Van Wert the weather was extremely warm and the audience consequently small. Mrs. J. W. Dull, the president of this society, did all she could to help us make the meetings a success.

At Southworth, O., the meetings were well attended, a lively interest was created and much good accomplished.

At Jackson, Mich., we held two meetings with the society presided over by Dr. Julia M. Walton. Only a small audience greeted us in the afternoon, but in the evening a fair-sized audience was present. The society had adjourned its meetings for the summer and many Spiritualists were out of the city, some attending camps and some at other summer resorts, which of course made our audiences smaller than usual. This society is doing a good work for the cause and is loyal to our organization.

We arrived at Snowflake, Mich., July 30, and the opening services at this camp-meeting were held by us on the following day. The weather was fine and considering the fact that this was the opening day of this year's session, and that it is the youngest camp in the state, we were pleased with the good audiences that were present at both meetings.

Snowflake camp is located on the west shore of Central Lake, which is a beautiful sheet of water some eight or nine miles in length. The camp ground is between Central Lake and Bellaire, three miles from the former and five miles from the latterplace, and about thirty miles south of the city of Petoskey.

The Pere Marquette railroad stops its trains right at the grounds. The steamboats, naptha launches, etc., stop at the camp dock. It is a beautiful spot. One part of the grove was once a nursery and is filled with ornamental trees set in rows. Another part of the grounds, next to the lake, has a natural grove which will greatly add to the beauty of the grounds when the trees are trimmed and the underbrush removed.

The climate is lovely at the time of year that the camp-meetings are held. When people in the south are sweltering with the heat, everybody is comfortable at Snowflake. Hay fever is unknown in this part of the country. Thousands of people visit Petoskey and other resorts in this part of the state to avoid this dreadful disease.

This camp-meeting is a needed factor in the work of Spiritualism; it has a large territory from which to draw its patronage. There are no other camps within two hundred miles of it. This camp-meeting should be well patronized by the people of the northern part of Michigan and from the great cities of the south, and it will be, more and more, as the people become acquainted with it, and the camp improvements are made to take care of all that may come. Anyone wishing to know more about this camp-meeting can get particulars by addressing Mrs. Ruth Eastman, secretary, Mancelona, Mich.

The first Sunday in August we began filling our engagement at Vicksburg camp-meeting where we met many dear friends who are faithful workers for the success of this camp. We have filled engagements at this camp-meeting from time to time for years and can truly say it is one of the real Spiritual camps. It is presided over by that energetic, thorough-going and spiritual woman, Miss Jeannette Fraser, who is the whole thing—president, secretary, treasurer, and the full board of trustees combined in one little body weighing less than one hundred pounds. She is a decided success in filling all of these offices, as the success of this camp-meeting proves.

Vicksburg has advantages that some other camp-meetings have not, viz., it is located at the crossing of the Grand Trunk and the Grand Rapids & Indiana railroads, and the G. R. & I. railroad runs Sunday excursions from Kalamazoo to the camp grounds. One Sunday there was one thousand people on the grounds and the following Sunday the number exceeded that. Taken altogether this was one of the most successful meetings.

We next visited Haslett Park where we filled a six-days' engagement. We have also served this camp association for several seasons and know something of the great work it has accomplished. It has had its adversities and its successes, and we are glad to say that it now has brighter prospects before it than it has had of late. Arrangements have been completed whereby the association has come into possession of the west half of the park and all the buildings on the old ground. They own it in fee simple and free from debt. Streets are being laid out, lots leased for building cottages. Buildings will be moved and other improvements made. Another year we may look for a transformation of Haslett Park. New enthusiasm has taken possession of the old veterans of this camp, and the results will surely be beneficial to the cause of Spiritualism.

August 20, found us at the Ashley camp-meeting, where we filled an engagement of two Sundays and week days intervening. This was the fourth consecutive season that we have served this camp association. We thoroughly enjoyed meeting dear friends each year many of whom were the pioneer workers in the camp at Ashley. This association, like Haslett Park, has never been favored much by the railroad companies. No train stops at Ashley on Sundays, and consequently the attendance is not as large as it should be.

The grove is beautiful and the auditorium is one of the finest in the state. There is a mineral well on the grounds, the water of which has good medicinal qualities. People come many miles for it. This camp-meeting should supply the spiritual philosophy to thousands each Sunday, where now it furnishes it to hundreds. There is an electric line survey across the camp grounds and it is said its building is assured. When it is completed it will open a direct line from Columbus which is only thirty miles from the city of Ashley. This camp, like others that have an electric line, will then be a greater success.

The reader will easily see by the foregoing statement of facts that all of these camp-meetings are doing excellent work for our cause and that there is much promise of a still greater work for them in the future. Each of the above named camps has a camp society chartered with the state association, which shows they are loyal to our organization.

Evidence is plentiful that our cause is growing, that our organization is becoming more thoroughly established; that the wheat is being sifted from the chaff, and Spiritualism is being accepted and applied more and more each successive year.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

Harlow P. Smith of Northampton township, while at work Monday afternoon on a straw stack at Harry Carter's at McArthur's corners, dropped over dead, aged 79. He was a man of more than ordinary ability and well read. Conversant on almost any subject and a fluent talker. His friends were legion and he will be greatly missed by all who knew him.

The deceased was an old and able Spiritualist, having accepted its truths over fifty years ago. The funeral was held at his home, September 1, Mrs. Marian Carpenter of Detroit officiating. The address was beautifully consoling to the mourner, aspiring to the believer and hopeful to the unbeliever. The floral offerings were beautiful and profuse. O. M'ARTHUR.

Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio.

Mrs. Wellington W. Payne, aged 51 years passed to higher life from her home, Ashtabula, Ohio, on July 26, 1904, after a long illness. She was one of Ashtabula's most noble women and a devoted wife and mother, and has only gone on before to await the coming of her loved ones.

She was a true Spiritualist and will be greatly missed by all. The comforting lines that came to the bereaved husband as he stood by her casket was a great solace to all those that had embraced the knowledge, and to those that lived on faith without the knowledge made inquiries as to the source they came, as they were read and explained by the writer, who officiated. The deceased leaves to mourn her loss, a husband, son and daughter, six brothers and two sisters.

MRS. CARRIE FIRTH CURRAN.

Passed to spirit life, at his home, 1326 Rebecca street, Allegheny City, William Carson, on Saturday morning, Aug. 27. He was a true and earnest Spiritualist. The funeral services were held in the home of the deceased on Tuesday evening with an attendance of about 700. The services were conducted by Rev. G. Clinton Day of the First Spiritualist Church of Allegheny. Subject: "If there is a spirit body, there is life, and if there is life, there is intelligence, and a communicative force." Mr. Day's discourse was grand and opened the eyes of many of the church people, and made many converts to Spiritualism.

T. W. PRICHARD.

Pittsburg, Pa.

Passed to spirit life, Mrs. Sylvina L. Woodard, wife of Oliver Woodard. She was born at Guilford, Me., Sept 26, 1824. She and her husband investigated Spiritualism soon after the Rochester rappings and have been firm believers ever since. F. W.

Margaret L. Dorris, a devout Spiritualist, passed to spirit life, at her home in Lewiston, Idaho, August 5, age 51 years. She had been a firm believer in the truths of Spiritualism for thirty years.

Mr. Horace Bigelow passed to the life beyond, Aug. 15, at the ripe old age of 80 years. He was one of the pioneers and promoters of the town of Shepherd, Mich. He was held in high regard by all who knew him. A Methodist said to the writer that he was a good man and a kind neighbor. What more can be said of any man. He was an ardent Spiritualist for fifty years, and derived much comfort from its beautiful philosophy. He leaves a wife and four children, to mourn his demise. They will feel the loss of a loving father and affectionate husband. Services were conducted by the writer.

MRS. MARIAN CARPENTER.

Asahl Powers has passed to spirit life. He may be justly classed as one of Michigan's pioneers, having been a resident of the state sixty-six years. He was well known and highly esteemed throughout the entire community. His life having been one characterized by kindliness and fair dealing with his fellow-men. He had been for many years an ardent Spiritualist and found it a great consolation in the gathering twilight of old age. The funeral services were held in Union Hall, at Scotts, and was one of the largest in town for many years. Peter Johnson of Battle Creek, officiated, assisted by C. E. Dent of Vicksburg. C. E. Good News for Hay-Fever and Asthma Sufferers.

We are glad to announce that the Kola Plant, recently discovered on the Congo River, West Africa, has proved itself a sure cure for Hay-Fever and Asthma as claimed at the time. We have received the testimony of ministers of the gospel, doctors, business men and farmers, all speaking of the marvelous curative power of this new discovery.

Rev. F. F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist, Abilene, Tex., was permanently cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma after eight years suffering. Miss D. A. Roff, Mowequa, Ills., writes May 23rd, was cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma after several years suffering although physicians said a cure was impossible. Hundreds of others give similar testimony.

The Progressive Thinker.

It Leads In All Things That Pertain to Spiritualism and Psychic Laws.

Unparalleled Prosperity Has Marked Its Course for Fifteen Years

A TWENTIETH CENTURY WONDER.

A Spirit Materialization Under Most Extraordinary Circumstances.

To the Editor:—In your headlines to the article by Eva A. Cassell, you say that Spiritualists generally want nothing but the truth. This is just what I want. In response to that article I wish to say that in my experience and efforts to fathom the mysteries and manifestations of psychic phenomena, I have not been defrauded by any phase of mediumship, except, perhaps, in that of pretended clairvoyance, by traveling impostors who were using such gifts, either genuine or pretended, for the sole purpose of getting money, just as other people in other lines of money-getting use their special qualifications for that same purpose. I may be one of those "Old gray-headed men in my second childhood who yearn for the embrace of a lovely female form."

If I am, I am not conscious of having a single, solitary yearn. Why should I when there are many lovely women in the earthly form, and younger by many years than I, whose loving sympathy and gracious kindness are generously bestowed upon me now in near to my seventieth year, and who fain would be to me sweethearts or wives, were I to ask them, yet in all my life I never have by word or thought suggested any impropriety.

And yet, when I have been alone, in the quiet of midnight, I have been suddenly awakened from sound sleep, in a room the door of which was locked, and only two other people beside myself were in the house, and those were in a lower chamber entirely disconnected from the one in which I slept, and they much older than I, when a beautiful, lovely spirit (without any warning or premonition, and most certainly without any auto-suggestion) of a dear girl whom I had known in my young manhood, before my going away into the army of 1861, came on a cold winter night and materialized under the covering of my couch, took my right hand in hers and carried it over her living form so that I held her in my embrace; then putting both her arms about my neck drew my face closely up to her own and kissed me time after time; and this in response to my request to her that I made instantly on awakening, to come and kiss me, as it was my last request to her when I bade her "Good Bye," on going away to the war.

This was not a solitary instance, but is in a manner often repeated, even when I have been far away from the busy haunts of men, traveling by stage or train, in open wagon in severe snow storms in the high mountains of the north-west. Perhaps your correspondent cannot believe this.

I could not without having had the actual experience, and until this experience I could not have believed it true if anyone else had told me that such had been their experience. Hence, I say that I could not believe such stories even in the life of Jesus had not such things come to me. Perhaps your correspondent, as others do, believe in these stories that are related of Jesus, and if they are true, what do they prove?

Only this: that Jesus was a psychic, a medium, a sensitive through whose unusual psychic powers and physical organism the spirit of the old prophet Elias, and perhaps many others manifested.

How infinitely more comforting it would have been for him had it been the spirit of a lovely maiden. I would not exchange the thrilling ecstacy and the soulful happiness of those few moments, nor the sweet recollection of them for all the gold in the United States mints.

This was real, genuine materialization, a conscious being, possessing a soul of love attracted to me through the law of soul-love, that I feel very certain prevails and obtains in the spirit realm and through the life immortal.

Jesus in his earth life was first simply a child of earthly parents, coming into life under the same rule and law of nature that has brought us all into the earth life. There never has been any exception to this law. If there has been, then it disproves the law of nature.

Then he as boy, and man living the life of a recluse, the very best life to develop his psychic powers of clairvoyance, clairaudience, and fine materializations. He lived in an unscientific age and among an unscientific people. He looked up to and worshiped (as was common in that day among the Jewish people) a spirit. In his case it was the spirit of the the old prophet Elias. He thought it was God, and undoubtedly expected that spirit or that God to save him in his last extremity, and when the crucial test came and death was inevitable, he called (Eli! Eli! lama sabachthani), Elias! Elias! why hast thou forsaken me?

Perhaps Eva Cassell yet says with all so-called Christian denominations, that his trial and death was only the fulfillment of the law in establishing the "great plan of salvation." I say that it was a crime, a great wrong against this "just man," and yet it was only what might have been expected in that day and age of the world, for even yet there are those in the Christian denominations who would fain put me to death for entertaining the thoughts and beliefs which are a part of my life.

What do we hear from the pulpits?

Only last February I sat in a church and heard a priest tell his congregation that because of "Adam's fall" all mankind sinned, and would be lost—all damned to eternal torture had it not been that God thought of a plan of salvation."

This is the plan as told by the priest: "That God would create a woman who was to be perfectly pure; and so he created Mary, who was to become the mother of Jesus." And how did he create her? By causing a woman to bear a child which should have no earthly parent, except a mother (no father, mind), the concept of God in the womb of a woman, and this God-conceived child was Mary, who was blessed in this way above all women, and yet not proud of her celestial parentage and birth. She married a carpenter, only a carpenter, who became the father of Jesus, and through him the father of God. Does any one believe this story who has ten grains of scientific sense? It is the silliest kind of twaddle, and yet the whole Christian and sectarian world profess to believe it.

I do not. It is simply a rehash of the old tradition that has come down from ages more than six thousand years anterior to the time of Jesus.

The story of the double incarnation and immaculate conception of the God of the Buddhists, the Buddha of ancient mythology, brought down through pagan times and engrafted on to Christianity through the influence of a survivor of pagan history, the Romish church.

PAUL DESTEN.

Great men are the true men, the men in whom nature has succeeded.—Anon.

Nothing can bring you peace but the triumph of principles.—Emerson.

I say that no man can be greater than the man who actually sacrifices his life for the good of others. No man can be greater than the one who meets death face to face, and yet will not shrink from what he believes to be his highest duty.—Ingersoll.

Like children who are sorely disappointed when they discover that Santa Claus is but a myth, so it is with those who find their long-cherished dogma to be no more real; yet but a short time elapses and neither would return to his old belief.—H. C. Morse.

IMPORTANT.

Owing to the fact that the courts have in every case decided against Psychic Healers who advertise to cure the sick without drugs, where the case has been between the U. S. government and a Healer (deciding that it is a clear case of intent to defraud) to advertise to diagnose also, without leading symptoms being given, Therefore I have decided, as a physician in good standing, to not advertise my gift of Psychic Healing, but will diagnose disease and not ask a fee for so doing. Awake! Arise, Ye Spiritualists!

There is work for you to do for your cause. The camp meeting season is over now, and while you are imbued with the divine inspiration of the soul harmony infused by your "closer walk with God" (the spirit) in the beautiful woods, by the hand-to-hand and soul-to-soul greeting with old friends upon both spheres of life, and by all the new and elevating things you saw, heard and sensed, now is the time to let your radiant enthusiasm beam upon your fellowmen. The Progressive Thinker, in the meantime, has been extremely busy and has nothing to be ashamed of, nothing to regret. It has been endeavoring to raise the standard of true mediumshp, of higher education and unadulterated Spiritualism, that we may stand abvoe all other religions in the confidence of the world. The Progressive Thinker is the paper for thinking Spiritualists, for Spiritualists who love the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. Such Spiritualists will keep posted in passing events, in the trend of Spiritual and Occult thought throughout the world, by reading The Progressive Thinker, and in no other way. Now, we advise all to look out for our Fall and Winter Campaign, which has commenced in earnest. It will be of thrilling interest! It will raise you to a higher altitude, and give you a better conception of the grandeur of Spiritualism. Now is the time to send in your subscription. Call your neighbor's attention to the paper, thus enabling him to keep up with the advancing procession by reading its columns.

HERE ARE PROBLEMS

For Spiritualists and Non-Spiritualists to Solve.

To the Editor:—Spiritualists as a class are the most progressive people in the world. They are found on the picket line of every reform movement. At least that has been so for fifty years. I think the same may be said of them in the future. I wish, in this article, to present some statistics, and call the attention of Spiritualists to the industrial situation and ask what is their remedy for certain troubles that seem to be impending.

About the time Modern Spiritualism was born a marvelous age of invention was ushered in. Since that time improved machinery has increased the productivity of labor forty fold. The late Mr. Gladstone said: "By the aid of machinery the manufacturing power of the world doubles every seven years."

During the past fifty years the machinery of England performed the work of 700,000,000 men, as they worked a century ago.

According to the census reports of the United States, the aggregate manufacturing power in 1900 was 11,300,081 horse power, as compared to 2,000,000 horse power in 1870.

The late Senator Hanna said: "The production in the United States is one-third larger than our consumption."

Senator Chauncey Depew, in 1900, said: "The American people produce $2,000,000,000 worth more than they consume, and to find foreign market for the surplus production of all civilized countries, is why the guns are thundering at foreign gates."

Discussing this subject Professor Huxley said: "If this wonderful productivity of wealth is not to be used in bettering the condition of the working people, but is to continue to pour into the pockets of the rich, then I would hail the advent of some kind of comet that would sweep the whole thing away."

Quite recently, Thos W. Lawson, late partner of John and William Rockefeller, says that in one single deal last year, they made a profit of $39,000,000.

Now let us inquire how the working people are prospering. According to the most reliable statistics it is found that the annual average product of each worker is $2,450, while the average wage he receives is but $437. Since 1897 necessaries of life have advanced thirty-nine per cent while wages have advanced but ten per cent. To get $1 for himself, the worker must create $6 worth of value.

A statistician who has made a patient investigation of economic conditions the past fifty years, says: "In 1850 the total wealth of the United States was $8,000,000,000. The producers' share was 62½ per cent. The non-producers' share was 37½ per cent. In 1900 the total wealth was $100,000,000,000. The producers' share is ten per cent; the non-producers' ninety per cent. Dr. Spahr says: 'One per cent of the American people own 54 per cent of all the wealth.' According to the abstract of the 12th census, there are 16,000,000 families in the United States; of these 8,365,000 families own no homes, while 4,700,000 families live in mortgaged homes."

DURING THIS FIFTY YEARS CRIME HAS INCREASED 600 PER CENT AND INSANITY 700 PER CENT.

Rabbi Hirsch, the able orator of Chicago, alluding to the great wealth of the few and the poverty of the many, said: "The powerful of earth should realize that we are in the midst of the same conditions that existed in France which brought on the revolution. The rich and powerful classes in France refused to take warning from what was going on about them, and relied upon the power which they fancied they had. The revolution came like the eruption of a volcano and we in America should take warning. Right now we are standing over a volcano which may burst forth with all the fury of a Pelee."

Now, Mr. Editor, in the face of the facts above given, is it not about time for Spiritualists and all other lovers of peace and humanity to be casting about for a solution of this problem of capital and labor, which is at out very doors for adjustment? Now I venture to say that it were better for nations to do fuller justice to the working man in the matter of compensation for his labor, instead of building great warships with which to bombard other nations that we may create a market for our surplus goods. Let us go to-work and establish a co-operative state and nation in which the people collectively, shall own the public utilities, and the workers with hand or head in all honest industries, shall enjoy the full product of their toil. There is danger to this republic not far away, unless the progressive people, the humanitarian people, bestir themselves and inject more of the co-operative, brotherhood spirit into our industrial and political system.

"Am I my brother's keeper?"

Yes, you are and you will rise or fall as your brother rises or falls.

Spiritualism and the inventive era came into the world at the same time. They were heaven-sent. Spiritualism lifted a load of religious superstition from the minds of the people. Improved machinery was intended to lift the worker from physical drudgery, but it has not done it because scheming speculators have got control of the machine, and the few reap the benefit intended for all. The law of evolution is pushing us hard. It demands that the nations adjust themselves to the new conditions. If we refuse to do it, existing systems of government and economies will be ground to powder and civilization will be sent back that the people may learn anew the lessons of life.

"Let the nation own the trusts." Let the two billions of surplus be distributed back to the people who created it. Let fierce, selfish competition cease, and co-operation be adopted. Instead of the motto, "Every fellow for himself and may the devil take the hindmost," let us emblazon on our national banners, "An injury to one is the concern of all." If we do this, strikes, and bloodshed, and war will cease, and the celestial messengers will again greet us bringing glad tidings of great joy to all the world.

This is not alone an industrial question. It is a moral, an ethical question also. It is of little use to preach to those who are hungry and naked and their children crying for bread.

As long as the majority of men will cringe to the very earth before some petty prince or king, what must be the infinite abjectness of their little souls in the presence of their supposed creator and God?—Ingersoll.

Have courage to use thine own understanding; become a man; cease to trust thyself to the guidance of others.—Kant.

Prayer is a confession that God does not know what he should do, or that he is not willing to do it without being asked. If God made this world he ought to know enough to run it without the help of man—M. Babcock.

What we call moral feeling has its origin in the social instincts or habits which each human (or animal) society develops, and must develop within itself, if it is not to perish by its own incapacity. Morality, therefore, is evolved from sociability, or the faculty for living in a community, and it changes according as the particular idea or necessities of any given society changes.—Buchner.

SPIRITUALISM IS A TRUTH.

"One truth is clear--whatever is, is right." Pope.

"Let us make truth catching instead of falsehood and disease." Ingersoll.

"Truth depends on, or is only arrived at by a legitimate deduction from all the facts which are truly material." Coleridge.

"Truth bears the torch in the search for truth." Lucretius.

Let us love our cause and dare to advocate its truth and decry fraud. If we have the pure it cannot be destroyed in the crucible of reason and fair discussion. It will only thrive, and expand more rapidly.

TRUTH IS IMPERISHABLE.

"My mouth shall speak the truth." Prov. viii., 7.

"To have truth and not live it is like having lungs and refusing to breathe."

"However unwillingly a person who has a strong opinion may admit the possibility that his opinion may be false, he ought to be moved by the consideration that however true it may be, if it is not fully frequently, and fearlessly discussed it will be held as a dead dogma, not a living truth." John Stuart Mill.

GUIDED BY SPIRITS.

Warned Not to Sell Mine, But to Await Arrival of Stranger, Who Duly Came to Develop Property.

"When the spirits knock, ignore them not, for they have some great message for you."

Never will J. M. McMichael, a wealthy mine owner of this city, forget these words, for some day he believes they will be worth several million dollars to him.

Early in the afternoon of last Saturday he was sitting in his room at 1709 Welton street, idly smoking a cigar and thinking over matters in regard to his mining property, which was in a perplexing condition, when he heard a voice close to his ear say: "The spirits have some great message for you. Ignore them not."

The voice was so realistic that Mr. McMichael began looking for some friend who might have slipped into the room and played a joke upon him, but finding no one and thinking that perhaps he had imagined the voice, he returned to his chair. Again in a muffled, low tone the words were repeated, and being by this time thoroughly curious to know the meaning of it all, he started forth to visit a medium.

This he did, and the story told him by the sorceress has come to be the wonder of himself and all his friends. For some time the finances of the Mammoth mine at Idaho Springs have been in perilous circumstances and it was feared that it would have to be sold to meet the demands of creditors. This Mr. McMichael had just about decided to do, but the sorceress said: "You are about to sell the Mammoth mine, but do not do it. There is a man on his way now to see you about it and he will aid you sufficiently in regard to it so that you will not have to. Wait for him, as he will be here soon. The Mammoth mine some day in the near future will be very valuable and the proceeds to be got from it will mount into the millions. The man coming to you is extremely tall and it is in him that your salvation and the salvation of the mine lies."

Early the next morning he received a telegram saying: "Meet me at the train at 7:30 o'clock to-morrow morning. Am on my way to Idaho Springs. William F. Davis."

In due time Mr. McMichael appeared at the depot and there met the man who for the past three days has been a great source of curiosity to Denver people. He measured six feet, six inches in the stocking feet, and is said to possess the finest physique of any man in the country. He lives in St. Joseph, Mo., where he is a wealthy cattle dealer.

Another strange feature is brought into the story by the fact that Mr. Davis suddenly had the desire to invest in mines, and learning of the great Mammoth mine, decided to come to Denver to see its owner on the day that Mr. McMichael visited the sorceress. Together the two men went to Idaho Springs, put the mine in good running order, and now they are waiting for the other end of the story to develop.—Denver (Col.) Post.

A VERITABLE WITCH.

The Bell Witch Mystery Regarded as True.

To the Editor:—The reading of the "Bell Witch Mystery" in your issue of August 27, calls to mind some things my mother used to tell. She was a native of Cornwall, Vt., and if alive now would be 97 years old. Her younger days were about the time of the above mystery. She remembered the witch well. She used to be a frequent visitor at her father's home. It was said she bewitched a girl, a near neighbor's child. In the morning the girl would be tired and listless; said she had been riding a broomstick all over the country, and was tired. Sometimes when she had a spell on, she would strike her hands together, and have a handful of pins that were black, as if they had been burned. Mother had some of them for a long time, but they were all gone before my time. The witch would come to her father's and sit before the fire—a big fireplace—and tell the visitors they would have the next day; how many in all and how many children; also describe the conveyance they would come in; how many horses and their color—everything, in fact, and it would all come true.

One time two loads of hay were going by and on perfectly level ground, when they both, with no cause perceptible, tipped over. All the people about there knew the witch so well, they always said she was the cause.

Another time the young people got up a sleigh-ride to go to a certain place for a dance. The witch did not like some of them, and said they would not go. They all started in good shape, but a short distance out their horses refused to pass a certain place, and they could not get them by, and had to turn around and go home. The witch moved to another part of the state, and some years after it was reported she had died, and the bewitched girl got well and became as any other person. There were many more things she used to tell.

To the Friends of Amelia Colby Luther.

We feel that it will be interesting to the friends of Amelia C. Luther to know that the ladies of Camp Chesterfield and Muncie are making an effort to raise a fund with which to purchase a stone to mark the resting-place of her remains at Muncie. At present the sexton is the only person who can locate the grave. It is not the design of the ladies to purchase anything elaborate, but merely a small stone or marker, bearing her name, date of birth and death. We will be pleased to have any of her friends contribute such sums as they may deem best, which will be thankfully received. Miss Susan Mong, 825 W. Adams street, Muncie Ind., will receive all sums, and hold until a stone is selected.

MRS. L. W. MURPHY.

A LETTER FROM MISS ELIZABETH HARLOW.

To the Friends at Large:—The summer is over and we are all commencing our winter's work. I began my camp season in New England, at dear little Camp Niantic, where a few true and tried keep the lamp of progress burning. From there I came steadily west, stopping at Lily Dale, Chesterfield, Ashley and Clinton, which closed the camp work; and I can say I never was in camp before when the universal sentiment was so emphatic in pronouncing this the best season for years. At every place this was the key-note, and I really believe it is because we are waking up to the real issues of the day, and are commencing to take hold of them. There is nothing that brings so much life and interest as to be active in the real needs of our times.

As camp closed I found myself bound for this lovely city, and for the first time I am working with the Minnesota people. But I can assure you it is a great pleasure. Here you find the kind of people that are not afraid to work in practical ways. The state convention is just over, and it certainly has been a great success, and I am not surprised when I come to know its president. Spiritualism would be in much better organized standing if we had more men like J. S. Maxwell, the president of this state association. I am more than pleased that he is re-elected to the place. This state is doing some practical work, and will certainly do more in the future, with the corps of good workers it has. At the convention we had such workers as Moses Hull, who is always good and delighted the people. He needs no word of mine. W. J. Erwood, president of the Wisconsin State Association, was with us. This is my first meeting with him, and I wish to say to the societies that do not know him, you will be doing a wise thing to employ him if ever you get a chance. He is a good all-around man. Hope the friends in the East will remember this. Mrs. Murtha was with us, too. She is a good, true, honest worker. Keep her busy. I will not try to give any report of convention, for a full one will be given from another pen.

But, friends at large, let us wake up more fully to practical work in common lines, and Spiritualism will prove itself the hope of the world.

ELIZABETH HARLOW.

AN APPEAL TO SPIRITUALISTS.

In 1893, Major Bitters, John M. Davis, Dr. Samuel Terry and Milo R. Smith established a Spiritualist church at Rochester, Ind. At this time Spiritualism was but little understood and therefore declared by the several churches to be of the devil and the worker of evil. Perhaps no where in this part of the world has the philosophy which brings comfort to the human heart, had a greater struggle to live and be recognized, than in this city. For years, the burden of the fight was carried by the above-named gentlemen, and by and by a few others came from the ranks of orthodoxy until a membership of forty earnest souls were banded together to spread good tidings of great joy.

Although it was the expressed hope of the churches that Spiritualism would die and the Spiritualists disband, they continued their meetings, year after year, until death entered the ranks and one by one carried away from physical sight the earnest souls whose ambition it was to make Spiritualism a permament factor in the growth of our city.

The last three years have worked sad havoc in the society; besides the president—the late honored Major Bitters, who was at all times the financial burden-bearer, four of the leading members have crossed the divide and five families have departed to other places to make their future homes.

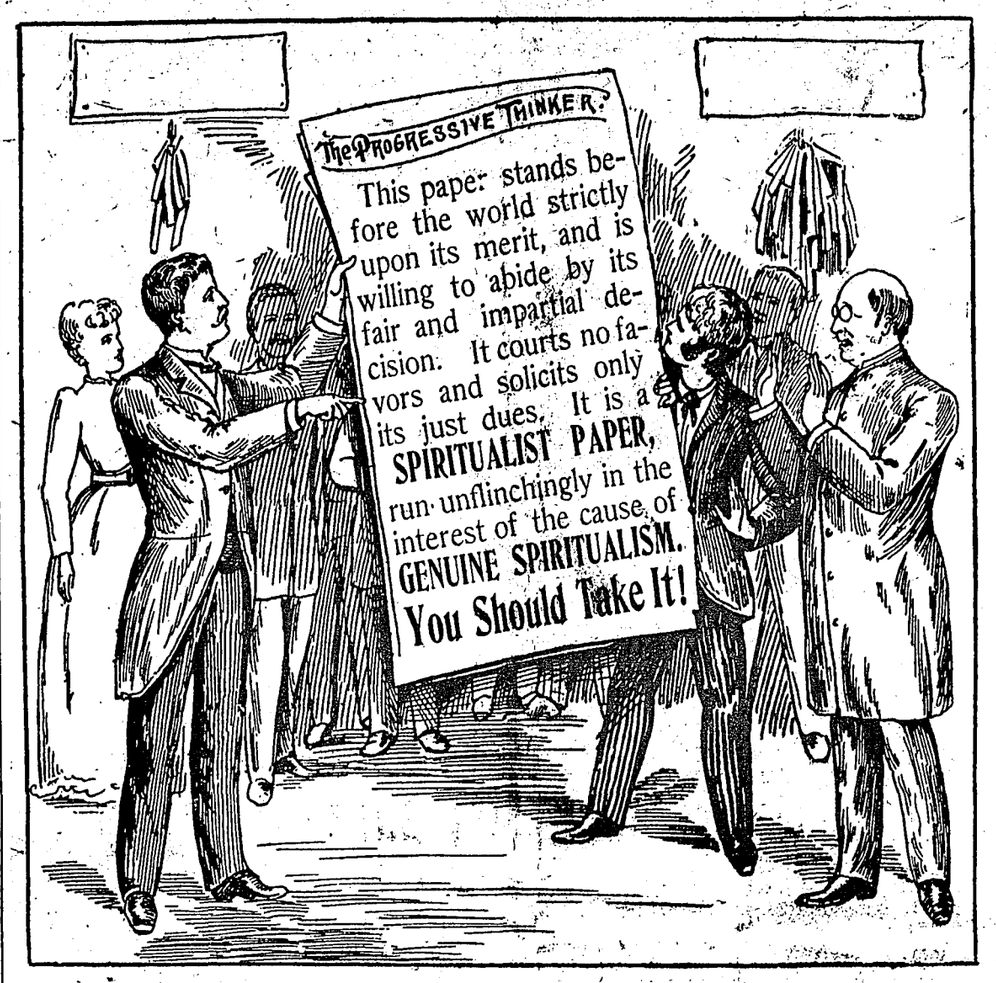
Since the going to spirit realms of Major Bitters, Milo R. Smith has kept up the payment of rent, while the half-dozen workers hired a speaker whenever they could raise the money to do so. Milo R. Smith now feels he has contributed to the cause all he can afford and the fiat has gone forth that the little church, the home of Spiritualism in Rochester, the place where so many have found solace for an aching heart, the place where the greatest incentive for right-doing and right-living has been instilled in the mind, must now close its doors forever.

The cry comes back from the spirit world, from those brave men who suffered much in mind and freely gave of their purse, "Don't let the cause in Rochester die; keep the fire burning on the altar of truth."

There are a number of people in the world, or rather in the United States, who know the truth of Spiritualism, who have received comforting messages from loved ones over the border, but who belong to the no society and who do not contribute to the cause and spread of this glorious gospel. To all such I ask, as a daughter of Major Bitters and one who would make any sacrifice to see his work live, to help this little struggling circle of friends of truth, by sending financial help.

We have been slandered, maligned, sneered at, ostracised, derided by those of the orthodox fold, and tried to hold together, but since we have but few men in the organization, we have not been able to overcome the main obstacle, poverty. Those who feel they can make some return for the joy they have experienced through the beauty and truth of Spiritualism let them send substantial aid to a society which was once one of the strongest in Indiana, but through death and removal, must either have help now or die.

MRS. MARGUERITE MILLER.



Rochester, Ind.

Spiritualists, especially those of Indiana, should see to it that the spiritual fires so nobly started by the lamented Major Bitters, and others, shall not be extinguished, but be made to burn with additional splendor.

Education begins the gentleman, but reading, good company and reflection must finish him.—Locke.

Are You, Have You Ever Been a Subscriber?

Then You Appreciate the Following Statement:

You Will Regret the Lost Feasts of the Winter.

The Japanese believe that the spirits of the dead are watching over their navy. That the navy has come to no harm in the recent encounters and that its work has been so successful, people in Japan believe, is due to this fact. Of a religion where ancestral worship is practically the only worship, it is not strange that the people should believe that the spirits of those who have gone before should watch over the country and the country's arms in the present crisis.

The latest manifestation of the watchful care of the dead over Japan's arms came recently to no less a person than Her Imperial Majesty, the Empress. In the night a vision appeared to her. In a halo of light stood an old man, patriarchal in appearance, with white hair and a long white beard. He was dressed in the Japanese uniform of three score years ago, and he spoke to the Empress.

"I have come from the land of the dead," he said, "to tell your Majesty that all is well with your navy. For many years my life was devoted to the building up of this navy and I am constantly watching over it. I have seen it, and it is good. It will be victorious and will win its battles for my Emperor. Have no fear, for, with the knowledge of the land of the dead, I know."

And then the vision gradually faded away until it had vanished altogether.

When the Empress awoke in the morning the vision remained vividly with her. Every word the spirit had spoken, every line of his face and figure were vividly impressed on her mind. She told the courtiers of her dream and described to them the old man. They were astounded and soon brought to her portraits, one of whom she identified as that of her ghostly visitor.

It was the portrait of Baron Inamoto, one of the greatest men of the early days of the new Japan. He was a great soldier, and when the country rose against the Shoguns, thirty-seven years ago, he took a prominent part in the fighting. He was one of the leaders of the rebels and won several great victories. When the war was ended and the Emperor became an Emperor in fact as well as in name, Inamoto became one of his principal advisers.

He foresaw the future of the new Japan in the brightest of colors and aided much in the development of the plans which have now made Japan one of the greatest nations of the world.

He was particularly impressed with the necessity for a powerful navy, and, although his plans were not looked upon with favor by some of the other advisers of the Emperor, he finally won his point and so became the real father of the Japanese navy. For years every effort of his life was devoted to making the navy of Japan one that would rank with the other navies of the world, and he has succeeded. Is it any wonder that his spirit should hover over the fleet that was created by his enthusiasm?

The Japanese believe in the power of their ancestors to assist them or to hinder them. Their religion is that of ancestral worship, and they thoroughly believe that their every action is watched by former generations who have gone to the land of the dead. To one who is not familiar with the life and religion of the Japanese, these things are hard to realize. All that one can understand about them is that they are true.

The Empress' dream caused a sensation in the court. She had never seen a picture of the great man who appeared to her in the vision. She did not even recall his name when telling of the vision. She had absolutely no idea who her ghostly visitor was, until the picture was shown to her and the name of the great man was told her. The story was told on the streets and in the homes of the Japanese in whispers. People don't talk about the Emperor and Empress at any time without lowering their voices and bowing their heads. They are sacred. And when such a story is told when the gods themselves send messengers of hope and comfort to their descendants on earth, the matter is one of deep religious significance. Japan believes the story and believes it thoroughly. The people believe that this vision was sent to their beloved Empress that the country might be assured that the spirits of those who have gone to the other shore are watching over the destiny of the nation in this hour of need; that they are ready to assist the Emperor in this great battle for the rights of his people; and that they are helping new Japan to take her place among the powers of the world.—The Message of Life, New-Zealand.

WHEN REUNION TIMES APPEAR.

There's a love which none but mothers of this world can ever feel;
There are heartaches most depressing that the smiles cannot conceal,
Through some great or small misfortune, cannot annually appear.

Though she knows they each must labor in the channels of this life,
And that each must be a unit in this world of pain and strife,
There's a load that falls upon her when those feast-times linger near,
And the absent ones are hindred, when reunion times appear.

There's a sadness with the gladness of each dear reunion day,
To a tender, loving mother, when a child is far away,
When a place within the circle has been vacant for a year,
And the loved one at reunion times must fail to reappear.

O, I hear a deep, sad sighing from a heart that would be glad,
And I see a mother smiling from a soul that is so sad,
And I also feel like crying when I see that glistening tear,
At the family reunion where they all cannot appear.

THE ARCANA OF SPIRITUALISM.

A Most Useful Book—Help It Along.

This is a work which should be in the hands of every teacher in the Spiritual ranks—and not only should it be in their hands, but it should be well studied. There is so much superficiality among our lecturers, or at least, that class of them who are running meetings as a means of advertising their mediumistic gifts, that one can but wish that they would cease to make any public effort at instruction, or that they would set aside a portion of each day for self-education, and preparation for the work they aspire to do. To prepare these people for their work, I could recommend no better work than "The Arcana of Spiritualism." But I should also like to have them study "Nature's Divine Revelations," and "The Arabula," by Andrew Jackson Davis.

Of course, there are many other works I should like to have them read, for no public teacher can know too much. The density of the ignorance of some of our would-be teachers is profoundly phenomenal. I do not mean that they are uneducated, as far as ordinary schooling goes; but all the education they have in spiritual matters is what they have received from their "guides," often as ignorant as themselves, except a little experience they have received by contact with spirit life. Some of them claim that they require no other teaching; but they would not do so, if they could see themselves as others see them.

I once heard a lecturer say that her guides knew the Bible better, and could interpret it more correctly than any person not in spirit life, and these "guides" failed to distinguish between Saul and Solomon. I heard another at a camp-meeting about ten years ago, eloquently utter the following profound sentence: "O, to be transmuted to the planet Mars; far from the real-lums of causation!" and after the lecture several on the grounds exclaimed "Wasn't that ghr-rahnd!" They knew no better than the lecturer herself what she wanted to say, but they supposed it was some thing very profound! and it was; it was too deep for poor me. At the close of the camp-meeting several diplomas were issued to preach the gospel of Spiritualism, and amongst the recipients of these favors was this profound teacher.

If these people must teach; if it is necessary that they should get before the people to advertise their gifts, which by the way are usually commendable, they should prepare for it; they should give only a part of the time to their business and use another part of their time in preparing and fitting themselves for the work they have assigned themselves to do. They are not aware of any mistakes or any shortcomings, because they are not aware of their own want of information. Neither does an unhatched chick know of the wide world outside of the narrow confines of its egg-shell. To them I recommend the study of this book. They should not content themselves with reading it through; but they should study each chapter till the subject matter becomes so familiar, they may be able to discuss it comprehensively in conversation. After which they should read another work, and keep on reading till they know the why and wherefore of things—in short till they are fitted to teach. We have too many amateurs among our teachers, and they will always remain amateurs till they do something for themselves.

In this work by Mr. Tuttle, it is his philosophy of the spirit world that interests me most—not his description, for I had become somewhat familiar with that as related by numerous spirits, but I did want to know more about the science of it. One reason of this, I suppose, is because I am going there pretty soon, and I want to realize that my feet will rest on real terra firma. I had philosophised the matter out in my own mind in a crude way, but still there was a vagueness about it that made me feel as somtimes I feel after reading Charles Dawbarn's speculations. As I read his philosophy, based upon scientific knowledge, I seem to get a perspective of the spirit world. I see its flowing streams, hear its babbling brooks, I admire its lakes, its seas, its groves, its meads, its works of art, its cities, and see and learn so much that makes the spirit world a paradise of delight, where work will be our delight, and where we shall meet the full fruition of all our efforts—I see all this so real, so tactual, so outside of my dreams, that I become almost impatient to go and unite with the great throng who started in life contemporaneous with me, and for a short time accompanied me, and then left me on the way and went on. If what he said had been mere assertion, or speculation, I should have imagined that possibly the colors had been overdrawn, but he gives the why of things, and thus makes them tangible to my understanding; that the spirit world is real—a natural sequence of this world, and I no longer tread on air, but on real tangible earth.

In advising our so-called teachers to get this book, I would not exclude any other person. Every Spiritualist should be a teacher, if he has sufficient command of speech to express his idea, and no teacher or other person can know too much. Not only should every Spiritualist have this work for his personal instruction, but also to lend to his reading neighbors, and to the spiritual, conscientious members of the various churches about them. Any sincere, sweet-souled church member, no matter what his prejudices, will be interested in this work. Any thing that makes the other life more real, or that brings heaven from "beyond the bounds of time and space" near to them, removing its vagueness and uncertainty, will reach a response within their souls.

TAKES TIME TO REALIZE IT.

Spirits That Do Not Think They are Dead.

To the Editor:—I have just finished reading your review of Dr. Peebles' new book, and "Can Mortals Be Obsessed," by Dr. Carl A. Wickland. In my sixty-four years' experience with those from spirit side of life with mortals, I have known of, and also met many such cases. I have in public meetings told the people that there was a dark side to our beautiful Spiritualism that should be known; that sensitives could protect themselves. MANY OLD SPIRITUALISTS OBJECT TO THAT SIDE BEING PRESENTED; IN FACT, MANY OF THEM ARE IGNORANT OF THIS, AND DO NOT SEEM TO WANT TO LEARN. Those who are obsessed do not understand or know what it is; they shrink from telling, fearing they will not be believed on thought bad.

I rejoice that such men as Dr. Peebles and Dr. Carl Wickland are to the front with their experiences. I shall be anxious to read Dr. Wickland's later lesson from his experience with spirits while dissecting their bodies.

I have objected for years to putting ice about supposed dead bodies, embalming, or using the knife until the spirit had been fully released therefrom, knowing that they suffered as keenly as if they could speak. It requires a longer time for some than others to get free. Again, when free, many do not know that they are what is called dead.

I had a most interesting experience years ago with Mr. Verity, who was connected with the Boston Investigator. It was in Utica, N. Y., medium, Mrs. Higgs. We were about to sit down to tea; she was not herself, looked so smiling to me and said: "I am so glad to meet you. D. M. Bennett invited me to come with him; he is trying to make me believe that I am dead; but here I am, old friend, alive and well. Theodore Parker first told me that I had left my body; was dead; then D. M. came to convince me. He said, 'Come with me, I will convince you.' I am so pleased to have tea with you, and an old-time chat."

I said: "Mr. Verity, did you wear woman's clothes then? Look! you are dressed in woman's apparel."

He looked, and such astonishment and surprise I never saw before or since. I explained to him that he who was a materialist in earth life, was resurrected—yes, that is the true meaning of the word.

Again Lawyer Morgan, whose home was in the same town as mine, took control of Mrs. Higgs and said: "I have just learned that I am dead; I seemed stupid and slept until the Indian, Big Foot brought his big hand down on me and told me to wake up and go with him. Here we are. I am so glad! I used to think you were a little insane, but find that you knew more than the rest of us."

Mrs. Higgs and I spent the day with a mutual friend whose mother had been laid away thirty years; she had been in her old home all that time. A son had married and raised a family. After her resurrection that day she told us that she would talk to her son, wife and children, but that they paid no attention to her; that she could not understand why, and felt grieved and sorrowful. It must take time to fully realize spirit life after being resurrected to a knowledge of a new birth. This woman, husband and children were Baptists, and much respected.

"LIKE ATTRACTS LIKE."

Some Reflections in Regard to Evil Influences.

I would like to give my experience as corroborative evidence of the claims of Brother Carl Wickland, that the purest medium "in existence may, at times, be controlled by ignorant and vicious spirits."

I have had many experiences similar to the one he relates when he held his wife by the hands until he tired the spirit out.

My wife, who is a descendant of Quakers, is as pure in character as any living person. She has been a medium for twenty-five years, and at times has been controlled by obsessing spirits who have given her band a vast amount of trouble, and one in particular they were unable to dislodge without the aid of several other mediums and their Indian guides, who came to her assistance, and it took this aggregated force over one hour to exorcise this spirit who had in his earth life been a Catholic priest.

As to the argument, that "like attracts like," it does not hold good in this case most certainly. Bad influences will enter if the door be found open and the keeper absent, which is at times true of all mediums; but right here is a thought in this connection which I feel I should not pass unnoticed.

I believe that of all vicious or silly acting spirits that have come our way, there is not one who was not aided by us to see the light, and not one but showered their blessings upon us for the aid they received at our hands. Now the thought is this, that in all the universe is there as large a field for missionary work as that in which we find millions of undeveloped follow spirits to whom the path of progression is impossible until the time comes when they can get their first lesson through contact with some medium on the earth plane. I regret very much that so much of the span of life has gone by me in which I might have done much more of this work than I have, but my earth life is so near its end that I do not look for further opportunity in that line.

A Most Excellent Spiritualizing Work.

Among the many excellent humanitarian efforts, not the least excellent and praiseworthy are those whose object is to raise to higher moral and mental conditions those children who, because of unfortunate surroundings, have become truants. To take these unfortunates and give them education and the benefits of moral influences, tends to expand and spiritualize their minds, and fit them for good citizens and useful members of society. Such is the laudable work of the Parental School.

THE PARENTAL SCHOOL.

How Truant Boys Are Managed.

For the length of time it has been in existence the parental school has been the target for more adverse criticism than any other institution.

The majority of the taxpayers have a vague idea of it, derived generally from the accusation that it is one of the fads of the board of education, a fad rather more expensive than usual. They think of it as a place where boys are forcibly detained against the wishes of their parents and subjected to the most revolting and cruel punishments; a place where unnecessary cows and pigs of the most expensive kind are in constant requisition by the superintendent; a place where food, unfit to eat, is supplied to poor defenseless, friendless children.

If one really wants to learn the facts and see the workings of the institution, let one take the Elston avenue car and ride through a part of the city ranging from busy Milwaukee avenue to the great prairies covered with black-eyed susans, daisies, clover and purple thistle. One will pass truck farms where women dressed in the costume of their native countries are doing the work. A short ride on the 40th avenue car, and then a walk on the cinder path (pointed out by the car conductor, who takes a personal interest in the school, its faculty and visitors), which leads under magnificent trees, over a bridge spanning the north branch of the river and, along the beautiful Bohemian cemetery, to the school gates. Wide open they stand.

If you are early enough you will find the boys playing, laughing, shouting, disputing and thoroughly enjoying themselves. If they stop to notice you at all they will salute you respectfully and then politely ignore you. Near by, apparently paying no attention to the players, sits a gentleman, usually reading a newspaper, or he may be having a game with the boys. He is the family instructor in charge of the cottage. Each cottage has accommodations for thirty-three boys and is in charge of a family instructor and an assistant, usually husband and wife, who look after the boys before and after school. The corps d'esprit of the cottage is strong, and loud and emphatic are the arguments as to which has the best ball players, the best "drillers" or the best general officers. Each one has its special point of pride and this feeling is encouraged.

"Gee!" said a large boy, reported "perfectly incorrigible" upon his entrance, "I wish Blank would be put in some other cottage or sent to the John Worthy school. He doesn't care for anything. He's a fright!" and the boys, resting on their hoes—it was during the field hour—nodded a solemn assent.

"We never have any boys in the lock-up," proudly answered another.

"Well, who have you got in your cottage that's tough?" demanded the boy nicknamed "Grandfather." "You bet your life if you had such tough kids as Smith and Brown you'd have some one in there."

The boys do the work of the cottages under supervision. They make the beds, set the tables, wait on the tables and help in the kitchen. None of these tasks except the kitchen work, interferes with the school work. To be assigned to the kitchen is deemed an honor, and with the kitchen list for the month is to be made out, as only a small proportion can be selected, there is such a straitening of backs and opening of eyes, which is the way children have of showing anxiety to obtain a privilege, that the new teacher is at her wits' end as to which to choose. The kitchen work is marked and the boy who receives a compliment from the cook feels as proud as if he had received the Victoria cross.

"The cook doesn't like little boys like John," said the big boy upon whom the choice had fallen.

"He said it was brains, not how big you are that counts," said John, indignantly, "and I got 100, last time and James, that's twice as big, got only 70."

The beds—well, think what a novelty a pretty, clean, white bed must be to many of those boys!

"I can't understand why George ends every composition he writes with 'and we have such nice beds.' Boys usually tell about what they eat," said one of the teachers to the truant officer, who had brought George in.

"You wouldn't wonder if you saw the pile of rags on a table that he slept on at home," said the officer.

The food is appetizing and nutritious. The teachers who bring lunches, and for some inexplicable reason have not the privilege of buying a hot lunch, look with longing eyes at the meat and potatoes and fresh vegetables supplied from the farm.

The table cloths and napkins are fresh and clean, and any breach of table etiquette is corrected by the family instructors who dine at a table near by. After the meal each boy is required to clean his teeth.

At 8:55 the boys of each cottage are marched into the assembly hall where the roll is called and the school ranks are formed. The boys come into school smiling and prepared to work.

They receive marks for disobedience, disorder, neglect of work, destruction of material, improper language and going beyond the school boundaries. The number of marks given by the family instructors, drill master, school teacher, horticultural teacher and manual training teacher determine what division they are to be placed in and more important still, what table they are "on," as they persist in saying. The first division sits at the first table, where dessert is served twice a week, and to the specially fortunate ones who have been placed on the roll of honor three times. No desert for the second table, bread and milk for the third. An able bodied boy can stand the thought of no dessert with equanimity, but to be in the same room and to see the luckier boys partaking of it is the strongest possible incentive to better behavior in the future.

"Did you say we might eat a carrot?" demanded a breathless boy who had run from the end of the field.

"Yes, I did," said the teacher, surprised.

"Well, this is my pie week and I didn't want to get into no trouble with nobody, so I thought I'd be sure," he explained, munching the dainty.

The whole spirit of the school is that goodness and even an attempt at goodness will be rewarded by privileges prized by boys. In the public schools it is the bad boy who is propitiated and given privileges to keep him in good humor. The boys at the parental school are never allowed to think themselves disgraced in any way by being inmates, but they are encouraged to try to get out as quickly as possible.

"Squats," about which so much has been written, are performed under the supervision of a drill master, who, from a physical examination of each child, knows exactly what his condition is and punishes him accordingly. The hands are placed upon the hips and a rhythmic rising and falling of the body is gone through. The boys do not enjoy it but they enjoy less the "digs" of the other boys, who take delight in twitting the victim after the operation. The "bullring" is the act of going around an assigned space in the open air. The promenaders on an ocean steamer walk the bullring hours every day and consider themselves greatly benefited. A substitute teacher at the school out in the field with her boys saw two of them pacing up and down the paths, each with a hoe held behind him. "What is the matter with Bennie and George?" she asked.

"They are doing punishment for pulling beets when they were told to stop yesterday," said an officer.

"Well, then, I'm under punishment every day from 11 to 12 o'clock," she said.

The idea tickled the boys and after that as she went up and down the paths some laughing boy would ask: "How do you like the bullring, Miss Blank?" or would remind her, if she stopped to rest on an upturned basket, that the "solitary" was before her if she stopped long.

The greatest punishment inflicted is a term in the "solitary." In his night clothes the culprit sits in a well-ventilated room with a window commanding a view of the surrounding country, and is fed on bread and milk three times a day. Visitors may see the boys at "squats," walking the bull-ring or in solitary confinement at any time, everything being done as if the whole community were present, at all times.

The attitude of the pupils toward the teacher is ideal. There is a familiarity which never degenerates into contempt. She may be asked to give her whole history and the cost of every article she has on, but so respectfully is the questioning done that no offense could possibly be taken and if she thinks a lesson upon the etiquette of personal questions necessary she gives it some time afterward, so that no one's feelings will be hurt. The public school teacher who substitutes there is thankful to find thirty-three boys obedient, industrious and anxious to please. The great relief of feeling that behind her commands is something to enforce them causes her to have the strongest kind of an affection for each of the little fellows. So she exerts herself to the utmost to teach them, so that when they return to the public school they may be advanced. Teaching there is so satisfactory. Having so few she knows exactly where each one needs help and she sees from day to day the progress they all make. Having little in the way of discipline to annoy her she becomes so gentle and amiable that she surprises herself.

"It takes but a short time for a new boy to become initiated. The school is old enough now to have traditions, and he soon knows that if he does not come to time quickly the boys in his cottage and room will lend a helping hand and tongue. To be socially ostracized, so to speak, is the worst that can befall a boy, especially a boy among strangers, so the newcomers usually fall into line quickly.

The substitute teacher told a boy who had failed in his spelling to do his work "at home." The next morning he had an excuse instead of his words. She went toward the table to put down some marks, when she noticed such a depressed look on the face of the most cheerful boy in the room that she stopped to ask if he were sick.

"No, but that kid makes me tired," he said. "Every boy in our cottage told him he had to write words. When he said he hadn't no pencil I told him I'd lend him mine." (Pencils are forbidden outside of school, but stray stumps are sometimes found in hidden corners.) "Then he said he hadn't no paper and the officer said he'd lend him a sheet his pa had brought him; then he said he didn't care."

"What difference does it make to you if he gets marks?" asked the teacher, somewhat bewildered.

"Our fambly instructor is away and we're trying to see how good we kin be till he gets back, and that there kid has to go and spoil everything."

Here was a dilemma. The teacher solved the problem by sending the boy to be punished and giving him no marks, and she has not yet decided whether she did right or wrong.

The same boy came to her in two or three days, asking to be placed in a lower room as the work was too hard.

"You do your problems very well, your reading is good, your language good, and emphatically you must learn your spelling. Don't ever let me hear you mention a lower room." After that he was dreaming no more. He had learned that laziness would not be tolerated.

The progress he made after his awakening surprised even himself, as a letter in which he remarked naively that "he never knew he could be so smart," proved.

Oh, if we of the public schools could enforce our commands and have some disinterested person to administer punishment, what a pleasure teaching would be!

The boys who are in the same cottage and the same room in school help each other with the school work. One boy in attempting to help another found that he himself was not as proficient as he had thought, so he came to the teacher for "pointers," as he called them, telling so definitely what he did not understand that she was delighted.

Stories are their delight. Breathlessly they listen to anything read or told them. No boy there is at all backward about doing what he can to entertain the others. Good singers are not rare among them and a solo, to afford a little diversion, is often called for. Every Wednesday, accompanied by the piano, they sing for half an hour. The songs include patriotic songs, school songs and popular songs. They make the welkin ring and so thoroughly enjoy themselves that it is a pleasure to watch them.

Visitors, if teachers, almost invariably say, "what beautifully behaved children!" Mothers say sometimes with tears, "What a pity!" Everybody says, "What pleasant, pretty boys!" and they are pleasant because everything is done to make them happy, and they are pretty, being healthy and well fed.

Manual training receives a great deal of attention and as the little articles made are given by the children to their parents great care is taken to have them well done.

During the summer months every other day a swim in the enormous tank in the front yard is a part of the programme. If to be deprived of dessert is a calamity to be deprived of a swim is a tragedy. On the field, on a swimming day, the observations are mostly about the weather and answering anxious inquiries about the probable rise or fall of the temperature or the prospect of rain keeps the teacher busy in her progress between plots.

In their bathing suits, many of the more prosperous beings supplied with "wings," a better-looking lot of boys could not be found. Swimming races, diving for keys or pebbles or an occasional penny which is always politely handed back at first, are in progress in a short time. Many of the family instructors swim with the boys and the boys swarm over them like bees, diving from their shoulders, challenging them to races and playing with them as if they were of themselves, as they are. You see the big boys floating the little ones, the good swimmers teaching the others, and everywhere good will and helpfulness are worth the trip of an hour required to get to the school from downtown.—Mary E. Fitzgerald in Chicago Daily News.

Astounding Statement

Made by a Prominent Presidential Candidate.

TOM WATSON IS THE POPULIST PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE. HE IS FEARLESS IN HIS EXPRESSION OF WHAT HE CONCEIVES TO BE RIGHT. OF COURSE HIS UTTERANCES IN REGARD TO THE CATHOLICS WILL CAUSE ALL THE DEVOTEES OF THAT RELIGION TO VOTE AGAINST HIM IN THE COMING ELECTION, AND THAT ALONE WILL BE EQUIVALENT TO HIS DEFEAT. HIS ARRAIGNMENT OF THE CATHOLICS WILL BE READ WITH KEEN INTEREST AT THE PRESENT TIME WHEN THE FRIENDS OF EACH CANDIDATE ARE STRIVING FOR VOTES. VERILY, MR. WATSON HAS DONE WHAT NO OTHER PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE WOULD DARE TO DO. THE FOLLOWING APPEARED IN HIS ORGAN, THE PEOPLE'S PARTY PAPER, APRIL 23, 1897:

We think we state the exact truth when we say we are free from bigotry upon the subject of religion.

We have no prejudice whatever against a citizen because he is a Methodist, Episcopalian or Catholic—we being of the Baptist faith.

But the difference between one church organization and another, may be a matter of extreme political importance, and we cannot understand how any student conversant with political history can be indifferent to the peculiar hierarchy of the Catholic church.

No other church organization claims and exercises the right to say what books its members shall read; no other church openly takes part in political affairs; no other church sends and receives ambassadors; no other church holds a court at which royal ceremonial is observed, embassies from foreign governments received, and far-reaching questions of international policy debated and decided.

There is not a government of the civilized world at whose capital the Catholic church is not represented by a resident representative. No question of national policy, which may directly or indirectly affect the Catholic church, is decided until the Pope has been heard from.

Throughout the civilized world run the threads of papal diplomacy, and the most prominent feature of recent political progress has been the wonderful success of Catholic statesmanship.

Spain, Portugal, France, Italy, and Austria are as loyally Catholic now as in the days when the Jesuits and the Inquisition met and turned back the Reformation of Huss, Wycliffe, Calvin and Luther.

Not only has the Catholic church held its own ground, but it is invading Protestant territory and stamping out Protestant influence.

We state this without passion and without malice; we state it simply as a remarkable fact which challenges attention.

Protestant Prussia under Bismarck's lead expelled the Jesuits in 1870. The Catholics have patiently struggled to reverse that policy and they have succeeded. The law of expulsion has been repealed, and the Jesuits have re-entered Protestant Prussia.

In Protestant England, the Catholic church is now in power behind the throne. The most powerful members of the aristocracy are devoted Catholics. In social and political influence the cardinals of Rome wield vast power. When Bayard, the U. S. Ambassador, gave his grand feast to the nobility of Great Britain, not a single Protestant divine was invited. Catholic cardinals were there upon equal footing with the Prince of Wales, but no man of God, tainted with the touch of the Reformation, was present.

In Protestant America, the strides of the Catholic church to political power are not less gigantic.

Time and again Congress has bent before that invisible and invincible force. Our politicians are so mortally afraid of angering the priest-led vote of the large cities that they dared not instruct the State of New Mexico to teach the English language in the public schools. The English language would carry with it the English Bible; and the Catholic church did not want any Protestant Bibles in New Mexico. By teaching Spanish in New Mexico, the Catholic church preserves its monopoly; and our cowardly statesmen voted as the priests demanded.

McKinley's cabinet was partly Catholic, and the influence which the Pope exerted during the administration (through Mr. Odell) is shown by the way in which the War Department hastened to grant to the Catholics a portion of the national domain at West Point. The Catholics asked for some of the government land to build a church on—and they got it. Other denominations outnumbered the Catholics at West Point, but these other denominations have not been able to get any of the national property.

Wherever the Catholic church controls it persecutes. No Protestant can preach or sell Bibles in Spain, Italy, Portugal, South America or even in Cuba, except at the risk of his life.

In the Philippine Islands, not many months ago, the priests tortured some captives in the same manner as millions of Protestants were tortured in the Middle Ages.

The Literary Digest (N. Y.) copied last year an article from a leading Catholic paper in South America in which the Inquisition was eulogized, and the holy work of the rack, the wheel, and the stake was hysterically praised.

In Canada, within the last three months, the Catholic priests became so enraged at a liberal Catholic newspaper, which opposed the church policy on the school question, that they compelled the local postal authorities to throw the offending newspaper out of the mails. The government did not dare to punish the priests who had thus violated its laws and destroyed its mail.

In this growth of power in the Catholic church, (of which we have given a few instances) it is to be noticed that the radical Catholic is crowding out the liberal Catholic. The extremists are in control, and these extremists have secured the Pope's endorsement to the doctrine that the Protestant religion is not better than no religion at all. The orthodox Catholic doctrine is that Protestantism must be uprooted and cast out as wholly damnable heresy.

What we have stated is truth—plain, unvarnished truth. It seems to us that these things are deserving of serious attention.

Where a church claims and exercises the right to exert political influence, it behooves good citizens to study the history of that church and the tendency of its teachings.

To judge a tree by its fruits is a fair rule. Now that the Catholic church is likely to take such a controlling part in our national affairs, it is well that we should ask ourselves a few questions.

When and where has the Roman Catholic church done anything for the masses of the people,—for the sacred cause of freedom, of labor, freedom of vote, freedom of speech, freedom of thought, or freedom of conscience?

When has it ever failed to side with enthroned tyranny as against reform—from the days of Philip II., when it burnt one hundred thousand men who dared to think for themselves, down to the day in 1896 when the Pope's blessing was breathed upon the Spanish flag and his prayers went with the troops who were to burn Cuban houses and fields, torture and slay Cuban patriots, insult and outrage Cuban maids and matrons, and make a smoking hell of a country whose people demanded no more than the Catholics of Ireland demanded of Protestant England, and upon far better grounds.

To the very last, the Catholic church stood by the institution of slavery, and was the last to give up her slaves. To the very last the Catholic church opposed freedom of conscience and of worship. To the very last it opposed the separation of church and state. To the very last it opposed the general education of the masses, and is to-day the mortal enemy of the public schools. To the very last it opposed self-government by the people, and is to-day the stanch defender of the "divine rights of kings."

A very particular reason why the people of this country should be concerned about the startling growth of Catholic power, is that the Catholic church boasts that it never changes. The good Catholic claims to-day that the Pope is infallible and that all the popes have been true and worthy vicegerents of Christ.

He claims that the Protestant is a heretic, and he believes that it would be a mercy to said Protestant to bind him upon a jagged iron wheel, and beat said heresy out of him with a club.

He believes that his priest can pardon sin, and that the money liberally spent in buying prayers can lift the sinner out of hell.

He believes that the wine of the sacrament is the actual blood of Christ, and the bread the actual body.

We are all prone to believe that which is constantly said and never denied. The profound policy of the Catholic church is to cut off its converts from the world and keep them from hearing, reading, or thinking anything which might encourage doubt.

The Catholic church wants its converts to have faith—blind unreasoning faith—in the priest, faith in the church, and faith in the Catholic statement of every case.

To reach this result, the Pope dictates the books which shall be read, what newspapers shall be patronized, and what pictures shall be used.

Pope Leo XIII. has just revised the list of "forbidden books." He says that the new rules on the subject are so mildly formulated that it will be easy for good Catholics to obey the new rules.

What are these new rules which a good Catholic must observe in choosing his reading matter?

1. "All those writings which were prohibited previous to the year 1600, except where special decrees have since made exceptions, are prohibited now."

What books were prohibited previous to the year 1600, and which of those books have been acquitted of blame during the 397 years since 1609?

2. "All books written by apostates, heretics, schismatics," are forbidden.

Away goes your Milton and your Shakspeare, your Burns and your Byron, your Cowper and your Wordsworth, your Tennyson and your Scott! They were all heretics.

They were all heretics.

The good Catholic must not drink the pure delight of Goldsmith's "Deserted Village," nor must he ever hang enraptured over "The Grecian Urn" of Keats, nor must his eye grow dim as he reads Byron's verses to his sister. He must never walk the rich fields of Charles Reade and Charles Dickens—never laugh with Thackeray nor sigh with Hood; never soar with Shelley, dream with Coleridge, nor view the gems of Walter Savage Landor.

All the golden fruits of genius, choicest apples of literature's Gardens of the Hesperides, is fruit forbidden to a good Catholic—for when God lit the lamp of Genius in the minds of those wonderfully-gifted heretics and touched their soul into celestial music, he forgot that the Pope would measure all the mental universe with the contemptible little tape-line of denominational intolerance.

To be a good Catholic all the eloquence, wit, wisdom and patriotism of American history is a lost land, for the deadly brand of heresy lays upon the whole of it. Excepting Charles Carroll of Carrollton, and a baker's dozen besides, the whole outfit, from Washington, the Episcopalian, to Jefferson, the infidel, and Thomas Paine, the Deist, were rank heretics, deserving to be burnt.

What sort of intelligence would a good Catholic have if he should obey the rules which Pope Leo says are so mildly framed?

What sort of knowledge does any man have when he is forbidden to read on both sides of the case?

What better scheme could be devised for putting power into the hands of the priests?

How could a good Catholic ever be anything, mentally, but a child, if he denied the privilege of reading, thinking, comparing and judging?

But the rules which Pope Leo XIII. has so mildly framed, do not stop here. They forbid the good Catholics to read any book on religion except those written by Catholics. They forbid good Catholics to read any edition of the Bible except the Catholic editions. Books which criticise the popes, cardinals, priests, church doctrines and usages, are forbidden. The amiable Leo does not wish that his people shall be told a great many things which ought to know. He wants them to know nothing beyond what the priests see fit to tell them.

No good Catholic must read any book, or other publication, which treats of religious subjects, without submitting said book or publication to the judgment of the priests.

Such rules as these sound strangely out of place in this age of progress and of research.

If a creed is sound, why should it fear investigation?

Conscious error could not possibly show more guilty timidity in screening itself from honest inquiry than the Catholic church displays in these rules which command good Catholics to read no books excepting those which have been inspected, tagged, and branded by the Pope.

Of all the slavery in this world the most degrading is mental and spiritual slavery; and we look upon the huge growth of the Catholic church in political power as an ominous fact, because the natural tendency of its creed is to make the people superstitious, intolerant and priest ridden.

But while our politicians continue to be cowards, and our Protestant ministers continue to be dupes, Catholic diplomacy will march onward triumphantly, until the day will come when Protestantism will have to fight for dear life in a land which its blind devotees believe is dedicated forever to free speech, free thought, and free worship.

THE MINNESOTA CONVENTION.

Harmonious and Successful in Every Respect.

The convention of the Minnesota State Spiritualist Association, which has just closed was one of the most harmonious conventions on record, as far as the writer's experience with such gatherings is concerned. Everyone seemed determined to avert any storm of whatsoever character that might threaten to arise, and the result was a good fellowship that it is a credit to Minnesota and Spiritualism as well.

The outside talent strove to make the meeting a success, and when the workers at home and from abroad all get their heads together and spell harmony and success with one accord there is sure to be something doing—and something of a nature calculated to cause the smiles to broaden, and the hearts grow lighter, too. The visiting workers were Rev. Moses Hull of Whitewater, Wis.; Miss Lizzie Harlow of Haydensville, Mass.; Mrs. J. A. Murtha and your correspondent. Aside from these the Morris Pratt Institute had another representative at the convention, in the person of its talented teacher of oratory, Mrs. Alfa Jahnke.

The sessions began with the usual reception on Thursday evening, which furnished ample opportunity to "get acquainted" and to "trip the light fantastic," in the most approved fashion. The program which preceded the dance was especially noteworthy for its excellence. Among the most commendable features were select readings by Mrs. Jahnke, and the inimitable violin playing of Prof. Zeidler, than whom the writer has never seen a more thorough master of that wonderful instrument. The feature which probably elicited the most applause was the wonderful club swinging by Mr. Roy Gage of St. Paul. Mr. Gage demonstrated his thorough control of these clubs in a most fascinating manner; after having swung them for a number of minutes in a manner calculated to inspire the greatest admiration, and to give one the idea that the clubs were alive, the lights were turned low, and Mr. Gage appeared before the audience with a pair of clubs upon which were flaming torches. With these the most wonderful effects were produced, and the audience readily gave evidence of its approval.

Miss Lily Swanson, one of Prof. Zumbach's most promising pupils, rendered a vocal solo, showing the excellent timbre of the voice, also what Prof. Zumbach can do in the short space of a year with a pupil who is willing to learn. Mr. Cuyler Follett, the genial secretary of the state association, and Miss Nellie Whitwell of St. Paul and several others did their share in adding to the pleasure of the evening, through their good work in song and instrumental numbers.

Friday morning found a goodly number of members and delegates in their places, and then the work began in earnest. Soon all was business, and stenographer, committees and officers were delving into their various duties with a will. Notwithstanding the amount of business that was accomplished there was still time for conference work, and many substantial thoughts were given forth by those who were in attendance. Morning and afternoon were given up to business and conference work—with a few moments devoted to the phenomenal side, and then the audience, after the short intermission during which a large number partook of the substantial food prepared by the ladies of the auxiliary, assembled for the evening meeting.

The auditorium was packed with eager seekers after truth. After the musical program, which was prepared and rendered by the Zumbachs—which is sufficient guarantee of its high order—Miss Harlow gave the address of the evening, and this was followed by messages by Mrs. Murtha. During this session, owing to the absence of Mayor Haynes who was slated to give the address of welcome, Mr. J. S. Maxwell welcomed the visitors and delegates to the city of Minneapolis. The response was by Moses Hull.

Saturday was another day of business—exchange of thought, debate and general good will. During the afternoon session occurred the annual election of officers, which resulted in the re-election of the president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer, who are J. S. Maxwell, J. P. Whitwell, Cuyler P. Follett and D. G. Griffith. The board of five trustees was elected, as were all of the officers, in I believe, every instance by acclamation, which goes to show that the people of Minnesota were ready to rally around the standard of those who were trying to further the cause of Spiritualism, and show to them that their methods were approved of.

One amendment that deserves mention, and which will show something of the progressiveness of the legislative work done, was that which abolished the system of issuing personal memberships to persons in localities wherein there were regularly chartered auxiliary bodies. Too much cannot be said in commendation of this action.

The Wisdom of Passion

BY SALVARONA.

"In modern philosophy there are three great treatises on the Passions, that of Spinoza, that of Hume, and that of Salvarona."—Philosophical Journal.

Illustrated with three handsome portraits of Emerson, Hosea, Byron. 12mo. 250 pages. Red cloth; gold title. Will be mailed to any address on receipt of price by postal note.

Price, $1.00. Postage, 10 Cents.

The extraordinary merits of "The Wisdom of Passion" are the copiousness of human insight and content in the way of fact and reference with which the book is crammed. Its main thesis I agree with.—Prof. William James, Harvard University.

I have found "The Wisdom of Passion" to be a book of powerful erudition and fine intuition. I would be happy if in a certain sense I had inspired it.—Prof. Ceasare Lombroso.

Here is a man who sees and says things for himself. He is not retailing conventionalities. The book fairly bristles with wise sayings. I believe the thesis is sustainable and that the author has gone a long way toward fortifying it. After I took up the book, I did not quit, except for meals and sleep till I had read it carefully from cover to cover.—Albion W. Small, Head of Dept. of Sociology and Director of Affiliated Work for the University of Chicago.

I am somewhat familiar with the tendency in modern thought to give primary place to feeling—with James' "Will to Believe," with Ward's social philosophy, with Shelley's and Browning's philosophy. "The Wisdom of Passion" fits in with their contributions. The main thesis of the book—that the soul forms its own forms by its choice—I can ascribe to.—Prof. Oscar Lovell Triggs, University of Chicago.

THE TO-MORROW OF DEATH, Or the Future Life According to Science. By Louis Figuier. Translated from the French by S. R. Crockee. A very fascinating work. It is written in that peculiar interesting style in which French writers excel when they would popularize scientific subjects in adaptation to the needs of the general reader. The author says: "There is a true and respectable idea in Spiritualism," and regards as proved "the fact of communication between superhumans and the inhabitants of earth." Price, $1.50.

SOME THOUGHTS ON OBSESSION.

Sometimes Suggestion Is a Very Important Factor.

Too much light cannot be cast upon the dangers and cure of obsession. I believe more people are obsessed by mortals than by decarnate spirits. We know there is danger from both sources. I have had patients who were driven to the verge of insanity by suggestions from some adverse source. Their systems were depleted by disease, which caused them to yield more readily to wrong influences.

One lady, a devout Presbyterian, listened to a sermon by her pastor, on "Foreordination." The thought lodged in some cell of her brain, that, if she was foreordained to be lost, nothing she could do, however pure her life, would save her from such a terrible fate.

She was fast drifting into insanity when I first saw her. By careful manipulations and strong suggestions, she was restored to health.

Another lady was made miserable by an adverse thought that seemed to arise in her own brain. She brooded over it until her reason was impaired, and she made several attempts to suicide. She was placed in an insane asylum for two months, but graudually grew worse. She was taken home, and our methods restored her to a normal condition. She had a beautiful character.

Another, a young lady of a lovable nature, but lacking self-esteem, was possessed of the idea that she was not attractive, and could not make friends. Her mind became so erratic that she lost a good position as stenographer. A few timely suggestions saved her from insanity.

In this age of letter writing, considerable correspondence is carried on between those of opposite sex, who are not personally acquainted.

Psychometrists can read the characteristics of their correspondents, and have the advantage of those who have not that gift.

If both parties are honorable and high-minded, much good can come from an exchange of ideas. But if one is selfish and sensual, the other ignorant of peril, and trusting, the most dangerous form of obsession is liable to take place. If virtue is innate in the ones obsessed, they will try to escape when they realize their danger; but alone and unaided they are like the poor fly in the spider's web, they waste their strength in vain struggles for freedom. They must fight for their liberty, even though their strength is only weakness, and is born of despair. Unseen forces will guide them to some one who is able to help.

If a pure-minded, strongly magnetic person comes between the parties, the chain that binds the victim will be broken. WHEN ONE IS INCLINED TO DWELL IN THOUGHT UPON UNPLEASANT CONDITIONS, TURN THE MIND UPON THE OPPOSITE, AND PERSISTENTLY KEEP IT UPON THAT WHICH IS EXALTED AND NOBLE, AND THE BETTER VIBRATIONS WILL OVERCOME THE LESS DESIRABLE.

When corresponding, if at any time a portion of the letter received, jars the least upon your sense of right, you may know that it is a warning from some source that danger lurks ahead for you. Never disregard such warnings. Don't be discouraged when such experiences come to you. Don't think the whole world is vile because some one whom you trusted has shown their true character. There is a whole lot of good people in the world.

If we would ascend the "Spiritual Alps" we must cross the valleys that intervene.

Many thanks are due Brother Francis for his efforts to separate the false from the true in Spiritualism. May the angels of Truth and Justice guide him in his work. MARY A. INGALLS.

Speaks on Subjects Chosen by Audience.

Dr. W. J. Colville of London, England, one of the most eminent authors and lectures of the Spiritualist faith, will arrive in St. Louis to-day on his way to New Zealand. He is to remain here two months, conducting daily class lectures in the Temple of Spiritualism, 3015 Pine street. His first address will be delivered on Sunday evening on "Essential Elements of Universal Religion."

Dr. Colville is what is known as an inspirational speaker, his address usually being given on any subject chosen by his audience just before he begins to speak. Questions of scientific, religious and philosophical interest are treated by him, and after each lecture he delivers an "inspirational" poem on a theme chosen by his hearers.

The variance of the topics which he discusses is shown from a programme of lectures which was prepared without his knowledge by a committee at Seattle, Wash., but which he adhered to discussing a different theme each day. Some of the forty topics were the "Future Possibilities of Radium," "Manners, Customs, Philosophy and Religion of the Inhabitants of the Planet Mars," "The Best Means of Reforming Criminals," "Suggestive Therapeutics" and "The Law of Opulence."

In giving an account of his life, Dr. Colville says that the "invisible helpers," as he styles the voices and visions which he credits with having a part in his existence, began to appear to him before he was 14 years of age. He says, in describing his first public appearance on the platform:

"A subject was decided upon by show of hands and I rose to lecture. I spoke unfalteringly for fully an hour and resumed my seat unexcited and unfatigued. I had become tense, callous, self-assured, but completely confident that an intelligence beyond my normal own would certainly render me equal to the occasion.

"Immediately after my appearance in London, I was called to all parts of England. I went as an inexperienced child to places rough and smooth, aristocratic and uncouth, clean and dirty, refined and vulgar, religious and atheistic; and wherever I went I found my unseen prompters ready to help me in all emergencies and to pilot me safely over many difficult and unpleasant places from which I should certainly have shrunk had I not been beforehand what awaited me."

Dr. Colville is a member of the Greek Occult Lodge, of India. He has written twenty-five books, as well as magazine contributions. This is his second visit in St. Louis, the first being about eighteen months ago. While here he will take part in the New Thought convention and the Universal Peace congress on the World's Fair grounds.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

"Human Culture and Cure. Part First. The Philosophy of Cure. (Including Methods and Instruments." By E. D. Babbitt, M. D., LL. D. A very instructive and valuable work. It should have a wide circulation, as it well fulfills the promise of its title. Price 75 cents.

Plant Life and Mental Activity.

Some years ago Professor Huxley used the term "biological no man's land" to designate those forms of life which possess some of the characteristics of the plant and some of the characteristics of the animal, but which can not be classified as either the one or the other. Professor Haeckel, in view of the shadowy boundaries between plants and animals, suggested that there be recognized and named an intermediate kingdom to include the debatable members of the two.

Of late years science has disclosed many characteristics not before supposed to be possessed by the vegetable kingdom. One of the most recent claims is that plants possess a certain amount of brain power.

Brain is commonly thought of as it exists in the higher animals—an organ from which diverge nerves for the performance of special functions, some subserving the purpose of sight, others enabling the muscles to move the limbs, and another series aiding in the all-important process of digestion. In these animals the brain itself is divided into regions each of which is now known to have an exclusive use. But in lower forms of life, like worms and snails, there is no actual brain, though the gangla or collocations of nerve matter scattered throughout their bodies evidently serve a purpose much the same as that of the brain in vertebrates.

In the lowest recognized members of the animal kingdom no brain or nerves are to be seen. The fresh water polyp may be cut into several pieces, and all the fragments will grow into separate animals; each of these may be divided in like manner and with like result. The sea anemone has some scattered nerve cells, and the same has been claimed for the jelly fish, but if they exist as elementary representatives of organs active in the higher creatures, they are visible only to the acute physiologist, aided by the finest appliances of the instrument maker. In sponges and the minute forms popularly grouped under the name of animalcules it would seem that there can be no traces of nerves. Yet these morsels of animated jelly are sensitive to the slightest touch, to changes of temperature, even to the obscuration of the sun by a passing cloud.

It is precisely the same with plants. The sensitive plant folds up its pinnules as a protest against disturbance. In a tropical forest at times, a carpet of weeds will become recumbent before the tread of the advancing pedestrians, the irritability being transmitted by sympathy from plant to plant. In these plants there is no aggregation of matter known as the brain and no visible nervous system. Yet more than some of the lower animal forms, these plants exhibit something which is very much like intelligence.

Mr. Arthur Smith declares that even in the highest animals the brain itself cannot be looked upon as the sole source of nerve power, that it is not in itself a battery but only an intermediate motor which serves for the more perfect transmission of impulse. In the plants the motor is not seen, but the motion is there, and it can be enfeebled or arrested by the application of chloroform or a weak solution of opium or other soporific.

The irritability of some orchids in their lower petals and of others in various parts of their flowers, is remarkable and seems to indicate nervous power. Climbing plants revolve ceaselessly in search of the object round which they are to cling, reminding one of a blind man feeling his way with his staff. Insectiverous plants show something akin to intelligence. The Venus flytrap, the sundew, and other plants are able to digest animal substance, and flies and other nutritive matter are held by the leaves until assimilated. The word "instinct" seems to be applicable to some of the movements of plants as it is to some of the movements of animals. B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Spirit Influence World-Wide.

An Old Woman's Dream That Seven Young Girls Would Die Being Strangely Fulfilled.

Teidora de Cesari, Died Dec. 21, 1901.
Maria de Renzi, Died Oct. 14, 1902.
Leonarda di Orio, Died Aug. 7, 1903.

Such is the record of the fulfillment up to date of a dream, yet not a dream, a revelation indeed, the shadows of which hang over the richest, the prettiest, the smartest girls, in fact over all the girls of Roseto who belong to the Society of the Blessed Virgin.

To dream of a white horse means Death. The dream book says so.

To dream of white birds foretells Death. The dream book declares so.

Yet these are only dream signs. Perhaps they come true, but even the most persistent believer in Roseto admits that sometimes dream signs fail.

But this thing that is talked of in Roseto that came to Maria del Giordio was not a dream, but more likely a revelation or a prophecy, and Maria is no common fortune-teller or necromancer.

Although in all else in Roseto the command of Father Denisco is absolute, yet in this matter not even his most stringent order to pay it no heed can make it forgotten, but only serves to make those who talk of it cautious lest the Father shall hear they have done so.

So when strangers are shown the park-like churchyard where the new big white angel has just now mounted guard over the grave of Leonarda di Orio, the third grave of Maria's dream, the villager tells his story in half-awed whispers, like something he dreads to breathe aloud.

Everybody in the village old enough to listen to women's gossip has heard of it. It is no secret from the men. But since the third grave came to lend force to the dream no one wants to talk of it, least of all the dreamer herself, for in its further fulfillment is held the doom of four members of the Society of the Blessed Virgin, numbering in its ranks all the marriageable girls of the village.

Some accounts even say five of them are doomed.

Roseto, where all this is happening, is a model Italian village among the Pennsylvania mountains, near Wind Gap, sister to the Water Gap. Very deep-blue shadows lay on the mountains to the west. Opposite on other foothills are the weird haunting gray slate quarries where Roseto men have earned most of the money that has made Roseto one of the richest of Italian colonies in a few years. Old Roseto, of Foggia, in Italy, of which the New World Roseto is the daughter, is not as the villages of the Sicilians, and its people hold themselves as just a little superior.

Nor is the spirit of the Pennsylvania Roseto like that of the average Italian settlement among the mines.

Strong traces of the Greek type appear in the markedly blonde hair and light complexion of many of the men and women whose eyes are blue, and their straight bold features offer many an attractive model. Here, too, the married women keep their looks much longer than the average woman from Italy.

But it is in its daughters that Roseto takes deep pride.

"No scandal," says Father Denisco, "has touched the girls here."

The number of a marriageable age is not great, and they all, of course, are counted in the Society of the Blessed Virgin.

Roseto's girls work well and marry early. But until they are married none is allowed alone after dark in the village street. No girl may or does try to avoid the social rules of the village that declare in behalf of a chaperon or else a party of girls protected by its own numbers.

Many of the girls are heiresses and not one of them but is admired. So when Teidora de Cesari died in December three years ago there was mourning, for it was the first death in Roseto of a girl from the Society of the Blessed Virgin.

Hardly four weeks had passed when it was whispered that some thing mysterious had happened and that Teidora's death foreboded grief to the village.

Maria del Giordio had had a dream, and such a dream. If it came true Teidora would soon not be lonely in Paradise for lack of companions from her own girl circle.

The dead girl appearing to Maria in a dream had said distinctly that seven of her companions would be called from the Society of the Blessed Virgin to follow her.

When the dream was first told every mother crossed herself at the idea that her own daughter might be the first to hear Teidora's voice. Then Father Denisco forbade any discussion of the dream, and as the days went by and nothing seemed to point to its fulfillment the dream became so indistinct that now some say Teidora declared she would call six, while others declare seven was the number.

It was not until the following October that another death occurred, and Maria de Renzi was laid in the churchyard beside Teidora. The girls of the Society of the Blessed Virgin unbound their long hair, and with heads draped with black veils mourned for their companion.

Then some one recalled the dream of Maria del Giordio. Still there is quite a progressive spirit in Roseto that scorns belief in dreams. Yet about the fiance of the dead girl hung just a touch of the tragic that no ordinary death unheralded by a dream could have bestowed on so important a mourner.

The next call came after a similar lapse of time. The Di Orios are one of the leading families of Roseto. Pasquale di Orio was one of the first settlers in the village. He owns much land that has doubled and trebled in value since he bought it for almost nothing. He has much money as Roseto's fortunes go, and he is the bell-ringer and the sexton and other things besides.

Moreover, he had one clever daughter, pride of his house and heiress to his wealth.

When there was a trolley and railroad smashup at Ackermanville, and out of the wreck of a crowded car came the dead body of Leonarda di Orio, the dream took on a new significance that was not to be disputed. Surely this must be the voice of Teidora, and now five more girls, pride of the village, must be doomed to die.

The railroad settled with Di Orio for $300 and the lawyers told him he was a fool, such a fine girl, too. But Di Orio took the $300 and at once ordered the finest marble angel the money would buy.

In a row in the churchyard rest the bodies of the three girls. On Sunday afternoons groups of girls, members of that Society of the Blessed Virgin, come to admire the white angel that has just been mounted on its pedestal, while they tell how good a father was Pasquale to spend all the railroad money on the gleaming angel.

But the village is waiting for what the next three months will bring forth.

The above dream was simply a vision induced by a spirit who saw the future. Verily spirit return has come to the whole world. SPIRITUALIST.

Letter From a Prominent Octogenarian.

Whether it is old age (as I am in my eighty-fourth year) or some other cause, I am full of reminiscence this morning. Who would have thought, Brother Francis, when we first met in 1862, in this city, you was a clerk of the House of Representatives and I was a member of that body, that there would be such wonderful changes in the thoughts of the world in the next forty-two years. At that time the great mass of the people believed in the orthodox religion of a future hell and heaven, while now a large percentage agree with our theories of life in the future. You have very largely brought about this change. Your opportunities have been great and this has given you the advantage over me; but I have done my small share in this state in aiding to bring the results that you have so much right to be proud of. I have read your paper since its first issue to the present time, except for two years when I was practically blind and in sanitariums and hospitals in New York. As a rule through all this time I have agreed with most of your views, although not with all of them. I think I became a Spiritualist, practically, long before the Fox sisters had the rappings. It came about through my reading of Andrew Jackson Davis' writings.

During my early residence here I entertained in my own house from one week to one month's time such mediums as Dr. Peebles, Fannie Allyn, Maud Lord Drake, and dozens of others. Later I have had with me nearly a year Mrs. S. R. Stevens, whose control Starlight, is well known very largely throughout the country; also I have become acquainted with hundreds of the leading speakers of our cult, including Cora Richmond, Moses and Mattie Hull, Will Hodge, Prof. Peck, Baxter, Clegg Wright, and M. B. Little, of Glen Falls, N. Y., whom I consider as among the best exponents of pure Spiritualism of this or any other country. I heard him twice every Sunday during my blindness. His writings have been translated into one or more foreign languages, and yet he is seldom heard of in the Spiritualistic papers.

By the way, Prof. Peck, in the early days, was a mechanic in this city, who took charge of the singing, and if I remember rightly, also of our Spiritualistic Sunday-school. I have witnessed every kind of phenomena that has been shown us in our cult; almost all of these have had in my own house, much of it with my own family. I have probably seen a hundred materialized spirits, including etherealization and impersonation (the latter in my judgment should never be given without guides telling circle what is to be). I remember ten or fifteen years ago that there was a great cry about fraudulent mediumship. At that time I wrote a letter which you published saying that I did not believe that five per cent of the phenomena which we had was fraudulent, and that one-half of that was caused by the guides instead of the medium, and without their knowledge. I have had pretty extensive opportunity to see every phase. I have not changed my mind very materially on this subject.

I have in my possession perhaps fifty slates containing writing and pictures of flowers that to disbelieve came from spirits would show more credulity than to believe.

Allow me to write about a matter of my own personal knowledge. I know of a gentleman and lady and their son sitting for a long time to see if they could produce materialization through the lady, she being a clairvoyant. The lady was frequently covered (this mind you with no one present but her husband and her son) with white cloths, and very strong impersonations of various kinds. Her father, who is one of her spirit guides, advised her to stop sitting, because it was probable that she would never produce anything but impersonations, but to confine herself to her clairvoyance, trumpet seances and ballot readings. Before this time, she could find any article hid from her equal to any of those who practice that art. She followed the advice of her father, and the result has been that she has probably had spirits at her sittings and at camp-meetings by which nearly a thousand spirits have talked; and there has never been any intimation of fraud, by any person who attended the seance. She has been charged publicly by parties who never saw her works, who never attended her meetings, with fraud. But this is what all mediums have to meet. She is a good wife, mother and grandmother. She has aided to establish societies in different parts of the state, and yet at one time after holding a meeting in a neighboring city, an old and well known Spiritualist wrote an account of her trumpet meetings and sent it to the papers, which refused to publish it and intimated that the writer had been gulled. It is very questionable with me, and I say it frankly without any harsh feelings, that more genuine mediums have been ostracised and charged with fraud than fraudulent mediums have been ascertained and exposed.

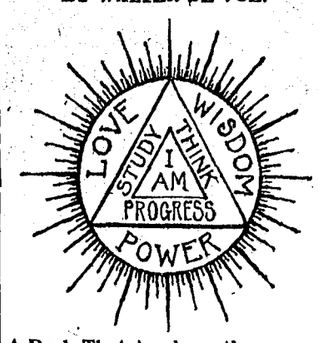
TROUBLED WITH TRAMP SPIRITS.

Some Interesting Experiences With N. P. Nelson.

To the Editor:—I will relate my experience in regard to the question, "Do spirits of animals exist in the spirit world?"

My wife was a very fine clairvoyant medium, although she did not do public work. She has a great many times described spirit dogs, which showed themselves to her, and which in earth life belonged to the parties to whom she was giving a reading, and also other animals. She passed to the spirit world two years ago.

In 1874 I owned a large Newfoundland dog; he was very fond of my horses, and if I left my team anywhere he would always stay with it until I got ready to start off again. One day my wife and another lady took the team and drove out in the country to pick wild cherries, and the dog, as usual, followed the buggy and stayed with the team. On their return the dog was gone, and thinking he had got tired of waiting and had gone home, they did not look for him. We never saw him again.



My wife was not then a medium, nor did we know anything about Spiritualism until 1894, when my wife was controlled for the first time. Her control was an Indian girl, and as bright as any control I have ever heard. In 1901, as we were sitting in our room talking one evening, she controlled my wife and brought the dog, which had been in the spirit world for twenty-seven years, and it was then shown that when he was left with the buggy, two boys came along, tied a rope around his neck and took him with them, and when they got home they shot him—first in the neck, which did not kill him, and then in the head. He had a beautiful hide with long black wavy hair, and they killed him for his hide. Wanda, my wife's control, said that she had found him in the woods, in the spirit world, and that he was crazy when she found him, but she rubbed his head until he got over it, and he has stayed with me all the time since, and I still find him useful.

I am often troubled with tramp spirits, who will step in and answer me before my regular guides can have time to do so; their answers are by no means reliable, and I always drive them out, but sometimes they do not like to go when I order them to do so, and I simply say, "Fido, take them out," and they will get out in a hurry. He is as good in spirit life as he was in earth life, and he is always with me and he will understand anything I say to him, as well as any human spirit can do. So much for spirit dogs.

SPIRITUAL PROGRESSION.

An Earnest Plea for Doing Good and Being Good While on Earth.

What can mortals do to progress in the body? Just as much, or more, as when we shall have passed over to the other side.

If we can't see what good we can do for our neighbors and friends, in our everyday walks of life here, how little will we be able to do or give that help after we have crossed that river we call Death, and begin the life eternal; for if we do not learn those things here, how much better will we be prepared to start a new life over there?

Is it not our daily "walk and conversation" here that will prepare us for that future life, and are we not here to live so as to be happy in the life to come?

Why should we not be striving while here to do good to all mankind, whether rich or poor, high or low? Our aim should be to help every mortal that we meet here that we see needs a kind word or look of loving kindness; some little thing to cheer them on their way. There are so many people that need work to earn the things necessary to sustain life for themselves and their families.

Look about you as you pass along life's rugged way, and see what you can do for mortals that you meet upon the way.

Charity does not consist in money-giving alone—far from it. Charity of thought, words and deeds; little kindnesses to others as you meet them on the way, count for more.

Be always looking for a chance to do good, and the opportunity will meet you often on the way; and when you see the chance, fail not to do the good deed, and you will be the happier for doing it. Do not let the opportunity pass by unheeded for it may stare you in the face unpleasantly, which it ought to do till you learn to do right. But if you seize the opportunity and do the good while you may, it will reward you with that happiness of thought, peace and contentment of mind, which is the great blessing always realized by the doer of good works. Try this, and see the result on yourself, as well as on the object of your benefaction. There are so many ways of doing good that I am afraid we pass many of them by unheeded and thoughtlessly, which leads us to selfishness, which then becomes a stumbling-block, over which we stumble along through life, without fully realizing how selfish we are and have been, and pass on to the other side filled with remorse and regrets at seeing to what a great degree our lives have been a failure, and that we must do so much to undo our life-failures here below to complete or insure our happiness in our life in the beautiful beyond.

If our characters are tainted with selfishness and licentiousness and evil thoughts and deeds, and we have them all to overcome before we can reach that perfect happiness that is promised us, and which it is natural to expect in a heaven of happiness. I fear our progression will be slow, our regrets many, and our remorse of conscience bitter. But all past failures must be met and looked squarely in the face, and met as an honest debt, that must now be settled, and settled with ourselves.

The Golden Rule.

The columns of The Progressive Thinker have displayed much discussion pro and con anent the Golden Rule. As a sort of side-light on the subject, an editorial in the Chicago Tribune will possess interest, and afford matter worthy of thought. Says the Tribune, and it seems to be a plain commonsense view of the subject:

Is there a strike? Too bad! The golden rule would have prevented it. Is there a war? How unfortunate! It need never have happened if everybody had been doing to everybody else what he would like everybody else to do to him. Follow the golden rule. There will be no more strife.

This is what comes from many pulpits every Sunday morning. It is also what comes from many platforms every week day evening. It misleads. It prescribes a remedy that does not cure. It nourishes unbelief.

The golden rule is an amiable maxim of divine origin. If it is kept warm in a man's heart it will make him much better. But it will not prevent him from thinking that he is right and his neighbor wrong. It will not prevent him thinking that he is treating his neighbor as he would have his neighbor treat him when as a matter of fact he is doing the exactly opposite thing. To remove strife you must remove ignorance and misunderstanding. You must introduce omniscience. The golden rule plus omniscience would solve everything. The golden rule alone, even if it were adopted in all the details of daily life by every inhabitant of this planet, would still leave us with strikes and wars. And the New Testament, except when some portion of it is wrenched from its context, does not teach otherwise.

Mr. Mitchell during the coal strike, thought that he was doing unto Mr. Baer as he would be glad, if positions were reversed, to have Mr. Baer do unto him. Meanwhile Mr. Baer was convinced that his treatment of Mr. Mitchell was precisely what Mr. Mitchell's treatment of him ought to have been if Mr. Mitchell had been an employer and he had been a laborer. Mr. Mitchell and Mr. Baer are conscientious men. The newspaper correspondents knew that. But neither Mr. Baer nor Mr. Mitchell is omniscient. Consequently neither Mr. Baer nor Mr. Mitchell knew everything about the coal industry or about just profits or about just wages. Mr. Baer thought that the ultimate good of society demanded one thing. Mr. Mitchell thought that it demanded another. Each was sure he was right. Being sure he was right he went ahead. It was his duty. How can a conscientious man evade the duty of trying to accomplish what he thinks is right? The golden rule can help him to want to know what is right. It cannot, unless he has omniscience, make it certain that he will really know what is right.

In a world of perfectly intelligent beings, capable of learning and of understanding everything, capable of discovering how everything looks from the other side, all that would be needed would be the golden rule. In this world the golden rule is not a panacea. It is merely a palliative.

Frankly, the world is tired of being told that it would be happy if it were perfectly good. The statement is false. What we want is a teacher who will make us perfectly intelligent. We await that teacher. Till he comes we shall have to struggle with each other, relying on our own personal conflicting beliefs.

Miraculous Cures.

An account comes from Paris, France, to the effect that a certain woman who had suffered several years from tuberculosis and heart affection, and was declared incurable, was conveyed to the church of Notre Dame des Victories, and at the moment of the benediction she sprang up and began singing hymns. The doctors found that she was free from disease.

If the account is true, it only proves that spirit power is manifest in the church as well as outside thereof, and is not confined to any one class of people, religious or non-religious. If this cure was miraculous, equally miraculous are the cures effected outside the pale of the church.

Indeed, Modern Spiritualism has more miracles to sustain its claims to divine origin and favor, than any church or sect in the world.

Facts, and an Important Inquiry.

Some months ago news came from the Orient, telling that the Armenians had again risen in revolt against Turkish authority. A cablegram published soon after said:

"The British, French and Russian ambassadors have reached a joint agreement, to present an energetic reprehtament, to present an energetic representation to the Grand Vizier to put a stop

In obedience to that "energetic representation" an official investigation by Turkish authorities followed, which showed the Armenians had again incited a revolution; that a number of bloody combats had ensued; that whole villages had been destroyed, and many people had been killed by the Armenians.

In laboring to suppress these acts of violence and put down the rebellion, the Sultan is again charged with interfering with American Christian missionaries.

Advices from Constantinople of Aug. 12 said:

Minister Leishman to-day saw Tewfik Pash, Turkish minister of foreign affairs, and renewed the urgent representations of the American government for an immediate settlement of the demands regarding the rights of American citizens in Turkey. It is understood important developments are expected within a few hours, either the Porte giving way or Minister Leishman demanding his passports."

Subsequently it is reported the Sultan agreed to make compensation for any losses the American Christians suffered in consequence of Turkish action. And still later comes the announcement, "The Porte declines to comply with the demands of the American government."

This seems to indicate a strained position between the two governments.

But why is America assuming belligerent action towards Turkey? Simply because the missionaries and their belongings have suffered in the local contests in Turkey, which it is said were incited by those missionaries.

We well remember the turbulent character of the Armenian representative at the World's Congress of Religions at the Columbian Exposition, at Chicago in 1893. He made himself so obnoxious the Turkish representative was reported to have assisted in sending him back to his own country to save his worthless hide from violence. He seems to have represented the real Armenian character at home or abroad.

This missionary business, with which this government should in no way interfere, is causing us a world of trouble and expense. Should it bring us in collision with Turkey, it is possible Congress will have something to say in the premises before the end comes.

It is well to remember in our treaty with Algiers, made in February of 1797, signed by George Washington as president, confirmed by the United States Senate, it is positively declared, "The United States is in no sense a Christian nation."

Then why are we sponsors for missionaries in Turkey? Why are we threatening to embroil the nation in war with a foreign power in their interest?

A Terrible Indictment.

Perhaps as terrible an indictment of humanity and of war as an agency for the fulfillment of a nation's desires, as was ever penned, is contained in a brief editorial in the Chicago Record-Herald of recent date.

"I will not dwell on the sickening and harrowing sights of the battlefield except to mention one incident," writes a correspondent of the London Times from near Liao-Yang, and this is his description of the incident:

"The Japanese stormers had penetrated the highest trench and had overpowered the Cossacks holding it, but supports from a splinter-proof shelter behind had fallen with their bayonets on the gallant Japanese in the moment of their success, and bodies of both Japanese and Cossacks were piled thick upon each other in a hideous heap."

Writing more generally of the scenes about him, Wilmot Lewis says:

"When we rode over the field the scene was unforgettable. Trenches were heaped full of Russian and Japanese killed, piled one on the other. They covered paths, and even the shelters were full of dead. Over all whirred millions of flies. The hillsides were strewn with dropped rifles, ammunition and clothing, and dotted with dead lying in dreadful, fantastic attitudes as they fell.

"Everywhere moved searchers gathering the corpses. Soon on the plain below rose the smoke of fires, where the Japanese dead were burned. We passed through grisly sights from hill to hill, hearing always the thundering of guns beyond."

Every such description is a terrible indictment of humanity, though the most spirited of them is necessarily inadequate. Actual physical contact is required to realize what the scene means to the nerves and to the senses. But there is perhaps enough of realism in the reference to the whirring millions of flies. Were the men animals such a strewing of horribly disfigured corpses in the soil oozing with blood would be inconceivably more revolting than the shambles. But here were thousands of human beings mangled and dismembered, the noblest and the meanest mutilated almost past recognition, and all alike a reproach to our common humanity.

It is true also that they illustrate the power of human sacrifice, that the bloody field tells of human skill and bravery. So long as wars are waged that story will be told, and it will contain much to admire, but fortunately the world is putting more and more emphasis on the hideous aspects of such scenes which harrow the feelings and affront the reason at the same time. That they are in any sense necessary to keep true manliness alive is so appallingly false that the supreme effort of the nations should be to prevent them. Here is a field in which diplomacy may actually be of some use if it will only abandon its bad traditions and strive to regulate international relations without recourse to the methods of beast and savages.

THE SEPARATION.

The time has come, as I knew it must.
She said, when we should part;
For I ceased to love when I ceased to trust,
And you cannot break my heart.
Nay, I know not even if I am sad,
And it must be for the best,
Since you only take what I thought I had,
And leave to me the rest.
—Phoebe Carey.

Let Us Now Get Busy!

We Should All Put Our Shoulders to the Wheel Again, Since Vacation Time, and Push the Cause Ahead as Never Before--All Together.

In accordance with a custom established by The Progressive Thinker several years ago, with this issue we begin our regular Fall and Winter Campaign, which means—

That we realize the relaxing tendency of all kinds of business during the summer months, and those who can do so go on a vacation and care but little for any kind of literature.

That we appreciate the fact, when once the vacation is over and the system is rested from business, and also from the vacation, and the evenings lengthen and become peaceful and calm, the mind again turns toward the food from which it anticipates the most satisfactory results.

That those who have attended the camps and returned full of enthusiasm and the spirit of love and good-fellowship are ripe to take up the line of march again at home, and are more ready to push the cause along.

That never is there a better time to get people interested in their future welfare than in the autumn time of the year; the ripening time; the time to prepare for the following season of cold, rain, hail, snow and howling winds. It is the time to prepare for the future of the physical and the spiritual.

We need not repeat the story of the growth and development of The Progressive Thinker; that is well known to all who have been in the ranks of Spiritualism any length of time, whether they have been subscribers or not; they must have heard that which was a matter of general and common understanding among Spiritualists everywhere.

We need not reiterate that we greatly prefer to raise the standard of excellence of The Progressive Thinker, rather than to lower the price to make the numerical gain it might induce.

Those who have followed The Progressive Thinker from its inception; those who have never missed an issue since it was launched upon the ocean of life, are the ones who are loudest in its praise.

This issue is a fair sample of what may be expected to appear at your homes each week. Look it over carefully, and decide whether or not it is not worth the one dollar it will cost you for fifty-two numbers of it. Then look over our extra inducements to subscribers in the way of premiums which are offered at the mere cost of printing, binding and mailing.

Others may follow, as is their right in this "land of the free," but that The Progressive Thinker continues to lead is a known fact by all who have paid any attention to the advance in the spiritual movement.

This fall and winter there will be articles from the best thinkers in our ranks upon all questions germane to Spiritualism and from scientists who are not enlisted with us, but whose science borders upon the occult. Also, the narrative entitled "Compensation the Law of the Universe," a narrative of experiences in spirit life, which will be interesting to all students of the occult from first to last.

No one should be without the paper this winter. It will be fascinating, educative, and full of soul food through the entire season, as it is throughout the year.

This campaign is simply a season of renewal or resumption of energy that has been at rest during the hot months of summer. It is the entrance upon a new wave of prosperity for the cause of Spiritualism and redoubled energy of The Progressive Thinker.

If you want to help push the cause along, send as many of this issue to your friends who are are on the point of investigating the phenomena and inquiring into the philosophy, as you can think of, and gather up their subscriptions. Show them the paper. Show them our special inducements. Do something for the cause. Do it at once.

Are We Not Led?

A most profound question under the above heading, is suggested and very aptly as well as thoroughly discussed editorially in the Chicago Sunday Chronicle of a recent date. Perhaps some of our profound Spiritualist philosophers may be incited, or inspired, to give to us what may seem to be the Spiritualistic view upon this subject. Surely it is well worthy of earnest and conscientious thought.

It is the experience of most men that the best things that come to them in their lives seem simply to happen, instead of being the object or even the natural effect of their exertions.

It is not meant at all that good things come to those who do not exert themselves or to those who do not strive to produce definite results. It would be much safer to say that nothing good ever happens to that class of people. The point is that when people are industrious and capable and work toward a definite object, still the best things contained in their lives are what are called fortuitous events, and cannot be called the natural results of their efforts.

It is also true, perhaps, that a man never makes much of himself unless he takes the full advantage of his happenings, even to the neglect, if need be, of his own predetermined plans. A strong will and persevering effort are good things unless chance beckons in another direction, but woe to the man who is so set in his ways that when a door is invitingly opened to him by an unseen hand he prefers through mere pride to work out his own scheme. Almost every great man in history intended at one time to be different from what he ultimately became.

If these things are true they may have a profound meaning and immense importance. It may be that it is not in a man that walks to direct his own steps, and that an invisible hand and an infinite mind mark out our earthly course. What is more and better, if there is such an influence it is benevolent and friendly, for no one ever made anything by disregarding it. Further, if there is such a benevolent influence at our elbow showing us a different path the knowledge of this fact is the very light of life.

Suppose there is such an influence, how would it be likely to inform us of its existence and accredit itself to us? Evidently by doing just as it does. That is, it would be likely to let us work along in our own way for a while, and then in the most abrupt and unexpected manner show us a more excellent way. We can hardly believe any other method by which this unseen friend would manifest himself and offer his assistance. Perhaps, then, we have such a friend.

Some people may say that it does not make much difference by what name we call this friend and guide, but it is essential that we should recognize the intelligent design and friendly feeling with which he offers his help. Evidently he is no subjective state and no natural law, and to regard him in that light negatives his activities. On the other hand, his good offices multiply when we put some heart into the matter and cultivate grateful recognition. With some people this is all the religion they have and all they need.

To plan as wisely as we can and work as hard as we can and still look for and yield to a higher influence is the secret of success, and a determined opposition to this sort of leading—which is the essence of pessimism—is the surest road to failure and to destruction.

A PRAYER.

Send comfort to those who sorrow in Nature's highway;
Hope to the weary, let fear hold no sway,
Removing all shadows in our pathway.

Mean Imitations.

"The wooden nutmeg of Connecticut was the first imitation food," said a grocer, "and then came the mean Bostonian who dried snow and sold it for salt. This year we have an imitation new potato.

"A westerner put the imitation new potato on the market, and they say he has made about 80 per cent profit out of it. I am speaking seriously now, mind. Of course it was in a joking way that I alluded to the nutmeg and the salt.

"The westerner, to accomplish his deception, plants, on toward the end of the summer, a crop of late potatoes of a kind that keep well. These ripen and are dug up just before the first frost. They are sorted and all the bad ones are thrown out. Then the rest are buried in a field.

"The crop lies buried, preserved from all harm under the soil till early spring. About two months before the first genuine potatoes have appeared it is dug up.

"A great bath of a solution of lye is prepared, and in this bath the potatoes are dipped. When they emerge from their plunge their skins are pink and curly and their flesh is hard and firm. In a word, they are to all appearances new potatoes, and they would deceive anyone.

"There are many imitation foods," the grocer ended. "We have imitation butter, imitation sirup, imitation jellies and jams, imitation coffee, imitation honey and imitation maple sugar. Not one of these frauds, though, is as hard to detect as the imitation new potato."

The Progressive Thinker willingly concedes that the foregoing catalogue names a lot of very mean imitations, but we unhesitatingly pronounce the champion "mean imitation" is the imitation of spirit phenomena with deceptive intent and for purposes of selfish gain.

For meanness, the person who palms fake spirit manifestations as genuine will easily take the premium.

Calls Adam and Eve Negroes.

Buffalo, N. Y., Sept. 10.—Declaring that Adam and Eve were negroes, Rev. F. F. Choizzli of Abyssinia, a graduate of Oxford College, England, pointed to passages in the original scriptures to support his statement in an interview here to-day. As the Garden of Eden was between Egypt and Abyssinia, he said they must have been black, because all persons reared in the torrid zone are of that color. The color of the human skin he declared to be due to chemical action, developed by nature's laws.

Taking the Genesis account as interpreted by orthodox expositors, and accepting the conclusion of the Rev. Choizzli as correct, the question remains, have the negroes reason to be proud of their original ancestry?

Profanity a Christian Product.

There are no "swear words" in the Japanese language. Only Christians have need of such a vocabulary. Eliminate hell and damnation from the creeds and profanity would soon be unknown. The preachers of a few generations ago, while threatening sinners with their only stock in trade for making persons good, supplied the world with a great abundance of what many of their successors deem not only worthless, but pernicious literature.

As Spiritualists discard the damnation theory, we trust they have abandoned the use of terms common only to the vile, and as useless as they are senseless and vulgar.

JOGGING ALONG.

Your courage turns traitor and bids you go back.
You see some swift runner slip into your place,
And your strength will not hold to the end of the track.
No matter; brace up! There is plenty of time,
Take Grit in both hands and you can't be far wrong;
It's a pretty good staff in a difficult climb,

There are many will taunt you. No matter, I say.
The race has not always been won by the swift,
The need and the moment to give them a lift.
Don't trouble your friends. They have trouble enough—
If you haven't a smooth path make out with the rough.
Don't whine to your neighbor—keep jogging along!

The hare laughed aloud when the tortoise set out,
Yet found to his chagrin when settling the score
He had not known what he was laughing about.
Take it all as it comes; leave the issue to prove
If the laughers and jesters are also the strong.
Let them jeer if they choose to. Mere breath will not move
The stubborn man who goes jogging along.

Talk less and think more. You will find at a pinch
Grit, gristle and gumption will carry you through
Where a whole flood of words wouldn't move you an inch.
Keep at it. Stick to it. The others may run
Till you think you are left at the tail of the throng,
But there's always the chance that the race may be won
By the man who keeps steadily jogging along.

Opening of the Morris Pratt Institute.

September 27 will mark the opening of the Morris Pratt School for the third year. The prospects are for a better attendance than during either of the previous years. Most of the last year's students are to return, and a number of new ones have secured rooms in advance. Everything promises a successful opening this year.

The day will be given over to arranging for classes, etc., in the morning, and a program of short talks and selections by the faculty and students as well as visiting friends in the afternoon. Friends of education are invited to be present and participate in these exercises.

Regular Sunday services will be held during the year in the chapel.

"WHAT A GRAND PAPER!"

What a grand paper you are publishing! Really, as an old newspaper man, I am astounded at the quality and quantity of the matter you put forth every week.

My dear friend, it is a great monument you are building for Spiritualism and for yourself—better than those erected over the remains of popes and kings, as described by Byron:

"When some proud son of man returns to earth
Unknown to glory, but upheld by birth,
The sculptor's art exhausts the pomp of woe,
And storied urns record who rest below;
When all is done, upon the tomb is seen
Not what he was, but what he should have been."

I am sure as the years advance you enjoy that serenity of life you so richly deserve.

I would like to see you once again before we make the final journey "across the bar" when

"From out our bourne of time and place
The tide may take us far,
We hope to meet our pilot face to face
When we have crossed the bar."

The Law of the Universe.

A Thrilling Narrative of Experiences in the Sphere of Spirit Life.

Next week, under the above title, we will begin the publication of a thrilling and highly instructive narrative of the experiences in the lower and higher spheres of spirit life of a spirit who gives the name of John Rallstone. It is written through the mediumship of Millard F. Hammond. Rallstone claims to have been in spirit life over two hundred years, and his beautiful teacher many centuries.

The following is a brief synopsis of the narrative, sketched by one who has read it:

This narrative is a nicely-drawn picture of the awakening of the spirit of John Rallstone to consciousness in spirit life, through the influence of a guide, or guardian angel, a spirit of wisdom, a teacher, a leader of the ignorant (mentally blind), who leads Rallstone to his father; also an ignorant spirit, and together they are taught the lessons of thought-transference, obsession, etc.

The principal actor—aside from the guardian angel—the author of the narrative, claims to have been shipwrecked in 17—, and in chapter II gives a thrilling account of the awful typhoon that stripped the boat of every man but himself, and left him afloat in the Indian Ocean, to drift without masts, sails, or even an anchor.

Alone, on a drifting wreck, hungry and famishing for water, he vividly describes the torture of mind and body, in chapter III, and his lonely voyage, always hopeful of being sighted, picked up and rescued; floating—just pushed along by the ocean current and the wind—toward the frigid zone at the South pole.

The narrative here leads the reader into looking ahead into a hopeless and helpless condition, where relentless fate seems perfectly careless and unconcerned regarding the life of the human life, whether it be filled with despair and torture or illumined with hope and sublime pleasures and luxuries.

He drifted into the frozen zone and passed out into the spirit world in a very calm and resigned condition.

With chapter IV begins the real story. The awakening in spirit life and the changes of the scenery and surroundings; the vast experiences, since the year 17— up to the date of coming in contact with a medium through whom to relate the full story to the children of earth.

The father of the author, one of the party on this tour of awakening, inspection and education, had been a Christian in earth life, one of the blindest dupes of old theology, uneducated and rough on the outside, but honest and candid. His honest, sincere questions elicit the greatest variety of explanations from the teacher (the guardian angel, who has been in spirit life so long, and been a teacher for so many centuries), and all are so philosophical and reasonable as to lead up to the very height of spirit teaching.

The one grand thought the message offers is, that each one holds the key to his or her future life and condition. If they desire light they shall receive light; if they desire to remain in the lower sphere of spirit life they shall be so privileged, etc.; that each carries the nature into spirit life that was possessed upon the earth plane, and has the privilege of remaining in that condition indefinitely.

Another beautiful feature portrayed is the vast usefulness and worth to ignorant humanity and spirits, of the grand and noble missionaries and teachers in spirit life.

Still another nice point is, that in spirit life those in one sphere of growth need not be and are not molested by those below them; neither can they disturb those in the spheres above them; that each sphere of unfoldment is a condition unto itself and that the eternal law of right will eventually expand each individual into perfection.

While this is unprovable, by the return of a perfected individuality with such evidence, it seems a logical conclusion regarding the laws of progress.

"Compensation" is the one great idea that is interwoven all through this narrative; the idea that good deeds, words and thoughts bring their own reward—compensation; also, wrong thoughts bring about their own correction and individual knowledge—compensation.

"The law of the universe is the law of compensation," is not defined here as a commodity; not a return for value received; rather it is the result of sufficient cause to produce it. Compensation may be agreeable or otherwise, not always up to individual expectations.

The entire story from beginning to end, is composed of rehearsals of experiences in spirit life and illustrations of inestimable value as lessons upon the road of life, as relates to the most important means for soul-expansion and elevation; showing that each individual either promotes himself or postpones his own progress, and that ignorance is one of the greatest hindrances to unfoldment.

It shows the absolute necessity of the study of self to unfold, and that the study of others will be of no avail except that you study their real needs for the purpose of aiding them; that to avoid falling into the hands of or being influenced by excarnates of a mischievous or evil-disposed nature (or being obsessed) one must study self and eliminate all such tendencies from his own soul, and then become positive and repellant to all objectionable forces, or even suggestions that he knows will redound to some wrong to either self or others. And the closing words upon "Liberty" are to the point of the pith of the narrative, viz.: That in spirit one is free; at liberty to rise or remain; there is all eternity for it; no haste is required, but it is left to the desire of each.

THE PASSING OF WAR.

"The roar of cannon, the hiss of shell,
The tread of armies, the battle yell
And God's voice answering, 'All is well!'"
—Ella Wheeler Wilcox in San Francisco Examiner.

An old book gave us a myth called God;
A name that has drenched the earth with blood
With rank superstition's vengeful rod!
No other name since time first reared his head
And traced his scroll upon the brow of man
In history, can point with such success
To deeds of crime and horror, as that name,
And with the climax of perverted zeal
Say "All is well!" No other, did I say?
Ah, now methinks I hear the name of Nero.
And yet another name, of one whose pen,
Wielded by woman's hand with magic skill,
Has wrought unmeasured good for human kind.
This blest name, self-enrolled with that of God
And Nero; discord strange—yet unto them
The music of war's cannon is but sweet
Though loud crescendo; flames of burning Rome—
The roasting lives, but incense all delicious!
Ah, Ella Wheeler Wilcox! why should you,
Sweet charmer, (kissed by dangerous luxury),
As poisoned victim whisper, "All is well!"
Crush that foul falsehood! Break the fatal spell!
Till lasting peace shall seal the mouth of Hell,

Important Subjects Considered by Dr. J. M. Peebles.

MATTER THROUGH MATTER—MATERIALIZATIONS—THE NEW THOUGHT—AN OBSESSED PREACHER—CHRISTIAN SCIENCE BIGOTRY.

A voice is ever at my side,
Speaking in tones of might,
Like the prophetic voice that cried
To John on Patmos, "Write."

Observation, in connection with consciousness, intuition, reason and experience, is the great test of truth. And this truth is perpetually coming in contact with the theories of prominent personages.

It was Dr. Gregory of Edinburg, if memory serves me, who wisely said, "The most cautious philosopher has no right to reject well-established facts because he cannot see nor comprehend their explanations, and certainly he has no right to charge witnesses with deceit or imposture before he has himself fully, carefully and critically inquired into them. If he will not, or cannot inquire, it is only proper that he should be silent; to do otherwise is as unjust as it is irrational."

Among all these wonderful spirit phenomena which have prevailed for fifty years and more, none have excited greater astonishment than the fact of the transfer of ponderable matter through intervening solid substances and in a manner that escapes the cognizance of our senses. The other astounding marvel is that which pertains to what is denominated "the materialization of spirits." The phrase is an unfortunate one inasmuch as pure essential spirit cannot, as I conceive, be so manipulated as to produce visible forms. While the universe is one—a unity, it is manifest to us as spirit and substance—that is to say, substance which can be as naturally reduced to physical matter as invisible steam can become visible water and solid ice.

Thousands of spirit seances have been held under the most crucial test conditions, during which spirits have come and gone through closed doors, whilst flowers, fruits, living fish, birds, ancient coins, very, very old parchments and other varieties of solid bodies, animate and inanimate, have been passed through walls, ceilings and other material masses without any apparent difficulty. If you have witnessed nothing of this nature, kind reader, it is your misfortune, that's all. It seems that the power of spirit, or spirits, when they have the conditions, is almost unlimited. Spirits claim that the effluence from the substances of their own organizations, no less than from the spiritual or soul-bodies of men, are the highest known sublimations of that universal element called ether, and to the manipulations of these with invisible atoms, electrons and ions must be accorded the fact of what is termed spirit materialization.

Materialization a Fact.

When I speak of materialization I do not mean the materialization of pure spirit, the conscious force of the universe; but I mean the accretion of auras, essences, atoms, molecules and other etherealized invisible substances and their manipulations in such a way as to become visible to the eye and that may be consciously sensed by the touch. Of this I have not the vestige of a doubt. Thrice have I had the materialized forms walk out of the temporary drapery-cabinet hastily improvised for the occasion, stand in the middle of the room, take my hand, converse with me on what only the spirit and myself knew about, and then dissolve, disintegrate and dissipate into invisibility without any return or attempt to return to the cabinet. There was no flesh, nor blood, nor bad breath in this apparition.

When last in Melbourne I sat in twenty of T. H. Stanford's seances. Mr. C. Bailey, the medium, is now in Milan, Italy, before the Psychic Research societies. This Melbourne Stanford, a millionaire, and brother of the late Senator Stanford, the originator and builder of the Stanford University of California, is not only a cultured, high-toned gentleman, but a brave, outspoken Spiritualist. In his seance-room fitted by himself and maintained free to seekers after the truth, I have frequently seen in a quiet, subdued light a materialized spirit hand projected fully ten feet from the medium, then float in the air, then rest upon my knee, which hand I could touch. The form of the hand was perfect but rather cold; then a moment later it would soften and disintegrate before my eyes. This was only a minor manifestation of what I witnessed in Mr. Stanford's seances, seances where many of the scholarly, the cultured and noted citizens of Melbourne were invited to attend. And I can call to mind no one that left these seances without being conscious of the genuineness of the phenomena. They were always free to investigators.

Mediumship Not Sacred.

No, it is not sacred in any theological or ecclesiastical sense; and yet in another and higher sense it may be considered sacred because it relates to and takes hold of the highest and divinest faculties of the human being as well as the immortality of the spirit—the divine Ego, the central force that constitutes conscious manhood.

In Grecian literature we read of the "sacred grove where Plato taught." The beautiful peacock was sacred to Juno. An edifice dedicated to intellectual, to religious purposes, to spiritual songs and communion with the Gods and good spirits may be denominated sacred; because consecrated to high and heavenly purposes. And so mediumship, related of course primarily to the physiological and psychological organization, when practiced by clean, upright, conscientious instruments, may be considered sacred. And yet I must say again that I more and more dislike the word "medium," the message-bearer from those dwelling in the higher life. The word medium implies neither consciousness, intelligence nor sensitiveness. A door knob is a medium or an instrument for opening a door; a wheelbarrow is a medium for dumping yard refuse into some distant ditch; the burglar's kit of tools is his medium for house-breaking. Intermediary is a much better word—and sensitive is a still better one.

The seance-room is necessarily a spirit-haunted room and should be kept clean, well-ventilated, decorated with paintings of the spirit realms and made sweet with the perfume of roses and lilies—in a word, consecrated, sacred to spirit communion. How unlike the above are the ordinary promiscuous seance-gatherings, at fifty cents, or a dollar a head admission, and where all too often the motive is curiosity, Irish-brogue wit, fun, finding gold mines, or some selfish scheme for the gathering in of the shekels.

Mediumship is not properly a gift. It is, in a word, sensitiveness to influences from both the visible and the overshadowing, encircling invisible spheres. It is especially natural to some organizations. It may be cultivated. Invisible intelligences often stimulate and hasten its unfoldment to perfect some work that they desire to accomplish. This sensitiveness to the unseen may also be debased and destroyed by immoral conduct.

Frauds on Both Sides of the Divide.

Who that has had experiences in Spiritism to any very great extent, does not know that there are most deplorable frauds, wolves among us vestured in sheep's clothing, tramps too lazy to work at manual labor, who professionally "play" the medium. Frauds!—yes, frauds in mediumship, frauds in merchandise, frauds in matrimony, frauds in the pulpit, frauds in government, and what is to be done about it? Is there no remedy? What is the wisest course to pursue? There is really but one course, and that is, to lift the veil and let the public see the trickery, and know the facts. And here is what to every honorable Spiritualist is not only perplexing, but painfully annoying. It is this, there is a class of gaping, gullible, credulous Spiritists, who after a medium has been fairly caught and stripped of mask and muslin, and other manufactured toggeries, will persistently not only defend them but patronize them at a dollar a head, and this, too, when they would not pay ten cents to hear a brilliant, uplifting lecture from Howe, or Wright, or Wiggins, or Colville, or Moses Hull, or Sprague, or Kates, or J. J. Morse, or Mrs. Brigham, or Mrs. Pryor, or Lillie, and a dozen others that I could name; and generally this class of Spiritists patronize no Spiritualist journal. They abide in the dark den of ignorance to save a dollar.

And here is a point not commonly taken into consideration in the matter of frauds: I refer to the fact of fraudulent spirits—the mischievous, fun-loving, deceiving, demoniac "diakka" of Dr. A. J. Davis memory. Often mediums may really be mediums, or good sensitives, and be obsessed, influenced, controlled by positive earth-bound spirits enabling them through aural enironments to measurably re-live and re-enact the traits and tricks characterising their earthly lives.

Death, bear in mind, is not a sieve to sift out all past life-long tendencies; is not a slate to wipe off as with a sponge all the consequences of past vices, nor is it in any sense, a blood atoning Savior. Clowns awake as conscious clowns just over there. I am certain, therefore, that some detected mediums have really good mediumistic powers; but are impressed by dark demon spirits, assuming perhaps great names, making great promises which, coupled with the medium's liking for money or fame, by their higher natures become temporarily subjected to the influences of the lower, and so they become guilty of the most abominable and horrible frauds, which frauds are the warts and blotches on the fair face of Spiritualism.

What is to be done? Though not robed in ermine, nor anchored upon any judgment seat, I will venture to say, to advise this—keep away from all these traveling mountebanks, these wandering tramps, professing to produce materializations in the light; keep away from this whole brood of loud-mouthed pretenders, or anyone who does not come to you wisely and well recommended, and satisfy yourself that their recommendations are not forgeries. And further, sit, meditate, become and be your own medium, remembering that the higher mediumship is a beautiful interblending of spirit forces with your own; cultivate the home seance; unfold your own spiritual nature; make your very sitting-rooms altars for sweet spirit communion, have your children sit with you in your seances and make your homes so clean, so quiet, so pure, so unselfish, so beautiful, so musical, so aflame with love and so harmonial as to naturally invite the ennobling, purifying presence of exalted angels.

An Inquiry—What is the New Thought?

The once very noted preacher and orator of New England, the Rev. Thomas Starr King, used to occasionally say in his Sunday sermons, that the great difference between Unitarians and Universalists was that the Universalists believed that God was too good to endlessly damn a portion of the human race, while the Unitarians believed that man—that all men were naturally too good to be eternally damned. This was strong pulpit language but evidently conveyed a definite idea.

Unitarians, Universalists, Swedenborgians, Liberalists, Rationalistic Freethinkers and Spiritualists, repudiating the old Calvinistic dogma that man because of "Adam's fall is a poor, unworthy worm of the dust," have earnestly taught that man is a thinking, reasoning, royal-souled being made in the image of God, having within the conscious potencies of infinite possibilities—that the Ego, the divine innermost, is Spirit—is a potentialized portion of the Incarnating God. Cherishing these views, the liberal millions have taught for a century or more and said, "Think for yourelf; investigate for yourself; reason for yourself; judge for yourself; in a word, be yourself, growing, unfolding from within outward, struggling to overcome the lower nature, striving for self-mastery—ever seeking to attain and to reach to the highest moral attitude of perfection." "Be ye perfect," said Jesus, "even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."

All Emersonian thinkers it is said, are optimists. The phrase is certainly euphonic. I much admire it because it is as true as it is beautiful. And now we have the "new thought"—the "new thoughtists," called by some the "new thought-ites." These and Mental Scientists are synonyms, metaphysically considered—one shield with two sides, or two different names.

But what is this much-vaunted "New Thought?" Carefully considering and reflecting, I cannot make it out. It is a puzzler. Hence, in becoming humility I come mentally kneeling at the feet of our enthusiastic New Thought-ists and asking, plead to know just what the New Thought is. And to get down to the foundation, permit me to ask these good creed-inventing people the following questions:

1. What is, or what do you mean by Thought? Is it substance or a motion, or a vacillating vibration?

2. What relation do thoughts bear to intuitive ideas?

3. In the common phrase, "the transference of thought," is it the thought that is transferred from the conscious subject to the object, or the vibration?

4. If thoughts are "creative," as we are told ad nauseam, what did they ever create without purpose, skill and persistent energy?

5. As there are multitudes who believe, as did Col. Ingersoll, that "Death ends all," does the New Thought program in the hands of its advocates give, or seek to give any irrefragible evidences of a future conscious life beyond the grave?

6. Why do the New Thought advocates continually say and write, "Thoughts are things?" If they be things, are they not the subjects of avoirdupois, something like lumps of chalk, bits of coal, or slices of cold ham? "Things" imply form, weight, color, shape, etc.

Being now in my 84th year, hale and hearty, yet discovering a tendency to a little baldness on the top of my head over the phrenological regions of benevolence and veneration, will the "New Thought," by any amount of concentration, cause new hairs to grow upon my head? I am a little sensitive upon this point, for I don't want to get bald-headed, and have the children run after me and cry out, as they did to old Elisha, mockingly, "Go up, thou bald-head," "Go up, thou bald-head." But if they should so do, children-like, I would not turn around and curse them as Elisha did, nor would I call out "she bears" from the forest to tear in pieces "forty-two children." (II. Kings ii:23, 24). I would set Elisha and that Old Testament Jehovah a better example.

And further, touching this theory of the New Thought, allow me to inquire if the "New Thought" people, a people that greatly interest me, believe in, or recognize, any invisible, conscious intelligencies influencing mortals, either to injure or mentally or morally aid them along the rough journey of their mortal pilgrimages.

Allow me to further inquire, if the good housewife should take her old last year's bonnet, brush it up a bit, put on a few extra ribbons, add a few dead bird's feathers, and then, strutting along the street, boast of her new spring hat, would she not be looked upon as a vain, walking exhibition of deception?—Are deception and hypocrisy ever justifiable? Is it not best to be candid and conscientiously honest? But what, oh, what is this New Thought? And further, if absolutely new, is it necessarily true? Or putting the inquiry in the plural form, if these new thoughts are absolutely new, does it follow that they are positively and unqualifiedly true? If not true, would it not be better that they had remained unthought?

An Obsessed Preacher.

A number of years ago, I was well acquainted with the Reverend B. S. Hobbs, a Universalist minister of Webster, N. Y. He was a well-educated and eloquent minister in the ranks of Universalism, but unexpectedly and against his wishes, he became mediumistic. The invisible forces continued their work of influence until it became a positive control. He became really a trance-speaking clergyman, and for a time all went seemingly well, but soon he began to teach and preach strange theories. His ministerial brethren reproved him, but he continued to teach doctrines averse to Universalism,—bordering on Hindooism and Oriental speculations. Once upon a Sunday, he seized the Bible upon his pulpit, and threw it with violence into the broad aisle. He became wildly enthusiastic, denouncing both men and women and the world. He was pronounced insane and placed in the Utica Lunatic Asylum. After several months, he was pronounced sane, and came to my residence upon a visit, but was still, in a measure at times under this invisible influence. Advised unwisely by a few friends, he again entered the pulpit as a preacher, but was violently controlled to the very verge of profanity and vulgarity. He would at times—when the "spells came on," as they called them, sing, dance, swear, give tests and throw things at people's heads. Here is an extract from an article that he wrote and published in the Christian Ambassador, Auburn, N. Y.:

"In a moment when I least expected it the bolt again fell, and I was crushed in great sorrow, humiliation and anguish, to the dust!

"It is proper here to say that this exhibition was the most painful, if not the strangest, of any I have experienced. My speech was first controlled while in the solemn act of prayer; and then I was again compelled to speak in a manner that, as before, led some to think it spiritual and others to think me strangely diseased if not partially insane. Before when these more than dreadful trials were mine the strange influence was of short duration. Not so, however, in the present instance. I was obliged, in spite of all my efforts to say and do these strange things."

For downright narrowness and blinded bigotry commend me to members of that little sect called Christian Scientists.

I remember a few years ago, of asking for their hall (the Snyder hall in San Diego, Cal.) to give some lectures upon hygiene and the general laws of health, and they promptly refused to allow me to occupy their hall. Asking the Jews, they allowed me the use of their synagogue.

Only two days since, I stepped over into the Christian Science hall in Battle Creek, to inquire upon the address of Mr. Farlow, and after conversing a time with their reader and the lady in charge of the library, I offered to give them my new book, "The Demonism of the Ages or Spirit Obsession," and they positively refused accepting it, to either lay upon their book table, or be transferred to the shelves of their library. How is that for narrowness, for bigotry? And at the same time I took up a book from their table, and about the first paragraph that my eye rested upon, read thus: "All is mind, there is no matter. There is no such thing as sickness, pain or disease. These are delusions of the human intellect." And yet these same Christian Scientists professedly heal the sick—that is, they profess to heal that which does not exist. How is that for logic? The real truth is, while the Roman Catholic church has a pope, Christian Science has a pope, and one so shriveled up and religiously narrow as not to allow scholarly and liberal books and pamphlets to lie on their tables, or be placed in their libraries. No further comments are necessary.

The Optimism of Spiritualism.

The theodicy of Leibnitz and the sweet optimism of the French Cousin, consciously cognized the deep undertone of that Spiritualism which sees everywhere progress as the purpose of nature—the purpose of this orderly universe. I say orderly because the evolution of seasons, succession of day and night, the regularity of the nightly constellations and the periodicities of the suns, moons, and stars, enabling astronomers to calculate the coming of eclipses to an hour, or to a minute almost, hundreds of years before their appearance—these, all these mighty facts indicate, may I not say demonstrate, intelligence, purpose and will as constituting the power, which governs this measureless universe—a power that is just, immutable and Almighty. If this be not so, then all is chance, blind fickle chance, the synonym of chaos—chaos in the place of purpose and an orderly Kosmos.

Whatever other religions may have to say of life—human life and its towering aspirations, Spiritualism declares that it is supremely good. This life is given us, remember, not to shrink in, but to make the most of in the line of a well-rounded unfoldment of all mental and moral possibilities. Life is not a desert of sand-storms and sufferings between two eternities. It is a gift to be cultivated and glorified. No true Spiritualist spends his nights and days pining over and yearning to throw aside all mortal burdens that he may pass to the summer-land of immortality. No, he rather toils, and struggles strenuously to bring the summer-land of growth and harmony down to earth. He, we all want a heaven here and now. The true Spiritualist accepts no atoning bribes to secure a cushioned seat, or a glittering crown in the golden beyond.

While I honor the grand old past, and accept its good, I believe that the best man, the best women, the best civilization, the best religion, the best institutions, and the best times the wide world over, belong to the incoming future. And this will be when the Christ of love and peace and brotherhood reigns the world over in regal splendor.

Without the least show of boasting, I feel to say that Spiritualism in its phenomenal, philosophical and religious aspects is fully abreast of the highest ideal of the noblest type of modern thought, plus the most positive demonstrations of a future conscious and progressive existence. And yet as there are spots on the sun, so there are counter-currents to be observed in connection with Spiritualism. There are other leaves to be turned. One of these I turned over in my late book, "The Demonism of the Ages and Spirit Obsessions," which considering the private and public criticisms so far received, it is safe to say that is making quite a fuss in our not altogether harmonious Zion. Up to date the number of blessings to the cursings range in about the ratio of five to three—and so I sleep well. Five with the truths, as against three engulfed in error, is a tremendous majority.

Camp-meetings ended, vacation wanderers hurrying homeward and autumn leaves whispering of change and death, our local Spiritualist societies after their rest, are taking on new life. The Battle Creek society has fortunately secured the services of Mr. and Mrs. Sprague, N. S. A. missionaries, for this opening month of September. Combined these missionaries constitute a fine power in the exhibition and dissemination of the phenomena, philosophy and religion of Spiritualism. The audiences under their administrations are increasing every Sunday. The star of truth is ascending, and our Spiritualists are now talking of building a temple; heaven grant that it may not end in talk. I regret to say that some of our wealthiest Spiritualists are often the stingiest. "Honestly," as the ascended Col. Ingersoll used to say, "that is so."

POTENT TRUTHS.

Morality Is Not Dependent on Christianity.

As set forth in the Ingersoll Memorial Beacon, the first and main contention of rationalism in its case against Christian dogmatism is that the doctrines of the creeds are not true. Instead of squarely meeting this issue, it has become an almost universal practice with the clergy to dodge the real question and fall back on the claim that orthodox Christianity is indispensable to the world as a promoter of morality. Indeed, this has been said so often that it is generally accepted as a true statement. By some, it is thought to be a sufficient reason for actual belief in the "divine" origin of the church; but the many avail themselves of it as a kind of justification of a make-believe faith—as an excuse for lining up with the majority, regardless of their own best convictions.

But is it true that actual belief and pretended belief in the Christian dogmas make men moral?

As bearing on this question, we quote from a late letter from Japan by William E. Curtis, a conservative and reliable writer, in the Chicago Record-Herald:

The records of the police department in Japan show a striking contrast to those of American and European cities. Last year out of a total of 148,239 convictions in the criminal courts, only 3,323 were for what are called "crimes"—that is, penal offenses—while 140,128 were for what we would call misdemeanors, and what the Japanese term "offenses against property, including petit larceny, grand larceny, burglary, obtaining money under false pretenses, forgery and embezzlement. The offenses against the public peace, what we would call disorderly conduct, were comparatively few, furnishing a little more than 10 per cent of the entire number of cases in the criminal court. If you will compare this with the statistics of the courts of New York, Chicago and Philadelphia and other cities, you will see that the Japanese are a remarkably well-behaved people, for only 15,363 persons out of a total population of over 45,000,000 were convicted of disturbing the public peace. This is, of course, accounted for by the temperate habits of the people. There is comparatively little drunkenness in Japan. It was almost unknown—mirabile dictu—before the foreigners came to introduce Christianity and modern civilization, but it is increasing year by year, until now temperance societies, which were unknown and unnecessary, are being organized in Japan.

That is something to think about. Is Christianity a failure in its influence over the personal habits of mankind? Why is it that the heathen behave so much better than those who have the light of the gospel? We consider our own religion the best, of course. If we did not we would adopt any other that we considered better. At one time, early in the modernization of Japan her statesmen seriously contemplated making Christianity the state religion and organizing a national church like the established Church of England. That was thirty years ago, and perhaps something might have come of the proposition had not the embassy of wise men who went around the world studying foreign affairs and customs advised against it on the ground that there was so much more crime, vice and poverty in London, Paris, Rome, Vienna, New York and other great Christian cities than in Tokio and other heathen cities of Japan. And the contrast still continues in the most striking manner.

The heathen in their blindness may bow down to wood and stone, but they do not behave as badly as corresponding classes of society in Christian cities. This is not only true in Japan, but it is equally true in India, China and other countries of the East. There is no lynching, for example. Such a thing is unheard of. There is absolute respect for law and official authority, and much more confidence in the police and the courts in pagan lands than in those which boast of possessing the highest degree of Christian civilization.

Compare, if you please, the number of convictions in the criminal courts of Japan—148,239 for a population of 45,000,000—and those in India and other countries of the East, with similar statistics of England, France, Germany, the United States and other Christian countries, and wonder what is the advantage or the purpose of our universities, colleges and other means of culture; our churches, Sunday-schools, prayer meetings, Young Men's Christian Associations, Christian Endeavor Societies, Epworth Leagues and Women's Christian Temperance Unions. We send missionaries to these countries to teach them the true way of salvation and offer them the means of grace provided by the gospels, but they might properly send missionaries to teach us temperance, manners and morals.

Reality.

"I accept time and space, or now and reality, and dare not question."—Whitman.

It has been said that "nothing is real but consciousness," to which may be added, because there is nothing but consciousness.

We may truly say that consciousness is both cause and effect. The characters presented, the things seen and the events that take place in dreams are as tangible and real, and understandable as the procedure and sequence of events in our so-called waking state.

Some have even claimed that our dreams are glimpses of the real, and that we are actually asleep and dreaming at all other times. The contention urged to uphold the latter view is that in so-called dreams we never wonder at the seeming impossible things that are done, such as moving through space at will, or the transformation scenes, such as animals being changed into persons or vice versa.

In dreams we do not criticise nor deny; all is taken for granted. But how is it in what we call real? Everything is doubted, criticised, analyzed, or rejected. We declare that people lie, that they are in error or deceived and that nothing is as it should be. Some even say that the vast fabric of creation, the visible universe is an illusion.

This view of people awake, seems to me more like the vagaries of a dream or the "Unsubstantial fabric of a vision" than the vivid limelight flashes upon the background of consciousness in so-called dreams. But it is not my purpose to discuss the opinions or beliefs as to what constitute reality, but rather to endeavor to demonstrate that which appears to me as a vital truth, namely: that there is no reality—or rather that all the so-called unreal is real.

The belief in the unreal is but a belief in the evil or devil under another guise.

If I see an iceberg today and only water tomorrow, it does not follow logically that the iceberg was unreal; it simply proves that a chemical, or alchemical, change has taken place in the form or manifestation of water, or the glass of oxygen and hydrogen composing water. These gases are as real while in the frozen or crystalized state called ice as when free in the substance called ether.

Again, let us consider a tree, vegetable or fruit. Chemists furnish indubitable proof that the substance composing these materializations (I mean the oil, albumen and fibrine that constitute the organic visible substance of the tree or vegetable, or grain or fruit) is formed by a precipitation of the molecules or gases in the air. It therefore follows as an orderly sequence that these material objects, manifestations or appearances are simply an aggregation of the molecules or gases everywhere present, and that by the law of chemical action and reaction, and the alchemical process of transmutation these materializations or forms of matter can be resolved into their "primal float."

Here we are confronted with the question: Are not these principles as real when in concrete form as they are in their ultimate potency or pure spiritual essence?

REMARKABLE INVENTION

AN INSTRUMENT THAT RESTORES EYESIGHT.

Spectacles Can Be Abandoned.

This instrument is in the form of a pocket battery, which the inventors have patented and which they call "Actina," a word which is their trade mark and owned by them.

In the treatment of eye diseases the inventors of "Actina" claim there is no need for cutting or drugging the eye for any form of disease, cataracts, pterygiums and other abnormal growths can be removed and weakened vision restored by the new and more humane method. If this is a fact, there will be no need to go blind or to wear spectacles. "Actina" has been tested in hundreds of cases and has effected marvelous cures. So confident are the inventors that this device is an article of great merit that they give an absolutely free trial. They want every one interested to make a thorough investigation and a personal test of the "Actina." As it is sent on trial postpaid, any person can give it this test.

They issue a book of 100 pages—a complete dictionary of diseases—which tells all about "Actina," the diseases it will cure, what others think of it, what marvelous cures it has effected, and all about the responsibility of its owners, and it is sent absolutely free upon request. This book should be in the library of every family. Address New York and London Electric Association, Dept. TR, 929 Walnut Street, Kansas City, Mo.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

ATTENTION LYCEUMS. — During June, July and August the Progressive Lyceum will be sent to Lyceums for one cent per copy. This will enable you to increase your subscription one-half its present number, with no extra expense. Address J. W. Ring, care of the Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas.

San Francisco now has a Buddhist temple. It is by no means as imposing as even the smallest of the shrines of the faith in the Orient, being located on the second floor of a Japanese shop, but its votaries are not excelled for devoutness in any part of the world. The inner shrine consists of a mantelpiece draped in rich Japanese silk, embroidered with chrysanthemums and other flowers of Japan. Two golden candlesticks stand on each side of a miniature statue of Buddha, and near the candlesticks vases are kept filled with Japanese lilies. In front of the mantel are two stands containing lacquered receptacles for votive offerings.

Celebration of Founders Day at Overton Street, Spiritual Temple, Newport, Ky., Sunday, Sept. 25, 1904. Afternoon service at 2:30; evening service at 7:30. Supper at 5:30. Dr. J. O. M. Hewitt, of Chicago, officiating. Everyone invited. Admission free. Tests after each lecture.

The Lafayette Call says: "A shoemaker who conducts a small shop on the outskirts of Plymouth, Ind., has evolved a unique plan to prevent annoyance by his children while at work. During the warm days of summer the cobbler plies his trade under the shade of the trees in his back yard and was for a time subject to interruption by his smallest child. He discovered only by chance that he possessed a certain hypnotic influence over the child. He noticed that when he waved the child away the movement of his hand produced a soporific effect upon the youngster. Following up his observation, he learned that by making certain manipulations over the face of the child it became passive and immediately fell into a sound sleep. The discovery has proved a great boon to the shoemaker, who finds it most convenient in his business. Now when he is disturbed he simply makes a few passes with his hands and the child becomes oblivious to all surroundings."

W. DeVoe writes: "Upon receipt of twelve cents to pay postage, I will send a copy of 'Healing Currents From the Battery of Life' (price $2), to any Spiritualist reading-room or liberal thought library in the world where it will be freely circulated. It is proving itself of true worth by healing the sick and I desire that it shall preach the healing gospel to as many of God's beloved as possible. Address College of Freedom, 6027 Drexel avenue, Chicago, Ill."

With the prediction that he was about to die still upon his lips, J. P. Underwood, general manager of Rogers Wheel Company, dropped dead Sept. 7, at Lebanon, Ky. Mr. Underwood who was 55 years old, was apparently in good health.

Mrs. Nellie Gouthrop writes interestingly of her experiences at camps. We have only space for a brief extract. She says: "Of all the camps I ever attended Chesterfield is the place for an all-round good time, so many good mediums; something all the while to make the time pass pleasantly. The Vicksburg (Mich.) camp engages the best talent to be had. It is a beautiful place—natural trees and flowers in rustic, which add much to beautify the grounds. All is managed by one dear little woman, 'with the help of angels,' she says. Any way it is wonderful how smoothly everything moves, all in harmony. Miss Jeanette Fraser has a way of making everyone love her, so all are happy and want to come again. The good workers were Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague, who are a matched team for lectures and messages. Mr. T. Grimshaw, one could not hear him without trying to live a better life. He was followed by messages by Mr. Letford and others. Then came Mr. and Mrs. Kates. There are no words too good to say in praise of them. Among the other workers on the grounds were Mr. Joseph King, Pipestone, Mich.; Mr. Charles Barnes, Chicago, and his dear sister, Mrs. Hamilton Gill, trumpet and clairvoyant; Miss Lilly Whitney and the writer of this, all doing good work in their own sweet way. Everyone was disappointed not to see our dear sister Isa W. Kayner, but all sent her loving thoughts." Mrs. Gouthrop asserts that she saw her spirit father materialized at Farmer Riley's circle. At a seance held by Mr. King on one occasion she saw her uncle materialized.

Frank T. Ripley, speaker and platform test medium, is open for engagement. He has November, December and January open. Address all letters to Tipton, Ind., care P. O. Box 326. He will also respond to calls for funerals anywhere in Indiana, Ohio or Pennsylvania.

The first regular meeting of the Band of Harmony (Church of the Soul auxiliary) will take place the first Thursday in October, Room 512 Masonic Temple, 3:30 to 10 p. m.

Rev. Cora Benton, trance speaker and message giver, will be glad to hear from societies wishing a representative of the highest spiritual forces. Address 1714 Adams street, Toledo, Ohio.

Mrs. Rose Tremain writes from Vienna, N. Y.: "We have a small company here developed through the home circle. Mrs. S. A. Walters of Denver, Col., is delivering lectures here and at Sylvan Beach, independent of any association or established price, simply accepting whatver collections she may get. She is working for humanity's sake instead of money. She is a fine inspirational speaker and test medium and is doing splendid work."

Talking of strange experiences, Mr. Stephen Phillips has been obliged to leave his charming house in Egham, near Windsor, to which he had recently gone in search of peace and quiet on account of the disturbance that he experienced through ghostly visitants. "The uncanniest noises conceivable visited us directly we arrived," said the poet and dramatist. "There were knockings and rappings and footfalls. Doors banged and were opened. I would be sitting quietly in my study writing when the door would open noiselessly. That was more than a man in the dead of night could endure. All the household heard sounds and experienced sensations." Finally his little daughter told him that she had seen a small old man creeping about the house. No such person was to be found, but he afterward discovered that, according to another report, an old farmer strangled a child fifty years before close to the house. So precipitately did Mr. Phillips and his family leave the house that they did not even stay to take away their things.

Emily E. Philp writes: "The Englewood Spiritual Union has engaged the services of Mrs. Catherine McFarlin for the months of October and November. She is a very pleasing speaker, an earnest worker, and a truthful medium. She made a number of friends when she was here before, who will be glad to greet her again."

Prof. Ransby writes from Hornellsville, N. Y.: "I had a nice time of three weeks in the camp at Lily Dale, giving tests and messages from the rostrum in the auditorium. I am now working for the society here."

Virginie Barrett writes: "Will the friends address me for the present at Danville, Ill., 525 Sherman street. I am serving the society here, and would like for those interested in the cause to address me here. Home address, No. 29 Gladstone avenue, Indianapolis, Ind."

A. H. Nicholas writes: "It sometimes occurs that one word spelled wrong gives a meaning to a sentence far different from the idea intended. In my article at the close of the Open Court occurs this sentence: 'Ion said it (message written in Chinese) was a message from his grandfather, and that he never heard that name spoken or saw it written in that country,' which conveys the idea of the name not spoken or written in China. The last three words of the sentence should read 'in this country'—(in America)."

Mrs. B. S. Bywater of Laporte, Ind., has a letter written by her sister, Mrs. George Chase of Galien, Mich., in which the latter was warned in a dream of her own death. The day following the receipt of the letter by Mrs. Bywater, Mrs. Chase and another sister were struck by a Michigan Central train at Galien and instantly killed.

Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Smith write from Mt. Pleasant Park, Iowa: "We want to thank you for the stand you take against tricks of all kinds that are practiced in the name of Spiritualism, the only ism that has ever come to the world with proof of the continuity of life beyond the grave. Long may you continue on this side of life."

Alexander May writes from Nantucket, Mass.: "The Progressive Thinker has more philosophy of life and creation, of the seen and unseen, of the material and spiritual, of the real existence of every object in the mineral, vegetable and animal life, of planetary and minute atoms of creation and life of the same, than any other paper in our land. I have in my library a complete list of all the premium books and I deem them very valuable for reference."

Mlle. Marie Glaser, of Paris, who had suffered for three years from tuberculosis and a heart affection, was adjudged to be incurable. A pilgrimage to Lourdes was unavailing. She was conveyed, however, to the Church of Notre Dame des Victoires, and at the moment of benediction she sprang up singing a hymn. The doctors have made inquiry and find Mlle Glaser unaccountably free from disease and quite convalescent—cured, no doubt, by Catholic spirits.

John Stewart writes from Creighton, Mo.: "We have no organized society here, but we have mediumistic material seemingly to a surprising degree, but only partly developed. The medium is about 27 years old, and is a hard-working laborer. Four full forms at once sometimes appear at the materializing circles. Articles are materialized, a handkerchief of different colors, large plumes, both black and white, bare hand and arm to the shoulder projected out in the light before us; then in its palm a silvery disc the size of a dollar appears, though shining with greater effulgence. At times the medium disappears—where, no one knows."

A quarterly meeting of the Lynn Spiritualists' Association was held in lower Cadet hall, which was attended by a large number of members of the association. President Dr. Alexander Caird was unanimously renominated for the office of president of the association for another year, but Mr. Caird positively refused to accept the nomination to the regret of his many friends, both in the association and outside of it. Mr. Caird, was however made an honorary member of the Lynn Spiritualist Association for life. The following new board of officers was elected for one year: President, Samuel Merchant; vice-president, John O. Allan; secretary, Mrs. A. A. Averill; treasurer, Edward P. Averill; board of directors, Charles Popp, George R. Peare, J. A. Oliver. The election of officers for the Children's Lyceum was postponed until the regular meeting of the association in December. The newly elected officers were sworn in by Christopher Metzger, a justice of the peace. George W. Kates, Dr. Alexander Caird, President-elect Samuel Merchant and J. S. Scarlett were elected as delegates to the national convention of Spiritualists which is to be in St. Louis in October. It was voted to hold a bazaar at Unity Camp next summer, the date to be announced. All the officers were elected by unanimous vote, and were congratulated by the members present. —Lynn (Mass.) News.

J. C. F. Grumbine has opened his season in Metaphysical Hall, Huntington Chambers, Huntington avenue, Boston. The largest audiences of the season now gather to hear him. His themes last Sunday, Sept. 18, were, at 11 a. m., "Immortality or Annihilation," and in the evening, at 7:30, "Evolution and Revolution." Many old and tried Spiritualists are supporting his work. The hall is filled with young people eager for the truth.

Capt. T. J. West writes: "If there is a natural body and a spiritual body, then I conclude there is a natural law and a spiritual law to govern the two. As the natural body must subsist on natural productions—vegetable, animal and mineral—in order to sustain animal life, so must the spiritual body be fed or sustained on spiritual food, which is love, charity, tolerance, affection, hope, faith and good deeds to our fellow-man. I have made a study of the Bible and theology, for 20 years, having been a Congregational minister in good standing for nine years of my life. I love the truth and despise falsehood and hypocrisy. If I am in error I am always anxious to be led into the light by those who may have more light."

Mrs. India Hill writes from Decatur, Ill.: "We are still proclaiming the glorious truth of Spiritualism to large and appreciative audiences, from which we judge our cause is progressing, and with the hope of continued success we will work on."

Unity Camp, Saugus, Mass.—There was a large gathering of people at this camp on Sunday, Sept. 4, to welcome the return and to greet Mr. and Mrs. Kates, who in their previous engagements with the Lynn Spiritualists Association won a warm place in the hearts of Spiritualists and all others who afforded themselves the pleasure of listening to them. The services of the day were as follows: At 11 o'clock, conference meeting in charge of vice-president Samuel Merchant. Addresses by Rev. James Smith, Dr. T. Nichols, and messages by Mrs. Smith. The two o'clock meeting was addressed by J. J. Morse, editor of the Banner of Light, and Mr. James Litchman. At the four o'clock service which was in charge of President Caird was opened by singing by the Arion Quartette. Mrs. Kates delivered the address and gave very convincing messages. The lecture at the evening service was by Mr. Kates with messages and a vocal solo by Mrs. Kates. These speakers have a three months engagement with the Lynn society—September at Unity Camp, October and November at Cadet Hall, Lynn.

W. H. Kiser writes as follows, that all who read The Progressive Thinker may know of the whereabouts of Mrs. DeWolf Kiser, the slate-writing medium: "She left Chicago, Sept. 15, for her home at Colfax, Iowa. Many callers at her home during her three weeks' visit or vacation, who are interested as to the continuity of life, have been disappointed at not finding her at home. Mediumship is surely indispensable as to proof of a continuation of life after so-called death. This so-called death can appertain to nothing more nor less than death of the material body, in a material world. Brother S. S. Jones used to have letters painted on his editorial chair, like this: 'The body may die, but the spirit never.'"

Isa A. Cross, corresponding secretary, writes: "The Hyde Park Occult Society will be favored once more with a lecture from Walter DeVoe, who needs no recommendation among the Spiritualists. Come and hear him; it will do you good; Sept. 25, at 8 p. m., at 319 E. 55th street. There will be a social held in the same hall on Thursday evening, Sept. 22, a package social. Anyone wishing to donate a package, we will gladly accept the same. They are to be made up of everything under the sun, auctioned off and sold to highest bidder. No admission fee. Refreshments served. Good program is in order. Come and join in a good time. Come early. Bring your friends."

Mrs. Deitz writes: Mrs. Jennie De Long, residing at 962 Milwaukee avenue, held a meeting at Evanston, Sept. 10. It was largely attended, everyone in attendance receiving a test and spirit message, which was quickly recognized. Mrs. DeLong is doing a great deal to advance the philosophy of Spiritualism. Many from here accompanied her to Evanston."

Mrs. Henry writes: "On Saturday evening, Sept. 24, the Universal Occult Society will hold a church social at the residence of Mrs. Blondin, 2903 Groveland avenue. We anticipate a very pleasant evening. We expect a number of good psychics present, Mrs. Vaughn, Mrs. Isa Cleveland, Mrs. Nellie Kusserow, Prof. Leon and others. Good vocal music by Prof. Caldwell and daughters, as well as a couple of fine elocutionists, and we hope to have the Highland bagpipes to enliven things up, as both our hostess and pastor are Scotch. All are welcome."

Aurin F. Hill writes from Boston, Mass.: "'Demonism of the Ages,' by J. M. Peebles, M. D., is the most important medical and spiritual book I ever read, and I have been a regular reader in that vast storehouse of books, the Public Library, Boston, Mass. I have read much on demonism, but Dr. Peebles has compiled such clear statement of facts, that I wish all medical people had a copy. Demons now hold thousands in the hospitals, asylums, prisons for insane. These people can and should be healed of their obsessions." This book is for sale at this office. Price, $1; postage, 19 cents.

Mrs. Henry writes: "A very small crowd attended Mrs. Burland's picnic, owing to a mistake, as it should have been the third Thursday instead of the fourth, as the notice was sent to the papers."

Mrs. LeSieur writes: "The members of the Church of the Soul and friends gave to Mr. and Mrs. Richmond a reception and welcome home after their long vacation, Thursday evening, Sept. 15, at the Band of Harmony rooms, 512 Masonic Temple. Mr. Austin was master of ceremonies. Greetings and words of welcome by Mrs. Ashton. Mr. Dennis responded to the toast, and also spoke of the future of the church; Mrs. Goodrich, the future of the Band of Harmony; Mr. Richmond, the future of the Sunday-school. Mr. Gieselman, the treasurer, gave us the 'Old Story,' and Ouina came with her greeting of love and blessing. Mrs. Goodrich gave an account of the Band of Harmony benefits, held at the homes during the summer months, which was nine meetings in all. The sum total of $62. The Band of Harmony will resume the first and third Thursdays, beginning October 6."

Chas. H. Greene writes: "Sunday, Sept. 11, Miss N. G. Warren delivered an inspirational lecture before the Rising Sun Spiritualist Mission at its hall, No. 378 S. Western avenue; after which Mrs. Gifford favored us with spirit messages. Ex-Senator Dr. T. A. Bland officiated as speaker at the evening services, giving his hearers a discourse which he alone knows how to render. Mrs. N. Trafton was the medium through whom numerous spirit messages were given after Dr. Bland's lecture. Sunday, Sept. 25, Mrs. E. Briggs will lecture. She is an able speaker. On that evening we will have with us the two gentlemen who with their oratorical powers and a lecture of the highest order, attracted numerous strangers and unbelievers in our religion to our hall but a short time ago, ex-Judge W. Snell and ex-States Attorney Hon. Chas. Hughes. They have kindly offered their services for that evening, and it is superfluous to say that those who attend will be more than repaid for their time. We cordially invite the attendance of all Spiritualists and those who are not."

W. F. Ruffle writes: "We are glad to inform your numerous readers that the services at the Church of the Spirit, in Hall 301, Schiller Building, are being attended by constantly growing and appreciative audiences. The 11 a. m. meeting is very encouraging. The afternoon, at 2:30 is well attended, and the evening, at 7:30 is such that we doubt if the hall will, as the season advances, be large enough. We still give tests to all in attendance. Friends, try and get in on time; be punctual."

Miss Ann Baker writes from Sturgis, Mich.: "The Harmonial Society of Sturgis, Mich., at its annual meeting, Sept. 5, elected the following persons to serve one year, from Sept. 5, 1904: Thomas Collar, president; Casper Cressler, secretary; Mrs. M. Gardner, treasurer; executive committee, Mrs. L. Anderson, Miss Ann Baker, Mrs. Chancey Gilhams, Mr. John Hodges and John Kelley; soliciting committee, Frank Pontius, J. M. Barrons and Thomas Sturgis."

An old subscriber writes from Muncie, Ind.: "Can any of The Progressive Thinker readers give me any information about a medium named Pidgin, who used to work in this state? I would like to get his full name and present whereabouts. His work was fine. I believe he could easily win that Californian's one thousand dollars. Who knows where he can be reached? Send answer in care of The Progressive Thinker, 40 Loomis street, Chicago, Ill."

Harry J. Moore and Mrs. Eva McCoy contemplate a tour of the state of Iowa during the month of October, and arrangements for dates and terms can be made by addressing Mr. Moore at 446 W. 63rd street, Chicago, Ill. Mr. Moore expects to attend the N. S. A. convention at St. Louis, so he will not employ his services from Monday, Oct. 17th to Saturday, Oct. 22, but the friends in Iowa are requested to negotiate for meetings during the rest of the month. Societies will make no mistake in employing these two indefatigable workers, as their past successes speak for them.

Will C. Hodge writes: "I have been reading the Arcana of Spiritualism, by Hudson Tuttle and it is very instructive as well as interesting. There is nothing better to put into the hands of new investigators, for it covers the ground and does it well. The chapter on mediumship should be read and studied by every one who is striving to develop psychic powers."

On Sunday, the 18th inst., the eighteenth annual convention of the Theosophical society opened at the rooms of the Chicago branch of the society in the Athenaeum, 26 Van Buren street. The convention itself lasted two days, but was followed by a post-convention programme which occupies the rest of the week, and promises to be of unusual interest? The convention was expected to bring from three to five hundred visitors from all parts of the world to Chicago, prominent among which are Mr. Leadbeater of England, the distinguished occultist who made so favorable an impression on the occasion of his last visit to Chicago two years ago; Mr. Alexander Fullerton of New York, the general secretary of the society in America; Mrs. Kate B. Davis and others. On the evening of the 18th there was a public meeting at Steinway Hall, free to the public, and at which the above named gentlemen spoke. There were also two important lectures given by Mr. Leadbeater, both of which were illustrated by stereopticon views and the first of which was "Man Visible and Invisible," given on the evening of the 19th inst., in the music hall of the Fine Arts Building. The second on "Thought Forms" will be Sunday evening, the 25th inst., in the Studebaker Theatre.

Harry J. Moore will deliver his lecture from the subject: "What Must We Do to Be Saved, or the Best Way to Redeem the Human Race," before the Englewood Spiritual Union, Hopkins' Hall, 528 W. 63rd street, next Sunday evening, Sept. 25th. This will probably be the last opportunity for a Chicago audience to hear Mr. Moore before the spring of next year, and as the subject is a very important one we are sure that the friends in Chicago should hear it discussed.

Mr. John W. Ring, National Superintendent of Lyceum Work, of Galveston, Texas, after presiding at the eighth annual meeting of the Texas State National Association of Spiritualists held in San Antonio, September 30, October 1 and 2, will lecture in Dallas, Texas, Tuesday, October 4; Joplin, Mo., October 6; Jasper, Mo., (Mr. Ring's old home place) Friday, October 7; Springfield, Mo., Sunday, October 9; Chicago, Ill., before the Rising Sun Spiritualist Mission, Englewood Spiritual Union and the lyceum over which Mrs. C. Schwahn presides, October 10, 11 and 12; Conneaut, Ohio, October 13; Buffalo, N. Y., October 14; and Waldron, Ind., October 16; after filling these dates Mr. Ring will attend the National Convention in St. Louis, Mo., where he will present his yearly report as National Superintendent of Lyceum Work.

Mrs. Dora Hilton writes from Casinovia, Mich.: "I am a constant reader of The Progressive Thinker, and was anxious to have Spiritualism spread abroad. I accordingly secured good, responsible mediums, and their work has been fine. Miss Emma Gibbs, an inspirational speaker, gave us the truth in such a manner that even the church people present declared 'it was good enough for anybody to live by.' Mrs. Georgiana Pierson followed her with messages and readings that caused the people to question and wonder how this little woman could peer beneath the exterior of their lives, and tell them what they really were, what they had been, or what the future held in store. She also held circles that were satisfactory and well attended. These ladies are both from Grand Rapids, Mich. They have opened the door in this vicinity, and can open it a great deal wider. A great reformation has been wrought in the minds of the people, and these workers will be called into this district again. It was not all money they were after, but were willing to give the people the good they knew. I am so well pleased with the work that the mediums have done, I shall keep the ball a rolling that the truth may spread abroad."

What They Think.

To the Editor:—I cannot begin to express to you in writing how highly I appreciate your paper. It is a star of the first magnitude, a brilliant light that is illuminating the pathway of thousands of weary mortals who thereby are enabled to take up their cross and bear it bravely and unfalteringly up the rugged steps of time, until the head-lands of immortality rise up before them, and purifies their hearts and lifts them to an exalted plane of living. No. 771 is a gem in itself; so many good things does it contain that I cannot enumerate them. The article by Walter Devoe is worth alone the price of the paper. I cannot afford to lose one number.

Mrs. M. A. Merrill, Kent, O.

The Best Exponent of Spiritualism.

To the Editor:—The sample copies received. Accept my thanks for same. So many persons ask me, "Where can I obtain something to read which treats of Spiritualism?" I always advise the earnest investigators to subscribe for The Progressive Thinker, telling them that therein they will find the glorious truths of Spiritualism MORE CLEARLY SET FORTH, EXPLAINED AND DISCUSSED, THAN IN ANY OTHER PUBLICATION.

No Other Paper Had Such Success.

I am both proud and glad to see The Progressive Thinker forging its way ahead. The great unseen Infinite Force, with its expressive wisdom, is behind it, beyond a doubt. No other modern Spiritualistic paper has ever had such phenomenal success.

A VISION.

Last night while all was still,
Over the sky so blue,
An angel's hand reached forth
And the misty curtains drew.

It showed to me a vision,
One I had longed to see,
That thrilled my lonely soul,
Like some sweet melody.

I saw my dear old mother,
The love-light in her eyes,
Father, too, kind and true,
In their home in Paradise.

Ah, again I'll receive their kisses,
To me this is not uncertain,
For I saw my loved ones plainly,
When the angel drew the curtain.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

Mrs. Martha A. Lewis passed to spirit life, in Grand Rapids, Mich., July 21, 1904, aged 73 years. She was the wife of the late Robert A. Lewis a Mexican veteran. She was a devout and loving mother, a true spiritual Christian. She had the evidence of a life hereafter, and communed with those who waited for her on the beautiful shore of eternal time. MRS. J. LINDSEY.

Passed to spirit life at Lafayette, Ind., August 21, 1904, Elizabeth K. Whittlesey, aged 67 years. She was a patient sufferer, and having been a Spiritualist and a medium for many years, death had no sting for her. Her departure is mourned by a son, a sister and numerous relatives and friends. Funeral services were held at Lafayette, and the remains were taken to Hamilton, Ohio, where the final services were concluded from the Universalist church, conducted by the writer.

Do You Suffer with Asthma?

If you do, you will be interested in knowing that the Kola Plant, a new botanic discovery found on the Congo River, West Africa, is pronounced an assured cure for Asthma. Most marvelous cures are wrought by this new plant, when all other remedies fail. It is really a most wonderful discovery.

Mr. R. Johnson, Sr., a prominent citizen of Grand Forks, N. Dak., writes: I tried twenty physicians and changes of climate without relief, but was completely cured by the Kola Compound after fifty years suffering. Dr. W. H. Vail, an eminent physician of St. Louis, Mo., writes that he tried Himalya on several different cases of Asthma with satisfactory results in every case. Mrs. Millie Borchers, Amanda, Ohio, writes: I suffered with Asthma twelve years until the Kola Compound cured me. Mrs. W. E. Murgittroyd, North Chatham, N Y., writes, I suffered for several years with Asthma and could get no relief until I used the Kola Compound which cured me. Hundreds of similar letters have been received by the importers, copies of which they will be pleased to send you.

To prove to you beyond doubt its wonderful curative power, the Kola Importing Company, No. 1166 Broadway New York, will send a large case of the Kola Compound free by mail to every reader of The Progressive Thinker who suffers from any form of Asthma. This is very fair, and we advise sufferers to send for a case. It costs you nothing and you should surely try it.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

D. R. Dunihue: Q. A Mr. Payton near here fell in front of a circular saw which cut off his leg between the ankle and knee, and his friends buried it in a small box, after which he complained almost continually, and especially when waking up from sleep, that his foot was twisted out of shape, and hurt him terribly, and begged his friends to dig it up and straighten it out. But they only laughed at the idea of its hurting him.

Finally, two of them, unknown to him, and to satisfy themselves, went and dug up the foot, and found it to be twisted just as he had said that it was, and they straightened it out, and just as they did so he exclaimed, "There! it is straight now, and it doesn't hurt any more"; and he never complained of its hurting him again. How could the separated physical foot cause pain in his spirit foot?

A. Instances like the above might be voluminously cited, and the popular belief that the condition of the separated part is recognizable by the patient has abundant support. The sensations experienced by those who, for instance have lost an arm, many years before, of pain in the fingers, or cramps, or of heat and cold, arise from irritation of the severed ends of the nerves which led to the hand, and this has been given as an explanation of the supposed influence of the severed member. It does not, however, unitize the facts, and this can be done only by supposing that for a short time the amputated part holds a psychic relation to the spirit, which thereby is conscious of its condition.

W. H. B.: Q. I am all stirred up in mind and wish you would relieve me if you can. I have been an official member of the M. E. church for twenty-five years and two years ago this month my wife passed to spirit life. My son and wife attended the First Spiritual Temple, Boston. We were opposed to their going. He said to me at one time that Mr. Gilbert Haven (Bishop of the M. E. church) was going to speak the following Sunday. I thought I would go and investigate for myself. I went and was much pleased with what I heard, and I could see it was not the medium who spoke, for she was an elderly lady, and one could see that she had not the ability to deliver such an address. I went again and listened to Mr. Philips Brooks, and it did not take many Sundays to turn my eyes of faith to spiritual sight, that of Spiritualism, and I soon saw that my worship had been false, that life was continuous, there was no death, there would be no judgment as stated in the Bible, that all will be saved, but saved only as they have lived here, has lifted many years from my life and I feel much younger since I have renounced the doctrine of my former worship and became a Spiritualist; and now all my ambition is to labor for the only true worship, that of the spiritualist. I have had the great pleasure of talking with my wife, my parents, and my brother whom I thought was in China, but not through a test medium as many have to do. I have been censured for going back on the Bible and many of the songs that I loved to sing, but now condemn in those who have been Spiritualists for fifteen or more years, and I have been less than two. What I want to know so as to have my mind made at ease is, have Spiritualists the right to sing

Jesus, lover of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly,
O, receive my soul at last, etc.

I have the knowledge that my wife will receive me when I reach the spirit world, whom I shall look for first, then for my parents and friends.

Again, "Rock of Ages," etc. Then again, "Shall we gather at the river that flows by the throne of God."

I have been told by those in spirit life that there is no throne with a personal God upon it, therefore I cannot see how we shall meet and worship around it. I have attended many meetings of the Spiritualists at different places on Sundays, have joined several circles, but after attending them all and finding that they sang many songs that I now condemn as a Spiritualist, and always closing with the Doxology, and "God Be With You Till We Meet Again," "At Jesus' Feet," etc., I have withdrawn from some of them, feeling I could not sing words put to music which I now believe to be false. Wishing to have my mind put at ease, and feeling perhaps I may be wrong in my judgment, I hereby appeal to the Question and Answer columns of The Progressive Thinker, a paper which I would pay double the price of subscription for rather than not have it.

A. This letter is illustrative of the confusion of thought of those who have been educated in the old way, and escaped to the new. The flashing sunlight half blinds, and the certainty of faith yields to the rude winds of doubt.

The narrative of the writer's journey from orthodoxy to Spiritualism gives the experience of countless souls, who have gone over the same path. Some become frightened when they feel the reliance on authority is taken from them and they are thrown on themselves, and sighing for the fleshpots of Egypt return to the old ways; the strong and reliant go on to victory and the joys they only know who become supreme over environments and masters of themselves.

There are spiritual songs in abundance and it really is strange that Spiritualists should sing the old church songs. There is no law against their doing so, or persisting in good church style with the doxology. It seems a satire on their pretensions, pitiable or ridiculous from the different points of view taken.

But our correspondent must remember that it is difficult to outgrow the faith, solidified by ages of heredity and education. The hymns are sung as parrots repeat "Polly wants a cracker," without any conception of their meaning. The tunes and words are well known, and the hymns are sung, for no purpose except to have singing.

If spiritual gatherings do not break out with "Hark! from the tombs," we will not censure. It would not be wise to withdraw from a society because "Jesus" hymns are sung. There may be benefits more than the cross of such hymns. Spiritual songs may be substituted such as are contained in Prof. Longley's beautiful collection, or The Lyceum Guide. Stay by and bring the society up to a higher standard, rather than deserting.

In this world we lose by being too sensitive to others' faults. We should not place our ideal too high or expect all to attain it. We must take people for what they are and make the most of all the good, and the least of the errors and failings. If a society is doing good work and educational, no great harm will come of its members singing "Come to Jesus," or any other good man, or parting with the Doxology. Should we not look beyond the words to the intention, the spirit?

Wm. B. Ketcham: Q. Would it not be of world-wide consequence to have a gathering of all the materializing mediums of the world, at some central point—say New York—and by their united forces, produce on the stage the spirits of the great men of the past and allow them to instruct the world? This would silence all doubt.

A. This correspondent appears to entertain the idea that the several "materializing mediums," would have more noteworthy manifestations than one alone. This is not confirmed by experience, and a congress of all in the world could not be expected to have anything more startling than if each gave a seance by himself.

The Australian Herald of June 1904, has the following editorial:

"Woman's franchise has actually been carried in the British House of Commons. Victoria had better look sharp, or the mother will outstrip the child. Is it not time the anomalous position of our Victorian politicians was rectified? The Australian Commonwealth allows women to vote—why not the little state of Victoria?

"It is well to remind our readers of the grounds on which we support the enfranchisement of women.

"We support it because it seems to us to be social justice. Women have to obey the laws, and it is right they should have a share in making them. Many of the laws affect women more than men, and it is only fair, therefore, that their voice should be heard. On many questions they are better able to advise than men, and the man-view is apt, often, to be one-sided and selfish.

"The denial of the franchise to woman we regard as a relic of a less civilized age, out of which we are slowly emerging. A new ideal of womanhood has dawned, and is one of the most certain marks of human progress. Raise woman, and you inevitably raise society.

"That there may be dangers connected with this 'forward movement' we do not deny. All liberty brings with it the possibility of abuse. But this is no reason why we should tie ourselves up with ropes, or live, like Diogenes, in a tub. There is danger in letting a child begin to walk.

"In conclusion, we would ask the opponents of woman's franchise to point to one single ill effect which has as yet flowed from this necessary and logical step in the evolution of democracy."

Sleep-Walking.—Important Questions.

I am in receipt of a letter from a friend asking me for a lucid explanation of the phenomenon of somnambulism. My correspondent mentions the case of a boy who feeds his stock and rides his own horse at night. Questioned as to the facts in the case, the boy remembers nothing of the transaction.

Will some one attempt a solution of this problem?

And who can answer this question also? A certain Chicago merchant was born without arms. His wife gave birth to a youngster who was likewise armless. The parents of the merchant, I am told, were of perfect form and feature.

Another Chicago man, when a boy of seven years, lost one of his legs. His offspring, four in number, are in possession of a full quota of arms and legs.

Will some student of heredity or biology kindly unravel this paradoxical situation? Students of occultism are not barred. H. A. H.

A HORSE WITH A SOUL.

Berlin, Sept. 13.—The learned horse Hans has just stood a successful examination before a scientific commission, including physiologists, psychologists, pedagogues, naturalists, animal trainers and others. Their report sets forth that the evidences he gave of comprehending handwriting, his musical and color discrimination and mathematical work were performed under circumstances excluding the possibility of a trick.

The methods of the horse's owner, Herr Von Osten, are pronounced to be those of a pedagogue rather than of an animal trainer. The case appears to them to be wholly exceptional and to deserve thorough scientific study.

The Musical Spirit World.

INFORMATION GIVEN.

G. P. Benezet wants information. He says: "I would also propose that a certain number of trance mediums be requested to visit in spirit the church where Abbot Liszt plays the organ (see Petersilea's articles) and describe minutely that wonderful organ, to see it out of the several descriptions we could arrive to know if it is made of rosewood or common pine."

I do not think there is a trance medium in the world who would say that the organ was made of rosewood or pine, and I hardly think there is a person in the world so stupid as to think that real material wood of any kind exists within the spiritual realms.

Spiritual things must be discerned spiritually; material things through the material senses, or through the material organs of sense; and yet, after all, it is the spirit that discerneth all things both material and spiritual.

A spiritual organ is not made of rosewood or pine, neither is a material organ made of wood of any kind. The organ is simply encased within a frame of wood to give it a more beautiful appearance and make it more presentable. The organ itself is composed of hollow tubes, of various sizes, through which material air is forced to cause the air to vibrate slowly or rapidly as the case may be. The air for the high tones vibrates with great rapidity, that for the low tones more slowly. The tubes, or pipes, are of various sizes representing a series of musical scales. These scales are called chromatic and minor—but enough. I will not here enter into all the details that go toward making up the material body of a musical instrument. Mr. Benezet can do that if he is so inclined, but music itself exists within the soul, within the spirit, being wrought out through the material brain for the material world, but when the material body is laid aside the music does not remain with it, the soul and the spirit retains that which belongs to them, and they carry music with them into the spiritual realms.

Now, as the material body is left behind, so, also, is the material musical instrument; but the material musical instrument is a lumbering, clumsy thing at best, and no great musician was ever half satisfied with any earthly musical instrument; their souls invariably yearn and long for something better and higher. And this reminds me of the time when I was called upon by Ole Bull to play a piano which he invented, that he hoped would combine the sustained tones of the violin with the more staccato tones of the piano. He sent for me, saying that if Petersilea could not play the instrument no one could, and it would be a failure. I did my very best to play upon or with the thing, but could not get a proper tone out of it, and to Ole's great mortification and disappointment it had to be put aside. This was years ago in the earth life; now, here, he has made it a success.

Yes, musicians like Rubenstein and Ole Bull, yearn for instruments higher and better through which to express their musical transports, and when they get to the spiritual world they find them. Music exists within the soul, so does the instrument through which to convey the harmonious vibrations to other souls, especially to the young who need to have it demonstrated to their, as yet, undeveloped understanding. In order that this may be done, there must be musical instruments here as well as upon the material plane, the only difference being that we must clothe our instruments with spiritual or ethereal substance, whereas you of the earth must clothe yours with material substance. The instrument itself always exists within the soul and spirit, never within the material body. To clothe an instrument with material substance is a hard and laborious task, requiring the united labor of hundreds of men before the instrument is perfectly clothed and constructed; and it is much the same in spirit life; it requires many different artisans of various kinds, and they must all have knowledge and wisdom, to know how to construct the various parts that go to make up a really good, elegant and satisfactory instrument.

Where wood is represented there must be artisans who know how to construct that which resembles wood; but this is not used here to any great extent, for there are other chemical compounds that are far more beautiful.

Franz Liszt's organ was encased in what to you of earth, and also to us here in spirit life, would appear as mother of pearl. Now your earthly mother of pearl is obtained from the exquisitely lined sea-shell, and is simply a chemical compound, and this compound is obtained by the little shell-fish from the sea, or the water, also from its food which it obtains from the water; and the water is composed of hydrogen and oxygen together with other various chemicals and salts held in solution by the sea-water; but not to enter into greater length of details we will say the mother of pearl is composed of chemical compounds through chemical affinity, and the little shell-fish creates, through chemical affinity, the beautiful mother of pearl, without understanding the laws by which it does so.

Now if the little shell-fish can create this beautiful substance through the laws of chemical affinity, think you that the developed soul and spirit of a man may not, by understanding the laws, compose a substance, spiritual and ethereal, far exceeding in beauty the little shell-fish's endeavors in the same direction?

Well, what is silver and gold?

Chemical substances brought together through the laws of chemical affinity, or the attraction that these chemical substances hold for each other. Everything that you have on earth first existed, and does exist at all times, here in the ethereal or spiritual realm; and everything that you have on earth can be dissipated and sent back to us here or made invisible and intangible to your material senses.

Now if we here, within the ethereal, have every known chemical substance that you have on earth, what is there to hinder us, if we have wisdom and knowledge sufficient, to bring these chemicals together and form beautiful ethereal compounds that may be, and are, far more beautiful than any of earth? But whether you believe it or not, the fact remains the same, and Franz Liszt will continue to play his organ, and I my piano—for I have the most beautiful one imaginable—as long as we think best. We have in our conservatory pianos encased in what appears like mottled gold, mother of pearl, mottled silver, ebony, rosewood, but "nary a pine" although I have nothing to say against a beautiful pine tree, for we have many represented here, but they do not enter into the construction of our musical instruments.

My key-board is of real pearl, for this is simply another chemical compound; the little hammers and strings are also of gold and silver. Study the laws of chemical affinity, my good Brother Benezet.

Now if, as all know, there is an ethereal atmosphere, or ether, if it can be, and is, made to vibrate just as your earthly atmosphere is made to vibrate, and we vibrate it just as you do; it is simply carrying the vibratory law up from the material to the ethereal; our methods are much the same; a scale higher up within the universe. So we hammer our ethereal strings and blow our ethereal pipes much as you do down there.

You cannot hear us, your ears are too dull; they are not constructed for the purpose of hearing ethereal sounds—that is, the outer ear is not, but there is an inner soul and spiritual ear that, as soon as the material clog is removed, can hear the sweet, ethereal sounds, and eyes that can see the beautiful, ethereal sights.

Spiritualism Proves Itself.

Somehow, just why I know not, I am constrained to write, and I can only hope the writing will be for the benefit of those seeking the proofs of spirit return.

While many religions are being taught in the land, many people lean only on the preacher, ignoring proofs, and in so-doing walk the path of material life helpless, blind and unheeding, thus being under a spell that takes away his individuality; in other words, under the spell of the teachings of the man in the pulpit they are striving to live and be a Hyde while in fact they are a Jekyll.

The preacher tells them what to think, what to say, what to do, and in many cases, the preacher thinks, says and does just the opposite, and if detected simply tells his victim, "Do as I say, not as I do."

A man sitting as a judge and wishing to see justice done in the case being tried, admits all the evidence and weighs it carefully as he forms his judgment. When after careful deliberation the truth is revealed to him, without fear but firm in his convictions, he pronounces judgment, and honest people applaud him because his judgment is just.

The same conditions should apply to everything in life, even to religion. But, alas! religion seldom finds itself based upon proof, but rather on the personal magnetism of the preacher and the fanatical or hysterical conditions of the convert, and when they have the people worked up to the high pitch that makes them shout, "Hallelujah! Praise the Lord! That's right, Brother! Thank God, my sister! Amen! The Lord be Praised!" then they have religion.

Religion nowhere under these conditions offers proof that if is true, but so long as the excitement and hypnotic influence of the preacher and hysterical conditions of people and converts last, a wonderful work for God and his religion has been accomplished.

Thousands of Christians have to be warmed over like "cold victuals," at the regular quarterly conference, or a special revival has to be gotten up to keep them off the toooggan slide that in the estimation of the preacher dumps them into the pit and presence of countless millions presided over by the devil.

Poor, deluded creatures, betrogged by fanatical or hypocritical preachers, led into a religion they know nothing of whatever except as the preacher tells it, they soon stand up confessing their sin to the preacher and the listening crowd, declare they have washed in the blood of Jesus (notwithstanding the fact that they have missed seeing a drop of his blood by nearly two thousand years), saying, "Praise God, I'm going right to heaven when I die, to sing and play on the golden harp!"—and such music! Never saw a harp nor heard one played, yet such heavenly music!

Well, if they are going there to play the harp, just excuse me; I don't want to go.

All that is needed is emotion (hysterical), believe the preacher, declare he tells the truth (whether he tells it or not), shout hallelujah! a few times and you've got religion pure and simple, more simple than pure.

As before stated, religion should, like everything else in the world, be founded on proof, and a religion that will not prove itself is only a theory while the religion that comes to the front demonstrating itself with proofs positive, that religion is the true religion.

I will not try to enumerate the different religions of the world, but I can and will tell you that I is the numerical quantity among all religions that demonstrates or proves itself true, and that religion is, Spiritualism. All else are theories.

Just why people will not prove their religion as they do other problems of life I know not. But like sheep, where the leader jumps the rest of the flock jump, even though the obstacle be removed before the flock reaches that obstacle after the leader jumped. In religion people seem to be jumpers. They jump at the conclusion to have a revival, they jump at the revival, jump to the conclusion the preacher knows it all, jump into hysterics because of the revival, and jump onto you because you won't let them revive you, in their way.

Now just a few truths in connection with the only religion that proves itself.

We don't have revivals.
We don't need revivals.
We have no use for hysterics.
We have no emotional preachers.

We ask, silence; sensible people, unity, earnest invocation for truth and spiritual manifestations, careful weighing of the evidence, and impartial judgment. These bring the proof of Spiritualism home to the investigator so thoroughly that instead of shouting "Praise God!" "Hallelujah!" etc., we hear from their lips the earnest convincing declaration, "I know that Spiritualism is true."

How much better it is to know a thing, than by faith to believe it. How much more grand to realize a thing than it is to think it. Faith, the taste of things that are, while knowledge is a a feast. To know a thing the greatest truth. Faith to me is the least.

Preachers of any faith or creed will preach to you eternal life in a world of spirit, asking you to accept that statement in faith believing. They never give a proof that it is so. The great true idea of eternal existence makes you in their estimation a devil or a saint forever and forever. Only one hell, one condition of punishment for the one who may have broken one commandment as well as the one who may have broken the ten. Both suffering the same eternal punishment side by side even though the Psalmist speaks of the "lowest hell," indicating more than one hell in which sin-sick souls may be punished according to evil thoughts, words and deeds as their case might require.

They have but one heaven in which one deserving of little reward may wear the golden crown and play the harp as loud and long as the best man or woman the world ever knew, as they sit side by side near the great white throne, while Jesus beams upon one as proudly as upon the other, even though Paul told of the third heaven with Paradise the fourth condition for the best people, just beyond.

Revealed to us in love
By those we knew in days of old
Returned from heaven above,
We love thy paths, sweet paths of peace
That lead us to the grand release
Of life where all is pain, strife,
To meet the father, mother, wife,
Husband, brother, sister, friend,
And live as long as time may be
Or throughout all eternity.

Aye, seek the proofs, eternal proofs of that enduring estate beyond the so-called death; sending faith to the winds as fast as proofs come to you, and in time you will no longer say, "I believe," but it will make you ever ready to say, "Spiritualism is the only religion that proves itself. I know that Spiritualism is true." REV. G. C. LOVE.

O'FINEGAN'S CHURCH DUES.

One evening, weak and weary,
When my mind was sad and dreary
At my prospects of the future, too discouraging to tell,
I went to Father Carey
Who is always light and airy,
Faith! he never seems to bother much with heaven, earth or hell.

"Och," says I, "dear Father John,
I've such an awful taking on
About my sins and my shortcomings, and I dread the judgment day;
But your reverence can relieve me,
And with filling words retrieve me,
And with holy consolations take my terrors all away."

Then with repentant fearing
I whispered in his hearing
Many a sad thought which had long brought trouble to my mind,
And I asked him to excuse
If I didn't pay my dues
To the church and to the priest, as all the crops were far behind.

"Sure, poor Biddy and the childer
Need so many things they hinder,
And I scarce can keep the devil of starvation from my door;
But holy Father Carey,
You can make me light and airy

There I ended my confession
Of the cause of my depression,
But my sins were so enormous that the priest had to refuse,
For his claim, in a disaster,
Is the first, all others after,
And the church gives consolation to the man that pays his dues.

HAD A VISION.

Reading Man Saw Postal Card From a Friend.

Reading, Mich.—O. V. LaBoyteaux of Reading, and Lester Black of Kokomo, Ind., were schoolmates many years ago in a little Hoosier village. La Boyteaux drifted into Michigan and Black spent several years in California. Both have been students along occult lines from boyhood, and a visit was looked forward to with pleasant anaicipation on Black's return from the west.

When he reached Chicago, Black wrote his friend at Reading that he would be with him one day the following week, but as he was going to take hospital treatment for a few days he would write again stating the day he would arrive in Reading. On Thursday night following this message LaBoyteaux says he had a vision of a postal card which gave information that Black could not come, as his physician advised him to go direct to his home to rest up before beginning his winter's school work. On Saturday morning he received a message from Black stating that he would arrive in Reading on Tuesday afternoon. On Tuesday morning he received another card from Black bearing the identical message he had seen in his vision of the previous Thursday night. The idea of mental telepathy is dispelled by the fact that the vision was seen by LaBoyteaux three days before any consultation was had with the attending physician in the matter, and at the time when both minds were centered most strongly on the opposite result.—Detroit Tribune.

Awake! Arise, Ye Spiritualists!

There is work for you to do for your cause. The camp meeting season is over now, and while you are imbued with the divine inspiration of the soul harmony infused by your "closer walk with God" (the spirit) in the beautiful woods, by the hand-to-hand and soul-to-soul greeting with old friends upon both spheres of life, and by all the new and elevating things you saw, heard and sensed, now is the time to let your radiant enthusiasm beam upon your fellowmen. The Progressive Thinker, in the meantime, has been extremely busy and has nothing to be ashamed of, nothing to regret. It has been endeavoring to raise the standard of true mediumshp, of higher education and unadulterated Spiritualism, that we may stand above all other religions in the confidence of the world. The Progressive Thinker is the paper for thinking Spiritualists, for Spiritualists who love the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. Such Spiritualists will keep posted in passing events, in the trend of Spiritual and Occult thought throughout the world, by reading The Progressive Thinker, and in no other way. Now, we advise all to look out for our Fall and Winter Campaign, which has commenced in earnest. It will be of thrilling interest! It will raise you to a higher altitude, and give you a better conception of the grandeur of Spiritualism. Now is the time to send in your subscription. Call your neighbor's attention to the paper, thus enabling him to keep up with the advancing procession by reading its columns.

Why Eat Any Meat?

And so Dr. Lilland thinks the tendency is toward live food, or in other words, natural food, as grains, fruits, nuts and vegetables, as against the flesh of slaughtered animals. Common observation amongst the thinking class of people will support Dr. Lilland in this assertion, but we shall take exception to his statement that "the question as to the comparative value of the meat as against the vegetable diet, is one that depends largely upon the individual." The comparative value lies simply and solely with the foods themselves, as even he acknowledges later in his article.

Listen: "As a substitute of meat, weight for weight, there are some vegetables that are more nutritious and strengthening than any meat that can be eaten." He compares the Japanese with the Russians, and frankly admits that he believes a great many people eat too much meat. Now we wish to ask, why eat any meat? When the winners in the great German contests for strength and endurance are vegetarians, when our most successful athletes are vegetarians, and some of our greatest intellects the world has ever known were vegetarians, why is meat necessary? Or why is it even advisable in small quantities? We have health, intellect, strength, all of a superior quality, all of a kind that stands highest in the ranks, without resorting to dead flesh as food, and so we ask again, why use it?

We well know that the body we build is the house we live in. We also know that as we build, so shall be our progression on this plane of expression. Matter is the governor. We cannot receive beyond the capacity of the instrument we use, or the house we live in. Suppose we build a house of gross, decaying flesh, taken from the tortured, helpless creatures—our house is devoid of spiritual light and beauty. We live. But what a life! The windows of the soul are darkened, discolored and distorted values present themselves to our comprehension. The pure white light of truth and love cannot enter in. Our love is selfish and carnal. Our light may be bright to us, but, oh, how dark to spiritual insight.

When it has been ably demonstrated that meat is not necessary to our well-being, when it has also been demonstrated that it is an injury instead of a benefit, why continue its use?

Are we slaves to the bodily habits and tastes of our ancestors? Shall the spiritual man be in bondage to the carnal? Spiritual freedom, light and beauty, health, strength, longevity, lie with vegetarianism. Economy also, if you will. This is not theory, it is fact. Take some vegetarian magazine and read up on this subject. Learn how to select and prepare the substitutes for flesh food. Clean the windows of your house, let pure light in, and rebuild—rebuild—then we can commence to talk of love, and peace, and good will. But man knows not the meaning of love when he dwells within a blood offering. He cannot feel a throb of sympathy or tenderness for the helpless creature condemned to cater to his taste, and consequently is arrogant and selfish with his fellow-men. Sympathy, love, comes with all. We are only one with all, as all life comes from Infinite Life. We, as Spiritualists, know this to be true. And we also know that all life has a continuity of existence. Or shall we take a stand on a line with our good orthodox brother, who said, "Myself and my wife, my son John and his wife, us four and no more," and shut out all life except the human? Whether we will, or no, we have not our choice. Natural Law says all life, and nature's law is not changed by man's belief or his wishes. Brother and sister Spiritualists, shall we give up these bloody feasts and grow?

Then shall we learn the love that sends peace forth unto a troubled world.

Professor Edgar L. Larkin's Important Statement.

In No. 772 of The Progressive Thinker, from Chicago Examiner, Professor Larkin writes on, "The Electrical Basis of the Universe." He begins the statement, that "nothing exists within the known interstellar space but corpuscles." Says Professor J. J. Thompson has determined the corpuscle to be in size about one-thousandth part of an atom. Says, "the corpuscle has the property inertia and the attributes of matter;" and that "electricity and corpuscles have been found to possess no difference." Thus we have his argument for "electricity being the basis of the universe."

I accept the corpuscular theory, but find insurmountable obstacles against its being electricity. It is positively known, as the Professor says, that light moves 186,000 miles per second. It is also known that matter never moves one mile per second, when the density of the matter is not greater than the matter passed through. I am not speaking of the enormous velocity of planets. To include planets in the discussion would demand that the interstellar space be filled solid with planets. Were it so filled a mere child could understand that a single planet would have no velocity. Liquid matter has some; solid matter has none, that is appreciable.

It is known that electricity has a velocity certainly equal to that of light. Let us see what is known about the movement of matter through like matter. It has been found that the water of the first ocean wave falls back into its original position; and the same with each succeeding wave. The resistance of the immense ocean of water is too great for the passage through it of the water contained in a single wave.

A cyclone starts, say in Kansas; it comes on and destroys towns in Wisconsin. Most scientists know that none of the Kansas air comes to Wisconsin; because of the like wave principle. These are only the very large vibrations, illustrative of the well-established vibratory theory. Sound and heat are lesser illustrations. Arguing from "the known to the unknown," the same vibratory principle manifests down through all the finer conditions of matter, including the recently discovered universe of corpuscles.

That electricity may be a vibratory motion of the corpuscles, is scientifically logical. That the corpuscles themselves are the same as electricity, is a theory contrary to every demonstrated truth. That the corpuscles contain a principle producing the motion called electricity, as water produces wave, and air cyclones, is purely scientific. It is clear that the resistance of the universe of corpuscles to a small bunch of corpuscles is in exact ratio of that of the whole ocean to the single wave.

Professor Larkin further says that if his philosophy is sound, then "the human mind is made of electricity, and electricity is matter;" and that "no entity exists but electricity." He would be still more interesting if he would prove, by some known law, that electricity is in any sense an entity. I think he certainly would admit that wave, wind and sound are not entities. On the same scientific law I don't see how he could refuse to admit that electricity is not an entity. There is scientific evidence that electricity is exactly of the nature of wind and wave; otherwise it could not move with any velocity at all. Also the latest psychology finds, through scientific processes, that mind is a vibratory principle.

The Professor goes on. He says, "four thousand years in the distant past, the wisest men the world has ever contained, said over and over again that thoughts are things." It is interesting to note that he never says the four thousand years ago men were "the wisest men the world has ever contained," when he is developing his favorite study, astronomy.

The latest reform in education is to develop mind rather than stuff it. Professor Larkin is exceedingly interesting as a general scientist of suggestion.

ST. PETER AT THE GATE.

St. Peter stood at the golden gate,
With a solemn mien and an air sedate,
When up to the top of the golden stair
A man and a woman ascending there,
Applied for admission. They came and stood
Before St. Peter, so great and good;
In hopes the City of Peace to win,
And asked St. Peter to let them in.

The woman was tall, and lank, and thin,
With a scraggy beardlet upon her chin.
The man was short, and thick, and stout,
His stomach was built so it rounded out,
His face was pleasant and all the while
He wore a kindly and genial smile.
The choirs in the distance the echoes woke,
And the man kept still while the woman spoke.

"Oh, thou, who guards the gate," said she,
"We two come hither beseeching thee
To let us enter the heavenly land
And play our harps with the angel band.
Of me, St. Peter, there is no doubt.
There's nothing from heaven to bar me out;
I've been to meetings three times a week,
And almost always I'd rise and speak.

"I've told the sinners about the day
When they'd repent of their evil way;
I've told my neighbors—I've told them all
'Bout Adam and Eve, and the Primal Fall,
I've shown them what they'd have to do
If they'd pass in with the chosen few;
I've marked their path of duty clear—
Laid out the plan for their whole career.

"I've talked and talked to 'em loud and long,
For my lungs are good, and my voice is strong.
So, good St. Peter, you'll clearly see
The gate of heaven is open for me;
But my old man, I regret to say,
Hasn't walked in exactly the narrow way.
He smokes and he swears, and grave faults he's got,
And I don't know whether he'll pass or not.

He would never pray with an earnest vim,
Or go to revival, or join in a hymn,
So I had to leave him in sorrow there
While I, with the chosen, united in prayer.
He ate what the pantry chanced to afford,
While I, in my purity, sang to the Lord;
And if cucumbers were all he got,
It's a chance if he merited them or not.

"But O, St. Peter, I love him so,
To the pleasures of heaven please let him go!
I've done enough, a saint I've been.
Won't that atone? Can't you let him in?
By my grim gospel I know 'tis so
That the unrepentant must fry below,
But isn't there some way you can see
That he may enter, who's dear to me?

"It's a narrow gospel by which I pray,
But the Chosen expect to find some way
Of coaxing, or fooling, or bribing you,
So their relations can amble through;
And say, St. Peter, it seems to me
This gate isn't kept as it ought to be.
You ought to stand down by the opening there,
And never sit down in that easy chair.

"And, say, St. Peter, my sight is dimmed,
But I don't like the way your whiskers is trimmed,
They're cut too wide, and outward toss,
They'd look better narrow, cut straight across.
Well, we must be going our crowns to win,
So open, St. Peter, and we'll pass in!"

* * * * * * * *

St. Peter sat quiet and stroked his staff,
But, spite of his office, he had to laugh.
Then said, with a fiery gleam in his eye:
"Who's tending this gateway—you or I?"
And then he arose, in his stature tall,
And pressed a button upon the wall,
And said to the imp who answered the bell,
"Escort this lady around to hell!"

* * * * * * * *

The man stood still as a piece of stone—
Stood sadly, gloomily there alone.
A life-long, settled idea he had
That his wife was good and he was bad;
He thought if the woman went down below
That he would certainly have to go;
That if she went to the regions dim,
There wasn't a ghost of a show for him.

Slowly he turned, by habit bent,
To follow wherever the woman went.
St. Peter, standing on duty there,
Observed that the top of his head was bare.
He called the gentleman back, and said:
"Friend, how long have you been wed?"
"Thirty years" (with a weary sigh),
And then he thoughtfully added, "Why?"

St. Peter was silent. With head bent down
He raised his hand and scratched his crown.
Then, seeming a different thought to take,
Slowly, half to himself, he spake:
"Thirty years with that woman there?
No wonder the man hasn't any hair!
Swearing is wicked; smoke's not good,
He smoked and swore—I should think he would

"Thirty years with that tongue so sharp?
Oh! Angel Gabriel! give him a harp!
A jeweled harp with a golden string!
Gabriel, give him a seat alone—
One with a cushion—up near the throne!
Call up some angels to play their best!
Let him enjoy the music—and rest!

"See that on the finest Ambrosia he feeds;
He has had about all the hell he needs.
It isn't just hardly the thing to do—
To roast him on earth and the future, too!"

* * * * * * * *

They gave him a harp with golden strings,
A glittering robe and a pair of wings,
And he said, as he entered the Realm of Day:
"Well, this beats cucumbers, anyway!"
And so the scriptures had come to pass—
"The last shall be first, and the first shall be last."

Saturday evening another immense audience assembled to hear the lecture of the evening given by Moses Hull, the "Grand Old Man" of Whitewater, Wis. Never have I heard Brother Hull speak more eloquently than he did on this occasion, and I felt proud of the fact that his home was in Wisconsin. His discourse did much toward giving a broader conception of things to many, and toward cementing the fast growing friendship for the school of which he is president. The audience responded nobly to his appeal for financial aid to the school, which goes to prove that the people do like education and intellect. Long may his gray hairs and commanding personality, accompanied by his matchless logic be spared to adorn our spiritual rostrum.

After Mr. Hull's discourse, the writer was called upon to give a few descriptions.

On this occasion as usual, the musical program was arranged and presented by the Zumbachs, who seem to carry inspiration with them wherever they go. Mrs. Jahnke also assisted in the program of the evening, winning many friends by the manner in which she rendered her selections.

On Sunday afternoon, an audience numbering in the hundreds assembled, so eager were they for a little more insight into the philosophy or the continuity of life. The writer gave the discourse of the afternoon. This was followed by messages through the mediumship of Mrs. J. Sauer and Mrs. Murtha, each of whom seemed to be in close touch with the denizens of the other side of life.

In the evening the event of the most importance was the lecture by Miss Lizzie Harlow. It was forceful, masterly and logical, and Miss Harlow's eloquence is too well known to need more than passing mention at this time. Her discourses, as was that of Moses Hull, were taken down in short hand, and will soon be given to the public in pamphlet form. Miss Harlow has not been in Minnesota long but she has already made many friends among those who have listened to her efforts.

Eloquence, wit and logic make a powerful trio, and are bound to win friends for their possessor, but when the fourth member of the trio is a genial, happy personality of the feminine persuasion, why, it is simply irresistible, that's all—and Miss Harlow has captured Minnesota.

The writer gave a few descriptions, and the meeting closed leaving with everyone the feeling that they had been baptised anew—a baptism of spiritual fire which will remain with them for many a day. I repeat, this was the most harmonious convention I have ever attended, and it made my friendship for Minnesota and its splendid association still firmer than ever. Mr. Maxwell, with the aid of his second in command, Mr. J. P. Whitwell, than whom we have no truer or more capable state officer anywhere, has a great field to conquer, and every possibility of winning. These two, with their colleagues in office will certainly give a good account of themselves.

Convention Notes.

J. S. Maxwell was elected delegate to the National Convention at St. Louis—and—"Louis" will have to "look a leedle out."

Moses Hull soared on the wings of eloquence Saturday evening during his discourse. I sat beside him when he ate the wings—I think there were six.

Will Willing was willing to visit the Minnesota convention, and Minnesota was willing that Will Willing should do so. He was there—expansive smile, good nature, abundant avoirdupois and all.

If you want a correct definition of happiness, ask Maxwell. He will undoubtedly say it is the feeling a fellow has when an association that he has served faithfully and well for several years, elects him to their highest office by acclamation.

The Minneapolis News said that: "Will J. Erwood, medium, saw Spiritualistic horses galloping over the heads of the audience, and described them so vividly that all were recognized but one." I deny the alligator.

The same authority said that Mrs. Sauer gave description to the members of the audience, and that not one of them dared to do other than recognize what she gave them. They forgot to say by what means she compelled them to acknowledge what she said.

Moses Hull has re-written the Bible. I have the Daily News as authority, and surely the reporter can make no mistake.

Whitewater and Minneapolis and St. Paul are much nearer than they were before the convention.

Sanford Niles, an old war horse in the battle field of truth was in attendance, and brought the tears of sympathy to the eyes of his hearers, as he graphically depicted the sufferings of others, and implored them to be up and doing for humanity; his talk to the little ones was touching in the extreme. Wish we had a few more Sanfords.

Minneapolis is better for having had the Spiritualist State Convention inside the city limits.

Plenty of wit, reason, eloquence, but never a harsh word—how is that for a Spiritualist convention?

IMPORTANT.

Owing to the fact that the courts have in every case decided against Psychic Healers who advertise to cure the sick without drugs, where the case has been between the U. S. government and a Healer (deciding that it is a clear case of intent to defraud) to advertise to diagnose also, without leading symptoms being given. Therefore I have decided, as a physician in good standing, to not advertise my gift of Psychic Healing, but will diagnose disease and not ask a fee for so doing. THERE IS NO DEATH.

A CORRECT VERSION.

This beautifully touching poem is the creation of Mr. J. L. McCreery, a native of Iowa, and at one time editor of the Delaware County Journal of that state. The poem was written in 1863 and was first published in Arthur's Home Magazine in July of that year. The authorship of the poem was for many years erroneously attributed to Lord Lytton, the English poet. A thorough investigation carried on by Lippincott's a few years ago fully established the authorship. The poem has been printed in every state of the Union, in England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, Canada, and even in Australia. It has gone into dozens of school books and been incorporated in scores of miscellaneous collections of poetry. It has been quoted in full or in part at least five times on the floor of Congress. Mr. McCreery has for the past few years been a resident of the national capital and his best poems have been collected into a volume entitled "Songs of Toil and Triumph."

There is no death! the stars go down
To rise upon some fairer shore,
And bright in heaven's jeweled crown
They shine forevermore.

There is no death! the forest leaves
Convert to life the viewless air;
The rocks disorganize to feed
The hungry moss they bear.

There is no death! the dust we tread
Shall change, beneath the summer showers,
To golden grain, or mellow fruit,
Or rainbow tinted flowers.

There is no death! the leaves may fall,
The flowers may fade and pass away—
They only wait through wintry hours,
The warm, sweet breath of May.

There is no death! the choicest gifts
That heaven hath kindly lent to earth
Are ever first to seek again
The country of their birth.

And all things that for growth or joy
Are worthy of our love and care,
Whose loss has left us desolate,
Are safely garnered there.

Though life become a dreary waste,
We know its fairest, sweetest flowers,
Transplanted into paradise,
Adorn immortal bowers.

The voice of bird-like melody
That we have missed and mourned so long
Now mingles with the angel choir
In everlasting song.

There is no death! although we grieve
When beautiful, familiar forms
That we have learned to love are torn
From our embracing arms.

Although with bowed and breaking heart,
With sable garb and silent tread,
We bear their senseless dust to rest,
And say that they are "dead."

They are not dead! they have but passed
Beyond the mists that blind us here
Into the new and larger life
Of that serener sphere.

They have but dropped their robe of clay
To put their shining raiment on;
They have not wandered far away—
They are not "lost" or "gone."

Though disenthralled and glorified,
They still are here and love us yet;
The dear ones they have left behind
They never can forget.

And sometimes, when our hearts grow faint
Amid temptations fierce and deep,
Or when the wildly raging waves
Of grief or passion sweep,

We feel upon our fevered brow
Their gentle touch, their breath of balm;
Their arms enfold us, and our hearts
Grow comforted and calm.

And ever near us, though unseen,
The dear, immortal spirits tread;
For all the boundless universe
Is life—there are no dead.

CREDO.

Why prate of God? To live in righteousness
Because some Deity looks on as judge
And metes with mighty hand the due reward;
To praise for recompense—is virtue this?
Gods are but Fear apotheosized; made
At dusk, when frightfully we stretch our hands
To grasp the light. There have been many such,
Both good and bad; and some have borne us balm
And all have caused the blood of hosts to flow.

Who made the good, made he not evil, too?
Wer't true, how dare he damn the very clay
By him enfeebled, tempted, 'lowed to fall!
The wounded dog, the beaten horse, the poor—
What were their crimes to merit misery here?
What good were life and our sojourn on earth
If all were done for God and what's to come!

Truth, Beauty, Voices potent in the heart,
These are my Gods, to these I bend the knee,
And Art and Nature are my shrines for prayer.
I live aright because all Nature's laws
Decree it so, and not to bribe a Lord
For hopes of final heaven. And if I fail
The fault is mine, and then I try again.
Let Creed be based upon the best in soul,

Compensation= The Law of the Universe.

CHAPTER I.

On the 13th of October, 17—, I went on board the ship Hawk's Eye, that lay at one of the piers at the city of New York, and asked if there was a chance for a green hand on that ship.

I was met by a tall, broad-shouldered, grizzly-haired and full-bearded man, about sixty years of age, whom we will call Marks, that if any of his friends should chance to read these lines, they would not recognize him.

I am not afraid that anyone will recognize the writer of these memoirs, for I have been gone so long, that what few friends I had on that eventful morning, have long since gone to join the majority.

I was born and reared in a small village, far remote from the seaboard. My early life was spent, until my fifteenth birthday as most of the children in the country are, with little to do, except the few chores necessary about a plain country home, and attending the district school six months in the year. At that time I persuaded my parents to allow me to go to work in a mill in a neighboring village for a small compensation.

I frequently changed my occupation until my twenty-first birthday, then I had contracted a roving disposition and persuaded myself to believe, that to ever become anything in this life, I must get as far away from home as possible. So, after saving my little earnings very carefuly for a few months, and telling no one of my intentions, I started, one bright morning in September, about one month before this story opens and walked until I found myself about forty miles from home, in a large town, on the line of a canal that led to the seabord.

There I immediately made up my mind what I would do, for a vivid picture seemed to grow up before me, showing all the world spread out before my mind's eye with such glittering brightness, that every drop of my blood was so thrilled that I could hardly contain myself.

The reader must remember, that in those remote days, there were no railroads or steamboats, or any of those quick modern conveyances of to-day, so I could not jump on an express train and fly to my destination; but I boarded the first canal boat I saw and asked for a job. To my delight I received an answer to my request, and was sent to ride the horse that pulled the boat.

Did I like my new situation? No; but I found while in conversation with one of the boat's crew, that boat connected with another that would land me in New York City, where I eventually landed, and from which, as I have stated, I sailed in the fateful Hawk's Eye, so I had to content myself, for I did not have a very large purse filled with treasure; and as I had made up my mind before leaving home, that I would not return until I could return with a sum of money sufficient to put me in a position to ever after live comfortably, I concluded to do the best I could under the circumstances.

I was defrauded of my wages for leading the old blind horse of the first boat, for the canaler's captain was vexed because I would not make the return trip with him, and he refused to pay me; and had it not been for the captain of the second boat on which I shipped, I should probably have found myself a prisoner, or else floating in the canal; as it proved, the captains of the two boats were at variance with each other, and as the second one wanted my services as much as the first one, I was able to make my escape.

At last I found myself in the city, and hastened to take my first look at old ocean's billows. To say that I was fascinated at first sight does not half express my feelings. I was bewildered. Everything was new to me; I had never before seen more water in a body at one time than the mill pond at my old home, and now, as my gaze ranged over the broad expanse of ocean, I fancied that I could go and soon return as a captain of some large ship, and go to my friends back there in my old mountain home and regale them with wonderful stories such as Munchausen tales or that of Robinson Crusoe.

All these thoughts passed through my brain as I lay in my bunk on that old canal-boat the first night after we arrived in that, to me, wonderful town. I resolved to make a start on the following morning to place myself in a position where I could become a sailor.

This brings me to that point, where I told you that I went on board the old ship Hawk's Eye, which was to take me out upon what was destined to be a voyage which none other has ever had the opportunity of seeing, and wonderful to relate, none ever had opportunity to return and tell about, until this time.

The ship Hawk's Eye, that proved to be my prison so long, was square rigged, of about two hundred tons burden, and one of the largest afloat in those days; her officers were men who had followed the sea all their days, and were men of known ability; each one from the captain down to the third mate was qualified to take the ship into any waters of the ocean in the known world; the most of the sailors before the mast had visited the best known harbors of the world, and out of a crew of twenty-eight, there were but two beside myself that could be called green hands; these two had been on the water more or less, while I had never known, or even thought what it was to be out of sight of land.

I soon made my bargain with the captain, and having money enough to purchase my outfit, I was introduced to one of the sailors who piloted me to a place in the city, where I was soon provided with all the necessary articles a sailor might need for a long voyage.

I had shipped for the voyage, be it what it might; the captain told me, "it might be for three years, and it might be more; probably more." As I was infatuated with the idea of going to sea, I should have shipped at that time, if he had told me it was for the rest of my life.

I was put in the lower hold of the vessel the first day, to help store the cargo; being a good-sized man, I was also quick and agile; the captain saw my strength and ability, he soon found he could rely on me, and as he was a pretty good kind of a man for the position he occupied in those days, we soon became very good friends, as friends go between officers and men on board of ship, when poor Jack was considered little better than the fishes that swam around the ship.

Our cargo, which consisted of a great variety of new world products, was finally all hoisted in, and after what seemed to me a long and tedious delay, the lines were loosed and the proud old ship swung her nose out in the stream, and with a favorable wind and tide, the sails were set, and one of the handsomest sights ever seen by mortal men in this fair world, was presented to those who stood on the pier and waved adieu to those on deck. I seemed to be the only one at that time that no one waved a good-bye to.

"Young man, I think you are the only one on this ship that has not left one friend on yonder dock to bid you good-bye. Have you no friends?"

"Oh, yes," I said, "but they are so far from here that it would be hard for them to bid me good-bye, if they would. But I am satisfied to be without friends."

The captain looked me square in the face and said: "You may wish some day, that you had a friend."

He never spoke to me after that, and oh, how many times since then, have I thought of what he said.

CHAPTER II.

You may some time wish you had a friend.

We were bound first, for some port in the East Indies; as I knew very little about geography, I knew nothing of where we were going, and cared less at the time.

We had an uneventful voyage to our first port; no ship in those days ever made better time, and there was nothing to mar the serenity of a single man on board, but those three green sailors who had never "crossed the line." I was one of them, and although it was a long time ago, it is vivid in my mind at the present time. There is no use telling of the initiation of the green sailor by old Neptune; there are so many who have seen him clamber over the side of the ship; the salt water dripping from him; well covered with sea-weed; three-tined fork; long gray beard and hair; or, if they have not shivered at the sight of him, they have laughed until their sides have ached, while they have listened to the story of "crossin' the line" as told by some old weather-beaten tar, who had himself been initiated, and afterwards helped in the initiation of some luckless raw recruit.

We exchanged part of our cargo at the first port we touched, and after a short delay in replenishing our ship's stores, we again made sail, and soon being in the China sea, typhoons were to be expected at any moment. A sharp watch was kept at all times, that the ship might be made ready to receive it when it might come. The anxiety of that ship's crew during those days and nights was something to make an impression that would never be forgotten. I do not know as all had the same feelings as those three green hands on that ship did, but I do know, that after the sixth or seventh day we had seen no sign of a storm, and all the time listening to the stories of the old sailors about ships rolling completely over, and then righting themselves, as well as being lifted bodily out of the water, or sailing for hours on their beam ends, I began to wish I was back in my old mountain home, chasing bears, woodchucks, squirrels or other wild animals, instead of being on the broad expanse of old ocean, chasing, or being chased by cyclones, typhoons or any other kind of coons.

After what seemed to me a very long time, one night, my watch had been entertained by "Old Nick," a peculiar person, whose queer language compared well with his looks; he seemed to be a very old man, he was cramped and grizzled, of under size, not more than four feet tall, with immense hands and feet, and extremely long arms; a very large head, with as ugly a face as I ever looked upon, and to cap the whole, he had such a hump on his back, that he looked like a soldier with a knapsack. He had been spinning yarns on the for'd deck, and one after another the watch had turned in. I had filled my pipe and settled down among the chains to smoke and listen to his yarns. The wind had entirely died out and all was still; there was not wind enough to cause the canvas to move ever so little.

"Old Nick" had just finished his pipe, yawned, stood as straight as was possible for him, and started to go towards the fo'castle; he had taken perhaps three steps, when he stopped short, and with one of his peculiar grunts, he dropped on one knee, put his hand to one of his monstrous ears, and seemed bent on catching whatever sound might come; he remained in that position perhaps one minute, then with a hound and a screech which seemed to pierce the air for a long distance, and was heard by every person on that ship. To me, it seemed as if he was a fiend incarnate. His long arms with those terrible hands were swinging wildly above his hideous head; his long hair seemed to stand erect on his head, and his eyes seemed to roll on his cheeks and looked like two balls of fire.

I say I heard his shrieks and saw his actions. I did, and was paralyzed; I was rooted to the spot. How long I might have remained there, I cannot tell, for it was not more than two minutes before all hands were on deck. The captain flew to the side of "Old Nick," and before he had time to inquire what was the matter, "Old Nick" shrieked between his demoniacal howls, that "the typhoon was upon us, and if the sails were not quickly furled, the ship would be blown over in spite of all that could be done."

There was no sign of a storm, not a cloud could be seen. The moon was at its full, lit up everything on board so bright that lights were unnecessary.

All was confusion; each man as he flew from below, asked what had parted to cause that unearthly noise.

There were a few among that brave crew that had heard that unearthly shriek before; among that few was the captain. He had had this same hideous-looking being with him from the first time he had trod the deck of a ship as captain; he knew well that he had warned him many times of approaching danger; and because of his ugly looks, he considered him as a mascot. He well knew now, it was best to heed his warning, even though there was no sign of a storm. He did not hesitate; he ordered all hands aloft to furl the sails; his orders were not in a calm and gentle tone either.

Never did men climb quicker; the howl of "Old Nick" seemed to inspire each sailor with a dread that something was about to happen that was beyond the expectations of a sailor.

Never were sails made short and snug so quick before; every man seemed to have a ringing in his ears of that howl that broke the stillness of that beautiful night in the southern part of the Indian Ocean. And when the work aloft was done, every man seemed as anxious to reach the deck again as he was to go aloft at the command of the captain. Nor was the last man again on deck too quick, for hardly had the last foot struck the deck, when a howl which seemed to be a concentration of ten thousand such shrieks as came from "Old Nick," and seemed to come from the starboard quarter, and each instant came nearer with redoubled force and noise.

The hatches were closed just as the first force of that terrible howling blast struck the ship. She seemed to stand still one second, then with a groan like a being of life, she rolled over to larboard and the foaming waters tumbled over her.

How long she lay on her side, no one can ever tell. The captain shouted, "Hold on, all." Those were the last words I ever heard on that ship.

The order was unnecessary. I never knew what the others did; I only know that I had just time to reach the deck, and helped to secure the fo'castle hatch, when the ship seemed to be covered by a great black monster with flaming eyes, and outstretched waving arms.

I instinctively rushed to the upper side of the deck, for by this time, the ship had rolled on her side and I had to struggle to get up to the rail which now seemed to be hanging over my head; how I reached it, I do not know, but I clung to it with a superhuman effort; I had hardly grasped it, when the waves broke over me. How long I remained there I cannot tell; I was straightened to my full length by the force of the water, and it seemed as if I must be wrenched from my hold, when the force seemed to relax and I congratulated myself that the worst was over, when the noise which seemed so terrific before, was repeated, and the water which came like a mountain falling on me before, now seemed as if the weight of all the waters of old ocean was heaped on me; I was suffocating, my strength was fast failing; I knew I could not stand the strain upon my muscles much longer. The noise of the water had drowned the noise of the more terrible wind. And where was I? Still clinging for life to the rail of that ill-fated ship. I could not think of my shipmates. I lived a thousand lives in that brief space of time.

The wave passed, and with it, the noise of the wind also passed. The terrible monster which I had first seen hanging over my head, which proved to be an inky black cloud that had been blown into such fantastic shapes by the howling blast had also passed, so had every living soul, except myself, gone. Every other thing on the deck of that once proud ship had disappeared. I, with perhaps ten feet of her waist was all that remained on her decks. Masts, spars, every movable thing, even her anchors and chains had disappeared.

And where were the crew? It did not seem to me as if they could have gone; but so it was. I was all that was left on the deck of that wrecked ship.

It took me some time to collect my scattered senses, then as I slowly returned to my normal state, and my strength revived, and I was able to stand and look around, what a sight met my gaze. Simply the bare decks were to be seen, where, before the gale had struck, had so proudly stood those three masts, now, splintered stumps; the shrouds, which so many men had so quickly sped up to the yard arms, were, with the yard arms, swept away. All, all had gone, and were now with my brave companions, the whole crew of that ship, rolling together in a shapeless mass, as sport to the mad waves of old ocean. All, all had so quickly found a watery grave, that only a few short minutes before were resting secure with the thought, that they had so successfully passed the most dangerous place in that ever-to-be-dreaded China sea.

The sea had again become calm, the terrible roaring, dashing, foaming waves had passed on and over me, and I was left the sole occupant and survivor of that useless hulk of a once proud vessel as ever plowed the waters of this earth. Now, all was as quiet as the church yard; there was no motion except the long roll of the wide expanse of water, that now seemed like a child that has been severely punished; the paroxysm of tears has passed, yet its bosom heaves and throbs with its pent-up sorrow, or wrath at its persecutor.

As I came to a full realization of the situation, that I was alone in mid-ocean, on a dismantled ship, thousands of miles from any living thing, in inky darkness except at intervals, when the light of the moon shone through the rifts of the clouds, now broken into heavy rolling masses which followed the hideous black monster that had caused such havoc but a few moments before. I staggered, and lost control of my reason again and sank to the deck in a heap, and all was a blank.

CHAPTER III.

Alone, alone! Think, O man, of the awful situation.

How long I lay there upon the deck of that wreck I do not know; it might have been one day or more. When I regained consciousness, I was lying on my back with the hot rays of the sun scorching my face and hands. I was bewildered. I called for my shipmates; the sound of my voice startled me, and roused me to a full realization of my terrible situation. I cried aloud, "Alone, alone, on a helpless wreck." As the horrible scenes of the typhoon slowly came back to my mind, it was with an effort that I was able to control myself; my first thought was to leap overboard, and thus end my misery.

I lay thinking for a long time, and the awful stillness almost drove me mad. I laboriously arose to my feet; then I began to feel the pangs of thirst and hunger; as I thought of this, my mind was diverted from my loneliness for the time. I went as quickly as my emaciated condition would permit to the cabin hatchway, and endeavored to open it, but found that my strength was not equal to the task; there was nothing on the deck with which I could open it, and to go forward to the forecastle again, seemed to me like traveling a long and weary journey.

I started, and several times I fell on my way, because of my weakness; but after several attempts I succeeded in reaching it, and with an extra effort I succeeded in removing the hatch enough to allow my body to pass through, and I staggered down the narrow stairs, only to find the place so dark that I could not see. Again I began to laboriously work to find the tinder and steel, that I might strike a light. (In those days, there were no matches.) In my vain search for the tinder, I stumbled on a piece of hard bread that had been left by one of the unfortunate sailors.

Oh, how quickly I put that piece of bread to my mouth and began to chew a piece of it, but when I attempted to swallow it, my throat refused to let it pass; I had lain so long in the sun that my throat had become so dry and parched there was not moisture enough left in it to moisten that bread which the sailors always had to soak in either coffee or water before they could eat, even in health.

I tried my best to swallow, but it was of no use to try. I reeled because of my weakness, and in trying to save myself from falling, my hand came in contact with a belaying-pin; I eagerly grasped it, and as I did so, my thoughts went in the direction of the cabin where I had hopes I might find something with which I might quench my terrible thirst which seemed to increase with every breath.

As I ascended the stairs to the deck again I perceived that it was growing dark. I at first thought I was fainting, but I soon realized that the day was most done and night was coming on; again the thoughts of my lonely condition came upon me with redoubled force; I thought of the weakness of my body and brain, my thirst, my hunger; I must have something to help me soon, or I should be beyond help; this caused me to work with redoubled energy.

Again I tottered to the cabin hatch, and with the belaying-pin to force the fastenings of it, I crept into that place which had never before been desecrated by the presence of a common sailor; I was as much a stranger there as I was at the last port we had just left. I had not the faintest idea of the arrangements of that cabin; daylight had gone, I was weak and hungry, there was no way to make a light. What to do, or how to do it, I did not know. My first and only thought was to find something to allay my great and burning thirst which now seemed to be burning my very soul; I cared not what it was, anything in the shape of liquid.

Perhaps some of my readers will ask why I did not drink of the sea water. I would answer such an inquiry, that if they had had such an experience as I had in my "crossing the line," they would readily see why I now let the sea water alone. Then I was thrown into it, and dragged by a line about my body; I was compelled to drink what seemed to me as gallons, until I was made so thirsty that I did not recover from the effects of it for many days. My recollection of that event now came to me in the shape of a lesson that was of much value.

I soon found myself against the solid partition of the cabin; I frantically felt my way along that partition, and in my mad wanderings I stumbled over stools and such other obstructions as came in my way; I fell, and picked myself up to fall again, and again. I finally found a passageway; I entered it and found shelves; I frantically felt for that which was uppermost in my mind; something to quench my thirst.

How the time seemed to fly; I had no means of telling what time it was. I did not think of time; my only thought was of something to drink. I placed my hands on everything within my reach. I went around the enclosure, whatever it might be and found nothing that I wanted; at last I found myself at the place where I started; I felt my way still on and found a door; I tried and to my joy I could open it. I entered and my hopes were again raised; I soon found what was new to me, a bed; but I thought it was useless to continue my search there, for I thought no one would keep anything to drink in a bedroom. So much for early education. I turned to retrace my steps, when I came in contact with something over which I fell, and in my fall my hand came in contact with some hard substance; I felt it all over and I thought it was a chest; I felt it all over again and found the lid and with my feeble strength I finally succeeded in raising it. I put my hand in it, and the first thing my hand came in contact with seemed to impart new life to me. It was a flask. I raised it and shook it; I pulled the stopper and putting it to my lips and not stopping to taste, I swallowed the contents and sat on the floor to rest and enjoy the benefits derived from it.

Never did man enjoy greater pleasure than I did those few moments that I remained conscious after draining the contents of that flask.

We should avoid whatever may display bad feeling, and attend with civility to what may be addressed to us; all hearts are conciliated by politeness and affability.—Socrates.

INTERESTING EXPERIENCE.

A Narrative of Spiritual Manifestations.

I am very much interested in Mr. Petersilea's writings, and hope they will be continued. Theory is good to fill up the paper, and furnishes food for thought, but I think facts or experiences from this side of life or the other are more convincing, and give us a better understanding how to live.

I was interested in the experience of Priscilla E. McArthur, as I have had a good many similar experiences. I will tell you about the transition of my son.

In 1902 I belonged to a home circle. For convenience I will give the first name of each member, Jennie, Mart, Lill, myself. Homer, one of my sons was not well at all, torpid liver and seemed all kinds of ailments. One evening in October Jennie saw a large bunch of roots. She described them. Mart got the word "Kalamazoo," but I said "calamus root." Now what must we do? The spirits said, "Get the roots, scrape off the rough bark, cut in thin slices, put in china or porcelain vessel, pour boiling water on, cover, let stand till cool, drink wineglass full three or four times a day." It proved to be the best medicine for torpid liver or indigestion I have ever found. My son used it and got much better.

Soon after that, one evening Homer saw a hand with a white glove on, the index finger pointing up, a white butterfly on end of finger, a bouquet of red, white and blue flowers in hand. I was impressed to say "In May or June, when the butterflies come, and the larkspurs bloom," but could tell no more.

In January, 1903, I was lying on bed reading, Sunday afternoon. I heard a very loud rap. I looked up and saw standing at the foot of the bed a very big man, with a peculiar turban on his head. He said, "Egyptian." In the evening I told it in the circle, then he showed himself behind me. From that on he was near me a great deal. He placed a very peculiar boat over me, saying, "Protection." About the 20th of March, in circle, I saw an open grave at my feet, was given a spade and told to fill in. About that time the boat was removed and a bamboo tree planted at my back. Then I was given a bag with $110 marked on it; was told "Insurance." About that time my boy came home from work (he was cutter boy at the paper mill). He said he could see nothing but old coins all day, the clean white sheets of paper were all covered. I knew then the Egyptian was with him. On Saturday evening, May 16, Ed said, "Mother go to Perry's to-morrow (Sunday) morning." We went, a distance of about nine miles; we had to walk three miles to get there. Frank's family (my oldest son) was there, and Ed enjoyed himself until evening. On the way home he said his back ached. In about one hour after he first complained he had convulsions. I called two doctors, but could do nothing. Wednesday at 10 a. m., his spirit left the body. I was holding his hand and fanning him with my other hand; the house was nearly full of neighbors and friends. When the spirit left the body, they told me to lay down the fan, but I wouldn't let go of him. In about twenty minutes I saw a flutter at his heart, then he began gasping and panting as though he had been running very fast. At last he spoke, saying, "Pretty near they would have had me." I asked, "Who, Ed?" He said, "The people where I was." I asked: "Where were you, Ed?" He smiled and said, "You know." I asked, "How many people were there?" He said, "Oh, a blue million." I asked, "Did you know any one there?" He said, "No." I said, "You must have known some one if there were so many." He said, "No."

He had a brother 22 years old that had gone on one and a half years before, and one sister 18 years old that had gone one year before, and I thought perhaps he had met them. I asked him a great many more questions. To all he answered clear and distinct. At last he pulled my apron. I bent over to hear what he had to say; he kissed me, then said, "Good-bye, ma." He kissed me over and over again, saying, "Good-bye, ma"; then he called his father, kissed him good-bye, then his sister Dora, then his brother Frank; his other sister and four brothers didn't get here in time to give him good-bye. He passed to the higher realms May 20. If he had lived till August 24 he would have been 15 years old. After his spirit returned and while he talked, the Egyptian was in the room. Ed was taken by him, but they often return in the same boat. SALLIE E. STIVER.

GROW OLD BEAUTIFULLY.

Crotchety, crabbed and sad?
Why shouldn't each heart spend life's last hour
In making other hearts glad?

Experience makes us older grow;
But the soul should always keep cheery;
Because the old garment is thread-bare and worn,
Need its wearer be less merry?

Pray tell me, why the old may not,
Be cheerful, happy and gay?
Since the sun only sets in this green
dot,
To rise for a longer day.

If while in the mortal form we live,
We spend life well and dutifully;
We scarcely know the pleasure we'd give
In growing old so beautifully.

Time comes to us all when quiet we'll keep,
Eyes closed; hands folded; His will;
Peace! Rest—for a moment—how dreamless the sleep—
Till the sun climbs over the hill!

You fear that with the downfall of belief will fall also the basis of conscience. I maintain that the true conscience will now for the first time arise. What do you understand by conscience? Your conscience is imagination and fear; my conscience is reason and honor.—Karl Heinzen.

THE CAUSE IN THE EAST.

After a week's session filled with joy and harmony, the camp-meeting at Madson Center (Maine), on Hayden Lake, closed on Sunday last, and with it one of the most successful gatherings which have been on the grounds since their opening some twenty-five years ago. The meetings this year were under the direction of President Fred. A. Wiggin of Boston, and they were very successful.

All over the grounds the spirit of harmony prevailed, and the band of workers together with a larger spirit band all blended in unison for the best interests of the grounds. This was the 25th annual gathering of the Madison Spiritualist Association, the meetings opening on Saturday morning and continuing until the evening of Sunday, September 11.

Lakewood Grove is certainly easy of access, and the meetings were well attended while the excellent array of talent made the meeting one of pleasure for all. The grove is easily reached from Madison or Skowhegan by electric cars, and reduced rates were allowed over all roads. On Sundays excursion trains were run over the various roads and during the session the little steamer, Margaret B., ran back and forth over the lake. The service was good and hotel accommodations were ample. The speakers and singer this year were all quartered in the Shepherd cottage where they were ably looked after.

Rev. F. A. Wiggin of Boston appeared again this season as the presiding officer and a speaker. His readings were among the best ever heard on the grounds and all were delighted with him and were pleased to learn that he will be on the grounds next year.

Rev. May S. Pepper, of Providence, R. I., appeared several times during the meeting on the platform and her lectures were interesting and beneficial. Her readings were convincing and she gave them with such inspiration that all were recognized.

Dr. George A. Fuller of Onset, needs no introduction, and his words in the several lectures which he gave were those of wisdom and he delighted his audiences. He is a popular speaker here.

Harrison D. Barrett, who is well known in this section, is a man who has won his way into the hearts of all his listeners and they have been pleased again this year to hear his words on at least one occasion.

Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing of Westfield, New York, appeared several times before large audiences and gave one of her ichabod readings. She is a lovable soul and one who has many friends in Maine.

The music this year was furnished by Miss Mary E. Williams of the New England Conservatory of Boston, and she is one of the best singers which have ever appeared on the grounds. She has easy control of a sweet voice and all were pleased with Miss Williams.

A great work is done here annually by the Ladies' Aid Society, and this year it was none the less. The ladies handled a fair and candy booth during the session and secured considerable money from this department. Much credit is due them for their able assistance. Their officers elected this year were president, Miss Olive Hayden, Madison; vice-president, Mrs. A. A. Burgess, Norridgewock; secretary, Mrs. Silas Grapham, Skowhegan; treasurer, Mrs. A. A. Cass, Skowhegan.

The annual election of officers for the ensuing year of the association resulted as follows, the meeting taking place on Wednesday, at the close of the afternoon session: President, Rev. F. A. Wiggin, Boston; vice-president, Robert Hayden, Athens; secretary, Mrs. A. A. Russell, Solon; treasurer, N. B. Brown, Carrytunk. Directors, B. M. Bradbury, Fairfield; Mrs. Charles Wheeler, Phillips; S. S. Woodman, Cornville; Mrs. A. A. Cass, Skowhegan. The directors board and other officers will act as a board together.

The program was a very interesting one from beginning to end. On Tuesday evening a seance was given in the auditorium by Rev. F. A. Wiggin of Boston and on Thursday and Saturday evenings there were concerts there with oright programs.

On Saturday, the opening day of the convention meetings, Rev. F. A. Wiggin of Boston, spoke at the morning session, following the lecture with readings. In the afternoon he was followed by Dr. George A. Fuller of Onset, Mass. On Sunday there was a lecture in the morning by Dr. George A. Fuller and in the afternoon Rev. Wiggin spoke again, with a special seance in the evening at the auditorium.

Good weather prevailed during the week, although it was very cold for so early in the season. On Monday morning occurred the annual conference meeting with a lecture by Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing in the afternoon. Tuesday morning Dr. George A. Fuller lectured, and in the afternoon there was spirit communications and a lecture by Mrs. May S. Pepper.

Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing and Rev. F. A. Wiggins spoke morning and afternoon respectfully on Wednesday and in the evening there was an "Ichabod" circle oy Mrs. Twing with a good attendance. Mrs. Pepper addressed the congregation on Thursday morning with communications following and the afternoon was devoted to the cause of the state association with speaking by a number of visitors and the officers of the state.

Thursday evening occurred the grand concert with a pleasing programme under the direction of Miss Mary E. Williams of Boston. The addresses of Friday consisted of lectures morning and afternoon by Mrs. Carrie Twing and Rev. May S. Pepper, and on Saturday morning, Dr. George A. Fuller spoke to a good audience, while in the afternoon the program was that of the National Association at which Harrison D. Barrett was the chief speaker, as president of the organization.

The service on Sunday was very largely attended and it was a very inspiring one. The large auditorium was completely filled and even standing room was filled, many being unable to get inside the doors. Dr. George Fuller lectured in the morning, Rev. F. A. Wiggin giving spirit communications following, and in the afternoon there was a short address by Rev. May S. Pepper who followed her address by spirit communications.

At the concerts given on the grounds there was excellent talent and these entertainments are always pleasant from the many young people who take such such interest in the affairs of Lakewood. A word of praise should be given the Hayden family who each year give so much time and work to the interests of the camp-meeting. Good souls that they are, their hearts are done up in the cause and may their reward be great in the land of rest beyond.

So has closed another year's program, and may the next in another year be as successful and filled with the pleasures which should be those of all during the year.

Evolution and Dissolution.

"Evolution Must Cease Somewhere and When It Does Cease Dissolution Has Begun."

The proverbs, fables and legends of a nation are as true and faithful to history and life as are its Bibles and sacred literature—in fact they in time become embodied and form a part and parcel thereof, and together represent the ideal thought, feelings and aspirations of a people. The highest civilization does not produce the greatest purity or the most exalted patriotism. Luxury and license go hand in hand. For every new joy there is a new want. For every virtue there is a corresponding vice. The more civilized, the more educated a people become, the more numerous and stringent the laws.

Life and death, sin and righteousness, disease and health, darkness and light, truth and falsehood, are each struggling for the mastery. Neither will ever be entirely victorious, or entirely vanquished. Does not every animal, tree, plant and vegetable growth carry in its very essence and life the seeds of death and decay? Is not the same true of all human institutions, governments, and social and political institutions? These great questions disturb every heart, haunt every mind and follow us in hours of gayety as well as in hours of sadness. We live in hope, in mighty expectation, and not in realization. All the terrible life problems press upon us unanswered, the same to-day as they have through all the past. Who is able to study the meaning of God in the creation of a single soul?

Nature is wonderful in all her manifestations, whether in the animal, mineral or vegetable kingdom. Tell me by what alchemy, chemistry, or magic, earth, air water and sunlight are transmuted into the beauty of the lily, the fragrance of the rose or the rich flavor of the fruit. The tendency of matter and life is to move upward. Everything has its goal, and when it is reached disintegration takes place. There is no tribe, or clan so low in the scale of intelligence but what is governed or controlled by some law or order however crude and barbaric; and, without any interference from without and with no teacher but nature or instinct and experience would continue to improve and add to their stock of knowledge and method of living.

In no other way could man originally have elevated himself from his primal conditions. Language is constantly being reinforced from slang words—"the dregs of spoken language." The higher walks of life are continually being supplied from the lower. Progress, advancement are the watch-words of nature. The goal of matter is spirit. While we are all the while adding new words to our vocabulary, at the same time, we are throwing off old ones. At length every custom, habit, thought, implement and institution goes into disuse. Fable passes into history and history into fable. "It is the fate," says one writer, "of every doctrine to begin in heresy and end in superstition." Progress ends in decay, civilizations go out in darkness, and the final crown of man's labor, toil and accomplishment is oblivion. The mountains are shadows, the rocks dissolve and all matter finally resolves itself into spirit. There is no writing, no monument, no human invention that can stand the corroding tooth of time. Tyre, Sidon, Damascus, Nineveh, Carthage, Babylon, Athens, Rome—the great nerve centers of the ancient world—where are they? Their glory gone, vanished, blotted out. Time will do the same for London, Paris and New York.

"How many ages hence
In states unborn, and accents yet unknown."

The farther we recede from the past the fewer men and occasions will be remembered. The great mountain peaks of history, alone, will be noted. Only two great events in our own country will be long spoken of,—the struggle for Independence, and the War of the Rebellion. Only three names will be heard of—Washington, Jefferson and Lincoln.

"Remorseless Time!
Fierce spirit of the glass and scythe! What power
Can stay him in his silent course, or melt
His iron heart to pity?"

All men, nations, sects, parties perform their allotted work and are forgotten; the form vanishes, but the spirit lives. We don't know whether such a man as Job ever lived,—whether he was an individual or simply a symbol, a sign, or the very essence of the times in which he lived. It matters not whether it was a man or a voice—the words spoken represented the feelings, the emotions, the sentiments of the world in which they were uttered. The spirit of a race speaks through the medium of its great men. Their words last long after they have passed into the realm of mist and fable. "Homer yet is, veritably present face to face with every open soul of us and Greece, where is it? Desolate for thousands of years; away, vanished; a bewildering heap of stones and rubbish, the life and existence of it all gone. Like a dream; like the dust of King Agamemnon! Greece was; Greece except in the words she spoke, is not." No one knows the effect of any act of his life—which shall endure, or which shall perish. That which seems most prominent at the time vanishes, while the trifle, the insignificant and unnoted bears fruit forever.

"Consider every beginning how small and feeble;
Ganges, and the rolling Mississippi sprung of brooks among the mountains;
That yew-tree of a thousand years was once a little seed;
And Nero's marble Rome, shepherd's mud-built hovel;
A speck is on the tropic sky, and it groweth to the terrible tornado;
An apple, all too fair to see, destroyed a world of souls;
A seeming malefactor dieth,—it is Jesus, the Savior of men!"

Only the shell, the husks of things die—all that is vital remains. Men, monuments, institutions, disappear—but thought lives. There is no new wit, no new wisdom. Every proverb, saying, and pithy remark is older than any known language and goes back farther than recorded knowledge. Individuals pass away but the great tide of life moves on undiminished. Forms and outward manifestations change but the living element that nourished them into existence survives. We are all copyists. The essential elements of the Christian creed are only re-statements of some ancient philosophy, or belief. The rites and ceremonies of the church are founded on heathen customs and practice. The principles involved in the Hebrew code were not originated by Moses; they were in existence hundreds of years before Moses was born.

"Were the Ten Tables made or compiled? Were they anything but the reduced and simplified expression of immemorial usage? Is there any such thing as making a law in any age or country?"

There is nothing novel in the theory of evolution;—it was embodied in the Greek philosophy. Darwin simply elaborated and popularized it. Education is more universal to-day than in any former time, there is more general intelligence among the people, but in individual instances we cannot compare with the Greeks, Romans and other ancient nations. There is a rhythm, smoothness, and harmony in prose as well as in poetry. Under the coarsest garb, sometimes, is found the warmest and most generous hearts.

The farther you get away from nature—the farther you are from God, truth, and righteousness. Simplicity of life is favorable to worship and true living. Learning breeds doubt, not faith. Few men believe their creed—only in theory;—their lives belie its essential parts. Doctors proverbially refuse to take their own medicine, lawyers dare not try their own case and ministers and musicians have been known, where personally interested, to go back on a life-long habit, practice and profession. Theodore Parker, the celebrated Unitarian divine, who had performed the last sacred rites for many people, left orders that at his obsequies, "he was to be carried to the grave and interred in silence, without service, prayer, exhortation or eulogy,—a Unitarian minister merely reading over his grave the first eleven verses of the fifth chapter of St. Matthew's gospel." The great musical composer, Verdi, made particular request that there should be no music rendered at his funeral. Everything in this world seems paradoxical. You can disprove a myth or a fable a thousand times and still it will be repeated.

Some men's intellect has been likened to "the pupil of the eye, the more light you pore upon it the more it contracts." There is more moral cowardice and ignorance in the world than intentional evil. Not one person in a thousand dare stand up and say what is right or what is wrong; vice holds the balance of power in a community. But the stream of time, at length, purifies all questions, principles and characters. Error is weakness, sin, a disease. What has been called human depravity is nothing but human ignorance. The best remedy for evil doing is a knowledge of its results. A person must be familiar with grief to appreciate it; he must have experienced the chill of this world to realize it; not until one feels the death damp upon his brow can he know its deadly meaning. Joy and sorrow are the natural heritage of man. Neither could be felt or recognized without the other.

"I have known sorrow—therefore I
May laugh with you, O friend, more merrily
Than those who never sorrowed upon earth,
And know not what laughter's worth.
I have known laughter—therefore I
May sorrow with you more tenderly
Than those who never knew how sad a thing

The laws of nature, as far as we know them, seem simple and easy, and if rightly understood would bring greater happiness to the individual and longer duration to a nation; but death is the finality of all life, institutions and conditions. All things move in cycles. What has been will be again. The same conditions bring about the same results. As forms, organizations, and force are in constant change, with no new substance, no new power or law being added to the universe, there must be continued recurrence of the same phenomena. That which is constantly observed by mankind makes but little impression;—it is only the unusual, novel or spectacular that creates attention.

The gravest errors have been handed down and believed in from generation to generation. Men seldom examine the motive that directs their action or the foundation upon which their opinions and beliefs rest. It is difficult to lift a man out of a time-worn rut. Most men are bound down by superstition, narrowed by creed or party, and dwarfed by prejudice; but when an individual once breathes the pure air of liberty he never again returns to bondage. It is as impossible for a progressive thinking man, while he may be constantly changing his views in many respects, to go back to a discarded doctrine, as it would be for those animals that throw off their skin or those that shed their hair or fur to again have recourse to their former coat or covering. But as the tides continue to ebb and flow so does civilization, and what will the end be?

"The wisest thinkers tell us that there are already on the globe traces of a demonstration that the human race is drawing to its close. Each of the great human families has had its day—its infancy—its manhood—its decline. The two last races that have not been tried are on the stage of earth doing their work now. There is no other to succeed them. Man is but of yesterday, and yet his race is wellnigh done. Man is wearing out, as everything before him has been worn out. In a few more centuries the crust of earth will be the sepulchre of the race of man, as it has been the sepulchre of extinct races of palm-trees and ferns and gigantic reptiles."

Science of Mind.

Five hundred words in evidence may reveal a truth, as good as five thousand words.

Drake in his History of Boston, 1856, says: "And yet it cannot be denied that there was something manifested in those times never fathomed by the keenest intellectual powers which have ever been brought to bear upon it. Among a great amount of deceptions and falsehoods, there was, nevertheless, an unexplained, and perhaps unexplainable, mystery, as far beyond human comprehension as the mystery of life itself. That such mystery is near akin to the spiritual manifestations of the present day may be very possible, and a time may come when to ridicule these may be as strong an indication of ignorance as a belief in them in other days."

Before 1692 the following took place in Massachusetts: In the case of Margaret Rule, the witnesses testified that she was lifted up from her bed, wholly by an invisible force, a great way towards the top of the room where she lay, having no assistance even from her own hands or arms; and that, when so lifted up, a strong person could not pull her down, nor could the weight of others upon her prevent her from ascending up.

"I had an odd experience, to me, recently. I felt a force saying to me, 'Clear your decks for action.'"—Farragut, 1801.

To return to 1673: In 1673, at Jamestown, Va., there lived a doctor and his wife. The wife was of Massachusetts origin. At this time (1673) they had passed the sixtieth year of life. They were educated. The doctor knew that his wife possessed remarkable powers, then called witchcraft. She said and proved her power to read and translate writing in Latin which she had not seen nor heard, though she could not read Latin herself.

We have had in 1904 two mediums of this class in Boston. But the witch of Jamestown had several phases of mediumship. She set her mind against her shoemaker, for cause, and his cow died. She set her mind against her dressmaker, for cause, and the dressmaker was made sick in bed. A child insulted the witch, and the child cried, saying she had knots in her legs, etc. The witch said she had never exerted these powers, voluntarily, to the injury of any one. She told a man, "See the small table. It is now still. I will wish it to move and it will do so." In a minute it turned entirely around by an invisible force. AURIN E. HILL.

TRUTH TRIUMPHANT.

Spiritualism Overcoming All Opposing Forces.

It is really refreshing for thoughtful people to peruse the columns of The Progressive Thinker in these progressive days, and I cannot do otherwise than congratulate the editor upon the high standard it has achieved, not only as a newspaper, but as a magazine of scientific and religious thought.

I say religiously advisedly, because I believe that true religion can only be attained through the process of scientific research into the domains which lie beyond the fields of orthodoxy. In other words, religion, to be of service to mankind must have a foundation of scientific truth.

I wish that The Progressive Thinker could have a circulation of several millions in order that the truths relating to the spiritual philosophy could be disseminated among the masses. I am expecting to hear of some millionaire devoting a sufficient sum for this very purpose, and that he will be actuated to do this by spiritual influence when the time is ripe.

Every thoughtful person who has watched the intellectual progress of mankind during the past ten years cannot fail to realize that a great change in thought has come over the masses, not only in this country, but all over the civilized world. I think that the common seance—the old-fashioned seance—has had much to do with the awakening of the popular mind to the realization of spiritual truths.

People may sneer at table-tipping and raps, with their incoherent, or unsatisfying communications, nevertheless they form the alphabet of the spiritual philosophy.

This early stage of the investigator into Spiritualism may be likened to the first school days of childhood with its A B C lessons. It will be acceded by all that the first thing to be done with a pupil is to secure his attention. It is the same in training men and women as it is with animals. You cannot make a monkey perform tricks until you first get its attention. You may start in all right and the monkey do what you require of him, but if a fly comes buzzing around his head, the attention goes to the fly. The fly becomes the paramount object of the monkey's thought, all else becomes of no importance for the time being.

Imagine a group of barbarians or semi-civilized human beings sitting together conversing in their rude way on the subject of life and death, wondering what they mean and speculating as to the reason life was given to them, and supposing a missionary from the spiritual realms, desirous of communicating with this group of uncultivated beings, attempted to gain their attention, could anything be more natural or appropriate than the sounding of raps?

There is nothing more startling and impressive than the sound of knocking. It has been from time immemorial the means of securing attention. Households are aroused by the door knocker, assemblages are called to order by raps with the gavel, and rapping is the universal signal by which mortals gain the attention of their fellows.

From a spiritual point of view, the vast majority of people in our day are as completely in the dark regarding universal law as the savages of old; in fact their condition may be considered worse by reason of the false teaching they have imbibed during the intellectual development of the race. It is therefore more necessary than ever that raps and kindred manifestations be resorted to by spirits in order to acquire the attention of ignorant ones they wish to control.

I have touched upon the matter of raps, etc., because the prevalence of them as the A B C of spiritual philosophy is in accordance with the great truth, that it is from simple things mighty events accrue; and that we should "never despise the day of small things."

During my investigations in spiritual manifestations, covering a period of twenty years I have noticed that most if not all of my friends who have joined the Spiritualistic ranks, first became convinced of something beyond mere matter from hearing raps and observing the table tippings within the select circles of their own homes. It was by that means their attention to spiritual things was first attained. And from that small beginning I know many who have advanced to high states of spirituality by earnest application, investigation and leading honorable and virtuous lives in accordance with the teachings of our beautiful philosophy.

I have read with interest what has been published in The Progressive Thinker in regard to the "Psychological Crime,' and fraudulent practices in mediumship, etc. I have no fears as to the ultimate triumphs of the spiritual philosophy, because it is in accordance with universal law, is coeval with the advent man on this planet and under the guidance of the spiritual world. Nothing can stop its progress. The fact that its phenomena is counterfeited should encourage rather than depress us, for no sane person would, or could counterfeit anything that has no existence. Forgers do not imitate imaginary dollar bills. I have waded up to my nose, figuratively speaking, in the presence of fraudulent manifestations during my long period of investigations. But I never had any difficulty in recognizing true manifestations and I am happy to say it has been my good fortune to witness some of the marvelous phenomena such as described by Sir William Crookes, ex-president of the Royal Society of England, and his confreres, Alfred Russel Wallace, Lodge, Varley and many others of the world's most distinguished scientists.

I am convinced, however, that the great publicity given in The Progressive Thinker to the "Psychological Crime" and the fraudulent practices of certain so-called mediums, has been and will be of far-reaching benefit to Spiritualism by showing to the world at large that Spiritualists are taking the lead in bringing into contempt those who prostitute their gifts for dishonest gain or who counterfeit the sacred gifts of mediumship. It is gratifying to realize that the last half century's spiritual development has resulted in opening the eyes of countless millions to realities in human life never dreamed of by them before. It has given such an impetus to free thought, fearless investigation and psychical research as to shake the very foundations of orthodox thought.

Raps and table-tipping may seem trivial things, but they have shaken the orthodox world with convulsive throbs and brought from the dark recesses of medievalism an army of clergymen who have dared to say "no," and launched upon the sea of orthodoxy the steelclad cruiser and invincible ram known as the "Higher Criticism." This is the biggest fighting machine that ever ploughed its way upon the intellectual ocean, and its first victory was the battering down of the walls of superstition, destroying the monsters of priestly and ignorant imagination, and relieving the minds of millions from the nightmare of fear.

This is a good beginning. Let the Spiritualists continue faithful, exercise charity and love, by which, as we move forward, the lions in the path will take to their heels. A. W. MOORE.

THE SILENT ROOM.

For Rest, Meditation and Spiritual Exaltation.

To have in the home a so-called silent room is curiously enough one of the fads which have come most flamboyantly into notice. The room is used only for the purpose of promoting "concentration," a word which nowadays is much heard in the especial haunts of society folk. Indeed, it would seem as though many women were feeling very strongly the need of some private spot of retirement, free from the movings of every day life, absolutely silent, and wherein the nerves may be altogether relaxed. It is, however, not for the purpose of relaxation that the silent room has become an institution, although this may be regarded as a primary state of its true purpose—concentration.

"Forgive me, it is my hour for concentrating," is an excuse which has passed freely at Newport this summer, and one against which a protest is unavailable. The individual who thus speaks then leaves whatever amusement is in progress, no matter how entertaining it may be, and goes to the silent room. Once behind its door, no messages are allowed to be given to her; no interruptions are permitted. When later she appears the casual observer might notice in her no change, yet in reality her energies are refreshed and her hour of silent meditation has equipped her to meet calmly the day's emergencies.

It is said, by one who knows, that no two people should make use of the same silent room. This is said to be because the air of the room becomes infused with the personality of its regular occupant, and acts, therefore, as an irritant to one visiting it but seldom. Also, if used exclusively for concentrating, this action of the mind becomes easy within its walls, while outside, amid the world's distractions, it is often most difficult of accomplishment. A certain hour each day also should be set aside for concentrating, when the mind, aided by the atmosphere of the silent room, falls gradually into the habit.

The ideal silent room should be on the top floor of the house, and if possible have a window, or skylight, from which only the miracles of nature can be seen—the sea, abundant foliage, or the blue sky alone. It should be absolutely simple in arrangement, having no furnishings that might attract the eye either pleasantly or to form a discordant note. An ashen, dull shade of green for its background appears to be most conducive to repose. Above all else rocking chairs are excluded from the silent room. Its quietude, moreover, should be perfect. So sensitive, indeed, to outside noises does the occupant of a silent room become that various plans for deadening their walls are now under discussion.

One New York man of abundant wealth has in his home a silent room, which has proved to him so helpful that he has found it worth while to hedge it in by unoccupied rooms on either side. These rooms are securely fastened, and outside of the purpose of procuring silence for its sanctum are thus rendered useless. A young woman at Newport has fitted up the formerly unused cupola of her home as an admirable silent room. It is reached by so many flights of stairs, she says, that she is secure from interruption and is nearer the sky than she often gets. Another interesting silent room known to the initiated is in a dormer window, boarded off from the rest of the roof. Its furnishings consist of a large, old desk, a rug and a straight-back chair. On the desk the young woman who uses this room has a number of books treating mostly of mental science and the habit of concentration. Not a picture, not an ornament or decoration of any kind is seen there. The walls—and this is quite unusual—are painted white.

The occupant of this last room tells amiably that she first felt the need of some such help through an encroaching habit of vagueness, and because a day seldom passed without her losing or forgetting something really important. An intimate friend then whispered into her ear about the silent room. She resolved to test its efficacy. When first she began thus shutting herself up the hours were those of long drawn out misery. She could not concentrate. Day after day she would in despair throw herself on the floor, and perhaps doze the time away. It was when on the brink of abandoning the idea that she laid in the stock of books which still are seen on her desk. For half an hour then she would read, endeavoring the rest of the time to concentrate. Still it was very difficult. Gradually, however, with perseverance it came to her. At first she could keep her mind fastened on some one subject no longer than five minutes, and regarded even that as an achievement. To-day she concentrates absolutely for an hour each morning. A longer time than this is deemed inadvisable.

It is not only for the selfish purpose of mental poise that concentrating is in vogue. It is declared by those who have practiced it that others may be helped through directing toward them strong thought forces—even that the friction of a household may be held in abeyance by the efforts of one individual given to concentration.—New York Herald.

A Spiritualist may add by way of suggestion, that although the "silent room" is helpful to concentration, it is not an absolute necessity for the accomplishment of the designed purpose.

By practice and with the same end in view, one can take some time during the day and devote it to inner silent meditation, relaxation and rest combined. In the parlor, the library, the bed-room—one can fulfill the spirit of the injunction, "enter into thy closet," in mind, and receive the spiritual, mental and physical benefits derived from "concentration" in "the silent room."

One can learn to close the eyes and ears to the things of material sense and gain rest and strength physical and mental, as well as spiritual quickening.

The true "silent room" is within, ever ready to be entered by any one who will.

In this inner closet one may commune with the angels, and learn to sing the soul's silent song of joy.

The Wisdom of Passion

BY SALVARONA.

"In modern philosophy there are three great treatises on the Passions, that of Spinoza, that of Hume, and that of Salvarona."—Philosophical Journal.

Illustrated with three handsome portraits of Emerson, Hosea, Byron. 12mo, 250 pages. Red cloth; gold title. Will be mailed to any address on receipt of price by postal note.

Price, $1.00. Postage, 10 Cents.

The extraordinary merits of "The Wisdom of Passion" are the copiousness of human insight and content in the way of fact and reference with which the book is crammed. Its main thesis I agree with.—Prof. William James, Harvard University.

I have found "The Wisdom of Passion" to be a book of powerful erudition and fine intuition. I would be happy if in a certain sense I had inspired it.—Prof. Ceasare Lombroso.

Here is a man who sees and says things for himself. He is not retailing conventionalities. The book fairly bristles with wise sayings. I believe the thesis is sustainable and that the author has gone a long way toward fortifying it. After I took up the book, I did not quit, except for meals and sleep till I had read it carefully from cover to cover.—Albion W. Small, Head of Dept. of Sociology and Director of Affiliated Work for the University of Chicago.

I am somewhat familiar with the tendency in modern thought to give primary place to feeling—with James' "Will to Believe," with Ward's social philosophy, with Shelley's and Browning's philosophy. "The Wisdom of Passion" fits in with their contributions. The main thesis of the book—that the soul forms its own forms by its choice—I can ascribe to—Prof. Oscar Lovell Triggs, University of Chicago.

Christs-Messiahs.

The Persistence of Erroneous Opinions.

It is strange what a hold our old teachings and mode of thought have upon us. No matter how often we may show up the errors of the past, and how much we may profess to ignore old obsolete ideas, they continually appear in our conversation. Somehow the ideas have been so suggested into our mental make-up, that they are a part and parcel of our very being.

The other night I attended a church, and heard the minister talk about "Christ" as if it was a real person. He told how "he came into the world," what "he came into the world for," etc., never once mentioning Jesus, of whom he was speaking, and as if there never had been but one Christ, and the material out of which he was made had been all exhausted in creating him, so there never could be another. This might be expected of him, because he was church-blind, but when we hear our Spiritualist lecturers repeating the same errors in their public lectures, as I have heard them ad nauseam during the past two camps that I attended, I can but wonder what Spiritualism has been doing the past fifty-five years, that our lecturers are not better taught. "Blind leaders of the blind," they should know whereof they speak, or not speak or mention the things upon which they display so much ignorance.

The word "christ" is an untranslated word, left untranslated for the purpose of supporting the idea of the trinity. In the original it signifies one who has been anointed, and no one is anointed before he is born. Hence Christ was not born, notwithstanding the passage occurring in the Protovangelon, and copied into Matthew at the close of the third century, which reads, "Now the birth of Jesus Christ was on this wise." (Matt. 1:18). The word Christ was seldom used with reference to Jesus during the time of his ministry, and when afterwards the word came into use it had equal reference to the spirit world, mediumship, and the class of people who following out the spirit of his teachings, lived in communion with the spirit world. "The disciples were first called Christians at Antioch," (Acts 11:26) some think as a reproach, but more likely it was a general term referring to those who were anointed by the spirit world.

There were numerous Christs before and after the time of Jesus. The first mentioned is Moses. The Hebrew of Moses is Messha, or Messhakh, and "Messhakh" is the Hebrew for "anointed." Afterward we read of Cyrus as a christ: "Thus saith the Lord to his anointed, (this Christ) to Cyrus." (Isaiah 45:1.) In the 105th Psalm Jacob and his descendants in Egypt were called "Christs," or Messiahs, (Comp. vs. 6, 12 and 15) "He suffered no man to do them any wrong; yea, he reproved kings for their sakes, saying, Touch not mine anointed (my "Christs"), and do my prophets no harm."

Not only was the meaning of the word as I have stated through Bible times, but it was so used in all profane history. It was uniformly applied to social leaders or labor leaders. Anciently most of the labor was performed by slaves captured in the wars, and sometimes a man would rise up among them as a leader to lead them out of bondage as Moses led the Egyptians, and usually he was required to give some evidence that he was called from heaven or the spirit world to do the work assigned to him. Moses had to go to the children of Israel with proofs of his Messiahship. They required a "sign from Jesus as evidence that he was a messiah, (Matt. 12:38; 16: 1; Mark 8: 11; Luke 11: 16), and Peter claims that he had these signs (Acts 2:22). These signs were also manifest with other social leaders.

Drimakos of Chios, an island seven miles off from Greece, some three or four hundred years before the Christian era, confirmed his Messiahship by visions and prophecies. Eunis of Sicily, also showed that he was called, by many signs and wonders. He was thought to be insane, and was frequently required to come in the presence of the nobles and ladies for the purpose of furnishing them amusement by his apparently extravagant claims and the strange things he did, among which was spitting fire around him and toward those who were disposed to laugh at his apparent antics. How few there are who know that the term "spit fire" originated in him. Sparticus, whose wife was also a sibyl, was another. (A full history of these messiahs is given in my work, the second edition of which will be printed soon, "Christianity As It Was Before the Apostasy.")

There was a time when Jesus was not Christ, notwithstanding the statement in Matt. 1:18, and Luke 2: 11, the first of which was copied with the two first chapters of Matthew from the Protovangelon, and the other of which was copied with the two first chapters of Luke from "The Gospel of the Infancy!" What a pity they had not both been copied from the same book! We should then have been relieved of the contradictions between them. In Acts 2:36, we are told that "God hath made that same Jesus....both Lord and Christ." Then there was a time when he was not Christ. But I will not pursue this point farther. It is to be regretted they do not know something about terms they are constantly using, and talk less to mortification and more to edification.

Another matter of discouragement is the proneness of our public teachers to speak of sin and wrong as if it was antagonistic to righteousness. The ancients were in the habit of personifying a deity who was at war with God, and whose business it was to bring darkness, sin, misery and everything of a malific nature to the world. And thus it was believed and is still believed at the present that evil is as much a positive influence in the world as good is. They do not realize that the light and warmth of day is caused by the sunshine and to them it would seem as necessary to have a sun of cold and darkness as it it is to have one of light and heat, thought it is never mentioned in that way. They do not realize that it is cold for want of more and better sunshine, and that it is always dark in the absence of the sun. Thus all wrongs are the absence of right, and in as much as no person is perfect, every person aberates more or less from perfection. If the two were antagonistic as has been supposed, then we should have perfect men and women and absolute goodness in everything, as well as absolute badness. The adulteration of a thing is only the bringing of wrong things together. Dirt is matter misplaced, and every weed is a plant when its botanical name is known.

In line with this idea, sickness is supposed to be a positive entity—a sort of thing which gets into a person and must be expelled in some way. Anciently it was something caused by a serpent that lurked in stygian pools and was slain by the spear of Horus or the arrows of Apollo. This was merely a personification of the mephitic gases which arose from stygian pools, and were afterward destroyed by the drying up of the pools by the rays of the sun. But how real they came to be in after times, and are yet, with too many. In a late number of The Progressive Thinker, I see something of that idea with one of its writers, Mr. Herbert A. Harrell. Before referring to this I wish to speak commendatory of some things he says.

He says: "The operator must be a man or woman of exceptionally clean habits of life (preferably a vegetarian), morally and physically clean, [and let me add, dressed in tidy, clean clothes]. He or she should not be a user of liquor, tobacco, morphine or any other drug."

But it is a statement preceding this to which I take exceptions: "There is one method of cure, 'by the laying on of hands,' as a means of eradicating—drawing out and throwing away—disease that I hold as helpful." Here disease is considered as a positive entity—a sort of personality, which has entered the organism, and may be drawn out or forced out and thrown away. Nearly all our medical fraternity are beclouded with a similar vagueness, concerning disease, hence their tremendous doses of drugs which are given as a "spell" obnoxious to the disease, as if the disease would become disgusted with the presence of such nasty stuff contiguous to it and take its departure where it should never again be annoyed by the presence of such disgusting nostrum. The idea of naming a disease and then throwing medicines against the name is only another relic brought up from fetichism.

He then proceeds to direct the magnetiser to use milk to wash his hands in while treating the patient that he may impart the disease to the milk, [I would think a piece of beefsteak would be as good, if disease is what he thinks it is, but it all convinces me that doctors like poets, are born, not made]. The directions he gives may be good for machine doctors, but the natural doctor will prefer to follow his intuitions. Our doctors usually experience little inconvenience in the treatment of cases. I never have any disease adhere to my person, and I should have no hesitation but for the prejudices of the people, in treating cholera, smallpox or even leprosy.

Disease is not an entity—a thing that gets into a person and renders him ill. I am unable to understand, after reading his description of diseases in his second paragraph, how he came to make the other statement. Perhaps it was a slip of the pen. When he states that they are "inharmony," he hits it exactly in my way of thinking. Disease, the last class he mentions—not accidental lesions from without—are disturbed relations, and therefore inharmonious relations. Our bodies are made from the gases about us—mostly oxygen, carbon and hydrogen, with a small percentage of nitrogen (a deadly poison), phosphorus and other gases. A different relation of the three principal gases will make sugar, and yet another goes into woody fibre, and still another into glycerine, etc. Now it is plain that if those gases within the system become wrongly related diseases will result. A single whiff of sewer gas will rush to the brain, decomposing the other gases, and bring on sickness and often death. The sewer gas is composed of the same ingredients only differently related. Much of our water at the springs and health resorts is composed in part of sulphureted hydrogen, similar to sewer gas, but is differently proportioned. Yet one eight-hundredth part of this deadly drug will kill a dog. The liberation of this and other gases depends largely on oxygen and Ozone. It is clear that any wrong relation of gases within the system creates all the inharmony that produces diseases. And the duty of the doctor then is to change the relation of the gases, removing the surplus of carbon if there is too much carbonic acid in the system or bringing other gases to unite with and change it. Sometimes medicines will do this, but the thing to know is what the medicine is and how little—not how much—to give. If you give too little, it will do no harm and may do some good. If you give too much it may so change the gases as to result in another disease. This is a matter that physicians know but little about as yet; hence their numerous—I might say, their inevitable—blunders.

But with the natural healer there is more or less affinity with those elements necessary to a change of the disease. There is an attraction between him or her and the patient, the patient being rendered negative for want of the elements which will change the gases of the system, and he being the reservoir through which they are drawn, and co-ordinated, or perhaps chemicalized. When he magnetizes paper and sends it to a patient, it operates the same for a limited time till it becomes negative to the patient. Then it does no good. The operation of paper is slow and uncertain.

Now am I taking too much space in showing how that suggestion, and other mental medicants operate. I believe I should. Then people can operate with more faith. Let me bring forward the emotions as an illustrations. We all know how the emotions may be wrought upon to affect not only our lives but even our health. In this city as I write is a mother to the young man Clark who was hung at Walla Walla for murder last week. It is thought she will not recover, all caused by the hanging of her boy for a crime that she did not believe him guilty of, and possibly he may have been innocent. Her emotions have prostrated her, but suppose it should turn out that she was mistaken—that her boy was not hanged, which of course is impossible, and her boy should come home to her, again alive and well, and innocent of the crime charged against him, in short that there had been a mistake as to his identity, and that they had hung another man supposed to be him, how quickly she would rally. Melancholy brings disease, and why? because it disorganizes the gases, and the liver becomes torpid, and refusing to perform its functions the system is filled with carbonic acid. On the other hand cheerful news fills the spirit with buoyancy, more oxygen and ozone is inhaled. Again: A mother becomes angry and nurses her babe and it goes into convulsions immediately, and possibly dies. She had poisoned her system by expelling certain gases and perhaps inhaling other gases. A steer is driven through the street, becomes very angry and nearly kills several people; he is finally slaughtered and sold out to the public and what he tried to the day before his poisoned flesh accomplishes the day he is eaten, and nobody knows what was the cause of the terrible sickness. The doctor looks wise and says nothing, but no vegetarian suffered from the poisoned meat. This being the case we easily learn how the gases of the system may be changed by a proper direction of the mental condition. The Christian Science people have a little success in curing people, by making them think they are not sick—that there is nothing of them to get sick, or that could get sick. It is not so healthy a manner to cure a person by making him or her believe that he or she is nothing as to let them know that they are everything, but it succeeds partially. The Mental Science or New Thought people teach them that they may be whatever they wish to be, that health hangs from the branches closest to them and all that is necessary is to seize on it and it is theirs. With their thought they to a certain extent direct the forces within which proceed to eliminate whatever is offensive and thus change the relation of the gases of the system.

HAVE THEY?

Why Should Not Animals Have Souls?

In my copy of The Progressive Thinker some one has continually asked, Have animals souls? Of course it is expected that I will answer, or it would not always be in my paper. The one of Sept. 10 I imagine it is asked a little imperiously.

Well, now, I'll try to answer just to keep from seeming rude, you know. Now, let me see—have we souls? It occurs to me that if we have no souls, all our spiritual literature is in vain. Yes, it must be so. Now, I can see that some one will say, "Well, if animals have souls, would you limit it to what is called the lower animals, or would you include the genus homo?" But some one else says, "When we get over into 'kingdum kum' may be the snakes will bite us, and bees may sting us—you know they don't here." This has always been a matter of serious consideration with me. I never was bitten by a snake, so, so far as those reptiles are concerned, I can't see much force in the argument. Bees? Well, I've not been stung by a bee for over fifty years; why, then, should so trifling a matter make me think I have no soul?

After the inferior race of animals have taken their respective fields in spirit life, am I to be debarred from a home there just because they are there? Have they taken homesteads on every tract? Have they filed pre-emption papers all over? Now, why can't I occupy some portion of the country adjacent to them? In short, since the argument that I possess a soul is just as good as that which proves that my dear dog has one, why can't I exist (if necessary) in a separate sphere from him? My argument then is: First, that the mere absence of congeniality between us here is no proof that we may not all enjoy the privileges of eternal progression.

As we see that nature has made a feeble attempt to separate us here—why may it not be still stronger—better and more complete as we advance to the second sphere?

Secondly. We as Spiritualists believe that theoretically the same laws which govern us here will govern us there. But do not all mosquitoes, snakes and toads, etc., share this earth with us? Then—even then—why not with slight advance the same there? Whoever has studied the Darwinian theory understands that most of the animal kingdom (to which we all belong) has eliminated in course of development many useless appendages. All spiritual teaching proves that the spirit the mosquito will still seek physical body. In time it will eliminate unnecessary features and characteristics. Need we suppose that when the snake escapes his physical form he will retain the characteristics of biting? That the mosquito will still seek physical blood? It seems to me all such vaporings are extremely silly.

SPIRIT RETURN.

Visions induced by spirits are common to all humanity. They come to the Methodist, the Universalist, the Unitarian and the Catholic the same as they do to the Spiritualist. Thus it is that the world be redeemed by the prevalence of spirit return, not only in Spiritualism but in all the churches. The following illustrates a case in point, a vision of a death, as related by the Inter-Ocean:

Was the mysterious disappearance—the possible death by foul means—of Alexander W. Forbes, chief engineer of the Universal Gas Company, forshadowed by a vision seen by his wife on the night before he left his home at 3042 Union avenue for the last time?

Mrs. Forbes, wife of the missing man, is firmly convinced that it was. The distinctness with which the dream impressed itself upon her mind, the fateful precision with which one event, following on the heels of the other, carried out the preliminary details of the prophecy and the foreboding mystery that surround Forbes' movements from the moment he left the door of his home have combined to sweep away the wife's natural hopefulness and satisfy her that her husband's disappearance and death were preordained.

Grim Vision Before Her Eyes.

Forbes left his residence the morning of August 24. He intended going to Ludington, Mich., to spend ten days at Bass Lake. The night before his departure his wife dreamed that she saw her husband dead at her feet. In her vision she saw him preparing for his excursion to Michigan. She remembered assisting him in the details of leaving; then came a period of darkness and silence, and in a moment she beheld his body cold in death.

When she awoke Mrs. Forbes begged her husband to remain home. He insisted, however, that he needed the rest, laughed at her fantastic fears, and, promising to return after ten days and take her and their children to Milwaukee, left the house. His relatives have never seen him alive since that time.

Forbes used no intoxicants, kept no bad company, and was economical and industrious in his habits. He was in the employ of the Universal Gas Company for seven years, and was considered one of the most trustworthy workmen in the establishment. His domestic relations were of a most amiable character.

Leaves With Money.

When Forbes left his home he had with him about $200. He intended taking a noon train which would bring him into Ludington at about 9 o'clock at night. From there he was to go six miles into the country to the farm at Bass Lake. Advices from Ludington are to the effect that Forbes never arrived there.

The owner of the farm says he never saw him. His mother at Rapid City, Manitoba, declares her son is not there. Taking these facts into consideration, Forbes' relatives have been forced to accept the theory that the man was murdered for his money and his body hidden away.

THE MEDIUMS' HOME SCHOOL.

It has been some time since we have given you and your readers a report of our work. This was not due to a decline of interest in the cause, but because the inspirational Word of Light from the angel side of life commissioned us some years ago with a special feature of the great work of Spiritualism, viz., to organize and conduct a circle-at-large for the development and cultivation of mediumship upon the basis of telepathic at-one-ment between the members.

The members of this circle, regardless of geographical distances that may intervene, enter into the Spiritual Silence with us and with each other at the regular session hours, and gradually learn to commune and communicate with each other and with their spirit friends.

To be successful the sitter must be patient and follow the instructions carefully, but with repeated sittings the essential spiritual and mediumistic unfoldment can be reached, and the great blessing of intercommunication between the two worlds, so-called, be realized.

The purposes of this circle are three-fold in character, comprising spiritual culture and mediumship, healing of the sick and afflicted, and to secure, through legitimate and honorable means, the temporal welfare of each, as far as possible—believing that poverty is a hindrance to the more complete realization of spiritual life and well-being on earth.

This special mission was given us in 1896; since then we have been busily engaged in the development of its features, and have held the regular sessions with our members faithfully and promptly, as the light from above directed. It is with pleasure that we are able to state that this circle now has members in nearly every state in the Union, also in Canada, and nearly all report satisfactory progress in their development.

In time, however, we found a growing demand for a home and school, where those, desiring a more systematic and speedy unfoldment of their gifts and spiritual powers, might receive it in special personal sittings with us.

To meet this demand we proceeded, under instruction of our guides, to provide suitable accommodations, with the happy result that a commodious and attractive two-story building has been erected, ten rooms of which are furnished and ready for occupancy, while others can be fitted up as needed.

We now extend a cordial welcome to all seekers after spiritual knowledge and a more complete unfoldment of the highest and best gifts attainable by each.

THE POLICY OF CONSTANTINE.

A Critical, Comprehensive Reflection Thereon.

It is yet a question not well settled whether Constantine had any real religious convictions, Christian or Pagan. The fiction of the miraculous cross in the heavens to account for his conversion was invented by Eusebius of Cesarea. The story of Zosimus, that Christianity offered greater solace to his deep remorse for the murders of his kinsmen, is entitled to as little creditability.

Gibbon has well said of Constantine that "the ecclesiastical institutions of his reign are still connected, by an indissoluble chain, with the opinions, the passions, and the interests, of the present generation."

Edicts of great severity towards the Christians had marked the later years of the reign of Diocletian, and upon his abdication in 305, a wild scramble followed for the sovereignty of the empire. No less than six persons at one time, each of them with some appearance of authority, was asserting his claims to the regal power. Not till 324, in fact, did Constantine become the sole ruler.

Above all else, he aspired to be an emperor, and to make secure the permanence of his power. Indifferent as Elizabeth to the rival claims of Catholics and Protestants, Constantine was satisfied with paganism if through it the pathway to greater glory lay. If Christianity was the footstool to a more exalted throne, that was acceptable. If a neutral position had been possible, it is probable that would have been more to his liking. He was not unmindful of the power of religious institutions over his subjects, nor of their assistance in the mastery of them. Not inconsistent with this view of the character of Constantine are his edicts granting to the Christian clergy privileges equal to those enjoyed by pagan priests. Existing circumstances made a policy of acquiescence and indifference impossible. The Christians must be reckoned with as allies or foes. Disaffection among the Christian subjects of his rivals opened the way for Constantine to strengthen himself by espousing their cause. He seized the opportunity and set up Christianity as the religion of the empire. He loaded the church with privileges, and exempted the churches from municipal taxation. The founding of the royal palace upon the Bosphorus made Constantinople the successful rival politically, of Rome, and at the same time magnified the power of the Roman bishop, leading the way eventually to the permanent establishment of the Holy City as the center of the Christian church.

For nearly forty years of his life, Constantine had observed the established religion. His medals and coins carried the impress of Jupiter and Apollo. The altars of Apollo had been crowned with his offerings. The deity of the sun was the guide and protector of the empire. The day of the sun was the most popular festival with the mass of his people. Could he secure the influence and loyal support of the Christian faction by adopting their belief, and conciliate the pagans by the absorption of the sacred day of Apollo into the Christian observances, it would not fail to be a master stroke for the security and permanence of his reign. It became the Sunday of the Christian church. The edict of Constantine enjoins that judges, city people and tradesmen shall observe the day. Dwellers in the country are especially exempt from its requirements. Full liberty is granted to till the fields. It is called the "venerable day of the Sun." There is no allusion to the Jewish Sabbath law, no reference to the resurrection.

In this way was established the first Sunday law, in which all modern enactments have their origin. It is true, as we know from the writings of Justin Martyr, that before this, meetings had sometimes been held on the day of the Sun, at which there were readings from the prophets and writings of the apostles. It is even possible that the alleged resurrection upon that day had added to its popularity with Christian subjects of the empire.

It is significant, however, that Justin Martyr, as in the edict of the emperor, speaks of it as "the day of the Sun." Of the political wisdom of the policy of Constantine in adopting it, there can be no question. His successful overthrow of all the rival factions which stood in his way to supremacy, vindicate his judgment. That he had the remotest idea that he was establishing a holy day to be adopted in the enactments of unborn civilizations for many centuries to come, is improbable.

Yet another event in the reign of Constantine is of even greater significance, and has been marked with still greater results in its influence upon the life and thought of the people of later times. The weight of suffrage of emperors and princes, says Gibbon, "sometimes inclined the ecclesiastical balance and the prerogatives of the King of Heaven were settled, or changed, or modified, in the cabinet of an earthly monarch."

Alice Gardner, the biographer of Julian, says there is no doubt the influence of the empire was strongly felt at the Council of Nicaea. It is most unlikely that the emperor Constantine, whose whole life had been spent largely in the turmoil of camp and battle, had any conception of the metaphysical questions involved in the fierce contentions of the stubborn antagonists at the celebrated council.

Whether the Son was of one substance with the Father, whether the Logos was a person or an attribute, of Consubstantialism or Homoousion, what cared the conqueror, if he could make their contentions serviceable to him in solidifying his own power or removing obstructions from his pathway? But when the struggle between the factions assumed dangerous proportions and threatened the peace of the empire the policy of Canstantine was to effect an agreement or compromise. Failing in this, the great council was summoned. The strength developed by the followers of Athanasius at the council was greater than the emperor had anticipated. Constantine's own associations had given some reason to think that he was favorably inclined to the opposite party.

Eusebius of Nicomedia, the leader of the Arians, Eusebius of Cesarea, Constantine's eulogist and biographer, and Arian himself, all leaders of the opposition, were friends of the emperor. It soon became apparent that a peaceful settlement was impossible, that it was a fight to the finish. The radical Athanasians outnumbered extremists of the Arians and those of moderate views together. The supremacy of Constantine must be maintained at all hazards. The Athanasians were aggressive and triumphant. The weaker party fell with the connivance and support of the emperor. The equality of substance of Father and Son was established, proclaimed, and the foundation laid for the doctrine of the trinity, which, perfected later under Theodosius, became the corner stone of the orthodox Christian creed in the Greek, Roman and Protestant divisions.

The writings of Arian were condemned to the flames. Capital punishment was decreed for those with whom any of them were found. The exigencies of the situation made it impossible for Constantine to shield openly his friends. Arius went into exile. Eusebius of Cesarea meekly subscribed to the creed. Eusebius of Nicomedia hesitated and wavered and so postponed for a few months his own exile and disgrace. Whether on the part of Constantine, the proscription of the Arian leaders was any thing but a farce is questionable.

Apparently he acquiesced with the decision of the stronger faction whose antagonism most threatened the imperial power. It is certain, however, that intriguing for the return of Arius and other exiled leaders was soon begun with the connivance and assistance of Constantine. Effort was made to reinstate them in their high positions in the church.

Notwithstanding the continued opposition of Athanasius to the scheme, Arius was brought back from banishment. Arrangements were made for his ceremonial restoration and a day fixed for the event, but before it was accomplished, Arius was dead, by rupture of the bowels, a miracle, the orthodox said, by poison, perchance, some believed. Whatever may have been the motive which led Constantine to the later assistance of Arius, the work of Nice remained.

Athanasius, to whose aggressiveness and persistency we are indebted for the most vital point of Christian orthodoxy, was sent into banishment by the Christian emperor whose civil authority had established throughout the empire the dogma of his exile. The deity of the Son was fixed in the faith, and finally the emperor received the rite of baptism from the hands of the heretical bishop of Nicomedia who had led the fight against it and gone into exile rather than accept it.

The year of the council was polluted by the emperor's murder of his eldest son. He had murdered his nephew and father-in-law. He threw the princes of the conquered Alemanni to the wild beasts at Treves for the sport of the multitude, yet surely it cannot be said that he was the worst of the Roman emperors, though he by no means measured up to the greatness of the best of them. Nevertheless, he did what none of the rest of them were able to do; he fixed a creed which has survived him more than fifteen centuries, and which stands to-day as the accepted foundation stone in the Christian church of the twentieth century.

NOTES FROM G. H. BROOKS.

An Account of Field Work, Home Work and Travel.

It has been a long time since I have sent any communication to the spiritual press, also a long period since I have been out in the field at work, and no doubt more than one has wondered where I was, and why this silence. I can very easily explain, and assure the friends that I have been more than busy along other lines.

On my return home in the spring, from my season's work, I found that my presence at home was of great importance, that wife was in no condition for me to be away; so I made up my mind to remain with wife and baby and do what I could to help in the care of the home. Wife's general health is very good, but she lacks in strength; so I began my labors at home, working with a will to bear my share of the burden. I was obliged to remain at home all summer; I realized that it was far from wisdom on my part to leave home at all. I was in hope that during the summer wife would gain in strength so I could feel all would be well with her when I began my labors in the fall. I did all in my power to bring about that condition, but all to no avail. We, at last made up our minds that the best thing for her to do would be to go to Los Angeles and spend the winter season there, that she was in great need of an entire change; so on July 28 we started, bag and baggage, baby and all, for California, expecting to arrive there on the first of August; but, owing to wash-outs, we felt it was best to stop off for a couple of days, which we did at Winslow, Arizona, arriving at last in Los Angeles on Friday, August 5. We were glad to reach the journey's end; while we were worn out, yet we were thankful to reach there in safety. Wife has a sister living there, and will remain until spring.

I got out some among the friends, but was unable to go much. I spoke the third Sunday in August for the Truth Seekers' Society. (I think I am right in the name). I met some of the old-time workers, as well as the new ones. I met Mrs. Weeks Wright, who has not changed any that I can see, and who is doing a work on the coast that will endure. Mrs. Weeks Wright will be remembered by many in Chicago, where she used to live and has many friends. Mr. and Mrs. Frank Randall are among the few old-time workers. Mrs. Randall will be remembered by many in Kansas City, Mo. They are now living in the country and are more than busy.

The Truth Seekers' Society is well attended; they hold conference meeting in the morning and a lecture in the evening by some speaker. Mrs. Sheehan-Horman is in Los Angeles for the present and is serving them now. She has changed but little. Mrs. Horman is to come East soon. There are numerous other meetings in that city, but I was unable to visit them, and hence can say nothing of their work.

I should have enjoyed a longer visit in Los Angeles, but it was simply out of the question; other duties were calling me, and I had to hasten away. So, on the 16th of August I bade wife, baby, sister and her daughter good-bye, feeling as I left them that I was leaving just that much of my life behind, yet realizing or trusting it was all for the best, and while great distance (as far as material distance is concerned) would separate us, yet souls that are in attune can commune, that space is annihilated.

Feeling all was for good, trusting in the powers that be, I bade them good-bye and started home. We went west by the Santa Fe railway, but I returned by the Northern Pacific. The Santa Fe gives good service and does all that is possible for its patrons, and showed us many courtesies. The Northern Pacific is a fine route; the scenery is grand beyond description, though the finest we passed in the night; but there is plenty on the way to compensate one. The service is fine, and they do all they can for the comfort of the travelers. It is much farther around that way, yet it pays one for the time spent, and I shall always remember my trip with pleasure, and if you are going to California, and can, I would advise a trip one way over the Northern Pacific. Ere you reach Portland, Oregon., you must go up the coast line to San Francisco, then from 'Frisco to Portland, both lines under the control of Southern Pacific, and the scenery from start to finish is beyond description. And as I realize all that I have seen and heard, I feel how truly we are dependent upon the railroads of our country, how much they have done to build up the country, to extend the influence of man and help to make us what we are. Every care is taken, and one feels about as safe in the Pullman tourist car as one does at home.

unanswered. But I assure one and all that this has been a busy summer for me. I have had no time for letter-writing, only in a limited degree, and I have letters received in April that yet remain unanswered. But I assure one and all that it is not because that I so desired, but because my duties lay in other directions.

I arrived home on the 26th day of August, having been gone a little less than a month, and most of that time in constant travel. I should like to speak of my experience in San Francisco, where I stopped for one day, as well as at Portland, where I was for a few hours; but I feel it would tire the reader, so spare you. I now think of returning to the coast in the spring, starting in March, though I am undecided what I shall do. But will say this, if there are places along the line of the Southern Pacific or the southern route that would like me to stop off and hold meetings for a while, and will correspond with me, we will try and make arrangements. If the friends desire me there, I will try and serve them. I feel the Northern Pacific would be too cold. I have January, 1905, open, as well as March and April; also, will make arrangements for camp work for the coming season.

There is much more that I would like to say, but time prevents. But will say, the hope of the world lies in the teachings of Spiritualism, for as the world grows it grows up to the high ideals contained in our great philosophy.

I am now located in Baltimore, Md., where I am to remain for four months, and where all mail will please be directed to 811 North Fremont avenue.

"Hoping that this book will serve to lead the people out of the wilderness of doubt and despair, and that when Spiritualism shall have wrested the Bible from its 'sanctified' enemies, it will not 'spike' it, but will use it to better down the walls of Christian superstition and ignorance, I send it out on its errand of enlightenment with the humble prayer that it will prove a divine benediction to every reader."

Not Atheists.

No person with greater ability, more faithful to duty, or creditable to his profession, occupies the Christian pulpit, than does Rev. Minot J. Savage; and there is no one whose utterances are read with greater satisfaction, or leave a more profound and lasting impression on his auditors. We find in a late published discourse the following views of his wherein he told who were not Atheists. He said:

"What is the essence of the idea of God, the denial of which constitutes real Atheism? In other words, what must a man deny to be an Atheist in the bad sense of that word? Is it possible he may deny the Buddhist god, or the Chinese god, or the Catholic god, or even your God and my God, and all the time be doing it in the interest of what he regards a higher and better ideal. But the ultimate reality to which the name of 'God' really belongs is simply this—a power outside of us, and above us, by whose laws we are bound, in whose laws is life, in disobedience to whose laws is death. That is, any man who recognizes a law in him, and without him, which binds him under penalty to certain courses of action called right, such a man believes in the essential idea that underlies the word 'God.' Whatever else he doubts—whether personality, or consciousness, or love—so long as he believes in law, in obligation, in penalty, he believes in God. His God may not be so good, so loving, so hope-inspiring as mine; but still such a man is no Atheist."

More than once in these columns we have declared: "There are no Atheists in fact, for all believe the world, and within it are governed by fixed and changeless law. That law implies a law giver. Even if inherent in matter it is nevertheless existent, and no power or combination of forces can thwart its rule. It matters not by what name it is known, it is self-existent and eternal.

Contrast the workings of this God of Nature with the Jewish Jahwah, incorrectly rendered Jehovah by our English translators of the Bible:

"Thus saith the Lord: About midnight will I go out into the midst of Egypt. And all the first-born in the land of Egypt shall die, from the first born of Pharaoh that sitteth upon his throne, even unto the first-born of the maid-servant that is behind the mill; and all the first-born of beast."—Exodus 11: 4, 5.

That was only a theist, cruel and devilish. Passing to Ex. 12: 29 and that more than brutal threat was executed:

"And it came to pass, that at midnight the Lord smote all the first-born in the land of Egypt, from the first-born of Pharaoh that sat on his throne, unto the first-born of the captive that was in the dungeon; and all the first-born of cattle."

Those who repudiate such a savage and sanguinary god, acting the part of a midnight assassin, prompting his worshipers to imitate his slaughtering propensities, have been denounced as Atheists, without just cause. We worship no fiend, falsely called Lord, or God, but have a very exalted conception of that "Spirit of Nature! all-sufficing Power!

Necessity, the Mother of the world!
Who, unlike the God of creedal error,
Requir'st no prayers or praises. The caprice
Of man's weak will belongs no more to him
Than do the changeful passions of his breast
To his unvarying harmony. * * *
* * * All that the wide world contains
Are but his passive instruments, and he
Regard'st them all with an impartial eye,
Whose joy or pain his nature cannot feel,
Because he has not human sense,
Because he has not human mind."

Pull Him Off His Perch.

The Humanitarian Review, replying to a correspondent who was apologizing for the questionable practice of some clergymen who traffic in stocks, and other semi-gambling pursuits to enlarge their purses, expressed our view to the letter when it said:

Ah, knock him off, any way to prevent his continuing to pose as an exemplar for others to copy after.

It is astonishing what a penchant certain emotional, impressible religionists have for miracles and prayer as the explanation of cures and various escapes from impending dangers.

According to an Inter-Ocean special, there is a new church in New Jersey, "The Church of the First Born." What the name implies, we don't pretend to know. The account reads:

Jersey City, N. J., Sept. 16.—Lively incidents as well as the most astounding testimony marked to-day's session of the faith curists ("The Church of the First Born") here. Men told how they had been saved from death in a hundred forms by prayer; women related that their ills had vanished, and a child said she had been cured of toothache on the way to that very meeting. The most sensational incident occurred when Editor Anna Smith of the Dawn of Day, who is a woman of 80, ended her testimony of the efficacy of prayer by dancing a jig.

"Through praying to God," said Miss Smith, "I never had a sick day in my life, and to prove how well I am I will show you what I can do."

Here the old lady leaped off the high platform like a schoolboy, ran around the church with the agility of a race horse, made a flying jump back to the platform, and then executed a jig that would bring her $30 a week in the vaudeville. Great applause followed her performance.

A little girl arose and said that while on the way to the church she had such an "awful" toothache that she changed her course and started for the dentist's.

"On the way I prayed, and prayer beat the dentist by two minutes," she said.

A doctor, aged 60, from Philadelphia, said he had practiced medicine for thirty years until he found that it was a humbug and fraud and stopped it. Now he prescribes prayer.

Another man said he had been drowning in the surf at Atlantic City when he came to the surface for the last time and shouted to God to save him.

"A huge wave caught me," he concluded, "and threw me safely on the beach."

A man from the west told how he had been out on the prairie with a crippled horse and with a storm approaching.

"The old nag wouldn't move," he explained, "and I thought it was all off with me. The storm was getting nearer and I could see that it had water spouts sticking down out of it, and a few funnels like cyclones. It was within a few hundred yards of me when I suddenly said: 'Oh, God, save me!' And that storm instantly veered off to the south, and the horse pricked up his ears and started off on such a lively trot that I got to the next settlement in good time.'"

"Not a drop of medicine has entered my home in thirteen years," said Charles Smith, of Hoboken. "And during all that time God has been my physician. I had four ailments, among which were dyspepsia and bronchial trouble. I was cured by prayer. My wife had heart disease, my daughter had a fractured arm, and my boy here had scarlet fever. All were cured by faith."

One woman with tears streaming down her cheeks, told how prayer had cured her of a tumor. During her recital some of those present fairly danced with joy and the intensity of the excitement under which they labored.

A young woman declared that for five years she had desired to play by ear on the piano, and that in answer to prayer God gave the power desired.

Toward the close of the service a man testified that he was in a circus one time before he had learned that such things were for Satan's imps. During the show a lion broke loose and the crowd ran out of the tent. He tripped over something that was in the road and fell in the path of the beast.

"I thought of Daniel," he said, "and I prayed. I was delivered and am here to-night to praise God for it."

Spiritualism and suggestion will account for thousands of cures and other happenings, without resorting to "God" and miracle for an explanation.

Prayer for cure of human ailments is in itself the nature of "auto-suggestion"—self-suggestion when offered by oneself, and when offered by another it possesses the properties of "suggestion" to the mind of the ailing one.

The cyclonic storm would probably have veered just the same if no prayer to God had been uttered, and just so of the lively trot of the old nag. Balky horses are very notional, and take very sudden fits and starts—when they will they will, and when they won't they won't, and there is nothing miraculous about their going, or not going.

Neither is it anything miraculous that a woman of 80 should dance a jig, a Virginia reel a Kentucky hoe-down, or even a "juba dis and juba dat, juba all de 'possum fat," etc., turn a handspring or a somersault, or even do as David did when he "danced before the Lord," on a certain occasion. (Readers who are curious can consult II. Samuel, chapter 6.)

When people are in a state of mind induced by certain forms of emotion-stirring belief, they are ready to credit any prayed-for happening as the result of prayer, wrought by the direct hand of God. Anything they pray for—if it comes, it is God's answer to their prayer. This seems to be the state of mind of "The Church of the First Born."

The spectacle of an old lady dancing a jig was no doubt highly edifying and very inspiring and there is no wonder that it evoked "great applause" from the "First Born" beholders.

When next "Editor Anna" dances a religious jig, may we be there to see, and applaud.

But—no more, lest we make sport of sacred things.

The Christian Educator.

That awfully wicked paper, The Christian Educator and God's Defender, of Great Bend, Kansas, asserts that "God's creators make a great mistake in not creating a Mrs. God."

The C. E. and G. D. is the organ and exponent of The Church of Humanity. Its title is supposed to indicate its work—to educate Christians into a knowledge of the "truths" accepted by the Church of Humanity, which does not believe there is a God, or any truth in Christian dogmas.

As the C. E. and G. D. is apparently incorrigibly "infidel," we shall turn it over to Brother J. S. Loveland and A. H. Nicholas.

But really, is it not within the bounds of probability that a "Mrs. God," if She had the running of things, would be a vast improvement upon the Jewish Jehovah as He is set forth in the Old Testament account? However "jealous" she might become, she would not be likely to manifest such a penchant for cruelty, blood and slaughter. Hence, after all, there may be somewhat in the C. E. and G. D.'s suggestion worth thinking about.

An Exceedingly Gullible Mortal.

The Blade of Chicago, relates a peculiar case, illustrating the gullibility of certain persons. Parallel cases can be found where fake clairvoyants have led astray those who were "itching" to get rich. It appears that, unsuccessful in his attempts to raise a wonderful black hen which would lay magic silver dollars, Frank Gidumsky, 48 West Randolph street, Chicago, now seeks reimbursement for more than a year's expenditure of time, health, and money from the three men who attempted to instruct him in supernatural poultry raising.

Until very recently Gidumsky had dreams of possessing a fowl more wonderful than the goose which laid the golden eggs and more valuable than the precious Aladdin's lamp. His rise to wealth would be easy and rapid. Not only would he receive one or more dollars daily, according to the hen's laying proclivities, but the dollars were to have the magic charm that no matter where or how often he spent them they would mysteriously return to him.

The only reason Gidumsky is not now a millionaire, with a black feathered United States mint in his back yard chicken coop, is because he has never been able to raise the necessary black hen.

The directions which Gidumsky says he followed in the hopes of securing a supply of magic dollars are elaborate. First he was to secure an egg laid by any ordinary barnyard black hen.

This egg Gidumsky was to put under his arm and keep it there for nine days and nights. During that period he must under no circumstances wash or eat. If he became very hungry, it was permissible to drink water.

At the expiration of nine days and night a black hen would come out of the egg. It was scheduled to hatch while he was asleep. Then, standing on the foot of the bed, it would say to him, "What is your wish, Gidumsky?"

At this critical moment Gidumsky was supposed to tender the newly hatched black hen a dollar, which was conveniently under his pillow in anticipation of the happy event. The hen would take his dollar and immediately lay a magic silver dollar. Having thus been started on a diet of dollars the black hen would furnish unending streams of magic coins.

The direction for raising the new poultry are set forth in the complaint filed in Justice Wolff's court. Gidumsky went without washing, eating, and even sleeping for nine days on repeated occasions, but never raised a magic hen. He now believes that he was humbugged.

Romanism and Free Thought.

The animus of Romanism toward freedom of thought is well illustrated by the news from Rome, in which city, on Sept. 20, with more than 5,000 delegates present, the congress of free thinkers assembled in the Roman college founded by Pope Gregory XIII. Ten of the delegates were from America, among them being Dr. Moncure D. Conway of New York, Dr. J. B. Wilson of Cincinnati and M. M. Mangasarian of Chicago.

Dr. Henry Maudsley was appointed honorary president for England, Professor Haeckel for Germany, Professor Berthelot for France, Professor Salmeron for Spain and Professor Ardigo Lombroso for Italy.

Professor Haeckel of Jena University, proposed a message to Premier Combes of France, congratulating him upon his struggle for the right of human thought against theocratic oppression, and also for what he has accomplished for the separation of church and state.

Professor Sergi presided and delivered an address, which was warmly applauded, glorifying the triumphs of science over superstition. He hailed the fall of temporal power, condemned Catholicism as prehistoric and protested against war, ending with advocating an indissoluble alliance of nations and the universal brotherhood of the peoples.

The animus of the adherents of the Romish church is shown by the further report that bitter protests were heard on every side against the assembling there, on the anniversary of the fall of the temporal power of the popes, of the congress of freethinkers. In the Osservatore Romano, the organ of the vatican, the following notice appeared: "Innumerable telegrams have reached the pope from all classes of people in Italy protesting against the satanic congress of freethinkers which, under the auspices of FreeMasonry, was inaugurated to-day in Rome, the center of the Catholic faith."

Romanism is the same everywhere, and if the church could have its will and way, neither at Rome nor anywhere else would freedom of thought be permitted.

There seems no end to the efforts of bigots to devise some method to induce the government to acknowledge Sunday as a holy day. Ever since the Republic was founded they have brought the influence of the church to their aid, and have made the postoffice system the target for attack. Postoffices must be closed. Unless this is done the souls of the employes must answer in hell for the violation of God's command. Then the transportation of the mails on Sunday must be abandoned. They concentrated all their energies in 1832 on this project, but failed. Nearly every year since some new expedient has been resorted to, hoping to win success. The latest device in this direction comes from a Rev. O. W. High, of Upland, Indiana. He inscribes on the corner of his envelopes a request that his mail shall not be handled on Sunday.

The poor simpleton was so ignorant of the duties of the mail service as to suppose the thousands of tons of mail would be overhauled each Saturday evening, to find his letter and abstract it from the mass, so it should not be defiled by being carried on Sunday.

Will the churchmen and clergy never learn that instead of improving public morals by closing great fairs, and suspending business of all kinds, save preaching and attending church, on Sunday, they absolutely pander to vice? Who in all the world but saloonists and proprietors of houses of ill-repute in St. Louis are benefited by closing the gates of the national exposition in that city on Sunday? It was and is an outrage on public decency to close the avenues of education to the people there, and throw wide open the flood-gates of vice. Congress was pandering for the church vote when it engrafted such a provision as the condition of its appropriation. No one objects to rest days in any department of government service, but who better than the laborer knows when that rest is needed and shall be taken?

THE N. S. CONVENTION.

To the Editor:—Kindly give space in your valued journal for the following important announcement concerning the place of meeting of the N. S. A. convention to be held in St. Louis, Oct. 18, 19, 20 and 21.

The committee of the World's Fair Congresses assigned to this association—as to others—the music hall of the great Coliseum, for convention purposes, and we had every reason to suppose all was in readiness for our occupancy. At this late day comes the information that Music Hall has been rented for the season to a musical company, and that another hall has been allotted to the convention societies. Investigation shows that the second hall is not adequate for our purpose—its acoustic properties are not good, and as the musical company aforesaid gives a musical extravaganza day and evening its sounds are sufficient to completely drown the voices of our speakers and delegates. Hence the N. S. A. official board has decided that the convention be held at the Spiritual Temple in St. Louis, 3015 Pine street, where the reception of Monday, Oct. 17, at 8 p. m., will also be held. We regret exceedingly the necessity of changing location of meetings at this late day, but are so obliged to do in justice to our people. Pine Street Temple is reached from Union Station as follows: Take 18th street car to Olive, transfer west and ride to 20th street, walk one block south; or, take Laclede car and ride to 30th or Garrison, and walk two blocks north.

All delegates and other friends who intend to be in St. Louis during the time of convention, are requested to arrange their plans for visiting the Fair or sight-seeing, so as to enable them to attend all sessions of the convention—day and evening. Important business is sure to come up at all day sessions, while the evening meetings will be more attractive to Spiritualists and investigators, by the able and brilliant talent we shall present. All are cordially invited. Come one and all and help to make this the grandest convocation of Spiritualists the world has ever known.

SEEN AND HEARD.

The Incentive of Spiritualism.

It has been said that while the various religions, especially Christianity, have incentives spurring man to higher moral achievements, Spiritualism has nothing to offer. There could be no statement more erroneous.

By presenting the most exalted motives, it encourages the loftiest aspirations; prompts to highest endeavor, and inculcates self-reliance. It frees man from the bondage of authority of creeds, and demands that he rely on the authority of truth, interpreted by reason.

The results of an intelligent acceptance of Spiritualism are nobility, purity and magnanimity of life; all embracing charity and philanthropy; constant and earnest endeavor to actualize an ideal, perfect life in this world as the best preparation for the next; living to live, not living to die; and for the Religion of Pain, which has held mankind in thrall, the substitution of the Religion of Joy. Such is the doctrine of Spiritualism.

The terrestrial cannot inherit eternal life, which is the inheritance of the celestial. Death is the severance of the silver cord which unites the celestial with the terrestial, or physical body. The latter returns to mother earth, the former receives the shining robes of an angel. Hence, death works no change except in condition. The individuality is no more affected than by stepping from one room to another, or by casting off worn garments. Immortality is our birthright.

A materialist said that we are traveling between two bleak and barren promontories, the past and the future. In the light of Spiritualism the headlands of the past are crowned with blessed memories, and the future, instead of a bleak and barren headland, toward which we drift in tears, rises above the shadows of this life and on the purple slopes we behold our fathers, our mothers, our wives, our husbands, our children, our friends who left us in the night of years, all there with garments of light, extending their arms to welcome us!

Spiritualism presses to the quivering lips of grief this cup of precious nectar distilled by the angels of heaven.

The great and ever-enduring lesson taught by this view of life here and hereafter, is that the present is the shadow of future realities. We are spirits to-day, and shall be the same to-morrow after this body has fallen from us. We have already begun the infinite journey and we are not to wait until death to begin the formation of character.

When death comes, the dross of this life will fall from us; its objects, its vain ambitions; estates, bonds and title deeds, fall as ashes, and the spirit stands alone, holding fast the treasures of such actions as had relation to its immortal life. Never was wiser command given than to lay up your treasures above.

A Remarkable Summary.

A rare gem of logical statements and conclusions is the following from a tract by George A. Bacon, of Washington, D. C., entitled "Attitude of Scientific Men Toward the Spiritual Phenomena." He says:

"The spiritual hypothesis must be true:

Because the facts are the experience of human beings and the outcome of our common nature;

Because these experiences have been co-existent with humanity on earth;

Because they are verified by human tradition and history;

Because they are supported by universal analogy;

Because they are in harmony with man's highest reason;

Because they are responsive to the universal aspiration of the human heart;

Because they are affirmed by our intuitions;

Because they are in accordance with universal law;

Because God Almighty, Omnipotent Mind, or Universal Law, whichever you will, never conditioned the occurrence of these fundamental, personal facts, as expressions of man's mental, moral and spiritual nature, without completely supplying their corresponding requirements."

Every one of these propositions might readily be expanded into a chapter, of which they are the condensed conclusion.

Physical Culture.

Several books have been published on physical culture, which give in minute detail just the kind of motions and genuflexions which must be gone through with in order to perfect the physical form. The arms must be swung just so, and the legs kicked just so, and the breath taken in prescribed form. This may be very well for those who have nothing else to do, but it seems a pity as long as there is so much to do in this world, honest, productive work, to have so much good strength wasted in useless exercise. Baseball, football, rowing, and swinging dumb-bells, are strenuous exercise and yet why they are superior to manual work, is mainly told by their not being labeled with that plebeian name.

The girls who are able to run miles on miles at tennis, or golf, swing on a trapeze, or vault over a bar, are usually too weak to sweep a floor or wash dishes. The big boy home from college, at the foot of his class and head of athletics, finds the business of his father fatiguing.

Indian clubs an' such,
Reaches for her toes ten times,
An' each time makes 'em touch;
Raises up her arms an'
Sweeps 'em all around,
Kicks her heels three times without Ever touchin' the ground.

Ma takes physical culture
In the' washing tub—
Gets the clo's and soaks 'em down,
And then begins to rub;
Makes ten thousand motions
Up and down that way—
She gets lots o' exercise
On a washin' day.

Sis goes to the gym, an'
Travels on the rings,
An' she takes a big, deep breath,
An' then she yells an' sings—
Says it's good for weakness
In the lungs, an' say!
Tennis is her hardest work—
Ought to see her play!

Ma she washes dishes,
An' she sweeps the floor,
An' she scrubs the marble steps
Clear up to the door;
An' then she chops the kindlin'
When her work is through—
Has to do it, 'cause Pa, he's Calisthenic, too!

Both take physical culture,
But I will tell you this:
There's lots o' difference 'tween the kind
My Ma takes, and Sis.

Falsehood Hard to Kill.

Or shall we say ignorance difficult to educate; darkness slow to dispel? Belief in witchcraft, supposed to have passed a century ago with the horrible beliefs of the dark ages, appears to be yet held by those high in the Catholic church. Monsignor Lavelle, rector of St. Patrick's Cathedral, commenting on a statement of Prof. Stetson of Kalamazoo College, that witchcraft and demon possession are no myths, but realities, and sickness is often the result of such obsession, said:

"There is no doubt about the fact of diabolical obsession in olden times. The Bible is authority for their occurrence. Whether there are any instances at present I do not know. None has ever come to my personal notice. But that the church recognizes the possibility is evidenced by the rules prescribed for exorcisms."

If this is true a thousand years of research and study have been wasted, and the witch doctor and medicine man, with charms and invocations are of more value in curing the disease than all the knowledge in the world! And sad it is that many Spiritualists, instead of Spiritualists, are rather demonists.

Let us look to the light, not back into the darkness. Let us go on, and not return to the dogmas of ancient times.

If Spiritualism should follow the lead of these obsessionists and demonists, it would end in the fog of the most blighting superstition, and witchcraft would be revived. Already there are advertisements of those wonderfully endowed to drive away evil influences and unmannerly spirits! And this in the dawn of the 20th century! And it is thought strange the world casts a sneer at Spiritualism!

If its supporters make it a system of demonology, who is to blame?

Spirit Music a Reality.

A Detailed Account of Spirit Music Heard at New Canton, Ill., and Which, It is Expected, Will Be Produced in Public Sometime in the Future—An Important Point as to Materialization.

To the Editor:—Since you have printed my letter, in answer to your inquiry, I must ask you to make a correction regarding the spirit music. One evening, five years ago this coming October, we were told that on Thursday evening we would be surprised at what would occur. We asked what it would be, and was told that we would hear music.

On that evening we two, with my mother, sat down by a small table, and was not only surprised, but almost speechless to hear music such as we never heard before, that was played for more than an hour. After we came from the room in which we heard it, we could hardly believe that we did, and went back the second time and heard it as long as the first.

It was not like a piano, and there was a piano in the house then and is still, but this music was in another room from where the piano stands.

We have sat in the room where the piano is to see if it could be used, and have never heard a sound. The spirits say, the music is made to reach us through vibrations, the same way in which all sounds are conveyed through space, and that to play on our instruments here would be more difficult than we can conceive.

For three years we have studied these manifestations under spirit guidance, and no one but my mother has ever been able to get near a meeting in this time. At first we were besieged by curiosity seekers, and for our benefit it seems, we were allowed to sit a time or two with them, and now at this time nothing but spirit power could induce us to sit with them.

We heard the music two months before we heard voices. We can hear them at any time they say we will, not at any time we say.

Mr. Ward hears clairaudiently, and has many years. At times when we hear music my mother goes into the different rooms in the house, and she says that it is as distinct in one room as another, and just as loud as in the room we sit in.

One very cold night a couple of years ago we were sitting in the twilight with my brother as company, when I suggested that we should be quiet and see if we could hear the music. Not many minutes went by until we heard a noise in the room adjoining the one we were in, and the music began and seemingly came through the closed door, instrument and all and played around the stove a few times, went back through the door, and died away in the other room.

The music we heard could not be made on a piano; it is entirely different; it increases in power and beauty each time we hear it.

Since so many have given their experience with fraud mediums and their ways and means of deceiving investigators, through the Open Court, would it not be interesting to hear from those who know what genuine spirit manifestations are, how they occur and the difference between the two? If the mediums are unable to explain the manifestations, and how they are produced, then why not give the spirits an opportunity to explain? If they are manifesting, it does seem that they ought to, at least, tell us the difference between their work and that of those who are manifesting for the money.

Money has never induced us to sit for spirit manifestations, though we have been advised to sit for 25 cents a head, at which price we would soon get rich.

If Brother Hale is willing to give $1,000 for a sight of an actual spirit, devoid of "materialization" in its general meaning, we might be induced to consider his offer when we get to the Pacific coast. That would be a small recompense for the time we have already given to the work.

Spirits have always told us that whenever a spirit comes to you materialized in a flesh and blood form, when they take you by the hand in a mortal way, to reach over and slap the medium in the mouth as they will be close by. When a spirit touches you you will instantly recognize the difference between it and a mortal touch as you will feel the force before there is any contact whatever. You will say, "How can this be if spirits do not return?" We are taught to say, through vibratory force, that can convey any of our senses through space when operated by true spirit power.

It would, no doubt, be interesting to you to know why atmospheric conditions have anything to do with spirit manifestation. I shall write further about this some other time.

We have had no desire to present our views to the public as we know how widely we differ from many others, and we are nearing the time when facts will speak louder than words and opinions can not stand in the face of true spirit manifestation.

DREAM CHILDREN.

They flock to my desk in the rush of the day,
The dear little children that dance to and fro.
I catch a faint sound of their rollicking play,
Like the lilt of a song of the long ago;
And I turn from my work with a soft little sigh,
To greet little Mabel and Eddie and Joe,
But I reach out my arms and the visions pass by,
They are only dream children I used to know.

I hear them sometimes in the roistering street
I see their bright locks as they flash in the sun,
I hear the soft tap of their pattering feet,
I hear the gay laughter as lightly they run,
I hasten my footsteps to catch the bright group
That riots along in the noise and the fray,
Then suddenly all the high hopes I had droop,

I know they have fled to a far distant shore,
A land where the sun of all righteousness beams,
Yet they come to me often as fond as of yore
From out of the mist-shrouded valley of dreams.
And sometimes it seems I can hear what they say,
And I start as I hear all the chatter and noise,
Then tears fills my eyes as the dream fades away
And all that remains is a few broken toys.

They have gone with their laughter and love and delight,
Their little warm arms have now crumbled to dust,
They have vanished like dew when the morning is bright,
But memory brings them again from the past
And they flock to my desk in the rush of the day,
And here in my heart I am holding them fast
And in dreams I can hear them again at their play. —Anon.

"Why I Am a Vegetarian." By J. Howard Moore. An address before the Chicago Vegetarian Society. Price, 25 cents.

The Soul Radiates as Many Colors as the Rainbow.

PSYCHIC LAWS GENERALLY LEAD TO A KNOWLEDGE OF SPIRIT RETURN. SOUL DEVELOPMENT CAN BEST BE ATTAINED THROUGH A PERFECT UNDERSTANDING OF THOSE LAWS THAT UNDERLIE THE FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES OF SPIRIT RETURN. IT IS PLEASING TO NOTE THAT THERE IS AN AWAKENING IN THIS RESPECT AMONG WHAT IS WRONGLY REGARDED AS THE "UPPER" CLASSES, THOSE WHO ARE EXTREMELY WEALTHY, BUT WHO AS A GENERAL RULE SPURN SPIRITUALISM. THE FOLLOWING ARTICLE WILL BE READ WITH DEEP INTEREST, ILLUSTRATING WHAT IS GOING ON IN REFERENCE TO PEERING INTO THE CONDITION AND STATUS OF THE IMMORTAL SOUL. THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER WILL LEAD IN PUBLISHING EVERYTHING THAT PERTAINS TO ANALYZING THE CONDITION OF THE INNERMOST BEING.

Soul development [says the New York Herald] is Newport's latest fad. To the unregenerate city by the sea that called forth Colonel Watterson's famous anathema has come a distinguished Scotch woman, Margaret Gladstone Stuart, with the altruistic purpose, frankly proclaimed, of teaching the smart set not only how to find its soul but when once found how to determine its color and general material characteristics.

Color of the soul? Material characteristics?

Yes, it does sound paradoxical, but according to the propaganda of this new high priestess it is literally true that one's soul does have color and form as well as numerous other peculiarities undreamed of in the theology of that sturdy old New Englander Jonathan Edwards. One's soul may be green, gold, gray brown, yellow, violet, blue or red, declares Mrs. Stuart, and in a series of lectures and drawing-room talks she is now conducting in Newport the fashionable summer colony are learning the discouraging and awful fact that their souls are for the most part a vermilion red.

The promulgator of this startling cult, it is interesting to know, is no less a personage than a grandniece of the great Gladstone. She is also a granddaughter of the Countess of Galloway and was born in the famous castle of Galloway, one of the show places of the Scottish highlands, and last, but not least, to approach her more immediate ancestry, she is a daughter of the late Balfour Alexander Stuart, a prominent member of the British Society for Psychical Research and author of a score of well-known works on metaphysical subjects.

Instant Popularity.

Although Mrs. Stuart has been in Newport but a few weeks she has already enrolled a large number of the smart set in her classes, and almost every day finds her lecturing or talking in some exclusive house to an equally exclusive circle of interested listeners.

The main business of the new cult is transacted at Mrs. Stuart's pleasant little apartment in Bellevue avenue, next door to the Casino, and it is here, of mornings, that the really interesting things take place. Here is where Mrs. Stuart instructs her classes, and here is where she performs divers miracles in the way of reading of secret histories connected with gloves, jewels, hair, etc.

In these pretty apartments, whose rear windows overlook the Casino grounds, a Herald reporter found the lady one day last week. She had just dismissed an early morning class, which the reporter met as they trooped down stairs—a bevy of well known matrons and maids, whose names must, for obvious reasons, remain unmentioned.

The class met thus early on this particular morning, explained Mrs. Stuart, so as to have it over within time to get to the tennis game, for which the fashionable crowd was even now gathering on the green turf almost under Mrs. Stuart's drawing room windows

Mrs. Stuart looks very much like a sibyl. She is tall and slender of figure and her face is that of a highly intellectual Scotch woman. Her most remarkable characteristic is her eyes, deep dark gray and set wide apart, as so often seen in those women in whom the intuitive faculties and psychic qualities are highly developed.

"My religion is based on theories as old as civilization itself," said Mrs. Stuart in answer to a question regarding the chief features of her theological system. "The theory of auras is originally an Oriental one, and had its manifestation in later ages in the aureoles about the heads of the Christian saints. Every soul radiates a certain material substance. You may define this substance as electricity, light, aura or whatever you will, but the fact remains that whatever term you use the substance is the same.

"A few choice spirits in all ages of the world have always been able to see this aura or reflection of soul with the visual eye, though it has remained obscure to the grosser and more ordinary vision. The literature of all ages, both sacred and profane, attests the fact that this halo or illumination has been seen by men about the hands of other men.

"Paul saw it, and St. John saw it, and Mahomet saw it, and so has almost every other highly spiritualized man seen it. But they of the older time were content to see the phenomenon, while we of the curious present want to know something more definite about it. It is to this end that I have come to Newport to form classes in the study of the aura.

The Higher Sense.

"Everybody radiates an aura, and were we highly enough developed spiritually and physically we should each of us be able to see our neighbor's aura and tell what color it is, just as we can see his hair and tell what color it is.

"'But what is the use of such ability once it should be acquired?' a bishop asked me the other day. I looked at him in amazement for a moment, and then I asked him if he didn't think that much of our capacity for helping our fellow men both spiritually and morally could be greatly augmented if we were only able to see them as they really are. We may be hypocrites in our personal relations with each other, we may even be hypocrites in our relations with God, as far as outward appearances are concerned, but our auras are bound to tell the truth about us.

"The aura cannot deceive anybody. By their color ye shall know them. That is the watchword of the new faith, based upon a scientific study of human radiation.

"The soul radiates as many colors as does the rainbow. When I see a preponderance of blue light radiating from a person I know instantly that that person is large in spirituality, for blue is the color of highly spiritualized souls. A preponderance of golden radiation betokens high-mindedness and ambition—for instance, a man like Napoleon would radiate no other color. Lavender is the emanation of those in whom the material instinct is abnormally developed, just as green is the radiation of those who are intensely sympathetic. Around people who are about to die one versed in the study of auras may easily see a black, murky substance lowering like a cloud, and about those who are addicted only to the world and the pleasures of the flesh there is to be seen a nimbus of glowing red.

"Here in Newport I find that about nine people out of ten radiate red auras, and the object of my teaching is to help such people to attain a chromatic radiation.

"Ah, yes, I shall explain," continued Mrs Gladstone Stuart. "By a chromatic radiation I mean an aura in which all the colors of the raindow shall be blended in their proper harmony and proportion. It is no more natural for a human being to radiate one color to the exclusion of all other colors than that he should eat only one article of food. Excess in color radiation is as bad as excess in anything else. In perfect spiritual, moral and physical health a man's aura will be composed of all the primary colors in the same order and proportion in which one sees them in the rainbow or refracted by a prism. There will be a little blue for spirituality, a little yellow for wholesome ambition, a little violet for mother love, a little green for sympathy and a little red for healthy animal spirits. Such a perfectly healthy aura will show no touch of gray or black, and the general effect upon the beholder will be that of a harmonious ensemble. To the untrained eye, to the eye that cannot see the chromatic radiation of such a person, that person will present what is known as poise. All well poised characters, whether they know it or not, radiate chromatic auras.

Some Technical Explanations.

"Such being the case it is natural that those who radiate one color should desire to acquire a proper proportion of other colors and get rid of the consequent superfluity of green, red or violet, as the case may be. Especially is this desirable where the prevailing color is red. To this end I divide my pupils into classes according to the prevailing color. All who emit red radiations are grouped by themselves, all the green radiators are grouped by themselves, and so on.

"The red class, which might be termed the primary class, is then put through a course of instruction in mental and spiritual gymnastics, which will in time graduate its members into other classes whose colors it is desirable to partake of. Out of the red class a pupil will pass into a class where green is the predominant color, and he will be kept there until he has absorbed sufficient of the green radiations. Then he passes into the violet, and from the violet into the blue class. The latter color is the very highest which a human soul can attain when in the carnal body.

"It is superseded only by white, the color of God and of the angels.

"An ability to see and understand the meaning of each other's aura would be the greatest incentive to right living and right thinking that the mind of man can conceive of. It would do away with all excuse for lies and deception, for what is the use of a lie when all the world can read the truth of our hearts by a glance at our aura?

"To be sure, not all my pupils are studying the subject for the highest good it can bring them. Many of the women and girls in my classes are attracted to them for the benefit they hope to derive in the way of helping them to adjust their love affairs, and even of divorce.

"People ask me how such knowledge could be of benefit to people in love or to divorcees or those contemplating divorce. The answer is very simple. Love is the most psychological of all human conditions, and of all human conditions love and the ailments of love admit most freely of psychological treatment. All the sorrows and pains of love arise from psychological causes. When somebody who once loved us ceases to do so a psychological fact is responsible for the change. This psychological fact is none other than that there has been a change, perhaps a very slight one, in the color of the aura of one or the other of the lovers.

The Matrimonial Problem.

"If men's and women's auras could always be kept burning with a steady glow, always emitting the same color or combination of colors that those auras were when they first met and loved, there would be no such thing as 'falling out of love.'

"The same thing applies, only in greater degree, to marriage and the difficulties which lead to the dissolution of marriage. These, too, are highly psychological conditions, caused by the action and reaction of human emotions. Like the pitfalls of love, they are caused by changes and irregularities in the auras of those concerned, and the business of those who cannot live happily together is to set about and try to adjust their auras before having recourse to the divorce court.

"Married people, above all others, should train themselves so as to be constantly on the alert for any perceptive change in each other's radiations."

Among the interested students who crowd Mrs. Stuart's classes are clergymen and physicians, as well as society men and women. The features of the new cult as outlined by its high priestess, while they constitute what make it unique, are by no means its only startling features. As a mind reader and clairvoyant Mrs. Stuart has aroused an unusual amount of mystery and interest, even in these days when such phenomena are common enough, but it is as a regulator and adjuster of auras that she is holding the attention of smart Newporters.

The Psychic Eye.

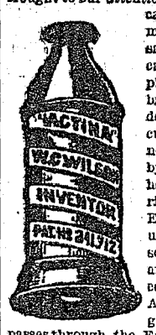
It has been stated that Mrs. Stuart claims the Highland gift of second sight and second hearing. The claim in this case deserves something more than a mere statement. One may or may not place any faith in the Scotch tradition that certain people of the Highland clans are born into the world with a sense which enables them to see that which to ordinary vision is invisible and to hear what to ordinary ears is inaudible. One may or may not believe that the "psychic eye" and the "psychic ear" are only figments of the imagination, but the most skeptical cannot ignore the phenomena themselves which some of these people thus allegedly gifted are often able to produce.

In the reading of jewels and articles of wearing apparel Mrs. Stuart's gift approaches the extraordinary, and her services as an entertainer are being eagerly besought by Newporters. Her ability in this respect came to the notice of society in a rather unusual fashion. A few evenings after her arrival in Newport she went to one of the famous Casino concerts escorted by a well-known young man.

Previous to the concert the couple had dined in the club dining room, as is the popular fashion. It was Mrs. Stuart's first introduction to the Casino, and during the course of the dinner her companion noticed that she was staring very hard at something at the table opposite. Inquiry proved that a large carbuncle ring on the hand of one of the men of the party was the object of her interest. Mrs. Stuart expressed herself as greatly agitated, and it was only with the exercise of great self-control that she was able to finish the remaining courses of the menu. When they had returned to open air she told her companion that the carbuncle ring had suggested a frightful tragedy, and expressed a desire for an introduction to its owner, with whom the young man was well acquainted, though he had never heard anything remarkable about the history of the ring.

An interview was arranged for the next morning, and the result was a revelation to the owner of the carbuncle ring. Just what are the details of this revelation and exactly what are the circumstances of the dark secret discovered by Mrs. Stuart is not definitely known, though enough has leaked out to connect the ring with a not yet forgotten and mysterious suicide. The dead man, it is rumored, bequeathed the ring to the wearer, who was his best friend, and with it a letter in which he told his friend the real reason of his action. The dead man's secret, confided only to the solitary man's friend, had been kept inviolate even in all the hubbub and inquiry that followed the tragedy, and none ever dreamed or suspected the truth until the advent of the new psychic demonstrator.

The use of the word "clairvoyant" is, however, repudiated by Mrs. Stuart. What she claims to do is to read the aura or radiation of the article submitted, upon the theory that every article, however dead and inanimate it may be, has the power not only of thinking, but of reflecting its thoughts in its surrounding aura. All the experiences through which such an object has passed will be ineradicably impressed upon the aura radiated by the object.



Mrs. Stuart first discovered her power to read the histories connected with inanimate objects when as a girl of seventeen she was stricken with total blindness, the result of illness. "For a period of three years I was stone blind," she says, and during that time the atmosphere or aura of persons and things became visible to me. It sounds paradoxical to say that anything can be visible to one who is stone blind, but my meaning will be apparent if one will only stop and think how often one has striven to visualize objects while holding one's eyes tight shut.

"When at last I received my sight, the keenness of my second sight did not in the least diminish. It was then that I set about to cultivate it, and with that object in view I went back to India and put myself under the tuition of the same old master who had become interested in me on the occasion of my first visit there as a child."

DEAFNESS CURED!

By No Means Until "ACTINA" Was Discovered.

Ninety-five per cent of all cases of deafness brought to our attention is the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The air passages become clogged by catarrhal deposits, stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Until these deposits are removed a cure is impossible. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying, hence the inability of aurists or physicians to cure. Ear drums are worse than useless. That there is a scientific cure for deafness and catarrh is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. The vapor current generated in the Actina passes through the Eustachian tubes into the middle ear, removing the catarrhal obstructions as it passes through the tubes, and loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, making them respond to the slightest vibration of sound. Actina has never failed to cure ringing noises in the head. We have known people troubled with this distressing symptom for years to be completely cured in only three weeks' use of Actina. Actina also cures asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are directly or indirectly due to catarrh. Actina is sent on trial postpaid. Write us about your case. ANCIENT TIMES.

The Erroneous Construction put Upon the Phenomena of Biblical Times is Responsible for More Erroneous Beliefs Than Anything Else. Since Erroneous Beliefs Are a Hindrance to Progression, Whatever Can Dispel them and Substitute Facts Will Aid the Solution of the Mysteries of Today and the Motive for Phenomena.

Thomas Paine, Robert Ingersoll, and many others had to bear all the vituperation that the intolerance of ignorance could heap upon them because they had not discovered that which is better to take the place of the idols they demolished.

The idea of an avenging God and executive Devil may have been necessary to keep the people in subjection in times when the animal nature in man manifested itself more in brute force than it does now. Let us consider, a little, the origin of God and devil. How many people ever give this a thought or know that we only have to read the fifth verse of the third chapter of Genesis to find the word gods. "For God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened and ye shall be as gods knowing good and evil." If we could read without preconceived notions, we might discover that the God of the Old Testament has all the attributes of the cruel, vindictive rulers of the times. Every generation of mankind has produced those who like to domineer over their fellows—animal propensities—and the lower the grade of brain matter possessed by such men the more vindictive, cruel and selfish they are.

But the phenomena manifested which came from an invisible source was manifested to all grades of humanity, especially if they sought for it, just as it is now, and the rulers made whatever use of it their inclinations suggested. Because these manifestations came from an unseen source and there was so much power and knowledge accompanying them, the recipients supposed they were to be ruled in a future state of existence much as they were in the physical; and as their earthly rulers styled themselves king, lord, god, etc., so these names were bestowed upon the intelligences producing phenomena; hence the God of the Old Testament possesses all the attributes of earthly rulers.

Each individual's intelligence producing the phenomena was his god, hence there were many gods in those times. As the manifestations were good or evil according as the recipient wanted to use them, so there were gods and devils synonymous with good and evil. This all culminated in one God and one Devil with powers pretty equally divided, the Devil having the most, it would seem. Anyone who possessed brute force and other characteristics necessary to set himself up as a ruler and compel his less fortunate fellows to toil for his support, was so "swelled up" over his importance that he set himself up on a throne—his way of getting above the "common herd"—and put a crown on his head and demanded that the people recognize his importance and signify their willingness to serve him by bowing down to him, kissing his big toe or some such fool performance.

A few months ago I read of an eastern ruler, whose son was to pay his respects to him on his, the son's, thirteenth birth-day, and did not dare to walk to him as he sat on his throne, but must crawl to him and crawl out again!

What chumps we are to believe that we must kneel to an imaginary god who sits on a throne with a crown on his pate, demanding that we do any foolish thing he may dictate!

Think of a people leaving the mother country and braving risks of crossing the treacherous ocean and enduring all the hardships and privations of a pioneer life in the wilds of a new country to get rid of king rule, and still singing: "I'm the child of a king; I'm the child of a king," etc.

But since we find that they did not leave their animal attributes behind them, but brought along some of the traits which were used against them in the mother country, as witnessed in the execution of so-called witches and in other ways, perhaps, if it had not been for the fear of an avenging God they would have been worse. But one is left wondering whether the inculcation of humanitarianism—the practice of treating our fellow beings as we would have them treat us, not because of a promised reward in a future state of existence but because it was right—would not sooner have brought about better conditions.

Christ was not the first man whom nature produced possessing the finer elements which make the humanitarian. There were several before him who taught such, but because the people had not set them up for gods their history has paled before that of Christ's.

I am not belittling any good that may have resulted from Christ's teachings. A time comes in the evolution of machinery when the old machine becomes worthless because some brain has discovered principles in nature that had not been utilized in the old machine, and constructs one that is so much superior to the old that the old is made worthless for anything but the scrappile. The same can be said of philosophical scientific discoveries; but because the discoverer could not demonstrate his discoveries to the physical eye of the masses, only those who possessed the mental capacity to comprehend them accept them.

Christ said: "Verily I say unto you, there be some standing here which shall not taste of death till they see the son of man coming in his digdom." Did anyone ever comment on the fact that Christ always called himself the "son of man?" There is a reason for that just as there is a reason for many other things that psychics are made to say.

Joseph was not the only man who has tried to hide the results of his mischief by putting away the girl, or in some other way. I find no place in the Bible where Joseph is mentioned after his son, Christ, was 12 years of age. Other members of the family are mentioned, therefore I conclude that Joseph, since history tells us that he was much older than Mary, had passed to "spirit" life where he would possess a knowledge and power over nature's forces that would enable him to produce all the wonderful phenomena through his son that astonished the people. One of the proofs is: "This is my beloved son in whom I am well pleased." This is why Christ called God his father, we may be sure, since he was the only psychic who, up to that time had so called him.

Now as to Christ's second coming, which people claim he refers to in the verse quoted, either he has come the second time referred to, or else there are yet people in the physical body who were standing there at the time the prediction was made.

Nature's evolutionary processes teach us that it is impossible for any mortal who was standing there then to still be in mortal life, so the prophecy had some other meaning. Whether he understood it at the time it was uttered through him is doubtful, but it was fulfilled in materialization when he appeared to people after the crucifixion. Then he possessed great power, the power that made him master of nature's forces, nature being his kingdom. But why he did not use such power to do more for people can only be answered when we answer why any psychic before or since him, since there have been so many, have not done more for us in the physical.

One of the greatest mistakes people make is supposing that psychics possess the power at all times, when the fact is they possess no more power than any ordinary mortal except when it is being manifested through or for them. For this reason they are blamed for many things for which they are not responsible. When we go to a "medium" we can only get what our "spirit" friends intend for us to get through that particular one, because not every one has the same phase of mediumship. It is not because our immortal friends cannot give us what we want for lack of conditions, etc., as many teach, but because they will not.

A NOTE OF WARNING.

Dangers of Rushing Into Unknown Fields.

To the Editor:—In Mrs. M. A. Congdon's excellent article, "A View-Point of Theosophy," there is an undertone—an inference, rather, that seems to one who is a lover of the One Cause of which Spiritualism and Theosophy are two phases, to need a little attention.

There is a great difference between fear and the warning of dangers ahead. Warning that will teach us to "step softly," to observe diligently and not be carried away by illusions, but to look beneath and see the real, the permanent; to use all steps as a means to an end and not the end itself; to realize that on the psychic plane there is danger of being held by the beauties (ever impermanent) that at first seem so alluring that one thinks he has reached heaven and is thus prevented, so long as he is in this condition, from making further progress.

Has not our study of Spiritualism taught us that while we find many blossoms that teach us of life, under many of these a serpent is coiled?"

How many of our mediums really progress as the years pass? Is there not the same round of small messages, the same ideas, with but little variation, expressed?

Judging by late developments the same fraudulent manifestations going on year after year also.

And shall no note of warning be sounded?

Shall the testimony of all those adown the ages, who have delved into the mysterious world that lies all about us—yea, verily, within us—be thrust aside by the childish hands of those just entering Spiritualism or mediumship, while they push on into the unknown fields, refusing the guidance of those who have preceded them, and trusting their happiness, their progress to some one but little more advanced than they?

Would we trust a child of five years with a double-edged knife and tell him "knowledge is power" in the use of this knife, and it is through your wrong-doing, your mistakes, your inflicting suffering on others that you learn; you must go through all these phases that you may know, so have no fear, but go ahead?

Not one of us would be so fool-hardy. The knife would be placed out of reach while he was taught its use and abuse, and when permitted to handle it, it would be with a carefulness that would teach him that it was a powerful weapon to be used for the best good of all and never for purely selfish purposes.

Would we put a child in a chemical laboratory and tell him: There is knowledge for you here. You need only the inborn, as yet undeveloped, power within you, and the guidance of an invisible teacher to find that knowledge. You may wreck the lives of many people by your experiments but that is the way to learn. Have no fear and listen not to the voice of those who have made chemistry a study and tell you there is danger lurking in these beautiful or harmless-looking articles—it is only the cry of the fearist who would prevent your gaining knowledge.

Crude illustrations, these, but carry them into any phase of physical life and follow them to a logical conclusion—and ask yourself, shall we do this? And yet in this still subtler phase of life too many of us throw all discretion to the winds and each goes his "ain gait" trusting implicitly in his guides, if he is not after the money, and soon ready to give advice to old-time Spiritualists how to develop their mediumship.

That there is thought to be danger in the careless or unscrupulous working along so-called spiritual lines is clearly shown in the Open Court in The Progressive Thinker and in all my study of Theosophy, in all the warnings sounded, danger signals shown, I have never seen or heard such an arraignment as there given; such an urgent appeal for more earnest, truthful training of the neophyte as has been presented in the Spiritualist ranks in the last few months. From nowhere but within its fold could this come with the expectation of good as the result.

"Theosophy neither praises nor blames." Individual members of the society may do either according "to their light" but truly in regard to danger signals to Spiritualists they should now consider their occupation gone if indeed, they ever have so considered it.

There is no more exclusiveness in the study of the invisible elements than in any other scientific line, but surely there should be the same need of thorough preparation.

The knowledge of the psychic, or astral, plane, is one that is in line with human evolution. The question is, shall we prepare for it by careful earnest study willing to bide our time, knowing that all we learn but brings us nearer the time when the blossom will unfold naturally or shall we force the growth as in a hot-house?

Those who study Theosophy learn that there is a gradual growth and each comes in its natural order if not interfered with. Not all are experts and it is useless to expect of the child in the seventh grade what we would from the college graduate. Between the two there are many steps gained only by earnest study and gained the more readily in the majority of cases by taking one step at a time and in natural sequence than by attempting to gain the last first, and also by heeding the advice of those who have passed over the road. The occultist knows the difficulties through which he has passed, and we would save many a mistake if we would but heed his words and be willing to follow the steps he points out. We should then make progress with less danger to self and others. That one sect, philosophy or individual has no "corner" on the higher elements we all know. If one calling himself a Theosophist chooses to rush into the, to him, unknown, without due preparation, he stands the same chance of failing as does the one calling himself a Spiritualist if he pursues the same course.

Let us prepare ourselves in all possible ways to be ready for the step that comes next in our evolution, and learn to make haste slowly. We have all the time there is for the unfolding of the soul's treasures, and we are convinced of the continuity of life, no need to attempt to compress it all into this small span. Let us not "abandon seeking" but surround ourselves with a purity of purpose, a nobility of aim, an earnest desire for the truth, and an infinite patience that can wait while it works for its own, that will lead us into the light of the perfect day where we will see all as parts of the One.

SUNSHINE SONG.

Would you make some saddened heart
Just a little lighter?
Would you make some burdened life
Just a little brighter?
Drop a word of hope and cheer,
Set the echoes ringing
With your notes of endless joy,
As you go a-singing.

Would you smooth the rugged path
Down along life's highway?
Would you plant the rose of love
In some lonely byway?
Just a deed of kindness done
Clears the path before us;
And the lilies of God's love
Bloom and blossom o'er us.

Just a little word of cheer
Lightens every duty;
Just a smile will often show
Faces wreathed in beauty
Sprinkle sunshine as you go;
Comfort the distressing,
And your glad reward shall be Heaven's choicest blessing.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Mr. John W. Ring, of Galveston, Texas, the National Superintendent of Lyceum Work, and a noted inspirational speaker, will lecture at the Rising Sun Spiritualist Mission, 378 So. Western avenue, on Monday evening, October 10, 1904. Subject: "In What Way Will Spiritualism Benefit Me?"

Through Mrs. Rouse as medium, Horace Greeley predicts that a great change will take place in this century in which much human blood will be shed, if not prevented by better laws.

A. G. Keck, secretary, writes: "Lake Brady closed the best camp season we have had, Sept. 4. The association is in good shape financially, and has nearly enough money subscribed for a new auditorium, which we expect to build soon. The new officers just elected are as follows: President C. F. Hunger, Cleveland; vice-president, Geo. W. Rouse, Kent; secretary, A. G. Keck, Akron; treasurer, Adah Merrill, Lake Brady."

Emil T. Vaas writes: "Our meetings are proving quite successful, and we are raising quite an interest among the Germans in the neighborhood of our hall. Mr. Joseph, as medium, gives eminent satisfaction, and your scribe explains our philosophy as best he can to good acceptance. We look forward to a successful winter campaign."

Thomas Burpee writes: "The season just past of the Sunapee Lake Spiritualist camp-meeting has been most successful and satisfactory. The association stands to-day on a firm financial basis with a substantial surplus in its treasury. Back dues have been paid; old members, long absent, have returned to renew their associations, and non-members, realizing the practical value of the camp-meetings to the lake as a summer resort, have contributed liberally to their support. The many favors of the Woodsum Steamboat Company and the Boston & Maine Railroad are thoroughly appreciated, and are not rated among the least of the causes of the happy results experienced. Already with the purpose of making this camp-meeting second to none the country over, the officers of the association are busy with plans for next year. The best talent possible to procure will be placed upon the rostrum, and come who may to attend, believer or non-believer, no one can fail to find something edifying, satisfying and morally helpful.

If astronomy made men devout in the past it ought to have that effect more now than ever. The wonders of astronomy have been revealed more in the last 100 years than in all previous time, and as to the extent of the universe the recent developments of astronomical photography have absolutely dwarfed the universe as previously known.

A. H. Hillis writes from Santa Barbara, Cal.: "Please find enclosed one dollar for one year's subscription to the best Spiritualist paper published—The Progressive Thinker. It is a welcome visitor in our home. I want to know more about God's spirit world. I have loved ones living in that celestial world."

Nina D. Challen writes from Toledo, Ohio, in reference to the good work carried on at Findlay: "I have been visiting there for the last year, serving the society. I find a fine class of people there who are deeply interested in the good work. Mediums visiting Findlay, whose work is good and true, will find many friends. I wish to say these people do not seek marvelous works; truth is good enough, if not so startling."

The practical astronomer is a cold-blooded man, not a whit more religious than his neighbor, so far as his excursions into the star depths are concerned. He photographs a small star in a distant constellation, puts the plate under a magnifying glass and finds that the supposed star is a star cluster, composing a new universe, and, while he may tremble with intellectual excitement, his religious or poetical nature is no more quickened than if he had picked up a paper of pins on the sidewalk.

A. St. Louis (Mo.) paper says: "At the Spiritualist Temple, 3015 Pine street, Mme J. H. Dallas, beauty doctor, poetess and writer of many short articles on love and the management of husbands, was married to J. C. Dinehart, of Tower City, N. D., who has sold out his business there and come to St. Louis in the fulfillment of an ante-nuptial promise. The wedding was quiet, attended by but a few friends, and the impressive Spiritualistic ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Grimshaw. The bride, who really confessed to 45 years, was gowned in becoming gray. After the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Dinehart left for the East, where they will visit Mr. Dinehart's relatives. When they return a few weeks hence they will make their home at 614 Leonard avenue."

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

ATTENTION LYCEUMS. — During June, July and August the Progressive Lyceum will be sent to Lyceums for one cent per copy. This will enable you to increase your subscription one-half its present number, with no extra expense. Address J. W. Ring, care of the Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas.

John W. Ring, of Galveston, Texas, will give a lecture for the Bund Harmonie, which meets at the residence of Mrs. C. Schwan, 523 Belmont avenue, on Wednesday, October 12 at 2 o'clock p. m. Everyone is invited to attend this lecture by Mr. Ring. The small fee of 15 cents will be charged. Mrs. Schwan will follow with tests.

Samuel J. Houser writes: "Over twenty years ago I was working in a room in a coal mine that had caved in. Just after I had finished clearing out the fallen rock and slate and retimbered it, I sat back on the rock pile to rest a few moments, and to view my work. I had not sat there more than a few moments when I was startled by a very loud voice, saying, 'Get out of here.' I made a desperate jump and just barely escaped being crushed to death by another cave-in of rock and slate. I was working alone in the pit, and not another soul within one-half mile. I was very much surprised, not being used to such a phenomenon."

E. V. Morse writes: "The lines in the General Survey of last week by Rev. West, while well meant and evidently intended to be logical, are slightly marred in the premises, by the use of the general term, natural (quoted), where the more particular term, physical should be used. With the term physical or material substituted for the term natural, both in the premises and in the arguments, the conclusion, as presented, would seem logical. In such a literary production, where grave and vital errors, historical, ethical and philosophical predominating as the rule, rather than the exception are, or have been blindly endorsed for a half lifetime, there need be no surprise at the oversight of a misuse of proper adjective terms in such cases as the above. The inspired (?) Hebrew might have supposed, or even felt that he knew, that things spiritual were supranatural or unnatural; but that primitive idea is effectually eliminated from all phases of modern philosophy. By making suggested correction I think Mr. West will recognize a simpler and easier line of thought throughout the proposition."

Doukhobors, the Russian religious fanatics, have created excitement among the Canada settlers by once more leaving their agricultural pursuits and starting on a pilgrimage in search of the Messiah. On hearing of the great overland ride being made by Lord Minto from Battleford to Saskatoon, accompanied by a mounted guard of police and much military pomp, they decided that this man who was inspiring such respect from the Canadians must be the Messiah for whom they had been waiting, and immediately they started on one of their pilgrimages. Several of them were promptly arrested by the police here and housed in a vacant building. Verily, the fools are not all dead.

Memorial service will be held for Mr. J. W. LeSieur, our arisen brother, Sunday, October 2, Church of the Soul, Masonic Temple, Hall 309, Mrs. Richmond officiating

Mrs. F. C. Johnson, living four miles northwest of this place, was saved from drowning through a dream. Several nights ago she dreamed she had slipped into the well on the place while attempting to draw water. So impressed was she with the dream that the next morning she fastened a long rope to a heavy iron stake, driven deep in the ground, and threw the loose end of the rope into the well. She instructed her little boy, at the same time, to grasp the rope should he fall into the well. During the afternoon she went to the well to draw water and, slipping on the wet platform, slid into the open shaft. The well is 24 feet deep and half full of water. The plunge took her away under, but upon coming to the surface she seized the rope and climbed out hand over hand, using the side of the well as a brace. In relating her experience, Mrs. Johnson says that all she could think of while falling in the well was that the rope was there.—Kansas City Journal.

Gilbert E. Smith writes from Brooklyn, N. Y., that he has been highly pleased with the ministrations of Rev. Ira Moore Courliss. He also speaks highly of the medium, Miss Emma C. Resch. The manifestations through her have been grand. He alluues to the physical manifestations given through Mrs. L. Roach. He was amazed at the ringing of bells, tipping of tables and moving folding doors, moving people across the room sitting on a chair, playing a mandolin, lifting up a six pound weight, crushing of newspaper and more things that he could mention, and what is the best of these manifestations are they were done in the bright gas light. He says: "I have been to meetings where the spirits came and talked through a trumpet. I myself have held a conversation with my brother who passed to the higher life."

Chas H. Greene writes: "The Rising Sun Spiritualist Mission held its regular services at Star Lodge Hall, 378 So. Western avenue, Sunday, Sept. 18. Mr. John M. Clarke deliyered the afternoon lecture. That evening Dr. C. Burgess entertained and instructed a very large congregation with a history of Indian life. He described their customs, their ceremonies, their modes of living and their religion; also described the relation of the Indian to mediums in material life as guides, ending his discourse with a few stories of supposed supernatural happenings, that were really spiritual phenomena, which he had witnessed. Mrs. Weaver kindly consented to give some tests. Sunday, October 2, Mrs. N. Trafton will address us in the afternoon and that evening Rev. Thos S. Warner, our assistant pastor, will deliver a lecture on 'Decision.' He is a fluent speaker, able to handle his subjects and capable of impressing his audience with the truth of his remarks. We invite all Spiritualists and offer a special invitation to those who are not to attend our meetings."

J. B. Mann writes from Winnipeg, Manitoba: "My brother and I take this opportunity of congratulating you upon the success of your publication and trust that still greater success will attend your noble efforts in the cause for truth and justice. We think you are greatly helping the propagation of Spiritualism by your fearless exposures of those who practice fraud under its banner. Keep on with the good work."

Dr. W. O. Knowles writes from Toledo, Ohio: "I wish to thank my friends and mediums of Grand Rapids, Mich., who kindly assisted me in the trying sickness of my wife, since March 3, 1904. She is slowly recovering, which makes it possible for me to take engagements again; therefore I would be pleased to hear from societies or camp associations who wish my services for lectures and messages for winter months and season of 1905. I am at this time serving the Independent Society of Toledo for the month of September. One more Sunday here. Address all mail to 247 Coade avenue, Grand Rapids, Mich."

A correspondent writing from Payne, Ohio, under date of September 20, says: "It is not perhaps very widely known, that there is a spiritual society in this place, and in fact, it can hardly be called an organized society. Seven years ago Mr. John Ball, aided by his brother William and a few other friends of Spiritualism advertised a meeting in a grove near this place which was largely attended, not only by the people of Payne, but of the surrounding country for fifteen or twenty miles. Every year since that time a similar meeting has been held with audiences numbering from three to six thousand. This year, however, Sept. 18, on account of the storm, which raged from early in the morning until midday, it was impracticable to hold a meeting in the grove until afternoon, when the sun came out and the people who came in the night before from a distance, and quite a number from Payne and the immediate vicinity, repaired to the grove where they were addressed by Dr. T. A. Bland of Chicago, who was followed by Mrs. Nora E. Hill, pastor of the Rising Sun Spiritualist Mission, Chicago, who gave a number of tests. Mrs. Lyon of Chicago, formerly and widely known as Virginia Bryan, lecturer and test medium, and who from the first has been the chief attraction at these meetings, while under the control of her chief guide, announced that next year, they would hold a camp meeting at that place. This announcement was received with enthusiasm, and the programme will undoubtedly be successfully carried out. Mrs. Lyon is the daughter of Mr. John Ball, and has co-operated earnestly with her father, mother and uncle in the good work at Payne. This quartette of earnest and intelligent Spiritualists deserves much credit for their unselfish devotion to the cause."

M. C. Goossen and wife write: "In making an unexpected visit in Toledo, Ohio, to spend Sunday, myself and wife were walking about the city, and to our surprise we saw at the G. A. R. Hall a call for a Spiritualist meeting for 2:30 and 7:30 p. m., and lecture to be given by Dr. W. O. Knowles of Grand Rapids, Mich. The writers had not seen the Doctor for some time, and we went to listen to him both times and we enjoyed more than ever the manner the Doctor answered questions, several in number to the utmost satisfaction of the listeners. Besides the lectures given, the doctor gave spirit messages by description and full names that were astounding to those present. The Doctor is fine in his work, and is surely doing great good, and proving to the world what others preach, that there is life after death, or departure from the body."

Mrs. Isa Wilson Kayner, missionary for the Texas State Spiritualist Association, leaves for San Antonio, Texas, on Sept. 26, to attend the convention held on Sept. 30 and Oct. 1 and 2. Afterwards she goes to Galveston, Texas, for the remainder of the month.

Isa A. Cross writes: "On Sunday evening, Oct. 2, at 319 E. 55th street, the Hyde Park Occult Society will have Dr. Burgess with them. He will give his lecture on Indians, and what he knows of them. We are very anxious to hear him on that subject, as we know he is posted on it, as he has been among them so much. Come and learn about our red brothers and sisters. Our package social, Sept. 22, was a success both socially and financially. One of the features which gave us all a good laugh was two colored waiters, one of whom had blue eyes. They acted out their character as though they had been there before. Plenty of watermelon, lots of packages, music, etc., made an evening long to be remembered. We intend having a week-night seance a little later. Come again, friends."

W. J. Howes writes: "My wife and I have returned from our vacation, and are ready to take up our work again, which we shall commence to do in our new hall, 31st and Lock streets, Sunday evening, October 2, at 8 o'clock, and shall be pleased to have all our old friends with us. Lecture and spirit messages at each service."

Mrs. M Henry writes: "On Thursday evening, Sept. 29, there will be a social given under the auspices of the Light of Truth church in the parlors of the pastor, Mrs. Burland, 3019 Vernon avenue. We anticipate a very pleasant evening, as there will be good music and a number of good psychics present. Prof. Verne and wife, palmists, as well as your correspondent and others will give clairvoyant visions. The entertainment will not be complete without Violet, Mrs. Burland's little control, to give spirit messages. Refreshments served."

Scribe writes from Detroit, Mich: "The International Society of Spiritualists held their second meeting last Sunday, with another large and interested audience of representative Spiritualists. The opening meeting on the 18th filled Prismatic Hall to the doors. Mrs. Jenkins, the pastor, instructed and interested everybody. Miss Moor presided at the piano, and Mr. Jackson led in the singing. Mr. and Mrs. P. W. White will speak and give tests for the Earnest Workers. Mrs. Penna has opened meetings at 55 Grand River avenue. Mrs. Dr. Wise has returned from Put-in-Bay and will give readings at 33 Miami avenue."

T. W. Sherk writes: "Rev. Moses Hull lectures for the Church of Spirit Communion, 4308 Cottage Grove avenue, on Sunday, October 2, both afternoon and evening. Services begin at 3 and 8 p. m. sharp. Come early and secure a good seat. Besides a good lecture you will hear the finest of music, and Mr. Coates and other mediums will give messages."

G. H. Brooks writes from Baltimore, Md.: "I have changed my address from 811 North Fremont avenue, to 636 North Carrolton avenue, Baltimore, Md. Some of my mail matter has been lost of late, and among the same was one from Philadelphia, Pa., stating I was engaged for April to serve Mr. Locke's society again. I have January and March open and would like to make engagements soon for these two months. I give readings at the close of my evening lectures. My wife is stopping at No. 1023 Ingraham street, Los Angeles, Cal., where she will be pleased to see any of my old friends as well as the new ones. The work is progressing nicely here in Baltimore."

Elizabeth Kemp Roberts writes: "I have just returned from a little visit in Portland, Oregon, and while there I attended the First Spiritual Society, both morning and evening, and I venture to send you a few lines in regard to it. The eleven o'clock conference was well attended. The subject under discussion was, Obsession, and it was ably handled by several speakers. After the conference, never having attended a lyceum meeting, I remained, and met some very pleasant ladies and Mr. G. C. Love, the president of the society. The lyceum was very interesting—five classes—or groups, I believe they are called—of children, and a large circle of grown people. The evening session was excellent. Mr. Love lectured to a full house on 'Spiritual gifts, and how we were so often ignorant concerning them.' At the close of the lecture Mr. and Mrs. Davis, a blind couple gave us some beautiful music, Mr. Davis, the violin and Mrs. Davis the piano. After that Mr. Love gave some time to giving tests. I enjoyed my visit with them very much."

Fannie Spalding has open dates, and would like to correspond with societies wishing her services as speaker and test medium. Address 353 East Main street, Norwich, Ct.

TRUTH WILL TRIUMPH.

Notes of Work in Michigan and Ohio.

I am pleased to note in the well-filled columns of The Progressive Thinker the evidence of increasing interest in our cause all over this broad land of ours. After spending twelve weeks at camp work I feel justified in being very optimistic as regards the future of Spiritualism, and that despite the croakings of so many who seem to fear the self analysis to which Spiritualism is being subjected at this time. I am confident that right will come uppermost, and out of the fire of its trial our glorious cause will come with a temper of truth more firmly established than ever before. I can but feel that the "Open Court" is a heaven-appointed function of The Progressive Thinker, and that it will redound to good I have no doubt.

On August 28 I concluded my engagement as chairman of Grand Ledge camp, Mich., and on Sunday, Sept. 4, I had the pleasure of speaking to an audience of 1,200 people at Wentworth's Grove, Ohio. I found the promoters of that meeting a noble band of workers of our cause having filled engagements there sometimes during the period named. I understand that during all these years the meetings have been fostered and cared for by the Wentworth family, from whom the grove takes its name, although many others have always been ready to give their aid and counsel, prominent among the number being Mr. Fred D. Dunakin, of Cecil, O., and Mr. Chapman, of Antwerp, O.

During the remaining Sundays of September I am filling a very pleasant engagement with the Society here at Owosso, Mich. We are having large audiences and the people seem to be well pleased both with the lectures of my guides and the message work.

During the entire month of October I am engaged with the society at Battle Creek, Mich., during November I serve the Society at Findlay, Ohio.

I shall be pleased to hear from Societies desirous of employing a trance speaker and message medium for December and January.

The Cause in Elyria, Ohio.

The Progressive Spiritualists Society of Elyria held its annual meeting on September 20, and elected the following officers for the coming year, beginning October 1: F. W. Martin, president; J. M. Woolridge, first vice-president; Miss Laura Winslow, second vice-president and lyceum conductress; Miss Bertha Weir, secretary and treasurer; the above with Mrs. Henson, Mr. Arnold and Mr. Reinke forming the new board of trustees. We propose with the coming year to inaugurate a progressive and aggressive campaign in the spiritual field, and would be pleased to hear from any able workers in the cause that may come our way, as well as good physical mediums, only such as are known or can give the best of references need apply. During nearly seven years of the existence of our society, we only charged admission for a short time and then only when we had noted speakers and message mediums, but for the past four or five years all of our meetings have been free, and this policy will be strictly adhered to in the future. The writer believes this essential to the growth and welfare of our cause and has noticed with regret that societies that adopted this plan in many instances have gone back to the old way of charging admission. I believe that a more thorough trial should be made, and I feel satisfied that in the long run it will prove the more satisfactory way to welcome all, without asking them for a door fee. If properly managed the collections or free offerings will more than offset a ten-cent door fee. This is only a kindly suggestion and not offered in the way of criticism. But having thoroughly tried both ways I hope that some society may profit by this suggestion and our experience. Our meeting place, while not all we could desire, is used for no other purpose and has been occupied by us for several years. A new hope seems to have sprung up in the hearts of our members and with the assistance of the angel world, coupled with unselfish devotion on our part, writer hopes to gradually strengthen the society and the cause in our beautiful little city, and lives in the fond hope of seeing at no distant date a modest, but all-sufficient temple, which we may call our own, and to this end would bespeak the kindest thoughts of all true Spiritualists, that may read this, for the success of our proposed undertaking, the welfare of our little society and the growth of our beautiful philosophy in our beautiful little city. CREED OR KNOWLEDGE.

The Basis of Orthodoxy, and of Spiritualism.

Answering the article of H. V. Sweringen in The Progressive Thinker of July 9, some interesting arguments are to be met with. We agree substantially with the statements of the writer but would call attention to the last sentence of the article "In this day of revision of creeds, the Apostles' Creed should receive some attention!" Compare this one statement with the tenor of the entire article and we behold a fair field for argument. The whole Apostles' Creed is based only on faith, on belief, and its purpose was to separate Christians from unbelievers. Faith acknowledges a truth, but let it not be forgotten that error is often mistaken for truth. It is impossible for millions and multitudes of people, each cast in different mold to live up to a creed, as each man's faith is for self only. Some possess the faith building qualities to a great extent, others to a less. Faith implies doubt, and doubt is a negative condition.

Knowledge is to know and is positive, A negative condition is one more or less imperfect. As to the age and origin of the Apostles' Creed, the article mentioned above justly refers readers to the encyclopedias for information and it is not necessary to set out either age or origin. Suffice it, that at several times the original creed sustained omissions and received additions all out of consideration for various sects and denominations. Arthur Cushman McGiffert in his treatise on the Apostles' Creed calls attention to the fact that the creed is significant as well for its omissions as for its assertions. Especially does he mention the silence regarding the baptism of Christ, his words of love and mercy and the fulfillment of messiac prophecy so greatly laid stress upon by all early preachers.

Not even does the creed make mention of Jesus as a Redeemer. Were all the various denominations of one accord in their belief, all the omissions would doubtless have been made part of the creed. Having built up their institutions on faith only, and not upon truth, it was better for the Christian church to set up a creed the various parts of which were not in dispute and to omit any and all matter upon which they did not universally agree.

Since this creed is only a creed and every statement thereof is made only upon belief, we can hardly agree with the writer of the article hereinbefore referred to regarding a revision. We would say, abandon the creed altogether and set up a construction of facts. This would be the right course, for in revising the creed, the same would still remain a creed; and where truth should stand, a belief only would be perpetuated. Spiritualists having the truth do not need a creed, but can well establish a platform. Instead of revising the creed we would suggest the following in its place:

Creed.

I believe in God the Father Almighty, maker of heaven and earth.

And in Jesus Christ, His only Son, our Lord, who was conceived of the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary; suffered under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, dead and buried; he descended into hell.

The third day he arose again from the dead and ascended into heaven, and sitteth at the right hand of God, the Father Almighty, from thence he shall come to judge the quick and the dead.

I believe in the Holy Ghost;
The holy Catholic church;
The communion of saints;
The forgiveness of sins;
The resurrection of the body and the life everlasting.
Amen.

A Suggested Platform.

I know there is a Universal Father, Spirit of Love sustaining and permeating the universe, and that I possess in diminutive degree that love spirit.

Taking Jesus Christ as a precedent, I know that He, the Nazarene, was conceived in perfect love and born in purity, by reason of which He became in close touch with the divine father spirit of love; he unjustly suffered for the sake of truth, the crucifixion, that being the mode of punishment in his day; after his death he descended into the lower stages of spirit life to administer to the spirits therein.

After administering to these he ascended to the higher stage to which he, by reason of his purity, belonged, namely, next to the great universal father Spirit of Love, where he is enabled to determine all the good and evil in the worlds beneath him.

I know that, I, part spirit of the great love spirit receive aid from the divine force.

I know that all embodied spirits constitute the holy universal church on earth, the foundation of which is Spiritualism.

And I know that all spirits embodied and disembodied, can and do communicate with one another.

That by prevalence of good the suppression of sins be accomplished and finally total extirpation of all wrong.

I know that the spirit shall rise after material death to higher stages, progressing gradually until perfect when the spirit shall then dwell in joy, peace, harmony and love forever.

All this I truly know.

An Asthma Cure at Last.

It gives us great pleasure to announce the discovery of a positive cure for Asthma, in the wonderful Kola Plant, a new botanic product found on the Congo River, West Africa. The cures wrought by it in the worst cases, are really marvelous. Sufferers of twenty to fifty years' standing have been at once restored to health by the Kola Plant Compound. Among others, many ministers of the gospel testify to its wonderful powers.

Rev. S. H. Elsenberg, Ph. D., Centre Hall, Pa., perhaps one of the worst cases, was permanently cured after many years suffering. Rev. D. S. Hopkins, Wilson, Ind. Ter. writes May 25th, his wife was cured two years ago after eight years suffering. Rev. F. F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist, Abilene, Texas, writes was cured of Hay Fever and Asthma after eight years suffering and had no return of the disease. Mr. L. H. Johnson, of Gainesville, Ga., Manager of the Gainesville Shoe Co., writes, the Kola Compound is a death blow to Asthma. It cured my daughter after all hope had gone and words are inadequate to express our gratitude to the Importers.

To prove to you beyond doubt its wonderful curative power, the Kola Importing Co., No. 1166 Broadway, New York, will send a large case of the Kola Compound free by mail to every reader of The Progressive Thinker who suffers from any form of Asthma. This is very fair, and we advise sufferers to send for a case. It costs you nothing and you should surely try it.

PROPHECIES FULFILLED.

Noticing the discussion as to whether our spirit friends can see into the future and foretell events, and the question being debated at a meeting I attended, I related a few of the prophecies given by the guides of Georgia Gladys Cooley.

The night before the burning of the Iroquois theatre, the same was fully described in a vision given to Mrs. Cooley. She was then in Denver, Colo., and described the burning building and said, a great number would lose their lives.

She also had a vision of a Japanese seance, in which she was told by a Japanese spirit, that their people would go to war with Russia and that they (the Japanese) would be victorious. There were between thirty-five and forty people present at this time, as she was having an "at home." I have kept note of the prophecies given by the guides of Mrs. Cooley for over ten years and they have all been fulfilled.

Among others was the Spanish-American war, also the English and Boer war, and that it would be a long and bloody one. She predicted the election, re-election and assassination of William McKinley, and that Roosevelt would succeed himself; also that there is to be another assassination of a president, and the forming in time of an entirely new political party.

I could state other prophecies of not such a public nature given by her guides, all of which prove to me beyond a doubt that those in the spirit world can see into the future.

The Cause in Buffalo, N. Y.

I opened my engagement with the First Spiritual Society of Buffalo, N. Y., Sept. 4. The morning session opened with a fair audience, but the evening one was, so the chairman remarked, the largest September opening the association has enjoyed for many years, and a marked increase has favored each succeeding meeting, last Wednesday night being the "record-breaker" for mid-week meetings since the society has been in existence.

The officers of the association all seem to work in harmony and great credit is due them. The president, Mr. Leo Manger, has returned from Lily Dale, and is the right man in the right place. Being in sympathy with both the philosophy and phenomena, he is one a sensitive feels at home with on the platform, consequently good work is accomplished. Friday evening, Sept. 30, the society gives an entertainment and hop at their temple, corner Prospect and Jersey streets, and an excellent time is anticipated. Come one, come all and join the merry throng.

I cannot close this note without mentioning the excellent work done here by Mrs. J. H. R. Matteson, the renowned clairvoyant doctor, of 248 N. Division street. She diagnoses and prescribes for from fifty to sixty persons daily—some of her cures are most marvelous. No more charitable person lives than this dear woman—many poor are treated gratuitously as well as being aided in other ways, and in all her good work she is so unassuming I feel impressed to christen her "Buffalo's Ministering Angel of Love."

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

Wm. Sears passed to spirit life, at Maquoketa, Iowa, aged 72. He was preparing to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of his marriage, on October 11. He will be remembered by many campers at Mt. Pleasant Park.

MRS. WM. SEARS.

Mr. O. C. Williamson passed to spirit life, Sept. 20, 1904, at Indianapolis, Ind. He was an ardent Spiritualist, knowing there is no death. He passed out calm and peacefully, aged 54.

MRS. D. A. WILLIAMSON.

Geo. B. Payne passed to spirit life, September 15, 1904. He had only been sick two days, and his passing away was a great surprise to his friends. Mr. Payne had been a resident of Topeka, Kansas, for the past sixteen years, and was a successful real estate dealer. He was secretary of the Kansas State Spiritualist Association, and one of our best workers. We will miss him much in the labor of love, but know that he is not dead, only crossed over a little way to join the friends in the real home. Many beautiful floral offerings were sent to the home of his sister-in-law, Mrs. Anna Payne, 522 Topeka avenue, among them a beautiful "Gates Ajar," from the Occult Science Club of which he was a member, and whose work he loved much. We are thankful to know there is no death and that he has gone only a little way. Services were conducted by the writer Saturday afternoon, September 17.

A. SCOTT BLEDSOE.

Topeka, Kansas.

Dr. Georjean Miller passed to spirit life, September 13, 1904, from his home near Diamond, Arkansas. He was 64 years old. Dr. Miller had been a medium and Spiritualist all his life. He is the first medium to teach the Twelve Divine Virtues. Dr. Miller is the author of several books, among them The Guide to Immortality.

J. E. M'MAHAL.

At the home of her parents, 412 West 59th place, Chicago, Waity Weldon McClellan passed to the higher life, aged 4 years and 14 days. This little girl, like hundreds of others, seemed to have had a premonition of her going, for on the very day of her passing away, she was inspired to change her little prayer as follows: "Now I lay me down to sleep, I pray the angels my soul to keep. If I should pass away before this day, I pray that the angels will take me their way." The funeral services were conducted by Harry J. Moore from the parents' home. COR.

Harry Walter Hoeck passed to the higher life at the home of his parents, 207 E. Linn street, Marshalltown, Iowa. The wife of the deceased is a rising young medium, and she says that her husband had not been out of the body many hours before he communed with her, and even told her what he was doing. Spiritualism was firmly rooted in the soul of the departed, so to him death was but the opening of a door through which he would step into the next room, or expression of life where he would meet his loved ones gone before. The funeral services were conducted by Harry J. Moore from the family residence. COR.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

Spiritualist: Q. What has the Questions and Answers department to say of the best method to deal with fraudulent mediums?

A. The spiritual press has had a large share in bringing these deceivers before the public. Reports of seances have been freely published, written by abettors of the "medium," or credulous friends, highly colored, and untruthful. These have been nothing more nor less than advertisements. The more impossible the manifestations said to occur, the more wonder was excited. The mediums were said to be surrounded by absolute test conditions, when every condition was such as fraud would demand. Little or no discrimination has been used, and these "facts" have been published, and accomplished the object for which they were written—advertised the "medium."

The remedy lies in the managers of the spiritual press refusing to publish any account of phenomena, unless these take place under conditions which make their genuineness assured. It is not enough to say there were such conditions. There should be a specific statement of what they were, for what one may consider "tests," another may not, and the value of the manifestations as demonstrative evidence, depends on these.

If the frauds were excluded from the spiritual press, and no florid descriptions of their seances published to advertise them, they would be outside of Spiritualism, whereas they have had a partial recognition by being thus advertised for patronage; the credulous have been led astray and the world has laughed at the folly not of these but all Spiritualists.

A medium has rights, and so has an investigator. A medium makes a claim to what many persons regard as an impossibility—to have in his presence a manifestation from a spirit of the dead. This claim being so beyond the ordinary, throws on him the burden of evidence. The least thing he can do is to vindicate his own honesty, by granting such conditions as will prove that he is not the cause, whatever other cause may be assigned. If he, like a professor of magic, will submit to nothing that will prevent the "trick," that is sufficient. If you went on you would have the trick played on you.

There are physical conditions accompanying mediumship which are more reliable than rope-tying, flour held in the hands, wire or mosquito netting. The pulse-beats, the breathing, the temperature of the hands and feet, these cannot be simulated, and should be observed and recorded, for they are the valuable tests.

I have not mentioned this fraud question, because I have not time to go fraud-hunting. At least half of phenomena are genuine, and as that half demonstrates life beyond the grave it is worth the universe to a doubting soul. A thousand counterfeits do not debase the value of a genuine dollar. If I know these counterfeits are abroad my duty is to warn those liable to receive them, but that dollar is not depreciated in value thereby.

I have no interest in the counterfeiers of this country or their bogus coins and bills. When we learn that possibly a bill may be spurious, we are more careful in the examination of those we receive.

The genuine is our best protection against fraud.

Charles L. Waffle: Q. McCabe in his History of the World says that Julian, a nephew of Constantine the Great, who was a pagan in belief, when he became emporor of Rome, made an effort to falsify the prophecies of Christ concerning the destruction of Jerusalem by inviting and encouraging the Jews to rebuild their temple. But he says this work was frustrated and caused to be abandoned by fierce mysterious fires that suddenly broke out throughout the ruins, consuming the tools of the laborers, and compelling them to abandon the work.

Will you please state whether this account of such an event is in harmony with all reliable ancient history?

A. Of all the great characters that stand alone in the Roman world as the clouds of the dark ages began to threaten on its horizon, the emperor Julian stands alone. Educated a Christian, when he arrived to manhood he returned to the ancient faith, and the worship of the old gods. He was a philosopher, and when he became emperor sought to restore the ancient forms of religion. He abolished persecution, and gave equal freedom to all. Of course he was hated by the Christians who called him an apostate, and this hatred has descended to this day.

It may have been to show his contempt of the prophecy, or it may have been to propitiate the Jews, that he resolved to rebuild their temple. They were enthusiastic in supporting the scheme, and it is said matrons carried away the rubbish in clearing the site, in their silken mantes. The workmen had reached the foundations and broke into the immense vaults and passageways underneath, when the fiery waves drove them away.

Gibbon in his Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, strangely enough appears to admit this occurrence, skeptical as he usually is, and attempts to explain it, by supposing that fire-damp had accumulated in the ages since the vaults were closed, and when these were opened, the inflammable gas came in contact with the flames of the torches and flames and explosion followed. This in a superstitious age would be regarded as miraculous.

Julian placed the rebuilding of the temple in the hands of his favorite minister Alypius. The work was scarcely begun when Julian was slain in battle by a Persian arrow and Christianity triumphed in the election of Jovian. He at once restored Christianity, and destroyed all that Julian had accomplished as to the old faith.

The restoration of the temple was abandoned, and in that age of rampant fraud, the cause of its abandonment was assigned to miraculous events.

Ambrose and Gregory Nazianzen narrate the miracle, and Gibbon relies on Ammianus Marcellinus, a Roman soldier and author. The date of these "church fathers" is by no means as well known, as Gibbon appears to think it is. When the temple remained unbuilt, the inquiry was why? and the answer was certain to be the interference of miracle. The miraculous story was concocted, as countless others, by interested priests after the event, and has been repeated over and over by each succeeding generation.

Whatever may be the authority, and however much reliance may be placed on the testimony of contemporary, or supposed contemporaries,—when an appeal is made to miracle, their evidence is worthless. In the light of the knowledge of the present, a miracle is impossible. God does not act by special providence, and to contemplate him as descending from the throne of the universe, to scare the laborers away from the foundation of the temple, is a libel on his supreme character. Whatever may occur, of this we may be certain, cause and effect run in unchanging and unchangeable channels called laws, and there is no outside arbitrary power that can divert or suspend the least.

Adin Bugbee: Q. Can any reliance be placed on the "divining rod?" And how is its action accounted for? Can a psychometrist by means of a specimen of ore locate mines?

A. This correspondent refers to the branch of a tree, usually the witch-hazel, though any other kind will do as well, held in the hands, and when there is water or minerals beneath, it will bend in a peculiar manner. These rods are also made of steel.

It is no consequence of what material they are made, for they are not acted on, the influence being received by the persons who hold them. It thus becomes evident that those who are successful with these rods must be sensitive to a degree enabling them to be impressed by the stream of vibrations sent off by bodies of minerals, or water. Those only who are thus endowed are able to use the rods.

Prof. Wm. Denton, in his "Soul of Things," proves that minerals have a special influence and the possibility of locating mines by its aid. But its exacting conditions at present have not been sufficiently studied to make it a trust worthy guide, or authority.

THE BIBLE NOT INFALLIBLE.

Several statements made at last evening's session of the State Spiritualist Association by Moses Hull, while discussing the topic, "The World's Bibles, and How to Use Them," were of such nature as to surprise, if not shock, the orthodox believer.

He charged the Protestant scholars with dishonesty in translating certain passages of the bible, also stating that some of the books left out of the Protestant Bible were much better than those that were left in. As an example he referred to Solomon's "Ecclesiastes" as the most pessimistic book, "The Wisdom of Solomon," was the most optimistic, but in spite of this fact, the first book was included in the Protestant Bible and the latter rejected.

Cannot Inspire Books.

"God has not power enough to inspire a book," said Mr. Hull. "Books cannot breathe or think, hence cannot be inspired."

He also expressed the opinion that a leaf could be cut out of the Bible, and with profit replaced by some of the rules of Mohammed. Speaking of the influence of Moses, he said:

"I cannot live on the inspiration of the old gentleman from whom I was named, any more than I can live on the manna he ate."

Another extreme sentence was, "Nobody believes in the gods of the Old Testament," and "Jehovah was never much of a God; he was never the God of the world, but the God of one man at a time."

He maintained that no Bible scholar could tell how many writers had compiled the books of the Bible. "Isaiah, for example, is known to have three, the books of Moses two, Epistles of Paul seven, and there are two different accounts written by different authors of creation."

"The Bible," he stated, "is a collection of tracts, the literature of the Jews, and the book has never been understood until the last fifty years and only then by the aid of science."

Finds Some Good Points.

In spite of these opinions, Mr. Hull declared that the Bible is the Spiritualists' own book and nobody else has any business to use it. As a concluding feature of his lecture, he proved by a series of Biblical incidents from the Old Testament, that the Bible approves of Spiritualism.

The convention will hold two sessions to-day, one this afternoon at 2:30, and this evening at 7:30, when Miss Elizabeth Harlow will give the principal lecture.—Minneapolis Times.

HE BEGAN LIFE AS A MINISTER OF THE GOSPEL, AND BY EVOLUTION BECAME A PHILOSOPHER.

My friends:—It seems proper that I, a stranger to you, and in the ordinary meaning of the word, almost a stranger to the deceased, should explain my presence here to perform a delicate and important function in the ceremonies by which we are to deposit the mortal remains of our deceased brother in their final resting place.

My home is in the city of Belleville. Several years ago our brother was in our city transacting some private business. During his stay I casually met him. To meet a stranger in our city is by no means an uncommon occurrence. But when I met him I felt an intuitive desire to know him. I introduced myself to him, and in return he told me his name and stated the occasion of his sojourn. We at once engaged in conversation, and by the time we conversed a few minutes I felt that I knew him as well as if we had been born of the same parents and reared around the same hearth-stone.

Afterwards we met on several occasions and each time had more or less extended conversations.

Finally I invited him to dine with me on Sunday at my residence. He came. We spent the whole day in conversation. It was to me indeed a feast of reason.

It would be impossible for me to accurately define the limits of our conversation. In a general way it encompassed the subjects of history, politics, religion, morals, sociology and business.

When he was ready to take his leave he said to me, "Mr. Dill, when I die I want you to speak at my grave." To which I replied, "Mr. Cox, I will do so, provided I survive you, on condition that you speak at my grave in case you survive me." He replied: "I know you will survive me." Afterwards I met him on several occasions, but we never had another extended conversation.

Time passed on. I had often thought of the promise, but would sometimes say to myself, perhaps this request was made on the spur of the moment, and Brother Cox has long since forgotten it. But it was not so.

Yesterday morning the telephone bell in my office rang. I at once answered it—"Hello, who is this? Where are you?"

The reply came: "My name is Cox. I am the son of W. H. Cox, of Virden, Illinois. My father died in St. Louis at six o'clock this morning. He will be buried at Virden to-morrow afternoon. It is his desire that you speak at his grave."

I replied: "Oh, yes; I remember it all. I will be there."

To properly portray the character of a deceased person is a work of extreme delicacy. But speaking to an audience few if any of whom are older than he was, and all of whom have known him all your lives, it makes my task comparatively easy.

He is the product of the pioneer days of our great state. He was the first white child born in what is now Otter Township, Macoupin county, Illinois. He came into this world, November 22, 1829. His father was among the earliest of those brave and hardy spirits who wrested the soil of Illinois from the savage Indians, and was possessed of the virtues which characterized pioneer life.

Our brother's opportunities for acquiring an education were indeed limited, but he said that he did not remember the time when he could not read. He was a student all his life. Possessed of fine physical and intellectual endowments, he, by dint of constant reading and study acquired a vast amount of knowledge and was an unusually well informed man.

As a conversationalist he was both fluent and charming. He was more than a student, he was a philosopher. He was a man of affairs, and the inventor of labor-saving machinery for the promotion of agriculture. He was a writer on scientific and other subjects. He was a kind father and as a husband, he was a lover and an adorer of his wife every hour and every day of the forty years of their married life. His home life was ideal. The memory of his wife, who preceded him to the grave, was held sacred by him above all things else.

Above all, he was an optimist and a humanitarian in the broadest sense of these great words. He was a man of rare good temper. Advancing years, instead of souring his mind, really broadened and sweetened it. He remained intellectually young to the end of his life.

Inspired by the strong, deep and aggressive religious sentiments which swayed the minds of the early settlers, he in his early manhood became a member of the Methodist church, and was licensed as an exhorter by Peter Cartwright, the greatest of the pioneer preachers.

The younger portion of the present generation have but a faint conception of the ardor, the piety and the deep-seated religious convictions of the pioneer people. They were in deed and in truth, a God-fearing people possessed of the real spirit of the Crusader. The preachers of that period were strong, eloquent, powerful men—thoroughly and courageously imbued with the spirit of their calling—preaching the gospel with rigid intensity and great severity. Under the spell of their lurid and powerful eloquence, and especially at the camp-meetings, men and women would go into an ecstasy of happiness, would clap their hands and sing and shout praises to God until they were overcome by sheer exhaustion.

Surrounded by these influences it was entirely natural that our brother should have felt that he was called to preach the gospel.

In 1861 the flag of the nation floating over Fort Sumter was fired upon by the hostile guns of the South. A wave of patriotic indignation swept over the North with the fury of a hurricane. Obeying the impulse of patriotism, our brother entered the army as a private, but was soon promoted to the lieutenancy of his company, and in addition to the conscientious discharge of his duty as a soldier, he, on proper occasions, preached the gospel to his comrades.

In his funeral sermon at the church, Mr. Want, your learned and talented young minister, told you he had never conversed with the deceased on the subject, and that he did not know the reasons which caused him to leave the church.

I feel that I am commissioned by our brother to give his reasons as he gave them to me. By the close of the war he had reached the 36th year of his life. He had read much and had thought and reasoned much more than he had read.

Being of a benevolent and optimistic temperament, he became a firm believer in the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man.

With conscience as his guide and truth as his only standard he began to question the foundation of the faith that had been so dear to him.

"And Jesus spake unto them, saying all power is given unto me in heaven and earth." "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten son, that whosoever believeth in him shall not perish but have everlasting life."

"He that believeth on the son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not on the son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him."

"And he said unto them, go ye into all the world and preach his gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned."

Pondering the above, and many other similar texts, he was forced to the conclusion that the teaching is, that only those who believe in Christ can be saved; and that all who do not so believe, "shall be damned." It is hard for a man to break away from the moorings of his ancestral faith; to a conscientious man the travail of the parting is long and extremely painful.

Our brother reasoned: There are now nearly fifteen hundred million human creatures living on this earth; not to exceed four hundred million of these live in Christian countries, or have ever heard the name of Christ; and it is certainly true that a vast number—perhaps one-third—of those living in Christian lands do not believe in Christ.

Since this doctrine was announced to the world eighteen centuries have rolled into the eternity of the past.

During these long centuries, more than forty crops of humanity have grown upon the earth, have matured and have been harvested by the sickle of Death. Can it be possible that of this innumerable host, only the few in each of these generations who have believed in Christ have been saved, and that all the rest have been lost—damned?

He further reasoned: God is good, all-wise, beneficent—the giver of all life. Can it be possible that during these long centuries He has used the earth for the production of souls for the malignant purpose of damnation. Can it be possible that eight-tenths of all who are now living are doomed to a like fate? No. It is not possible. His reason said no. His judgment said no. His conscience said no. It is not true. I cannot preach it. Therefore, I sever my connection with the church.

The storm which tossed his soul as a ship is tossed by the angry wave, had subsided—the calm prevailed.

Was it retrogression or was it progression?

Men will give different answers to this inquiry, according as their predilections may be.

One thing is certain, he interpreted it as being a forward advance, bringing him nearer to the summit of Wisdom.

To him it was gaining of a broader, clearer, and more beautiful view of life and duty. It enabled him to become a preacher of the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man.

The ominous clouds that formerly obscured his vision had cleared away—the clear sunlight of reason had taken their place.

He had discovered what to his mind and his conscience was truth. He was happy. Was he right? Who knows? God knows—let us judge not. To him it was a victory—the triumph of his conscience. To himself was right.

Viewed in the new light, the problems of life and duty became simple and easy to him. He saw that in the fixed and certain course of nature we are born, live and die. That the journey from the cradle to the grave is fixed, unalterable, unchangeable—all must travel it! That the grave can mean but one of two things: Either annihilation—extinction—the blowing out of the candle; or the opening of the door and the entry into another and grander state of life and existence.

Whichever it is, it was fixed by the laws of God before the first man appeared on this globe and has always remained unchanged and immutable; that the Creator in his infinite wisdom has not made manifest to man the full meaning of death, but has left it problematical in the minds of men.

But to our deceased brother this view was clear: that whatever is the status of death, it is a fixed and invariable status; if it means extinction—so it is, and our hopes and our desires and our prayers to the contrary will not change it; and if it means immortality—life everlasting, so it is, regardless of our beliefs to the contrary. Our brother rested his views—let us say faith—on no uncertain grounds. He said, God is good, and whatever He has in store for us is best for us. I trouble not myself about the manner of the blessing. I know that whatever it is, it is best.

He knew that the better we live and the more uprightly we order our lives, the better it is for us right here and right now. That God is good and will give us what we deserve.

He had no more fear of death, in its after consequences, than he had of nightly resting upon his couch for refreshing sleep. He lived and died a philosopher and an optimist. He had the profoundest respect for the honest opinions of every human being, although some of these opinions may have been of no value to him; yet because they were the honest opinions of the holder, they were entitled to his utmost respect.

He likewise had the highest respect for all churches and religious institutions of every name, nation and creed in the world, and believed they were all trying to do right, as they understood it.

He had no patience with the criticism which denounces the religions of the world as being false and hypocritical.

He witnessed with much pleasure the progress of the spirit of liberality in the world, during the last forty years.

He was an interested observer of the assembling of the Congress of Religions at the World's Fair at Chicago in 1893. In this august assembly, all of the principal religions of the world were represented by their respective ministers. There was a friendly exchange of opinions and the evolution of the grand ideas that each of these religions in its own way is seeking the same objects; and these are to do reverence to the Creator of the Universe and to teach that all of the peoples of the earth are children of the same great parent.

A little more than a year ago, at the dedication of the Great World's Fair at St. Louis in the presence of a great assembly of people, among whom were the president, an ex-president of the United States and the diplomatic representatives of many of the nations of the earth, the opening prayer was made by a Jewish Rabbi who invoked the blessings of the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, the God of the Christians, the God of the Mohammedans, the God of all nations of the earth. Forty years ago, such a prayer would not have been tolerated. During the last forty years, men have made wonderful progress on every line of thought and achievement, and the progress in religious thought has not lagged behind, but has kept pace with all other progress.

Beneficent results have flowed therefrom. The insanest fiction that ever afflicted the minds of men, that of vicarious atonement, is rapidly evaporating.

The Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man is no longer a theory. It is an established tenet in the theologies of the world. God is the father of all. Religion is now not so much a matter of belief, as of conduct.

Our brother was a lieutenant, yea, a captain in the Grand Army of Thought, and in his humble way did good and faithful service in its cause. His work on earth is finished. He has won the respect of right-minded men.

His spirit returns to its Creator after a sojourn of seventy-five years in the body, grown, matured and enriched by its earthly experiences.

We depcait its mortal remains in the purifying bosom of the mother earth with the assurance that he has made the world better by living in it, and that he has earned the rewards which come of right doing.

After Death--What?

BY CHARLES DAWBARN.

CHAPTER FIFTH.

Reading the other day a description of spirit life by an inspired mortal, the details being given became almost absurd if we suppose will-power to be working without tools. We were told of a span of ponies, with silver bits, and russet leather harness, before an elegant carriage waiting for the driver and his friends. Of course this description really emanated from the mind and earth experience of the medium, but that is not the point we are making. Its truth or error, with respect to the next life, is our present inquiry. Let us begin with those silver bits and see what they have to tell us.

We all know silver is metal, usually embedded or mingled with other ores, such as galena, copper, etc. If you drop even a silver dime upon the floor no will-power yet evolved will pick it up and put it in your pocket. That is to say, unless you give will-power a tool to do it with. The tool in that case will probably be your finger and thumb. If the coin has gone into a hole, or has fallen into water, a very different kind of a tool may be needed before will-power can capture and restore it. But when you come to the raw silver, mixed up with other kinds of raw planet, the task of getting it out becomes much more difficult. Rock may have to be blasted, and then crushed. Will-power may be in the dynamite and the stamp mill, but it is no use alone. And when you come to smelting it, and then pouring the liquid into the moulds, will-power cannot even burn its fingers, for it has no fingers to burn. Just cripple the intelligence of the operator by an accident, and will-power, whether of God or man, disappears. All these processes, or their equivalent, and many more of the same kind, must follow one another before that silver has been hammered into "bits" for those two spirit ponies. And when spirits, or anybody else, talk about doing it by will-power, they are talking nonsense, if they leave out the tools.

Of course, to the lazy man who doesn't like hard work, the idea of doing it by will-power has seemed just lovely. And he is ready to sing all day, and most of the night, about Beulah Land, and "The good time coming." We stop here, just a moment, to ask our "fog-land" visitors to tell us how they use will-power to manufacture those silver bits without tools, and some hard work? Of course, this same line of thought and questions applies to the pony carriage in all its equipments, item by item, so we will not stop to dwell upon them. But we open up another line of thought when we turn to the "russet leather" harness.

We all know that leather is the skin of an animal, specially tanned and prepared. At first that may seem to suggest, like our former question, just a little will-power, aided by good tools and plenty of hard work. But we have really a far more important question now before us, for we have been taught by "spirit return" that across Jordan there is no death. It naturally occurs to us at this point that if the animals whose skins have been used for that harness are still alive, they must be very liable to catch cold in their bones. If spirits have discovered some way of taking off a hide without the animal minding the operation, why don't we hear from "fog-land" how it's done? We have reason to believe from earth experience, that the animal's will-power will kick when it feels the knife or other tool used to do the skinning. For us even to suppose the spirits can get skins for their leather without hurting or injuring the animal, is a scientific absurdity. So if the spirits have leather harness, or leather anything else, we may be sure there is both suffering and death on the other side of "fog-land." Yet further, the tools with which will-power sows and cuts that leather into harness do not grow ready-made, even in heaven.

Now does the reader wonder that such talk about ponies and carriages, and silver mounted harnesses on the other side of death fatigues my imagination? Yet it is all included in our inquiry, "After death—what?" I know some enthusiastic believers will declare they have seen spirits manufacture actual woven cloth, when outside a cabinet. Even admitting this to be genuine phenomena, it only proves that the tools with which spirit will power was doing the work were invisible to the mortal. For I would repeat again and again that will-power without a tool is useless to man or god.

We read now and then of banquets prepared as welcome to some escaped mortal. Exactly the same difficulties are in the way of our acceptance of that story. We cannot think of anything being prepared or cooked without tools of some kind, requiring hard work. There may be pleasant and unpleasant ways of doing such work, but we wait in vain for our "fog-land" visitors to tell us how it is done. Our experience with "critical points" has not so far shown us hard work and pain on one side, and just fun and a good time on the other.

Many of us have read of a very musical mortal and his experiences after he escaped from his earthly body. He tells us of a grand orchestra, with its conductor beating out time and rhythm with his baton. That means no telepathy over there—no soul communion with soul, but you have to watch the conductor wave his wand, as in earth life. Of course if you come from Germany you will have to wear spirit spectacles, so as to be sure to see how the conductor wants you to accent the music, and express the thought of its composer. The organ must have its pipes and keys stirred by will-power, while another will-power blows the bellows. In fact the whole building, whether temple or cathedral, is but a duplicate of those the mortal knows, and requires will-power and tools for its construction just as in earth life.

I don't want to weary the reader, but merely to stimulate him to think for himself. In other words, to apply his own will-power to the will-power over there, and see the result. I venture to feel sure that just like the sensitive, he will find himself in fog-land. I have wanted with my whole soul to discover some great truth about the next life that would help me to answer the query "After death—what?" But I find myself baffled at every attempt.

There is first of all, right in the road, the great fact that the shape of a spirit body cannot be like that of our mortal form. Every independent thinker will now acknowledge that. Next there is the further fact that only an abnormal immortal spirit can reach "fog-land" where communication between the two worlds becomes possible. And there only can he meet the mortal, who himself must be abnormal. Therefore every spirit teaching about his home life is necessarily abnormal and uncertain. Yet further, the next life cannot be a glorified copy of this, for the conditions are totally different. It is on the other side of a "critical point" where everything changes, even if the raw material be the same. So I find myself at the close of this article remaining convinced that man is immortal, and can get back as far as "fog-land," but all the same I am unable to answer my own question "After death—what?" I simply do not know, and cannot find anything reasonably certain, save that the accounts given us by spirits through mediums, will not bear scientific examination, and are for the most part absurd and non-sensical.

But, all the same, there are very important truths we have gained from our research. We have made up our minds that there are very important changes of form on the other side of death. That was one stop. Then we saw that such changes would affect mentality as well as form. That fact should surely occasion most of us a feeling of deep satisfaction. Whilst we differ from one another in our faculties in earth life, yet there is to most of us something lacking to round out our manhood. For instance, some can almost revel in expressions of art. Painting, sculpture, and every intellectual expression are dependent upon form. Shape the brain differently and art vanishes. Yet these gifted mortals, crowned with genius, are often woefully unbalanced mentally. They lack in one direction as much as they overflow in another. And all of us lack something essential to round out our manhood. Most of us crave some special gift or talent, denied us in earth life by the shape of our brain. I, for one, rejoice in the thought that the other side of death there is the possibility of change of form that may bring the longed for talent.

There is another side to this picture. There are many in earth life who make most unlovely and unlovable expressions of manhood which are really effects of form, whether produced by heredity, or other prenatal cause. Many a poor fellow struggles against himself all his life. That is to say, against the shape of his brain through which his intelligence must act. He fights and fails, and fights again as long as he lives. To him the certainty of change should be glorious. And those who never struggle or fight, but live in a hell of their own passions, may find beyond the "critical point" a new expression of manhood that carries with it eternal possibilities of progress that could not be gained without this coming change.

There is much that points to an almost certainty that only part of a man finds expression in earth life. The shape of his brain will not permit the whole man to peep out. So it may be the most pitiable specimen of a man who shall be the most grandly rounded out when the whole of him can find expression. In this certain fact of a tremendous change of form everything becomes possible.

But all the same, let us acknowledge our present limitations, as well the equally necessary limitations of the returning spirit. By using our common sense, based on scientific investigation and classification of facts, we can at least determine what is not truth, even though told most solemnly in the name of God or spirit. And for the rest, the certainty of the coming "critical point" may fill us with joyous anticipation of a development of our own manhood impossible on earth. But this development will demand a change of form, as we have seen in this brief study of "After death—what?"

SEEING SPIRIT FORMS.

The Physical Body and the Spiritual.

To the Editor:—Have just been reading The Progressive Thinker of September 3, and find it a remarkably interesting one.

Mrs. Eva A. Cassell's letter is indeed "a warm number" but full of facts, and Prof. Loveland knows just how to "hit the nail on the head." Mrs. Aiken's experience as related by Mrs. Carlyle Petersilea is worthy of note and stands as proof of the saying of Paul "There is a spiritual body and there is a physical body."

Have had similar experiences, in which I have left the physical form and while standing clothed in the spiritual body and its clothing could see and thoroughly examine the physical one. Not only have I looked upon the physical form as leaving it temporarily, but have withdrawn from it sufficiently to visit other scenes on earth as well as view the beauties of the other world.

When we learn how to know the real self and unfold our soul power we can withdraw from the physical at will and experience many elevating sensations and educational journeys.

In many of my visits away from earthly haunts I find I am accompanied by loving spirit attendance, while at other times I go alone.

The vision of Mrs. Petersilea, when a child, no doubt portrayed to her the spirit form of some departed dog. A picture form of a dog is sometimes presented through the psychological influence of a guide, particularly the Indians, to indicate protection, etc., but time forbids my going into details.

Many papers have discussed the possibility of Rider Haggard's vision in which he claims to have seen the spirit form of his departed canine friend. I have contended for years that such exists, having on various occasions been visited by the spirit forms of the household pets that have left the physical form. Many animals are almost human as far as intelligence is concerned, and I have great doubts as to this power of intelligence becoming annihilated at the change called death.

LAKE HELEN, FLORIDA.

Camp News—New Pavilion—Ocean Excursions.

The approach of cool weather reminds thousands that Florida is the genial home for northern people during the rigors of winter. Already people are making inquiries about the "Land of flowers and oranges."

The crop of oranges now promises to be the largest since 1894. At Lake Helen the groves are loaded with this delicious fruit, which the coming three months will tint with that golden hue which makes an orange tree the most beautiful sight in the sunny south.

At the camp the carpenters are preparing to erect the new pavilion, which is to be 60x75 feet. It will contain a dance hall 60x60 feet and three rooms (each 15x20 feet) on one end for the Ladies' Auxiliary Society. The old pavilion will be taken down and its lumber used in the construction of the new pavilion—the rapid growth of this winter home making the building of the new pavilion a necessity.

The summer dwellers at camp and vicinity are planting their fall gardens, and intend to have the vegetables ready for the camp tables.

Mrs. Spencer is fitting her rooms for letting in suites or singly.

Mr. Johnson and son are to build the new pavilion.

Mr. and Mrs. Giddings still remain in the Apartment House.

Mrs. Fisher-Cordott will open a boarding house at Daytona this season.

Mrs. Emma Huff and Mrs. Hardenburg will conduct the lodging department at the hotel, which will be opened for guests Nov. 1.

Mrs. Bartholomew has built six boats for people who will place them on Lake Colby.

Mrs. McGarvey is expected about October 1.

Judge Underhill and son with family will come to camp in October.

Mr. Myers has erected a fine new house on his fruit farm at Macey Dell.

H. M. Clark intends to sail October 26 and will conduct my party for that date. He will build a cottage for rent.

Mr. and Mrs. Carrigue are both intending to sail in November. Mrs. Carrigue is recovering from her late illness.

Mrs. Witters and Mrs. Vogt have spent the summer in camp, and report favorably of the climate. They are now enjoying a feast of persimmons, and have had plenty of peaches and melons.

The pumping engine is in working order and the camp is well supplied with water.

The regular session begins February 5, and closes March 26, 1905. There will be Sunday meetings from December till the sessions opens.

W. J. Colville, W. F. Peck and Mrs. Carrie Twing are engaged as speakers. F. Corden White will be the platform test medium; Grace Hawtin the soloist, and Miss Duncan the organist.

For special information about rooms, board, etc., write the secretary, Mrs. J. D. Palmer, Willoughby, Ohio.

Excursions.

My ocean excursions will leave New York City, via Clyde line, about October 12, October 26, November 10, November 24, December 8, December 22, January 11, January 25.

REMARKABLE EVIDENCE OF SPIRIT RETURN.

Bill Robison, a Spirit Playmate, Comes to a Boy in Englewood—A Bookcase Opened by a Spirit—Rider Haggard's Remarkable Prophetic Dream—Other Wonderful Visions Induced by Spirits, Illustrating the Fact That Spirit Return Is Common to all Humanity.

There lives in an Englewood (Ill.) flat building, says the Chicago Tribune, a family made up of a young man, his wife, and three children. The head of the family is a hard-headed, sober, intelligent salesman, devoted to his children and particularly to the youngest, a boy of 4.

About a year ago this child began to prattle about "Bill Robison," apparently a purely imaginary character, since, none other of the family had heard of him or seen him. Each time that little Pete got into mischief his mother would ask, "What made you do that, Pete?" and each time the answer was, "O, Bill told me to do it."

Sometimes the little fellow would indulge in furious bouts at fisticuffs with nothing before him as an antagonist but the empty air. "What are you doing now, Pete?" always elicited the answer, "O, I is fighting Bill Robison." This vagary of the boy amused his parents, and they did not discourage what they regarded as a harmless illusion of childhood. By dint of amused questioning they finally got a pretty good description of little Pete's imaginary comrade, and had many a laugh when the boy, pointing at passing wagons or a vacant lot would cry out gleefully, "There goes Bill Robison! Hello, Bill!"

Coming home about dusk a few weeks ago the father was a bit startled to see a strange child sitting on the front steps of his flat building. He was startled because the little one fitted exactly Pete's description of the visionary "Bill Robison." As the man approached the small figure arose and started away, and when called in friendly tones refused to answer or turn back, but walked away into the darkness. Regaining his calmness the man then made haste to follow the boy he had seen, but he was unable to find any trace of him. Entering his flat the father, with a simulation of playfulness, asked Pete if Bill had been around. "O, yes. He's just gone away." As a matter of fact nobody had called, and Pete had been playing alone in the flat all that day.

Three days later, it being Saturday, in the middle of the afternoon, Pete's father came home, letting himself in with a latchkey. Sitting alone, evidently playing with Pete's blocks, a strange boy, the same he had noticed a few evenings before, was in the well lighted hall. The man was glad of a chance to banish a fancy that had disturbed him and called out, "Pete, O, Pete!" But there was no answer. He stepped into the parlor hoping to find some of the family, but nobody was there. Then he remembered that they had planned a little picnic for that afternoon in Jackson park, and that he was to find them in the wooded island. He stepped back into the hallway to question the small visitor, but the boy had gone. Search of every closet, room and corner of the flat revealed nothing, nobody. The blocks were where he had first seen them. The doors were all locked on the inside, and no windows were unlatched except three in the front, which are on the third floor.

That is about the substance of this unusual hallucination or visitation as the man told it to his physician. Eyesight, nerves, stomach, mind, and blood are all right with the father. He doesn't pretend to explain the affair, and he hasn't told his wife what he saw or thought he saw, but he has come to believe in ghosts for the first time in his life.

Bookcase Opens Itself.

Almost an equally peculiar happening is vouched for by a woman of excellent poise and intelligence who boards in one of the suburbs of Chicago. One of her fellow-boarders, a person of about 30 years of age, was lost in the Iroquois disaster, and the room thus made vacant by death, being a bright, cheerful apartment facing east and south, passed into the possession of the narrator of the following incident:

The belongings of the former tenant had been removed, but the pictures, furniture, books, and carpets, all of which were the property of the house, were suffered to remain untouched. Nothing disturbed the new occupant for the first two weeks except that she always found the bookcase open when she returned from the city in the evening and when she woke up in the morning. Being a woman of extremely neat habits and possessed of a good memory, she was anxious to keep the books safe from dust and from the hands of the only young child in the house, and so she was careful to lock the case and to remember that she had done so, always leaving the key in the lock, since other members of the household might wish to use the volumes.

After a fortnight, during which the opening and locking of the bookcase occurred twice a day, the annoyed boarder determined to keep the key under her pillow at night, and to take it downtown with her when she went away in the morning. The first morning after this resolution, being certain that she had turned and tried the lock and placed the key beneath her head, she awoke to find the bookcase open as usual. The door, keyless and motionless, was wide ajar, and the bolt of the lock was drawn as if it had not been shot. The young woman, mystified now, explained her experiences to the landlady at breakfast, but was assured that nobody else had a key and that no one was known to have any need or desire to open the bookcase.

During that day, the case having been locked and tried and the key carried off by the tenant, the landlady made several stealthy visits to make sure that no intruder had tampered with the bookcase. At each of five such visits she found everything undisturbed, but when her tenant came home she could not forbear accompanying her to the room.

Search Discloses Unmailed Letter.

Both were women of sound nerves and great common-sense, yet were dismayed, but anxious to solve the mystery upon rational grounds. The woodwork of the door must be warped so as to force back the lock and throw open the door; perhaps the closely wedged books caused the pressure. So reasoned the women, and proceded to withdraw all of the volumes from the shelves. They had taken them all out and were replacing them without coming upon any satisfactory explanation of the phenomena when the older woman, who owned the house and its contents, said:

"Here's a book that must have belonged to poor ——," mentioning the name of the former occupant, "I overlooked it when I packed up for the relatives."

It was an old, well thumbed school arithmetic, and as the woman held it out there fell from the pages an unsealed envelope, containing papers and addressed. Inclosed was a new $100 bill, and the letter explained the purpose with which the writer was sending it to the dear one addressed. There is no need, for obvious reasons, to divulge or discuss the sad, old sweet romance of that unsent letter. It was forwarded as the hapless writer had intended, and now the wondering new tenant of that room has no trouble keeping her bookcase locked. The landlady, who has no imagination, or, at least will not encourage it if she has one, thinks that it was the rearrangement of the books that mended matters, but the woman who should know best is convinced that no natural agency could have turned back the lock without the use of a key or the application of some material tool.

The root of all superstition," says Bacon, "is that the affirmative or active strikes us more than the privative or negative; and that, there, a few times hitting or presence countervails ofttimes failing or absence." "The number of fulfilled dreams are—e. g., to the numberless dreams which are meaningless as shadows of April clouds—as a handful of sand to the sands of the seashore. On the other hand, there is this to be said for the superstition of those who believe in the forewarning of dreams, that there are cases where the affirmative or active outweighs naturally and incommensurably the privative or negative. "Two men distinctly saw you take the spade," said the magistrate to the Irishman in the dock for the theft. "Two men! Sure, yer honor, I can call twenty men who didn't see me take it."

But the few times hitting, or presence, naturally outweighed with the magistrate the ofttimes failing, or absence. A single circumstantial dream which is fulfilled in all its details reasonably outweighs a million that mean nothing. Take Mr. Rider Haggard's dream about the death of his dog, or the dream the young woman told to four of her fellow passengers on board the Norge when that ill-fated steamer was passing Rockall in a fog on its home trip from New York to Copenhagen: "It was late one afternoon, and we were in mid-Atlantic. I had noticed that the young woman had been looking sad for some days, and at last I asked her why? At the time I spoke to her the vessel was supposed to be close on Rockall and was expected to pass it that night. A dense fog set in, and this seemed to make the young woman more sad than ever.

"After some hesitation she told me that she had on three successive nights a terrible dream, and it had oppressed her spirits greatly. She dreamed that the Norge had run ashore on Rockall and that many lives had been lost. I tried to cheer her up by pretending that we had by that time passed Rockall. But it was no use; she only shook her head and insisted that some terrible disaster was coming. I then spoke to the captain about it, and asked him how many corpses he thought would be lying on Rochall that night. He said he could not tell, and I then asked him if Rockall was a dangerous place. He replied that it could not be expected that Rockall would be as safe as a place in a smooth river, and he added that he thought the young woman would soon get over her fears, and when they reached Christiania they would all have punch together; but, as all the world knows, the Norge was piled up on Rockall on its next voyage exactly as in the young woman's dream."

Blackwood's guarantees the truth of the following story, told to Lady Clerk of Penicuick by her father, Dacre of Kirklington: Young Dacre, in order to attend classes in Edinburg, lived with his uncle, Major Griffiths. One night he got his uncle's and aunt's consent to join a fishing party which was to set sail the next morning from Leith. But that night Mrs. Griffiths screamed out in her sleep, "The boat is sinking! Save them!" The major awakened her and asked: "Were you uneasy about the fishing party?" "O, no," she replied, "I had not once thought of them." She then fell asleep again.

In another hour she cried out in a dreadful fright, "I see the boat going down!" Again the major woke her, when she said: "It has been owing to the other dream I had, for I feel no uneasiness about it." After some conversation they both fell sound asleep, but no rest could be obtained for her. In extreme anguish she exclaimed: "They are gone! The boat is sunk!" When the major once more awakened her she said: "Now I cannot rest; Mr. Dacre must not go, for I feel that, did he go, I would be miserable till his return; the thoughts of it would almost kill me." Indeed, upon the strength of this dream Mrs. Griffiths induced her nephew to send a note of apology to his friends, who went without him, were caught in a sudden storm and drowned.

Of course, the best known and attested of all these historical dream visions is that of the assassination of the prime minister, Spencer Perceval, by John Bellingham in the lobby of the house, as seen in sleep by John Williams of Redruth. In his dream Williams, being in the lobby of the house of commons, saw a man enter dressed in a blue coat and white waistcoat. Then he saw a man dressed in a brown coat with yellow basket buttons draw a pistol from under his coat and discharge it at the former, who instantly fell, the blood issuing from a wound a little below the left breast.

Hereupon he awoke and told his wife of his dream, of which she made light. Even when he dreamed it a second time she observed that he had been so much agitated by his former dream that she supposed it had dwelt on his mind, and begged him to try to compose himself and go to sleep, which he did. A third time the vision was repeated, on which, notwithstanding her entreaties that he would be quiet and endeavor to forget it, he arose, it being then between 1 and 2 o'clock, and dressed himself.

At breakfast the dreams were the sole subject of conversation, and in the forenoon Mr. Williams went to Falmouth where he related the particulars of them to all his acquaintances whom he met. Six weeks later Williams—who had never, except in these dreams, seen either Spencer Percival or his assassin—went to London and to the house of commons and pointed out the exact spot where Bellingham stood when he fired, and that which the prime minister had reached when he was struck by the ball, and how he fell. The dress both of Mr. Percival and Bellingham agreed even to the most minute particulars with the description given by Williams.

We could give you testimonials by the thousand of those we have cured of stomach trouble in all forms and stages, but they would not tell to you what the treatment will do for YOU. The only absolute proof is in the treatment itself, and knowing the Wonderful Cures we have made for others, and believing that we have a treatment that will Positively Cure any case, no matter how complicated or long standing, or how many have failed in the past, that we will send a two weeks' treatment to any one desiring to test it. Many are cured by this first treatment alone. Why not make a trial of it yourself and learn what it will do for you. IT IS FREE. MAN'S DIVINE ESTATE.

A Prophecy of the Age of Alchemy.

Biologists and physiologists have searched long and patiently for a solution of the mystery of the differentiation of material forms.

No ordinary test can detect any difference in the ovum of fish, reptile, animal, bird or man. The same mineral salts, the same kind of oil, albumen, fibrine or sugar of carbon is found, not only in the egg or germ of all forms of life, but in the substance or tissue of the bodies of all the varied expressions of materiality.

The answer to this "Riddle of the Sphinx" is found where Bio, or life; Chemistry merges into Alchemy, over the door of which is written "It is finished"—"Let there be light."

Professor Loeb says, "The ultimate source of living matter is chemical." To the Biochemist the above is a truism. There is no such thing as inert, or dead, matter. All is life.

The base of all manifestation is mineral. Out of the dust, asnes or minerals of the earth physical man is made.

The twelve mineral salts are the basis of every visible form, animal or vegetable. No two different forms have exactly the same combination of the minerals, but all have the same minerals. These minerals, inorganic salts, are the twelve gates of precious stones described by John in his vision. When the divine Word speaks the mineral atoms, or molecules of its body into a certain formula or combination, a germ or egg which is the basis or nuclei of the form to be manifested materializes. This little plexus of intelligent atoms then commence to attract to their center by the law of chemical affinity, which is only another way of saying God in action, other atoms known as oxygen, hydrogen, nitrogen, etc., and thus condenses or materializes them, until the building is completed according to the plan of the Architect, or Designer. Thus the Word, operating through chemistry, is the Alpha and Omega.

There would be no eagle, fish, horse or man without the word, Divine Wisdom, and there would certainly be no word if there was no substance to obey the word, and likewise there would be no substance if there was no law of chemical affinity, or action and reaction, whereby the operation of materialization and dematerialization may be carried on.

It will be demonstrated in the near future that so-called nitrogen is mineral in solution, or ultimate potency, which explains the reason why nitrogen enriches the soil.

The Aatmospheric Product Company at Niagara Falls, whose promoters expect to extract and condense nitrogen from the aerial elements by electrical process, are the forerunners of machines that will manufacture our food and clothing direct from air, and also produce heat and cold as needed by different rates of vibration of the substance, body of God, everywhere present.

Neither light nor heat comes from the Sun, for they are not entities that come or go. They are effects or results. The Sun is surely a great dynamo or vibrating center of Divine Energy, which by its thought moves the atoms of our earth envelope and chemically causes light and heat in different degrees, according to its good will and pleasure by vibration or motion.

By chemistry, the court of last resort, will man come into his divine estate. He will then place the "Poles of Being" and produce vegetable or animal forms at will.

Thus the prophecy of man's dominion will be fulfilled, for he will have attained knowledge that will enable him to manufacture a psychoplasm (if I may be permitted to coin a word) from which he can bring forth all manner of vegetable or animal life.

Let man stand upright and splendid,
Let woman look up from the sod—
For the days of our bondage are ended
And we are at one with God.

IMPORTANT.

Owing to the fact that the courts have in every case decided against Psychic Healers who advertise to cure the sick without drugs, where the case has been between the U. S. government and a Healer (deciding that it is a clear case of intent to defraud) to advertise to diagnose also, without leading symptoms being given. Therefore I have decided, as a physician in good standing, to not advertise my gift of Psychic Healing, but will diagnose disease and not ask a fee for so doing. I will therefore hereafter diagnose disease

THE ONLY RAY OF PURE LIGHT.

Your paper is practically the only ray of pure light that comes to this part of our benighted land, and for this it is perhaps more highly appreciated than it is in sections where Spiritualism has an established footing. I find it impossible for me to get along without it, and when sometimes I fail to renew my subscription on time and in consequence miss a few numbers I am "all broke up"; everything gets wrong and stays wrong until the great and good Progressive Thinker again becomes a visitor at my humble but happy home. This time I concluded to show my appreciation of your noble efforts for our great cause by doing a little missionary work for the paper, so I went out and after a little effort succeeded in persuading two of my "liberal" friends to join me for a year's subscription.

W. B. WEEKS.

H. K. Dietz writes from Iowa: "You will please find enclosed draft for one dollar for my subscription to The Progressive Thinker for one year. I belong to the Marshalltown camp association; was elected one of the trustees this year, and in order to be in touch with all progressive thinkers, I want to take your paper."

IT IS A WELCOME MESSENGER.

Mrs. M. C. Dudley writes from Delphos, Kans.: "Your paper is a welcome messenger to my heart and home, bringing a useful supply of good things every week. It is wonderful how much good and truthful reading you send us for so little money. I don't see how any one can get along without the good old Progressive Thinker, especially if a true Spiritualist."

HE SENDS FOUR YEARLY SUBSCRIBERS.

It is certainly a pleasure for me to express my sincere appreciation of the adanced ideas on Spiritualism under discussion in the columns of The Progressive Thinker, and also the liberal tendency shown throughout to the various opinions of those who, in searching for the truth themselves, are ever willing to assist others; and as an earnest of my sincere desire to aid in acquiring and demonstrating a more thorough understanding of the great truth underlying spiritual laws, I shall consider it no less a duty than a pleasure to induce all whom I may, to become readers of The Progressive Thinker, and hope others will follow suit.

I am both proud and glad to see The Progressive Thinker forging its way ahead. The great unseen Infinite Force, with its expressive wisdom, is behind it, beyond a doubt. No other modern Spiritualistic paper has ever had such phenomenal success.

To the Editor:—I cannot begin to express to you in writing how highly I appreciate your paper. It is a star of the first magnitude, a brilliant light that is illuminating the pathway of thousands of weary mortals who thereby are enabled to take up their cross and bear it bravely and unfalteringly up the rugged steps of time, until the head-lands of immortality rise up before them, and purifies their hearts and lifts them to an exalted plane of living. No. 771 is a gem in itself; so many good things does it contain that I cannot enumerate them. The article by Walter Devoe is worth alone the price of the paper. I cannot afford to lose one number.

TELEPATHY.

To the Editor of the New York Sun:—This quotation from the London Jewish Chronicle may interest your telepathic readers:

The chief rabbi of the British empire, Dr. Herman Adler, some years ago made a journey to the Holy Land, on which occasion an amusing incident happened. Dr. Adler was once riding on an ass in the desert, at evening tide, and began to read the "Mincha Prayer," including the so-called "Amidah" (eighteen benedictions). When Dr. Adler had arrived at the conclusion, which the reciter generally utters while going three steps backward, he was rather perplexed, as he could not observe this Jewish custom when sitting firmly fixed on the back of the ass. The latter, however, as if moved by some religious inspiration, backed slowly and solemnly three steps, and then went on in its usual sleepy way, to the great satisfaction of its astonished rider.

Dr. Josef Chotzner, who at the last meeting of the summer assembly of the Union of English Jewish Literary Societies, held at Ramsgate, told this incident, is evidently no believer in telepathy, for he added the following rather comical comment: "It is difficult to say whether the pious ass in question was or was not a remote descendant of Balaam's ass mentioned in the Bible as having had a spirited conversation with its cruel master. But, if there were any truth in the theory advanced by some modern theosophists that the souls of dead men entered sometimes the bodies of new-born animals, then the ass carrying Dr. Adler might have been possessed of the soul of some departed Jewish rabbi who in his lifetime had been very particular about going backward the customary three steps."

New York. ISADORE SINGER.

To the Editor of the Sun:—Professor Goldwin Smith doubts the existence of mental telepathy because he knows of no medium. The medium is this: The mind impresses its thoughts upon the brain, the brain in turn records them upon the aura, the soul's subtle emanation which envelops the whole body to the dimensions of a cubic foot or more; the aura in turn registers the thoughts upon the ether—so there are three records of every thought and act. The brain record is physical and finite, the aura record belongs to the soul and passes on with it when it shuffles off the body, and the ether record is as eternal as God himself.

The ether is so sensitive that it not only records all that is taking place in the universe, but it reflects all that will take place, hence prophecy. Every thought and act of the individual is born of the close association of these three records of his previous thoughts and acts. When we try to recollect an event of yesterday, what happens? Why, the mind becomes concentrated and draws on ether, which reminds the aura, which opens the brain cells; and the process is thus ordered because the ether is infinitely more sensitive than the aura or the brain. The sage, the genius or the prophet concentrates his mind with such potency that he causes the ether to reveal to him great secrets, over which he himself is surprised. It's God's way of inspiring him.

Telepathy, however, is the act of a keenly sensitive mind, frequently in a passive condition, drawing the records of another mind from ether. It is an act that the Hindu yogis can voluntarily perform; and in India mind-reading is an ordinary occurrence.

Prof. Smith says there is no place for the supernatural. No, for there is no such thing as the supernatural. Everything in the universe is natural, even the immaculate conception, the turning of water into wine on the spot, and in fact all the so-called miracles. They are as natural as sunshine or rain, but they are on a plane above the world's present state of mind, faith and experience; therefore they are as impossible to us as it is for Prof. Smith to read another person's thoughts from the ether.

The great mistake that we make is the supposition that we know more of the laws and the prophets than was known in the past. Our ignorance of the past, the very far distant past, is the axe laid at the root of the tree of our faith. With our long habit of thought toward the earth, we have so clouded the ether about us that so trifling a mystery as thought transference is put in the category of the so-called supernatural. Perish the word supernatural, and let us be honest and speak of our ignorance.

To the Editor of the Sun:—"Me, too," would enter the ranks of believers in telepathy and "stand pat" with "J. H. N." and "W. F. G." My experiences have led to the conclusion that there is some special attribute of the human being which makes him capable, to a certain extent, of exercising a divine power—namely, of being present in more than one place at the same time.

Will some erudite contributor to your columns step forward—Goldwin Smith, for instance—and explain this phenomenon? The world is waiting.

THE NEW HELL.

So Attractive That Men May Choose It as a Place of Residence.

"St John the Revelator say 'a new heaven and a new earth,' but it was reserved for the prophets of the present day to declare a new hell." Thus writes George T. Knight professor of Christian Theology in Tufts College, in the July number of the North American Review. Professor Knight goes on to describe the change which has taken place in the popular conception of hell within recent years—a change which he ascribes to the growth of altruism or sympathy in human nature. To-day the pulpit is not so ready to consign human beings to a place of torment, nor are congregations now so often harrowed by the old lurid pictures of that place. While Calvin, Luther, and the great ones generally held that all children of the heathen and so many of the children of Christians as were unbaptized were sent to endless punishment in hell, to-day "practically no one questions that all children are saved." This single change of doctrine, says Professor Knight, has reduced by one-half the number of those consigned, by men, to perdition. He continues:

"The number of the lost is still being further reduced by both Roman Catholics and Protestants. Certain of the former have pointed out that the doctrine of 'no salvation outside the church' has been overstated. To begin with, the church has made no such authoritative declaration as that salvation is limited to its own members. On the contrary, it has taught doctrines that seem to imply the salvation of great multitudes of non-Catholics.

"As for Protestants, there is still to be heard on occasion a thorough-going expression of the old doctrine, but a more common opinion, even among conservatives, is reported in the words attributed to Dr. Patton of Princeton. He said (according to report) that the number of the finally lost will probably be in about the proportion of those now confined in prison on earth. Dr. Briggs, who is reckoned somewhat less conservative, said that the number would be 'inconsiderable.' And it is by extending "probation" to the future world, as Luther did, or by some substitute for the Roman Catholic doctrine of purgatory, that provision is made and opportunity is given for doing so much more than the church on earth can do.

"In short, there seems to be, among people in general, four states of mind with reference to this subject. The old doctrine of endless punishment still appears on some books; the doctrine of the annihilation of the wicked has also many advocates; a large number are quite non-committal and do not know which way to turn; and, finally, there are many expressions of the larger hope. Among thoughtful Protestants in Germany, France, Great Britain and America, it is not clear which one of the four states of mind is most largely represented—though in America there is no doubt that endless punishment is commonly taught, or at least held. But the number of those who are to be subjected to its discipline is no longer the great majority of the race; it is rather 'the proportion of those now held in prison,' or even some smaller estimate."

Concerning the state or condition of the lost, says Professor Knight, the change has been quite as thorough as concerning the number of them. In the strenuous days of the Reformation, and among the leading Protestants, we are told, no ray of compassion lighted up the darkness of their thoughts of the Pit.

"To the question whether the blessed in heaven will not be saddened by seeing their nearest and dearest ones tortured in hell, Luther answered: 'Not the least in the world.' Jonathan Edwards said: "The view of the misery of the damned will double the ardor of the love and gratitude of the saints in heaven.' Andrew Welwood thought: 'The saints will be overjoyed in beholding the vengeance of God.' Samuel Hopkins expressed the opinion that the sight of hell would be 'the most entertaining' to all those who love God, and would give them the highest and most ineffable pleasure. The great Dr. Bellamy capped the climax by an elaborate calculation, based on science and philosophy, in which he estimated that the happiness of the blessed in heaven would be increased 9,600,000,000 times on account of the misery of the damned."

But now, Professor Knight states, the very revulsion of feeling from such opinions has become itself a ruling element in theology. As an instance, he quotes several representative theologians. Dr. Farrar, referring to the preaching of the Reformation period on the subject of hell, said: "These wanton exercises of the imagination assume the aspect of deadly blasphemy against him whose name is Love. We can scarcely refrain from the question which one has asked: 'What crimes of men can merit the endless tortures here set forth, except the crime of conceiving such tortures, and ascribing the malice of their influence to an all-wise and holy God?'" Dr. Briggs has said: "The preachers preach the damnation of the heathen; and the hearers hear and accept. But they do not believe it in their hearts. If they did, they would be more worthy of damnation than the heathen themselves—unless they should at once give their whole lives and their property to the missionary cause." Adds Professor Knight:

"Long ago John Wesley had said, 'Calvin's God is my devil!' and now there are many who say the same of Wesley's God. And these new opinions are expressed, not merely by Universalists and Unitarians, but by members of orthodox or conservative churches—who alone are here quoted."

Professor Knight thinks that there is danger that this tendency will go too far. "The new hell," he says, "is often made so pleasant that it is liable to be chosen by bad men as a place of residence."—Truth Seeker.

"NEW THOUGHT."

A Candid Consideration of Its Relation to Spiritualism.

Having read with much interest the instructive and amusing words of Dr. J. M. Peebles, printed in your issue dated September 24, I venture to make a few replies to some of the venerable pilgrim's inquiries. With the thoroughly just statement that many excellent bodies of liberal-minded people, including Unitarians, Universalists and others, as well as Spiritualists, teach the goodness vs. the depravity of human nature, we must all heartily agree, but the great drawback in very many instances is that no attempt seems to be made to apply these noble doctrines to the actual betterment of present human conditions, except morally. Now the New Thought advocate seeks to practically extend the beneficent influence of all this wholesome doctrine to the building of bodily health and business prosperity. Very great good work is being accomplished ethically by many noble men and women who still believe to a lamentable extent that they must continue physically sick and financially almost destitute, and that any exertion either mental or physical must be followed by pitiable fatigue. To at least nine out of every ten persons, even in liberal religious circles, the idea of health and freedom as expounded by professedly New Thought advocates is a startling revelation.

If Dr. Peebles, or any other capable exponent of honest and elevating spiritual philosophy, can prove that there is nothing essentially new in the doctrine of "New Thought," he can with equal clearness show that there is nothing any newer in the teachings of the simple Spiritualism which he so enthusiastically defends, seeing that on his own showing, the teachings and mighty works of the great spiritual heroes of ancient days were quite as noble and fully as wonderful as any that have been proclaimed or demonstrated since 1848.

Dr. Peebles, in his 84th year, is hale and vigorous. Dr. Martineau lived to within a few days of 95 and was mentally active to the very close of his useful educational career. These are brilliant examples, one within the Spiritualistic, the other within the Unitarian fold, but take the average Spiritualist or Unitarian, whichever you may choose to sample, and you will not find any very marked degree of health displayed by either over the average measure demonstrated by orthodox Christians on the one side and Materialists on the other. It is, I declare, to very many Spiritualists and religious liberals, as well as to others, a very novel theory that our mental states rule our bodies and influence our circumstances though whenever they are cornered in discussion, the average representative of any intelligent community admits that mind has a great influence over body, and no one knows exactly how great that influence may be. A very safe statement and a very true one, but merely to believe it true does not apparently deliver the majority of such believers from the thraldom of either sickness or poverty.

Dr. Peebles makes fun of Prentice Mulford's widely quoted saying, "Thoughts are things," but we can advocate all that is fundamental in New Thought teaching without once using that possibly inaccurate phrase. We can well content ourselves with affirming that our mental states become ultimated in physically corresponding conditions, and we may further rest assured that our connection with the spiritual universe is regulated more largely by far than we usually admit by the quality of our thoughts as well as by the bent of our affections.

Dr. Peebles asks a few definite questions in your valuable paper, to which I wish to append brief answers.

1. Without attempting to speak authoritatively I define "thought" as contemplation, meditation, concentration of attention upon an idea or object. Thinking is a process which induces the vibration of substance, therefore the vibratory effects of thought may be regarded as primarily psychical and secondarily physical.

2. Intuitive ideas enter the mind, usually unbidden; thought is a deliberative process. We can think about what we have received intuitively, but to think implies deliberation, not simple receptivity to divine or spiritual influx.

3. By "transference of thought" (possibly an imperfect term) is signified communication of information without employing ordinary physical channels of communication. My own belief is that we by thinking steadfastly in a given direction set waves of ether in vibration and that we also co-operate (often quite unknowingly) with unseen intelligences who are in accord with our intents and purposes.

4. To assume that thoughts produce anything without the thinker's energy may be unwise, as thoughts have no existence apart from the energy which gave them birth; still it is conceivable that the effects of our thoughts may be far greater than we realize, and that after we have set a current of force in motion the consequences of that motion may far exceed our knowledge.

5. The New Thought program is lamentably deficient if it does not undertake to prove the continuity of individual life beyond physical dissolution, and in so far as New Thought advocates omit this important element their program lacks much that it requires to render it complete. It is but fair to admit that there are people in the world just now whose interests seem concentrated upon physical health and worldly prosperity, and to these the question of life beyond the grave does not appeal as forcibly as it appeals to others.

6. If Dr. Peebles or any other gifted writer will kindly suggest to the New Thought Federation a good substitute phrase for "Thoughts are things," I will very gladly in my speech before the convention in St. Louis move its adoption.

Now as to the good doctor's lack of hair, if he really cares very much about his benevolent and venerable baldness (which I greatly doubt), I quite believe that by suggestive treatment his hair can be thickened; but that is a very unimportant aspect of the New Thought movement, because when a man is hale and hearty, though over 83 years of age, a little hair more or less is insignificant. All that is new is not necessarily true and all that is true is certainly not new in the broadest reasoning of those words, but good Dr. Peebles may rest assured that all New Thought advocates are interested in preventing and vanquishing those conditions which induce "obsession," while many Spiritualists, alas seem powerless to rid themselves of dark influences or they would not write such piteous letters to the newspapers. Speaking for myself alone I can truthfully declare that for the past twenty-five years and over I have never once been misled by following a direction conveyed to me by my spiritual directors, and these faithful guides who never desert me most positively declare that by constantly dwelling in thought upon high and holy influences those who are now "demon obsessed" can be relieved from their sufferings, but they must live hygienically in order to protect themselves against unpleasant consequences. Hypocrisy and deception are never justifiable, but no one can fairly be styled hypocritical or deceitful who boldly proclaims what he or she conceives to be true.

Dr. Peebles deserves our gratitude for honorably vindicating the rights of Unitarians, Universalists and others who were in the field before either Modern Spiritualists or Mental Scientists; is it not then unfair to claim for an exclusive Spiritualism much of the liberal thought which Spiritualists have appropriated but which they have not originated?

Are there not then two women, in place of one woman, wearing old hats decorated to look like new, and if one of these ladies is reproved for her headgear, the other should be reprimanded also.

I am reading "Spirit Obsessions," which the author very kindly sent me, together with a truly friendly letter which I greatly value. Without boasting I can conscientiously say I only want the truth, and this I do not find bottled up and labeled, but diffused in all systems, but not unmixed with error in any way. Therefore I remain a free and also a progressive thinker.

W. J. COLVILLE.

It is given to finite creatures to "know" the structure of the earth, but to them the structure of the heavens is a "sealed book."

In what is accepted as Revelation (Gen. 1:6, 7, 8) 6; we find the following: "And God said, 'Let there be a firmament in the midst of the waters, and let it divide the waters from the waters.' And God made the firmament and divided the waters which were under the firmament from the waters which were above the firmament. And it was so. And God called the firmament heaven."

This description of the structure of the heaven is very indefinite, for it only describes the division of space between the dense solid water of the earth and the etherealized water in vapor that floats upon the surface or bosom of the earth's atmosphere, which is the "firmament" God made.

At the outer verge of this space, which bounds the first heaven the second heaven begins, being composed of the primal gases, oxygen, hydrogen, nitrogen and carbon.

Beyond the outer verge of this second division composed of the gases begins the third heaven, composed of magnetism; and beyond the outer verge of these magnetisms begins the electric which fills the immensity of space, and is the world of light.

Now this description of the structure of the heavens is not a chimera or myth, for the reason that it answers to the structure of the earth and its products, which is the crucible in nature that is unceasingly generating these imponderable elements, all of which in relative combination are held in the firmament (earth's atmosphere), the atmosphere sifting out the primal gases; the gases sifting out the magnetisms and the magnetisms sifting out the electrics, and the electrics sifting out Intellect and Life, life being manifested in two systems—conscious and unconscious, or voluntary and involuntary.

This brief description of the structure of the heavens is sustained by an analysis of human life, which is in the image of the Infinite Life.

Human Life has its four prime divisions, and two semi-prime divisions (i. e), physical, spiritual, intellectual and soul, and the semi-prime divisions are semi-physical and semi-intellectual.

These divisions of human life are the laboratory in Nature's imponderable matter that is constantly generating the elements of the heavens as described above, the coarser producing the finer and the finer constantly producing the coarser by mutual exchange in conformity to the laws of nature; hence construction and destruction go side by side in producing the great phenomena.

Nature being infinite her destructive principle does not annihilate matter, either ponderable or imponderable; it only changes its form and still preserves its identity, so that all varieties come forth each after their own kind.

Were it not for this, there would be no births in the animal world, nor reproductions in the vegetable world, nor new planets formed in the mineral world; hence construction and destruction are the handmaids of nature in producing the sublime grandeur of her wondrous phenomena, which in time will unfold to us the grandeur of a new heaven and a new earth for, "Behold I make all things new for my reward is with me, to give to every man according as his work shall be." (Rev. 21:5; 22:12).

MORTON HARTWELL.

SCIENCE SEES NO SOUL.

But That Is No Proof It Does Not Exist.

If searching science fails to find a fact, is it proof palpable and positive that the fact does not exist? Does science attain the most sublime heights, reach the most profound depths, and exhaustingly explore all that vast expanse between? Is science infallible, that its pronunciamento must be taken without question as the correct and indisputable interpretation of all law in its relation to phenomena?

Has not the term science become the synonym for so much that is incompatible with sound sense, that it is little wonder the laity are led to look upon its dogmatic declarations in a spirit of ridicule? The professors, like the priests and preachers, do not seem to recognize the fact that there are a few folks among the plain people possessed of slightly developed thinking faculties; they do not regard all as science that masquerades under the dignified cognomen, which has become so comprehensive as to embrace everything from tadpoles to theosophy, all applied principles in mechanics and mathematics, the guesses of metaphysics, all manner of speculative thought, philosophical theoretical and nonsensical; even religious vagaries are now dubbed science, and we may yet expect a monument in Washington to the memory of the great Mormon science founder. The cells become disarranged, and there immediately emanates from some cracked cranium a new science, or a new theory to fit the facts to substantiate an old obsolete idea.

It is not presumed you will dare consider the possibility of conceit, or disturb the standard of scientific egotism when is calculated the distance of the farthest star, or computed the importance of its composition, and when in a recent paper an eminent professor informs you that science finds no soul and no place for it in the organism of man, just arrange your affairs accordingly and lie still.

Look, listen and learn! "The most rigid scrutiny made by careful and conservative scientific psychologists during the last twenty years, has been totally unable to detect any trace in body, or brain or find any analogy in nature concerning the existence of what is popularly called the soul."

Might it not be possible for the soul to elude the scrutiny of the exact and erudite scientist; not in a playful, purposeful game of hide and seek, but because of its constituent composition of character being of a substance so subtle that the faculties of sense of the scientists cannot take cognizance of its presence.

If a perfume may interpenetrate a substance filling a given space, may not the same condition prevail with that which may escape detection owing to the absence of odor? And may not the elementary substance of the human body be thus interpenetrated by the soul, inseparable from the life principle, without being duly discovered by the strictest scrutiny of all the sharpest scientists of the genus homo?

Is science so conceited and egotistical as to presume that nothing in all the measureless immensity of the universal maze of mystery can evade or escape its searching scrutiny and be subjected to its analysis?

Is all that land and sea possess
Born of law, and love's caress?
Do these alone make manifest
All that lives of bad and best?
Or is some share of each divine?
Brought to be, and kept as thine
O God! O Law! O Love! We feel
Through thy power does truth reveal
To us the ways of happiness,
And with joy dost richly bless
All that lives in this vast whole,
And hast given immortal soul.

DO ANIMALS HAVE SOULS.

If human beings wouldn't be quite so selfish I believe they then would easily see that animals have souls. Soul is the inner center of life and intelligence. Without it there would not be impulse, feeling, reason, comprehension or love. We know that most animals possess many of these faculties.

Sometime when prejudice and selfishness on our side have been cast aside, then we will see and understand that animals also have intelligent souls (intelligent according to development in the turn of evolution), and are our brothers, and that it is a crime to kill and eat them.

About twelve years ago my smart and pretty dog, Charley (a shepherd) died. Shortly after I bought a pup, a snow-white, long-haired setter, a beautiful dog after he was full grown, and a true companion of my children.

About a year and a half ago, he, Planko, died. The boys made him a grave and buried him, as they did their first comrade. Whenever we had a private seance Planko always came, and was seen by the three mediums at the same time. He was a special favorite of one of the boys, and would go to him first; then when he called his name he would stand with his front feet upon the knees of the boy, looking in his eyes, wagging his tail.

One evening a medium said: "I see Charlie, but he is apparently dead; he is lying on the table."

"Ah!" I remarked, "astonishing!" seeing at once the purpose. "He is not dead! Come on, Charley, we all love you."

At once there came life into him. He shook his tail and got up, running around the circle barking, the mediums said. He came to me and the boys, licking us with his tongue in consequence of his enjoyment, having learned that we loved him. Since that time, both Charley and Planko come to nearly every meeting.

After Planko died a friend gave us a short-haired setter, which, when about six months old, I discovered was having an attack of the mange (a skin disease). I tried to cure him with all kinds of remedies, but without success. He suffered badly. The neighbors told me to kill him, but I would not do that, and so one night I dreamed that Planko came to me, having a sore neck, and when I examined him I found he had the mange, and then I saw that the hairless skin was covered with a white mass of something like soda or lime. I awoke, and analyzing my dream, I came to the conclusion that Planko, feeling pity for his brother dog, must have tried to impress me what to do to cure him. I applied baking soda, but it did no good; then I slacked a quarter of a bushel of lime, put that in a washtub and added two buckets of water to it. We then laid the dog into this solution of lime and rubbed him all over. We let it get dry on him and then washed him off with cold water. He got a little raw on his skin, but is entirely cured.

SOMETHING THE MATTER!

Considerable talk has resulted from the address of Rev. C. B. Allen, of Woodward Avenue M. E. Church, Detroit, in which he attacked, at Adrian, Mich., the "ancient" methods of church work. He said in part:

"The great triumphs of science and invention during the past few years that amaze and hold us in their magic spell are due largely to what we call improved methods, but men have improved the methods of transportation and agriculture, and mining and commerce. The old Indian Chief, Pontiac, understood electricity in a way and kindled his wigwam fire with electricity as a spark made by rubbing two pieces of punk together. It is that same spark that Tesla has by his methods of application brought to a million volts. Pontiac could burn wood, but Tesla can melt the mountains and destroy distance.

"The men of this world would not think of running a bank, a factory or a railroad after the methods in vogue 30 years ago. And yet sometimes in our effort to keep to the Pentecostal power we advocate the methods of 2,000 years ago. Business has adopted new methods. The children of this world are wiser than the children of light. Even the saloonkeepers have adopted modern methods. They are not the keepers of isolated taverns of colonial days. They are organized systems of immense wealth and tremendous power. A saloonkeeper is tenfold more the child of hell today than he was in the days of Washington.

"I doubt whether there is a church in this conference that has prosecuted its high and holy calling with as much cleverness and has been as prompt and sagacious in carrying out the redemptive purposes of Christ as the rascals of Grand Rapids in their ignominious water deal.

"We with all the machinery of our great church have hard work to hold our own. See the way in which the liquor dealers defeat the temperance people. The temperance people are a vast majority—in Canada, two to one, and in this state three to one. And yet by clever methods of organization the liquor dealers are not only able to build a machine that will control their last man for their cause, but they make converts right in our class-meetings and our prayer-meetings, and we have to watch lest they have the bishops dedicating Manhattan saloons.

"But did not Christ say that we are not to be sheep among wolves, and did that not imply that, like good sheep, we ought not to care if we are eaten up? We forget that we are to be as wise as serpents as well as harmless as doves. Let the followers of Christ be harmless as doves, but wise as serpents. Not foul and venomous as the serpent, but wise as the serpent.

"The Christians have about all the qualities that are good. They have high sentiment; they have sweet spirits and are soft-hearted. They are like Christ in all this. But in the real campaigns with wrong we must add to soft-heartedness, hard-headedness. We must still be sweet-spirited, but wise. We must keep the sentiment and not fail in sense. This is where Wesley and his methodical followers excelled. He built an ecclesiastical organization and applied to it the power of God, and England was turned upside down. Before his time it is said the pulpit had softening of the brain. Smart sons were given to the law, and dullards to the teaching of schools, and if one failed in teaching school he was made a minister and procured a living. Wesley the statesman systematized everything. Methodical Methodists had men seeking holiness as scientifically as they seek gold. He taught men to build up character as business-like as they build up a fortune.

"We have held on to the church of Wesley as far as possible. Some of the machinery to-day is as dry as a rain-soaked bone out of which not even a hungry dog can get sustenance. We have got much of it so stereotyped that it is set.

"I go among business men of to-day who have nothing but contempt for the church. It has impressed them as slow, and as abstract, unbusinesslike and unreal.

"They come into our quarterly conference once or at most twice, and here the same questions are asked that were asked forty years ago. The number of Sunday-schools, the number of times the pastor has preached to children, the number of times the pastor has catechised the children, the number of classed formed for religious instruction and the number of advocates taken on.

"One man said to me not long ago, 'Don't you think that you can answer the questions without my help?' These men come to conference and look into the machinery of the church. They see men held in places because of sentiment about their grade who are not successful fishers of men. They hear the appointments read and find that occasionally it is the custom of the conference to take men who have made an unmitigated fizzle in the churches over which they have been appointed pastors and make them presiding elders. The man of the world would not do that. They see the preacher preaching fifty morning sermons and fifty evening sermons and no apparent results. The hostile public and the indifferent public are not aroused. Something is the matter."

When I returned to consciousness and opened my eyes, it was light and the sunlight was streaming in at the little window over the berth that was just at my right. I was stretched at my full length on my back on the hard floor; my mind was clear, and I had no difficulty in recalling the wonderful events, and terrible experiences of the past few hours, or days; I did not know which. I found at my side the flask I had emptied in my frantic efforts to find something that would quench my thirst; I picked it up and smelled of it; I was not able to tell what it had contained, for I had had very little experience in my life with the different things known as strong drinks; I imagined now it was some kind of liquor, I only knew now it was some kind of liquid that had put new life in fast waning strength.

I felt that I might eat; my parched throat seemed more moist, and when I tried to arise, I found my strength had so far returned that I was able to stand quite well; I staggered out of the room, and seeing a door on the other side of the cabin, I opened that, to find another room like the one I had just left. Again I tried to find some place, that if possible I might see something which I could eat. In vain I sought for food in that place, so at last, thinking of the forecastle, I staggered on deck.

Then it was, that the full realization of my horrible situation came upon me with all its force; before this, my senses had been dimmed; now I saw, I felt, I sensed; I was alone, on the broad ocean. On a helpless wreck of a once proud ship. Alone. All alone. Think, O man, of the awful situation. Conceive if you can, of the full meaning of that word, Alone. Perhaps you have an exalted position in the government of some powerful nation; maybe you have never been separated from every friend and acquaintance and placed amid scenes, where every one every thing, was foreign to your eye, every sound was foreign to your ear. No one to speak to; no sound but your own tread, or perhaps your own voice; if you have, then you can form some faint idea of my feelings when I found myself conscious of my situation at that time.

I wish I had command of some language that had words that would express my thoughts and feelings at that moment; there is none known to the people of this world. The only way to know my thoughts is to follow these pages, and try to learn by the aid of those with whom I later became acquainted; for it was by the aid of their instructions that I now record my experiences aboard that wrecked ship.

Suffice it to tell, I found a supply of provisions in the forecastle, and in the ship's stores, which I later found in the hold of the vessel.

So, time wore on. Days came and passed, and I kept my lonely vigil on that lonely drifting vessel. Every day many times did I scan the horizon in my vain hope of descrying some sail, with the hope of discovering some way whereby I might be rescued from my living, floating tomb. I raised a signal of distress as best I could by the aid of an oar. I kept a sharp lookout for any land that might show itself. This lonely vigil I kept up for two and fifty-eight days. My record of time I kept by scratching on the wall of the cabin with a piece of nail; and oh, how often I counted those scratches as day slowly followed days; after that date I failed to keep any record, for I considered my possibility of rescue as hopeless, therefore a record would be useless. How much longer I remained on that helpless wreck I do not know.

Finally my stock of provisions was nearly exhausted; my original supply of fresh water had long since been used, and had no rain fallen I should long before have died of thirst; as it was, I used such receptacles as I found below and placed them on deck and kept myself quite well supplied with fresh water. I found a good supply of fishing tackle on board. I also found a Bible; the only reading matter I could find; I read, and re-read that book until I could almost repeat every word of it, and it afterward proved a great source of amusement to the people I later found myself among.

My only other diversion from the monotony of that lonely voyage, was pulling the to me unknown varieties of fish from their briny homes; some of them were of such hideous shape, that quite often I cut the line and let them go back to the water without touching them; others were so large that I was unable to pull them over the side of the vessel, while others looked as if they would make good eating, and as I had discovered a good supply of lard and salt pork, I was at no time without the necessary means of cooking them. Another thing I was fortunate in finding was a good supply of salt. I found the cargo to consist partly of that necessary adjunct to the welfare of mankind. So, although I was afloat in an open boat, on an unknown sea, I was quite well provided with the necessaries of life; and after the first few days in my floating prison, and I had fully recovered my reason, I was never without a light at night, or a fire when necessary, until the last few weeks.

Thus, weeks and months went by. Then, a new trouble began to appear. I had noticed for several days, that the fish were less numerous, and those I caught were much different from any I had seen. I also discovered that the temperature was growing colder; I could no longer be on deck in my shirt sleeves; the weather was slowly but surely growing colder. I thought of many reasons but could not fully understand the cause of the change in the temperature, until at last it seemed to dawn upon me that perhaps I was nearing the south pole. Then, a new horror presented itself. Possibly I should drift on, and on until I was stranded on the icebergs of that unknown frozen country of which I had heard so little, and knew less.

I was not mariner enough to know that I was even then so far south as to be out of the path of all vessels; so I still had hope that I should be rescued. The weather continued to grow colder, the fish grew more scarce; I could see that my stock of provisions were growing less day by day, my supply of water was nearly gone, as there had been no rain for several weeks, and now, it was so cold that all water left on deck would freeze in a short time; and to increase my sufferings, my means of keeping a fire was so scant I had my fears that I must in time find myself without the means of cooking my food. My fears increased as the cold grew more intense; I was finally compelled to keep a little fire all the time when awake, and cover myself with more blankets at night; and when on deck I had to wear extra clothing; my hands and feet began to be paralyzed with the cold; and as an increased horror, the nights began to lengthen; the light of day was of very short duration, but the nights seemed to have no end; finally there was no day, and to add to the already almost unbearable horrors of cold and darkness, a fierce snow-storm set in, accompanied with a terrible gale not unlike the one which had dismantled the ship; and deafening roars of thunder, with the most vivid flashes of lightning I had ever seen. I could not keep warm, neither could I see anything when on deck even if I could have lived there.

As I had found a passage leading through the hold of the ship from stem to stern, I was not compelled to go on deck only for snow, to melt for such water as I needed. All the time the old ship was rolling and pitching; going, I did not care where. I expected every minute she would roll over, or pitch head foremost beneath the terrible waves that I well knew were constantly dashing ever her. I almost prayed she would go down and so end my long suffering. I thought of suicide to end my long imprisonment. I think I should have committed that rash act, if I had not thought I had learned the fate of those who destroy their own lives, while reading that Bible I read so much during my imprisonment; but I had learned that no suicide could have a hope of heaven, and I was not prepared to encounter a worse hell than I had been in during those terrible months on that old hulk.

I almost cursed my fate. I thought of my friends left in my old mountain home. The thought of that expression I made on that morning when this once proud ship left its moorings, "that I could get along without friends," came to me with its full meaning. Oh, now, if I had one friend. If there was one who would or could speak to me even in an unknown tongue; if there had been even a rat on that ship to look at me, I would have gladly welcomed it, and protected it from all harm. But no, even the rats seemed to see the future of that ship, and failed to come on board when it left port; and now I had been alone so long that my own voice seemed to startle me, and now in that long, dark, fearful night, I seemed to live an age in every minute.

I listened for a sign that the storm was abating. I now had no means of telling day from night. There was no day, it was all night. How long this strain might have continued on my shattered nerves, I cannot tell, but from sheer exhaustion I fell asleep and awoke again nearly frozen, to find the condition of things unchanged. I went to the cabin hatchway and tried to open it that I might discover if the day had returned; I found the hatch so securely fastened that I could not open it; I procured an axe, and after pounding on all sides, in the belief that it was frozen, I found it was beyond my powers to open it; and peering out of the little window of my little room, which I had discovered was the captain's state room, I came to the conclusion that I was buried in snow and ice. A new torture was now added to my already heavy load; that of being buried under tons of snow and ice, with no possibility of rescue, even if there was any to discover the floating wreck.

Again I tried to lift the hatch, but was compelled to give it up. I procured something to eat from my now fast depleting larder, and piling numerous blankets on my bunk, I lay down beneath them and hoped to die. I lay long, and suffered all I ever had, over and over again; I finally awoke with a start and a gasp. I discovered that I could not breathe; I instantly realized that I was being smothered. My candle had gone out and I was in total darkness. I began to be delirious for a few minutes at a time; my head seemed to split with extreme pain; I, with the ship, seemed to be whirling around at a great speed; the noise of the raging storm was slowly dying away; I began to grow warmer, and I was lost to the terrible troubles of the past weary months.

My last thoughts, as I now recall them, at the close of that long, weary, stormy, eventful voyage was, This, indeed, is welcome death.

CHAPTER IV.

A bright sunshine shaded by a light haze, just enough to soften the light and heat to please the senses; not dazzling, not heating; yet the air is so clear, that an unbroken view is presented to the eye to an unlimited extent. Everything which the eye rested upon seemed to stand out boldly, whether near or remote. Every line or curve was plainly visible on everything even though it might be miles distant. Every sound was distinct, yet there was a continuous hum of noises of every possible kind, and they were not confusing; but all seemed like the harmony of a great grand orchestra of harmonious music. The air seemed to be pervaded with a delicious perfume, such as one would delight to revel in when tired and overworked by duties of a long vexatious business day.

The beings, men, women, children, animals, reptiles; in fact, everything that showed animated life, partook of that harmonious melody that would give rest and enjoyment to tired souls. The trees with their heavy foliage of various colors, of not only green, but all the hues of the rainbow, waved in perfect unison and seemed to vie with each other, with the perfect flowers of all kinds, in furnishing their share of the aroma that was floating in that atmosphere so clear, so invigorating, that one seemed to float through it without the exertion of a single force. The ground on which one walked, seemed to be soft and yielding to the tread, as if it was in unison with all else, birds, of which there was a great variety seemed not afraid, but all floated near, and were not molested by animal or man; animals of all kinds roamed at will, and made no war on anything. The water, which was abundant on every hand, shone like burnished silver; it was so clear that the most minute pebble could be plainly seen at the greatest depth; yet it did not dazzle the sight, because of the perfectly transparent atmosphere with which everything was surrounded; boats of every description floated on its silvery surface, or darted seemingly at will, and without visible means of propulsion in every direction; a few were like the leviathan steamships in these modern days, but the huge smokestacks and great machinery were absent. The grass on the hills seemed like the finest fur, it was so delicate to the touch, and all kinds of herbivorous animals could be seen lazily grazing on every hillside.

No rough stone walls or fences could be seen in the country; there were huge rocks and towering cliffs, to vary the monotony of the beautiful landscape. There were babbling streams flowing on through the broad shaded valleys towards the greater rivers, lakes and broad ocean. On the hillsides and in the valleys, could be seen the grand and beautiful and stately old mansions and villas, half hidden by great tall grand old trees. There were wonderful cataracts, where the sparkling waters dashed over the tall precipices on the gray old rocks below; and bridges that spanned the deep chasms.

And yet, with all these grand exhibitions of nature, and man's handiwork, everything was of the most exquisite symmetry. There were no sharp angles in all the grand panorama. It seemed to be the grand enchanted spot of the universe. There seemed to be not one thing to be wished for to complete that picture; everything was perfected harmony; and all things, whether above, around or below, seemed to be, simply to help all the rest to complete the grand harmonious whole; nothing was wanted, and every desire seemed to be anticipated; and to desire, was to have.

This was the situation I found myself in, when I recovered from that terrible nightmare on that ship. I felt so happy to realize I was at last delivered from my living tomb in which I had been kept so long, and had suffered so much, that my ecstasy know no bounds. My first thought was: this is compensation enough for all my sufferings.

But where was I? Was I dreaming? was all that vast panorama a beautiful delusion? Had the horrors of the past photographed themselves on my soul so indelibly, that now in my dream for a few minutes a relaxation had caused a reaction? Was I to awake to a continuation of all the horrors of the past? I endeavored to reason that I was conscious, and in my right mind; I asked myself if I was in my rational mind; if I was delirious, as I was at intervals in my last hour on that dismantled ice and snow-covered ship. I exercised my limbs; I frantically waved my arms; I shouted, I bit my tongue; I pinched myself in many places. To each and every endeavor I received a satisfactory response.

The grand transformation from that living tomb, with the accompanying gloom of cold, snow, wind and terrible pitching and rolling, and all the horrible noises, seemed so quick; and now, I could not see the slightest trace of my former condition, that I could not bring to my mind a full realization of my present indescribable harmonious surroundings. How long had it been since my delivery? By what means, and by what passage had I been transferred from that rolling, pitching, storm-tossed hulk, where everything was of a tangible material to this ethereal paradise of harmony? I say ethereal, for while there were shapes, and the most beautiful shapes, and curves and lines to all things; yet, I could plainly and distinctly see through each and everything as easily as one can see through glass; there was an unbroken and unobstructed view in all directions. Even the people, of which there seemed to be a vast number, were as incorporeal as the atmosphere; in fact, there was nothing but what seemed to blend into one grand unlimited picture, as if created by Nature, Art and Science.

I soon began to admire all this grandeur as far as my uneducated and unsophisticated nature would permit; and started on a tour of inspection, although I found it unnecessary; for I found on the near approach to an object that I had already seen all there was to be seen in it. Still I continued to travel on; no one spoke to me, although I met many strange-looking people. Each seemed bent on his or her errand; and while many were in company at times, and passed near to me, still they all passed me by unnoticed. Whichever way I traveled I saw some of these people, and they seemed as harmonious as all other things in this harmonious land; they were all dressed alike, both male and female, old and young. I should say children and adults, for there were no old people; none looked to be more than forty years of age. I cannot tell how I distinguished the sexes, unless it may have been by intuition, for all were dressed in the same loose flowing garments, somewhat resembling the costume of the ancient Egyptians. In color there was a distinction, for there were all colors; some were pure white, and occasionally there was one who was dressed in a robe of some dark and heavy stuff, the color approaching nearest to black of anything I saw in that enchanted land. I afterwards learned that dark robes indicated that the wearers were of the lowest class of inhabitants.

I passed on and on; never weary, never with a thought of hunger or thirst; and at every turn my gaze penetrated still further on into the illimitable, beautiful, and ever growing more beautiful enchanted grotto of immortal dreamland. At last as if I had been satiated with all the pleasures that a mortal could desire, I found myself on the mossy bank of a silvery roiseless river that flowed swiftly by. I sat down on the soft mossy bank to drink in the beauties of the lovely scene spread out before me.

Majestic ships, with all canvass pulling in the wind. What seemed to be steamships, without any steam; tiny boats, propelled by an unseen force, passed and repassed up and down the stream.

I seemed to possess a desire to board one of those monster ships, and instantly one stopped near the shore and a small boat put off and came near the place where I was reclining and its only occupant beckoned me to step in; I did so, and the boat turned and silently glided back to the ship, and was by some mysterious force hoisted to the deck of the stately ship.

There I roamed at will, but discovered no means of propulsion, or steering or governing the ship. I entered the great saloon; the tables were loaded with everything a hungry man could wish; fruit of the delicious kinds seemed to abound. I thought I would like to partake of the bounteous repast; I was led by a being dressed in pure white, to a seat at the table, where the greatest attention was given me. I ate, and continued to eat, for, while I ate heartily, the food did not seem to satisfy my hunger; neither did the large amount I ate seem to make me feel uncomfortable. I discovered at length that it was not intended to satisfy taste or hunger, but to satisfy a demand of nature to that extent, that the highest developed state of nature should be nourished with that last preceding it; for it would not be right to cut off all connections between the different conditions too quick. All this seemed to come to me in a mysterious manner; yet I understood it as well as if I had been taught it all my life. I drank of the water, bright, clear and sparkling; it had the same quick invigorating influence of wine, yet it did not intoxicate.

Again, my thoughts reverted to the beautiful land, and I wished once more to be on it, for it seemed as if my experience on the water had been enough to satisfy me through all eternity. I was motioned by a beautiful being to follow her, and going on deck, I was assisted to the little boat in which I had left the shore, and again, the mysterious force propelled the little craft back to the very spot which I had left. I stepped ashore, and in doing so, I accidentally stepped in the water; I scrambled up the bank and hurriedly stooped to untie my shoe that I might drain the water from it; when, to my surprise I found my foot was not the least damp, the water in which my leg had been immersed nearly to my knee had instantly dried, leaving no trace, and no disagreeable effects from the accident. My mind now turned to the attendant of the boat which had quickly turned and sped back to the ship; the man did not seem to notice my dilemma, and I thought him rather unkind not to express his sorrow for my misfortune. He already knew what the result would be, while I had to learn; before I had time to think, he was gone; and while I was trying to relieve my shoe from the water I supposed it contained, a shadow enveloped me, and looking up to ascertain the cause, I beheld a monster hovering over my head, the like of which I had never seen before; it was a great white egg-shaped sphere far above, and suspended from it and almost within my reach, was a light and airy ellipse-shaped car made of some light wicker work; it was enclosed by what looked like glass sides; it was about eight feet high, and it looked to be about two hundred feet long; around the car was a promenade deck, enclosed by a light and airy rail.

I could see many people on the car, some were standing inside, while some were walking on the upper deck; and there came floating down to me on the already melodious atmosphere, strains of the most enchanting music that had ever reached my ears. My thoughts were centered on that most wonderful aerial ship; for such it was, and I wished that I might step aboard and view it, as I had a short time before the ship on the water. My wish seemed to be divined by those on board, for, a peculiarly and fantastic shaped boat or basket was lowered from that great air ship and landed by my side; the one occupant motioned me to step in it, and again, by the, to me, unknown force, the basket was propelled upwards to the top of the car and I alighted on its deck, to find myself treading on a carpet as soft as covers the king's palace. I followed my guide and was led to a very elaborately fashioned stairway, down which we passed to the grand saloon of that aerial floating palace.

What my eyes beheld there would be hard to explain; the language of this mundane sphere is inadequate to the task. Burnished gold and silver, with precious stones, were on every hand. Pictures, which no artist of earth could imitate. Statuary, which seemed to be animated with life. Musical instruments of every conceivable kind, and the most extravagant finish; and hundreds of people, many playing the instruments and all blending in one grand anthem of harmonious sound, not one jarring note.

Again, as I did on the boat on the water, I roamed at will on this wonderful air ship; no one stopped me, no one obstructed my view, nor did I find any place closed against my admission. I looked for the motive power; I searched for a steering apparatus; I tried to discover some one who acted as pilot, captain or manager; but all were occupied in his or her own way, while the airship was speeding on its trackless course, as if there must be a mighty hand somewhere to propel and guide it. I went outside on the promenade deck; I leaned over the rail, that I might look down into the dizzy depths below, and I did not experience the feelings I first had on the old wrecked ship, when I clambered up the ropes to help furl the sails there; it was not necessary to lean over the rail to see below, for the ship itself was transparent as all things else I had seen.

The fast gliding beautiful panorama seemed to speed along beneath us, while the car stood still, and that transparent indescribable, never-to-be-forgotten sight was being unfurled to our view so fast, that now for the first time my eyes were dazzled; not by the glitter of brightness; but by the vastness of the varying beauties of the, to me, wonderful and great landscape. If I was enchanted while I roamed over the land and through the towns, now I was enchantingly bewildered. If I had spoken, or been spoken to; I am sure I would have lost my reason; as it was, I was a willing prisoner in fairyland.

How far we sailed on, or how long we were on that delightful aerial voyage I have no means of knowing; it might have been hours, it might have been months; I entirely forget myself, and it was a relief to my feasted senses when the airship stopped at the very place where I first beheld it; and as if someone had divined my weariness of surfeited pleasure, I was brought to a realization of self again by a gentle touch of my guide, who beckoned me; I followed her and was again led to the top of the car where I again entered the basket, and was lowered to the ground by that same mysterious force; I stepped out, the basket returned to the ship. Here I again had an illustration of the wonders of this mysterious country; for in my haste to leave the basket, I started to alight before it had reached the ground; I tripped, and fell about four feet, and struck the ground on my head and shoulders. I was frightened, and my thoughts as I fell, was that I should be badly injured; but I hardly felt the jar of my fall; for the ground was so soft and yielding, that had I plunged head foremost into the water from a great height, I would have been injured as much as I was at this time. By the time I had recovered myself and looked for the airship, it had sped many miles away, and I had no opportunity to thank anyone for my pleasure derived from the air voyage in that wonderful and beautiful floating monster palace.

I again asked myself where I was. Such strange scenes. Such exquisite music; such fascinating views of that wonderful wonderland. Did the sun always shine as bright? Were there no clouds? No storms? No inharmony? No pain? If not, then it must indeed be heaven; if heaven, then the teachings I had received in that little log meeting-house, and at my dear mother's knee, in my early life, were erroneous in the extreme. I had not seen in all my ramblings here anything resembling a great white throne. I had not yet seen any angels with wings; there was no need of wings; everything moved by that unseen force, that was so incomprehensible to me. The musical instruments were far more intricate than a harp. Surely, I reasoned, if this be heaven, or a part of it, and heaven is peopled like earth, and has habitations like those on earth, where were the churches?

Now as my mind reverted to the scenes I had been privileged to behold, and had been so graciously shown me, I remembered in all the vast variety of differently constructed buildings, I had not seen one that resembled a church; nor, had there been the faintest semblance of a church-yard. All this reasoning was, of course, from my earlier teachings, by those who had no way of reasoning except by the reasoning of the preceding generations.

As if to satisfy my questions, the hazy atmosphere began to take on a more dense condition; all things began to fade from my view; the sun seemed to sink out of sight; the gentle breezes that had so gently played through the leaves, now began to freshen to a fierce wind; the atmosphere suddenly changed to a very low temperature; a howling snow-storm set in, and the snow began to envelope me as I stood there on the bank of that heretofore placid river; and now the waves began to roll and roar and break at my feet, and I, a stranger in a strange land, among a still stranger people, had nowhere to seek a shelter, no place to hide to escape the fury of the blast which each minute increased with redoubled fury. The storm increased in violence, and darkness so intense that it was blinding, shut down and obscured everything of that beautiful land from sight. I could not move, I was rooted to the spot. The cold had increased with the darkness; I found myself growing numb and soon dropped to the ground and was fast losing consciousness, and as I felt the snow piling on and around men I knew I must soon succumb to my fate. Slowly, but surely my fate was being sealed, and being no longer able to help myself, I gave up all hope and resigned myself to the powers that were now so fast taking from me the last ray of hope for life, and again I said, as I did on that dismantled ship, "This must be death indeed."

Oregon Annual Convention.

The State Spiritualist Association of Oregon held its annual convention on Saturday, Sept. 3, in Mrs. Lucy Mallory's parlors, and reports of officers showed good work and better conditions for the association than has been its lot since its organization. A most harmonious atmosphere in which good will prevailed marked the deliberations of the convention and before closing the business session, the officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows: President, Rev. G. C. Love; vice-president, E. DeYongh; secretary, L. B. Larsen; treasurer, Capt. J. H. McMillen. Trustees—Mrs. Louisa Bentikofer, Miss Jennie Werner, C. Afwalter, H. W. Behnke and Geo. Lazelle.

On Sunday, Sept. 4, the State Association held an all day meeting in the hall of the First Spiritual Society which was kindly donated for that purpose, and lunch was served at the noon hour. At 11 o'clock a. m., the lyceum exercises and drill were an enjoyable feature of the meeting, and very interesting. At 2:30 o'clock, a very interesting conference called forth many good talks from volunteer speakers, after which a circle was formed and some good tests were given by mediums present.

The day's exercises closed with an evening session at 7:45 with short talks by Rev. J. G. Garrettson and President Rev. G. C. Love. The various exercises of the day were interspersed with vocal and instrumental music, and the association starts out on the new year with brighter prospects and greater ambition for good works than ever before.

The Spiritualists of Portland, Ore., are in harmonious vibration, and working earnestly for the cause. The First Society is having good attendance and the audiences are of an intelligent class, and any speaker or medium would be proud of the audience as he or she stands on their platform to address them or receive for them messages from their loved ones in spirit life. Officers and members are doing all in their power to build up the cause and make the meetings a success, and blessings from higher powers than those bestowed by the material world are being granted to prove the presence of the "mighty cloud of witnesses" to the fact that death is not, but life is eternal.

Two and one-half months have passed away since the camp-meeting at New Era, Oregon, began its session of 1904, and it only seems three or four weeks at most.

I am reminded by the flight of time that we must continue active during the intervening months if our camp-meeting for the year 1905 is to be a success. That year for Oregon as a state is to make history for all time that will never be blotted out, as the Lewis and Clark Exposition is to take place and thousands of people will visit our state to view its wonders, vegetation and productions. We want if possible in that year of 1905, the grandest, best camp-meeting ever held at New Era. But, Spiritualists of Oregon, your officers cannot do it all. You must lend a helping hand. No doubt you will see many Spiritualists from various states, perhaps all states of the Union, and you owe it to yourselves to come to that camp-meeting and swell its numbers by your presence. We want the grounds well covered with tents filled with people ambitious for our success as a camp-meeting. Come determined to do all in your power for the cause we love, letting good will and kindly words encourage your officers in their efforts to do all possible for success.

No article of any kind has come to my hand, so far, in the way of handiwork for the bazaar, although one good sister from The Dalles, Ore., and a few in this city of Portland have given me their promise that I should hear from them. Spiritualists, everywhere, you too, if you wish, may send articles such as aprons, ties, handkerchiefs, tidies—anything useful or ornamental to help the camp-meeting of 1905, of Lewis and Clark fame, and your tokens of good will may be purchased by some visitor who will prize it highly and will ever have pleasant memories of that camp-meeting and the donor of the article they purchase.

Don't look upon us as being beggars, but anxious to be in position to meet the demands in entertaining those who may visit our grounds during the meeting. No doubt a great amount of furnishings for the hotel will be needed to accommodate the people during the camp-meeting.

We must not turn them away. Then everybody, everywhere, who wants a hand in making that camp-meeting a success and long to be remembered, send to me your quilt blocks, fancy or useful articles, and the thanks of the First Spiritual Religious Association of Clackamas County, Oregon, will ever be yours. WAYSIDE NOTES

From Canada, Boston and New York.

I have recently returned to New York from a trip through Canada and Boston. It is surprising to see how people are bound down by puritanical ideas throughout Canada. Through Quebec, Montreal and that section, the Roman Catholic church prevails like a yoke, and throughout the section of Ontario the Methodist and other evangelical churches have everything in their grasp, clenched so tight it is almost impossible to move, only as they desire or dictate. Puritanism in its every sense and blue laws are well in vogue. In London, Ontario, the trolley cars are stopped at midnight Saturday night until Monday morning, and if anybody wishes to go any distance on an important errand or even pleasure, they must walk. If a farmer is caught in the act of working on his farm on Sundays, he lays himself liable to arrest.

The Sunday I spent in Toronto seemed to me more like a graveyard than any place I had ever been in. They have not stopped the running of trolley cars on Sunday in Toronto as yet, although they have worked hard to do it. There was a meeting held there some time back at one of the churches regarding the stopping of the cars Sunday, and this meeting was held on a Sunday and one clergyman that spoke came some distance, drove over in a carriage and kept the horses standing at the church door over two hours. It was all right to go in a carriage with horses (for those that can afford it) but very wrong indeed for the poor people to ride in a trolley car on Sunday. Consistency, thou art a jewel indeed!

There is no progression of any description through this country; there was an atmosphere, to me, while I was there where it seemed as if I could not get a breath, that lack of freedom could not be found there. The only bright spot I had was the afternoon call I had on Prof. Goldwin Smith at his beautiful residence in Toronto. A great thinker and a fine gentleman.

The Sunday I was in Toronto two bakers were arrested and brought before the judge Monday morning because they were preparing to mix their bread at nine o'clock Sunday evening, so that they would have their bread ready to deliver to their customers early Monday morning.

What surprises me is, that the people stand these ideas of the dark ages. You would think there would be an uprising. It seems as if they were all asleep. Wherever these blue laws are carried on you will always find in such a community the lack of progression in business and religion.

Boston, the modern Athens, was in an uproar on my arrival there, and well it might be, for Mr. Seaver who has been superintendent of the public schools of that city for twenty-five years, has been removed, to be replaced by a Roman Catholic and a Jesuit. Was Boston asleep?

Two magnificent statues have been erected here—a life-size bronze of Theodore Parker, at West Roxbury, Mass., in front of the site where his old church stood, and where a fine new Unitarian church has been built; and the new granite statue of William Ellery Channing, at the entrance of the Public Garden, facing Arlington Street Unitarian church. It is fine to see these statues to these great liberal thinkers in the face of the present opposition in Boston.

In a few weeks the Spiritual meetings and liberal churches will open their doors for the winter campaign. Dr. Minot J. Savage will return to his church early in October. I hope that his summer vacation has improved his health, for he told me before his church closed, that he was far from well; he is such a great worker all the time. I heard him say once that he had work laid out twenty years ahead, if he was spared to this life to accomplish it.

There is not room for all of the children in the public schools, so many thousands are on half time. What seems strange to me is that so many churches in this city all closed and locked up six days in the week. Why don't they use the vestries of these churches for school rooms?

The last sermon that Dr. Savage preached before the church closed in June, was "Sunlight," and it seemed to me as if he was inspired during the entire discourse. He closed with the following beautiful words:

"Suppose the flowers—the roses, pinks, lilies, and violets—should say 'I am wasting myself by scattering my fragrance on every wind. I am going to stop, I am going to keep it to myself and enjoy it on my own account.' There would be no more fragrance. There would be neither pink nor lily nor rose nor violet. There would only be black stalks and stubs. So, if we cease to give, cease to radiate love, tenderness, sympathy, help, care, we cease to have them, we cease to be men and women, children of God, creators and dispensers of good.

"Let us, then, be sunshine, and rejoice that like God's sun, we can give light and life and joy, that like God himself, of whom it is said that he is love, we can be love. And being love means the precise opposite of selfishness, means giving the very substance of one's life for the good of others."

DON'T LAY IT UP.

Don't lay it up—that bitter grudge—
Against your friend or neighbor,
Or dig about its hidden root
With so much care or labor.
Nay! Rather nobly pass it by,
Or thrust it out to fade and die.

You may be right and he be wrong,
Yet, if you do your duty
And cultivate instead of hate
The flowers of love and beauty,
The time may come when he may feel
How grandly you with others deal.

Don't lay it up, nor let a thought
Of "sweet revenge" possess you.
When tales untruthful reach your ears
That trouble or distress you,
Nor chase the wrong with bated breath—
A lie will run itself to death.

Instead, build up an honest life
Upon a sure foundation,
And let the human castle walls
Be strong in their formation.
Then may you court earth's rudest shock—
Your house is built upon a rock.

How a Woman Paid Her Debts.

I am out of debt, thanks to the Dish-washer business. In the past three months I have made $600.00 selling Dish-washer. I never saw anything sell so easily. Every family needs a Dish-washer and will buy one when shown how beautifully it will wash and dry the family dishes in two minutes. I sell from my own house. Each Dish-washer sold brings me many orders. The dishes are washed without wetting the hands. That is why ladies want the Dish-washer. I give my experience for the benefit of any one who may wish to make money easy. I buy my Dish-washers from the Mound City Dish-washer Co., St. Louis, Mo. Write them for particulars. They will start you in business in your own home. L. A. C.

HOW TO GROW TALL

A Startling Discovery That Will Revolutionize the Physical Condition of Mankind.

Why Remain Short and Stunted When You May Learn Free the Secret of How to Grow Tall?

No Matter How Short You Are or What Your Age, You Can Increase Your Height.

No new discovery has attracted more attention in the scientific world than that made by K. Leo Minges, of Rochester, N. Y. Mr. Minges is to short men and women what the great wizard, Edison, is to electricity. He has gathered more information relative to bone, muscle and sinew than any one else in existence. Making people grow tall has been a hobby with Mr. Minges for years, and the results he has accomplished are startling to a high degree. By his method every man or woman not over fifty years of age can be made to grow from two to five inches in height, and any one older than that may increase his height perceptibly. His method has the indorsement of leading physicians, and several prominent educational institutions have adopted it for the better physical development of their pupils. If you would like to increase your height you should read the book which tells how this remarkable discovery was made and reveals to you the secrets of how to grow tall. It is free. You are not asked to spend a single cent and if you desire it we will send you the statements of hundreds who have grown from two to five inches in height by following this method. The results are quickly accomplished. Many have grown as much as three inches in two months. There is no inconvenience, no drugs or medicines, no operation. Merely the application of a scientific principle in a perfectly hygienic and harmless way. Your most intimate friends need not know what you are doing. All communications will be sent in plain envelopes. The book "The Secrets of How to Grow Tall," contains illustrations that will interest and instruct any one. One thousand of these books will be given away absolutely free, postage prepaid, while the present edition lasts. If you want to grow tall write to-day, in strictest confidence, for a free copy.

Dr. I. K. Funk is the author of "The Widow's Mite," a work devoted to the elucidation of spirit return as witnessed by him in the course of a long, patient and painstaking investigation. Dr. Funk is an intellectual giant, and a conscientious investigator of the phenomena and philosophy of Spiritualism. In his search for truth he is exceptionally kind, charitable and forbearing; in fact he is an ideal investigator, and one that any genuine medium will be pleased to meet. Such a man, occupying the highest position among cultured and refined people, should be welcomed by every Spiritualist. Unfortunately he has met with a great deal of fraud and trickery in the course of his investigations, and the following from his pen, taken from the Homiletic Review for October, will be read with sad interest, as it portrays in some respects the exact status of our cause—a most lamentable state of affairs, and one which Spiritualists themselves should thoroughly understand. The fact is, the main points of the article have been published in every leading daily in the United States, reaching at least 35,000,000 of readers. Such being the case we concluded to spread the entire article before our readers enabling them to more accurately judge of the same than they could by reading only brief extracts. Spiritualists, unite as one body, and drive the rotten fakes from our ranks, and place Spiritualism before the world in its proper light.

AN IMPORTANT AND SUGGESTIVE LETTER.

To the Literary Editor:—You are at liberty to quote as freely as you like from the enclosed advance proofs of the October "Homiletic Review."

Note.—1. The report from B. F. Funk here given, having been noised abroad in distorted form, has brought me questions as to whether this has changed my attitude toward psychic phenomena. It has not. I was aware of the existence of this class of fraud. In the book, "The Widow's Mite and Other Psychic Phenomena," I gave much emphasis to the fraud side of this problem, but had not at hand quite so an effective exposure as this one, or it would have appeared with the other specifications of fraud (see pp. 74-76). Letters reaching me indicate that this fakir business in "Spiritualistic paraphernalia" is rapidly growing. Its victims are chiefly among those who are depressed by the death of husband, wife, child, or parent. There are nearly 2,000,000 deaths each year in this country, affecting 10,000,000 near relatives; and of these, tens of thousands are so crazed by grief as to fall easy victims to these heartless scoundrels. Then, this kind of comfort, like salt water to a thirsty man, increases the appetite, thus ensuring these fellows an unfailing source of profit.

2. But on the other hand, scores of psychologists and other leading scientists and hundreds of other trustworthy men make it certain that there are many genuine psychic phenomena, and the researches of these investigators indicate the near discovery and mastery of forces which are likely to prove of extraordinary value to the world, and that at least some of these forces belong to faculties which are in all of us, and in nearly all of us are more or less undeveloped. A careful study of the laws which underlie the development and use of these faculties is thought by many of our psychologists to be of first importance. Should it turn out to be that some of these psychic phenomena are due to "outside intelligences," as is thought probable by men like Prof. James of Harvard, Sir William Crookes, Prime Minister Balfour, Prof. Hyslop, Sir Oliver Lodge, and others, it is easy to believe that this might prove, when scientifically established, the beginning of a new epoch in human development. At any rate it is surely worth the while of these scientists to give for a time serious study to this investigation.

3. It happens that the investigation of these psychic phenomena depends very much on the psychic experiences of the average man. It would be almost fatal to the investigation to close from the psychologist this source of information, as we would close it should we make this average man over skeptical; it would be almost equally fatal should he become too superstitious. Either extreme hinders the phenomena. A large class of the public is too easily duped, and another class is so skeptical as to believe nothing that comes into experience otherwise than through the senses. The newspaper press will be doing psychic investigation good service if it help to keep the mass of people from either extreme.

Max Muller probably never uttered a wiser saying than this: "All truth is safe, and nothing else is safe, and he who keeps back the truth or withholds it from man for motives of expediency is either a coward or a criminal or both." Yours respectfully,

I. K. FUNK.

THE FRAUDULENT SIDE OF SPIRITUALISM—A DUTY.

By Isaac K. Funk, D. D., LL.D.

Life is growth. We cannot elect to stand still. The time comes when the bird must break its shell and come out or die. That which was house and home and life for it yesterday, to-day, if continued, is its death. This is the law of true evolution. There may be eddies and recessions, but, as with the sea, the incoming tide is bound finally to assert itself.

A profound question always in order is: What is the next stage of human development and what are its signs? Christ pronounced the doom of the Jews when He said: Eyes have ye, but ye see not; ye can discern the signs of the skies—that is, the changes on the plane of your present life; but ye can not discern the signs of the times—that is, the changes that forerun the coming of the new kingdom which comes through the fertilizing power of the above upon the lower. I come revealing to you this kingdom of which I am, but ye see me not; I call you to a new life, but ye hear me not; ye hear me not and see me not because the faculties within you which are to have their functions in this new kingdom are dead. Therefore is your condemnation just.

When the world moves forward, the man or age or civilization that will not accept the reform is plowed under and at least for a time, forgotten.

As a rule, the higher truths come in at what seems to be the bottom of society; the barn, the manger, is the doorway. Can any good thing come out of Nazareth? To the eyes of the ruling class—the class which is the fruitage, the logical outcome of the forces and laws of the lower plane of existence—Christ and Wesley and Garrison were contemptible. Christ consorted with publicans and sinners, the "low down." Garrison had no grace save the grace of God, and that grace had but little current value where birth and riches and college degrees and social standing were counters of chiefest value. Have any of the rulers believed? The common people, who are not the flower and fruitage of this plane of living, are accursed.

If all this is true and we apply it to what has been known as Spiritualism for the past half-century, we may make a grave mistake. Not everything that comes in at the barn door and is rejected by the "low down" is, therefore, from above. But this word of warning is just: If Spiritualism is from above; if it is a revelation, in whole or in part, to man of the next step upward; if telepathy, clairvoyance, clairaudience, prescience are rudimentary faculties which, when they become fully functional, will make us citizens of the cosmic universe as our present senses make us citizens of the earth, we must not be surprised if we are to search for the pearls of this coming kingdom among the things that are despised, and that we are to find the chief believers in it among the "publicans and sinners." Let us see to it that we judge a righteous judgment; that our standards for judging the coming kingdom are not the standards by which values are determined in the kingdom that precedes it; that we have eyes that can see and ears that can hear things that are above materiality, that are on the spiritual plane. The church committed an awful mistake in the days of Christ and went down. It is well to be alert, and even over-alert, in avoiding a repetition of that blunder and crime. If the historians tell us truly, there was much of ignorance and superstition in the so-called Christian church during the first century. We are apt to overlook the lesson that the crystallized excellencies of the lower plane may more effectually prevent the excellencies of the upper than do its uncrystallized faults. The harlots hindered less in the days of Christ than did the scribes and Pharisees.

"But a vast majority of Spiritualistic phenomena are fraudulent." That is certain. "Much are the results of coincidence and faulty observation." That is very true. We had settled down during the past twenty years—nearly all of us—to these conclusions; but the startling discoveries during the last few years among the new lines of psychology, as those of the subjective mind, secondary personalities, telepathy, clairaudience, and what not, the discoveries of wireless telegraphy, the X-ray, radium and its mysterious radioactivity, all suggestive of countless laws and countless forces as yet unknown to us, reaching upward and inward beyond the senses, make it increasingly easy for scientists to believe in the existence of psychic forces and psychic intelligences at work on earth other than man. We are now being startled out of our sleep by reports from some of the most careful scientific authorities—reports of strange things which they are discovering along psychic lines. They tell us that, after all deductions for fraud and coincidence, they find an unexplained remainder that bids fair to lead to the most profound discoveries—beyond all heretofore proved in the realm of science. When scientists like the late Professor Sidgwick of Cambridge and his expert wife, the sister of Premier Balfour, and that profound psychologist, Professor James of Harvard, Professor W. F. Barrett, Sir Oliver Lodge, Professor Hyslop, late of Columbia, and such accomplished scientists and trained observers as Sir William Crookes and Alfred Russel Wallace, and that group of scholars and observers who make up the Society for Psychical Research in this country, England, and on the Continent, tell us that they find, after years of careful investigation, an unexplained remainder in this world of spiritual phenomena that seems scientifically to demonstrate the existence of a spirit world which interpenetrates this, it behooves us all, especially those who are leaders in the church, to think carefully whether the time has not come to reconsider this whole question.

It seems certain that there is to be in the near future a serious revival of the study of psychic phenomena, including so-called Spiritualism—a subject that belongs to the "sphere of influence" of the clergy, to borrow a phrase from international statecraft. Is not a clergyman likely now to make a great mistake if he does not fit himself to help lead in this new series of investigations? Watchman, what of the night? Surely along psychic or soul lines we have a right to expect the clergy to keep us from error; but how can they unless they understand the subject?

If these Spiritualistic phenomena are the work of immature or evil spirits, as some clergymen hold, certain scientific knowledge of this fact is exceedingly important. A scientific demonstration that devils exist and are in communication with this world is far better than the hard, crass materialism of the scientific world a few decades ago, which denied all things spiritual as a priori impossible.

In a book which I recently published ["The Widow's Mite and Other Psychic Phenomena," published May, 1904], I tried to present clearly and impartially as possible the facts and arguments for and against the Spiritualistic hypothesis, especially those developed during the past score of years by the Society for Psychical Research and other scientists, giving also an account of my own personal experiences in this field of investigation. In this book the clergy are urged to take up courageously and earnestly the work of psychic investigation; but the clergyman who undertakes this line of investigation needs to be on his guard against deception, for fraud surrounds professional Spiritualism as an atmosphere. This deception and the specious arguments by which it is defended—evincing discouragingly in our evolved human nature reminiscences of the fox, the spider, the hyena—is well illustrated by a unique experience a brother of mine had a few weeks ago in Chicago. This brother has had considerable knowledge of Spiritualism and knows pretty thoroughly its fraudulent side. I placed in his hands the following curious business card, requesting him to report to me the facts:

RADIUM
Medium's Paraphernalia

Crowns, Belts, Hands, Heads, Veils and Full-size Figures all illuminated with the new Radium light. Will appear, gradually float about room and disappear.
All Work Confidential.

Chicago.

I quote the card verbatim, leaving blank the name and street address, both of which will be given to any one requesting them. The following is his report:

Mr. B. F. Funk's Exposure of a Fraudulent Side of Spiritualism.

"On my first call I was informed that in order to see this radium expert it would be necessary for me to make an appointment. The appointment being duly made and kept, I found the proprietor to be a youngish, gentlemanly sort of fellow, apparently refined and educated. The card [described above] served as an open sesame, somewhat stiff, gaining for me the desired interview. In reply to my question whether he sold outfits for mediums, he said, eyeing me closely: 'I sometimes sell things that are of interest to mediums and—to other people.' After a moment's silence he continued: 'What do you wish? What are you after?'

"Then followed much verbal fencing, when he finally said: 'I always insist, as a mark of good faith, that at the outset an order be given with payment for an outfit.' This outfit, he told me, varies in price from $50 to $1,000. Not caring to bait my hook with so large a bulk of greenbacks, I substituted diplomacy. I told him that a lady friend of mine in an Eastern city—all gospel truth—had some mediumistic power, sufficient to move a table, produce rappings, etc., but that her gifts had not enough money-making power in them to enable her to support herself and those dependent upon her. 'On receiving your card from a friend,' I continued, 'it occurred to me that you might be able to help her out—that is, should I be able to persuade her to follow mediumship as a business. I do not wish her to do wrong.'

"'Certainly not, certainly not; I understand. I have many such among my clientele. It is my business to help mediums make a good show. They do not do wrong: on the contrary, they are doing a great deal of good in getting people to believe that their friends who have died are really alive. I have seen mothers made happy at the sight of their dead children, husbands at the sight of their departed wives. It has often brought tears to my eyes to see the simple faith of these people. If a man is a philanthropist who can multiply blades of grass, surely I or a medium should be entitled to praise if we cause rejoicing where there are tears. Why, my dear fellow, Spiritualists are the happiest people in the world. Why undeceive them? They are in heaven. It does them no hurt, but much good to believe these things. My business is to put clever people in the way of making the world happier.' The man grew quite eloquent in dilating on his philanthropic calling.

"'But,' said I, 'my friend is quite sensitive and would hesitate much at the employment of any deception or trick, especially any that might be detected and bring disgrace upon herself and family and friends.'

"After some further talk of this sort, he got down to business and grew confidential, and let me into some of the secrets of his trade. He asked all manner of questions about my medium friend, as to her age, education, her height, whether she was thin or fleshy, tactful, had presence of mind, was quick in retort, etc. He finally asked: 'What kind of phenomena would you prefer that your lady friend should produce?'

"I replied: 'I wish her to give physical manifestations, such as the materialization of hands, of the entire human form, spirit voices, illuminated stars, sparks, rays of light, floating balls of fire, floating musical instruments, trumpet talks, slate-writing, mind-reading, etc. Are these things within the scope of your art?'

"He smiled at the modesty of my wish, then said: 'All this is merest child's play, provided your lady friend is apt, quick-witted, and has nerve. I am furnishing help after this sort to the mediums of Chicago—they all come to me; I know them all.'

"'Do good, genuine mediums use this kind of help?'

"'All mediums are good mediums and genuine mediums. I don't know any other kind.'

"'Is there no difficulty in manipulating this machinery or paraphernalia?'

"'It is so simple you will wonder why it is that people do not at once detect it. When you understand it, and understand the modus operandi of handling it, you will be much amused.'

"'How about slate-writing?'

"'Perfectly simple.'

"'With tied slates, glued and sealed?'

"'Yes, oh, yes. I have laughed until my sides ached after a seance at the remembrance of how easily and completely the d. e.'s ['dead easies'] were fooled. To see a doting father take the materialized form of his dead child on his knee and pet it and kiss it, and then hear the little one say, "Now, papa, I must go; I feel I am getting weak." and then see the child slip from his lap and disappear, to the infinite surprise of all the faithful—it is more laughable than an Artemus Ward "wax-figger show."'

"'But is there no danger of getting caught?'

"'No; there are two hundred mediums in Chicago. How seldom you hear of an exposure.'

"'But I have been where I was permitted to touch the hand of a form. It seemed warm, as if flesh and blood.'

"This seemed to amuse him greatly. Finally he said: 'Yes; it does feel precisely like flesh. But this is another phase of the business. It is all explained when the outfit is sent.'

"'But how is that done?'

"'Is it always fraud—never real?'

"'I don't know of any medium who is guilty of fraud. You know I am a good Spiritualist when I am with Spiritualists. I am the fast friend of all mediums.... What class of people will be the chief constituency of your lady friend—Catholic or Protestant, white or black?'

"'Why, what difference does that make?'

"'Well, if Catholic, they will prove the more remunerative, as they are much more ready to accept the supernatural. I have a splendid make-up representing a Catholic priest. The Catholics go wild over him. He is very effective with his priestly garb on and with his large cross.'

"'But how is one costume and one medium to represent different priests?'

"'Oh, given little light and plenty of faith and plausible assertion, a Catholic will see just the priest he wishes to see. It is amazing how easily people are deceived in a semi-dark room; with the lights low you can not tell whether an object is three feet or ten feet away. Distances and directions and proportions are extremely deceptive in the dark. As to the Catholics,' he continued, 'if you materialize a well-known priest or two or three dead friends of some one or more Catholics present, for the next week you will have all of the private "sittings" you can care for at $5 or $10 each.'

"I told him that the lady's clientele would probably be Protestant, and that she is rather conscientious and might hesitate to deceive them.

"'Why, my dear sir, why should she? A genuine Spiritualist, as I have already said, is supremely happy in his faith. People who come to seances are as a rule in deep sorrow. The medium wipes their tears and lifts their burdens. Can there be any wrong in this? Is not this doing a charitable, worthy thing? Your friend should learn to prize her calling as a helpful and noble one. These things must be judged by their fruits and looked upon in a broad way.'

"To my repeated questions how this and that was done, his almost constant answer was that these secrets were part of his stock in trade.

"'But,' I insisted, 'I have seen sometimes the medium and a spirit form stand side by side and I have taken hold of their hands and talked to them, sometimes both at the same time.'

"This gave the fellow much quiet fun at my expense. Finally he said: 'That reminds me of a seance I once attended. It was held by one of the best mediums in Chicago. There were a number of fine materializations—understand me, when I am with the Spiritualists I am an enthusiastic Spiritualist. The next day a wealthy woman who was a believer called on me. She said that she enjoyed the meeting the evening before very much, but that she wished to ask me a question. She desired to know whether spirits really perspire, for she had detected the odor of perspiration on one of the forms. She spoke with such earnestness and her question struck me as so ludicrous that I had to excuse myself and went out and laughed myself almost into a convulsion. When I was laughed out I returned, and with a long face said: "Yes, our dear friends materialize in perfectly natural bodies, and hence of course perspire on a hot summer evening just as the rest of us do." Her faith was fully restored.'

"I said: 'I know a man who had his little child on his lap, and it dematerialized while he was holding it.'

"'But,' said I, 'a hand will materialize and dematerialize right before me.'

"'You can not tell whether it is a hand or a foot six feet away. With my radium illumination, the front illuminated and the back not, you turn the hand and you have materialization, and you turn it again and you have dematerialization, amid the ohs! and ahs! of the d. e.'s. So with stars and so with the entire human form. Much success depends upon the skill of the medium in manipulating the black and the white cloth.'

"'My friend has not the power of ventriloquism. How would she be able to represent the different voices?'

"Again he smiled, and finally brought out an aluminum trumpet and several mouthpieces. It was a revelation to hear the different voices he could produce and the rapidity with which he could change from one voice to another. When my back was turned, I could have taken an oath that I heard two different voices speaking at the same time.

"'Do all mediums resort to trickery?' I asked.

"'None do. All are honest, perfectly honest.'

"'But,' I persisted, 'there are some genuine mediums and some non-genuine.'

"He replied: 'All mediums are genuine; they are all good and doing good, cheering hearts and lifting burdens, bringing out "the stars at night," as the poets put it.'

"After some more interchange of this kind of talk I said: 'Speaking seriously, do you mean to tell me that no mediums possess occult or abnormal powers; that it is all humbuggery and trickery?'

"After a few moments' thought, his face growing serious, he said: 'There is something mysterious, something that puzzles me at times about some mediums. I have seen phenomena that I can not explain. At times an outside influence seems to come over the medium, taking possession of her. What it is I don't know. Possibly telepathy will explain it, possibly spirits.'

"He told me much more, and ended by this business turn: 'I can fix up your lady friend and so instruct her, if she is clever—cleverness is essential—that she will be able to earn from $50 to $70 a week. I must have her bust measurement, her neck measurement, and also her height and weight. She need have no fear about detection and must give up all scruples about doing wrong. I showed to Herrmann when he was living some Spiritualistic tricks which he was never able to explain and which he afterward used. The lady can conceal enough of my paraphernalia about her person to produce many materializations of hands, forms, lights, etc., and walk to a private house, visit socially with the people half an hour or more, without awakening the slightest suspicion.'"

It is well to call in the memory the following:

1. Notwithstanding the abundance and the disgusting nature of the frauds which attend many Spiritualistic seances, yet so keen an opponent of Spiritualism as Frank Podmore, in his late book, "Modern Spiritualism," is compelled to say:

"Whether the belief in the intercourse with spirits is well founded or not, it is certain that no critic has yet succeeded in demonstrating the inadequacy of the evidence upon which the Spiritualists rely."

"The man who denies the phenomena of Spiritism to-day is not entitled to be called a skeptic; he is simply ignorant."

And the great scientist, Alfred Russel Wallace, recently said that no more evidence is needed to prove Spiritualism, for no accepted fact in science has a greater or stronger array of truth in its behalf.

2. The new psychology which is being shaped largely by current psychic investigations seems likely to modify in not a few ways the interpretation of Scripture, and hence should be of profound interest to the clergy.

3. These cautionary words: (a) When the facts which are now being told are admitted to be true, the reader must not leap to the conclusion that the hypothesis of Spiritualism is proved. There are many chasms, each miles and miles wide, yet to be bridged or filled. (b) There is danger—real danger—along these lines of investigation. I have seen psychic cobwebs—if cobwebs they be—tangle the feet of even intellectual giants; and the shrewdest experts—to change the simile—need to sail these mystic seas with sharp eyes and level heads, for these seas are almost wholly uncharted, and in sailing over them, at times, the ship's compasses exhibit inexplicable variations. Yet these investigations must be made and these seas must be sailed and charted. I. K. FUNK.

IT IS WRITTEN.

Have you seen—have you seen—in the heart of a tree,
Its tracings and lines
Its knots and its seams,
Where the fibre entwines,
Where the silken mesh gleams?
Have you read—have you read—in the heart of a tree!

Written deep in its history told in a tree,
Every leafbud lost,
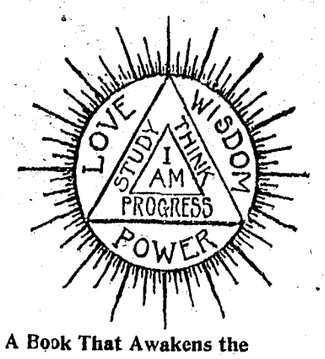
Every twig downtossed.
Made the mark of its war,
All its life may be read in the heart of a tree.



Have you seen—have you seen—in the heart of a man,
Its wreckings and woe,
The depth of its tide,
Where the long ago
And its memories hide?
Have you read—have you read—in the heart of a man!

Deep the records are graved in the heart of a man,
Each sorrow and sin
Left its mar in its mark,
And the tempests therein
Made their lines in the dark,
All his life may be read in the heart of a man.

ENCYCLOPEDIA
...OF...
BIBLICAL SPIRITUALISM
...OR...
A CONCORDANCE
To the principal passages of the Old and New Testament Scriptures which prove or imply Spiritualism;
Together with a brief history of the origin of many of the important books of the Bible.

BY MOSES HULL.

Much that is in this book appeared in an abridged form in a series of nine full pages of THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER. These articles were prepared at the call of hundreds of Spiritualists who felt the need of some kind of document for ready reference. They only seemed to whet the appetite for more; hence the publication of this work.
The author, Moses Hull, has written many volumes on Spiritualistic and other themes and each one is full of careful study on the subject chosen. Mr. Hull, in his introduction of this work says:
"Hoping that this book will serve to lead the people out of the wilderness of doubt and despair; and that when Spiritualism shall have wrested the Bible from its 'sanctified' enemies, it will not 'spike' it, but will use it to batter down the walls of Christian superstition and ignorance, I send it out on its errand of enlightenment with the humble prayer that it will prove a divine benediction to every reader."

Dr. I. K. Funk is the author of "The Widow's Mite," a work devoted to the elucidation of spirit return as witnessed by him in the course of a long, patient and painstaking investigation. Dr. Funk is an intellectual giant, and a conscientious investigator of the phenomena and philosophy of Spiritualism. In his search for truth he is exceptionally kind, charitable and forbearing; in fact he is an ideal investigator, and one that any genuine medium will be pleased to meet. Such a man, occupying the highest position among cultured and refined people, should be welcomed by every Spiritualist. Unfortunately he has met with a great deal of fraud and trickery in the course of his investigations, and the following from his pen, taken from the Homiletic Review for October, will be read with sad interest, as it portrays in some respects the exact status of our cause—a most lamentable state of affairs, and one which Spiritualists themselves should thoroughly understand. The fact is, the main points of the article have been published in every leading daily in the United States, reaching at least 35,000,000 of readers. Such being the case we concluded to spread the entire article before our readers enabling them to more accurately judge of the same than they could by reading only brief extracts. Spiritualists, unite as one body, and drive the rotten fakes from our ranks, and place Spiritualism before the world in its proper light.

AN IMPORTANT AND SUGGESTIVE LETTER.

To the Literary Editor:—You are at liberty to quote as freely as you like from the enclosed advance proofs of the October "Homiletic Review."

Note.—1. The report from B. F. Funk here given, having been noised abroad in distorted form, has brought me questions as to whether this has changed my attitude toward psychic phenomena. It has not. I was aware of the existence of this class of fraud. In the book, "The Widow's Mite and Other Psychic Phenomena," I gave much emphasis to the fraud side of this problem, but had not at hand quite so an effective exposure as this one, or it would have appeared with the other specifications of fraud (see pp. 74-76). Letters reaching me indicate that this fakir business in "Spiritualistic paraphernalia" is rapidly growing. Its victims are chiefly among those who are depressed by the death of husband, wife, child, or parent. There are nearly 2,000,000 deaths each year in this country, affecting 10,000,000 near relatives; and of these, tens of thousands are so crazed by grief as to fall easy victims to these heartless scoundrels. Then, this kind of comfort, like salt water to a thirsty man, increases the appetite, thus ensuring these fellows an unfailing source of profit.

2. But on the other hand, scores of psychologists and other leading scientists and hundreds of other trustworthy men make it certain that there are many genuine psychic phenomena, and the researches of these investigators indicate the near discovery and mastery of forces which are likely to prove of extraordinary value to the world, and that at least some of these forces belong to faculties which are in all of us, and in nearly all of us are more or less undeveloped. A careful study of the laws which underlie the development and use of these faculties is thought by many of our psychologists to be of first importance. Should it turn out to be that some of these psychic phenomena are due to "outside intelligences," as is thought probable by men like Prof. James of Harvard, Sir William Crookes, Prime Minister Balfour, Prof. Hyslop, Sir Oliver Lodge, and others, it is easy to believe that this might prove, when scientifically established, the beginning of a new epoch in human development. At any rate it is surely worth the while of these scientists to give for a time serious study to this investigation.

3. It happens that the investigation of these psychic phenomena depends very much on the psychic experiences of the average man. It would be almost fatal to the investigation to close from the psychologist this source of information, as we would close it should we make this average man over skeptical; it would be almost equally fatal should he become too superstitious. Either extreme hinders the phenomena. A large class of the public is too easily duped, and another class is so skeptical as to believe nothing that comes into experience otherwise than through the senses. The newspaper press will be doing psychic investigation good service if it help to keep the mass of people from either extreme.

Max Muller probably never uttered a wiser saying than this: "All truth is safe, and nothing else is safe, and he who keeps back the truth or withholds it from man for motives of expediency is either a coward or a criminal or both." Yours respectfully,

I. K. FUNK.

THE FRAUDULENT SIDE OF SPIRITUALISM—A DUTY.

By Isaac K. Funk, D. D., LL.D.

Life is growth. We cannot elect to stand still. The time comes when the bird must break its shell and come out or die. That which was house and home and life for it yesterday, to-day, if continued, is its death. This is the law of true evolution. There may be eddies and recessions, but, as with the sea, the incoming tide is bound finally to assert itself.

A profound question always in order is: What is the next stage of human development and what are its signs? Christ pronounced the doom of the Jews when He said: Eyes have ye, but ye see not; ye can discern the signs of the skies—that is, the changes on the plane of your present life; but ye can not discern the signs of the times—that is, the changes that forerun the coming of the new kingdom which comes through the fertilizing power of the above upon the lower. I come revealing to you this kingdom of which I am, but ye see me not; I call you to a new life, but ye hear me not; ye hear me not and see me not because the faculties within you which are to have their functions in this new kingdom are dead. Therefore is your condemnation just.

When the world moves forward, the man or age or civilization that will not accept the reform is plowed under and at least for a time, forgotten.

As a rule, the higher truths come in at what seems to be the bottom of society; the barn, the manger, is the doorway. Can any good thing come out of Nazareth? To the eyes of the ruling class—the class which is the fruitage, the logical outcome of the forces and laws of the lower plane of existence—Christ and Wesley and Garrison were contemptible. Christ consorted with publicans and sinners, the "low down." Garrison had no grace save the grace of God, and that grace had but little current value where birth and riches and college degrees and social standing were counters of chiefest value. Have any of the rulers believed? The common people, who are not the flower and fruitage of this plane of living, are accursed.

If all this is true and we apply it to what has been known as Spiritualism for the past half-century, we may make a grave mistake. Not everything that comes in at the barn door and is rejected by the "low down" is, therefore, from above. But this word of warning is just: If Spiritualism is from above; if it is a revelation, in whole or in part, to man of the next step upward; if telepathy, clairvoyance, clairaudience, prescience are rudimentary faculties which, when they become fully functional, will make us citizens of the cosmic universe as our present senses make us citizens of the earth, we must not be surprised if we are to search for the pearls of this coming kingdom among the things that are despised, and that we are to find the chief believers in it among the "publicans and sinners." Let us see to it that we judge a righteous judgment; that our standards for judging the coming kingdom are not the standards by which values are determined in the kingdom that precedes it; that we have eyes that can see and ears that can hear things that are above materiality, that are on the spiritual plane. The church committed an awful mistake in the days of Christ and went down. It is well to be alert, and even over-alert, in avoiding a repetition of that blunder and crime. If the historians tell us truly, there was much of ignorance and superstition in the so-called Christian church during the first century. We are apt to overlook the lesson that the crystallized excellencies of the lower plane may more effectually prevent the excellencies of the upper than do its uncrystallized faults. The harlots hindered less in the days of Christ than did the scribes and Pharisees.

"But a vast majority of Spiritualistic phenomena are fraudulent." That is certain. "Much are the results of coincidence and faulty observation." That is very true. We had settled down during the past twenty years—nearly all of us—to these conclusions; but the startling discoveries during the last few years among the new lines of psychology, as those of the subjective mind, secondary personalities, telepathy, clairaudience, and what not, the discoveries of wireless telegraphy, the X-ray, radium and its mysterious radioactivity, all suggestive of countless laws and countless forces as yet unknown to us, reaching upward and inward beyond the senses, make it increasingly easy for scientists to believe in the existence of psychic forces and psychic intelligences at work on earth other than man. We are now being startled out of our sleep by reports from some of the most careful scientific authorities—reports of strange things which they are discovering along psychic lines. They tell us that, after all deductions for fraud and coincidence, they find an unexplained remainder that bids fair to lead to the most profound discoveries—beyond all heretofore proved in the realm of science. When scientists like the late Professor Sidgwick of Cambridge and his expert wife, the sister of Premier Balfour, and that profound psychologist, Professor James of Harvard, Professor W. F. Barrett, Sir Oliver Lodge, Professor Hyslop, late of Columbia, and such accomplished scientists and trained observers as Sir William Crookes and Alfred Russel Wallace, and that group of scholars and observers who make up the Society for Psychical Research in this country, England, and on the Continent, tell us that they find, after years of careful investigation, an unexplained remainder in this world of spiritual phenomena that seems scientifically to demonstrate the existence of a spirit world which interpenetrates this, it behooves us all, especially those who are leaders in the church, to think carefully whether the time has not come to reconsider this whole question.

It seems certain that there is to be in the near future a serious revival of the study of psychic phenomena, including so-called Spiritualism—a subject that belongs to the "sphere of influence" of the clergy, to borrow a phrase from international statecraft. Is not a clergyman likely now to make a great mistake if he does not fit himself to help lead in this new series of investigations? Watchman, what of the night? Surely along psychic or soul lines we have a right to expect the clergy to keep us from error; but how can they unless they understand the subject?

If these Spiritualistic phenomena are the work of immature or evil spirits, as some clergymen hold, certain scientific knowledge of this fact is exceedingly important. A scientific demonstration that devils exist and are in communication with this world is far better than the hard, crass materialism of the scientific world a few decades ago, which denied all things spiritual as a priori impossible.

In a book which I recently published ["The Widow's Mite and Other Psychic Phenomena," published May, 1904], I tried to present clearly and impartially as possible the facts and arguments for and against the Spiritualistic hypothesis, especially those developed during the past score of years by the Society for Psychical Research and other scientists, giving also an account of my own personal experiences in this field of investigation. In this book the clergy are urged to take up courageously and earnestly the work of psychic investigation; but the clergyman who undertakes this line of investigation needs to be on his guard against deception, for fraud surrounds professional Spiritualism as an atmosphere. This deception and the specious arguments by which it is defended—evincing discouragingly in our evolved human nature reminiscences of the fox, the spider, the hyena—is well illustrated by a unique experience a brother of mine had a few weeks ago in Chicago. This brother has had considerable knowledge of Spiritualism and knows pretty thoroughly its fraudulent side. I placed in his hands the following curious business card, requesting him to report to me the facts:

RADIUM
Medium's Paraphernalia

Crowns, Belts, Hands, Heads, Veils and Full-size Figures all illuminated with the new Radium light. Will appear, gradually float about room and disappear.
All Work Confidential.

Chicago.

I quote the card verbatim, leaving blank the name and street address, both of which will be given to any one requesting them. The following is his report:

Mr. B. F. Funk's Exposure of a Fraudulent Side of Spiritualism.

"On my first call I was informed that in order to see this radium expert it would be necessary for me to make an appointment. The appointment being duly made and kept, I found the proprietor to be a youngish, gentlemanly sort of fellow, apparently refined and educated. The card [described above] served as an open sesame, somewhat stiff, gaining for me the desired interview. In reply to my question whether he sold outfits for mediums, he said, eyeing me closely: 'I sometimes sell things that are of interest to mediums and—to other people.' After a moment's silence he continued: 'What do you wish? What are you after?'

"Then followed much verbal fencing, when he finally said: 'I always insist, as a mark of good faith, that at the outset an order be given with payment for an outfit.' This outfit, he told me, varies in price from $50 to $1,000. Not caring to bait my hook with so large a bulk of greenbacks, I substituted diplomacy. I told him that a lady friend of mine in an Eastern city—all gospel truth—had some mediumistic power, sufficient to move a table, produce rappings, etc., but that her gifts had not enough money-making power in them to enable her to support herself and those dependent upon her. 'On receiving your card from a friend,' I continued, 'it occurred to me that you might be able to help her out—that is, should I be able to persuade her to follow mediumship as a business. I do not wish her to do wrong.'

"'Certainly not, certainly not; I understand. I have many such among my clientele. It is my business to help mediums make a good show. They do not do wrong: on the contrary, they are doing a great deal of good in getting people to believe that their friends who have died are really alive. I have seen mothers made happy at the sight of their dead children, husbands at the sight of their departed wives. It has often brought tears to my eyes to see the simple faith of these people. If a man is a philanthropist who can multiply blades of grass, surely I or a medium should be entitled to praise if we cause rejoicing where there are tears. Why, my dear fellow, Spiritualists are the happiest people in the world. Why undeceive them? They are in heaven. It does them no hurt, but much good to believe these things. My business is to put clever people in the way of making the world happier.' The man grew quite eloquent in dilating on his philanthropic calling.

"'But,' said I, 'my friend is quite sensitive and would hesitate much at the employment of any deception or trick, especially any that might be detected and bring disgrace upon herself and family and friends.'

"After some further talk of this sort, he got down to business and grew confidential, and let me into some of the secrets of his trade. He asked all manner of questions about my medium friend, as to her age, education, her height, whether she was thin or fleshy, tactful, had presence of mind, was quick in retort, etc. He finally asked: 'What kind of phenomena would you prefer that your lady friend should produce?'

"I replied: 'I wish her to give physical manifestations, such as the materialization of hands, of the entire human form, spirit voices, illuminated stars, sparks, rays of light, floating balls of fire, floating musical instruments, trumpet talks, slate-writing, mind-reading, etc. Are these things within the scope of your art?'

"He smiled at the modesty of my wish, then said: 'All this is merest child's play, provided your lady friend is apt, quick-witted, and has nerve. I am furnishing help after this sort to the mediums of Chicago—they all come to me; I know them all.'

"'Do good, genuine mediums use this kind of help?'

"'All mediums are good mediums and genuine mediums. I don't know any other kind.'

"'Is there no difficulty in manipulating this machinery or paraphernalia?'

"'It is so simple you will wonder why it is that people do not at once detect it. When you understand it, and understand the modus operandi of handling it, you will be much amused.'

"'How about slate-writing?'

"'With tied slates, glued and sealed?'

"'Yes, oh, yes. I have laughed until my sides ached after a seance at the remembrance of how easily and completely the d. e.'s ['dead easies'] were fooled. To see a doting father take the materialized form of his dead child on his knee and pet it and kiss it, and then hear the little one say, "Now, papa, I must go; I feel I am getting weak," and then see the child slip from his lap and disappear, to the infinite surprise of all the faithful—it is more laughable than an Artemus Ward "wax-figger show."'

"'But is there no danger of getting caught?'

"'No; there are two hundred mediums in Chicago. How seldom you hear of an exposure.'

"'But I have been where I was permitted to touch the hand of a form. It seemed warm, as if flesh and blood.'

"This seemed to amuse him greatly. Finally he said: 'Yes; it does feel precisely like flesh. But this is another phase of the business. It is all explained when the outfit is sent.'

"'But how is that done?'

"'Is it always fraud—never real?'

"'I don't know of any medium who is guilty of fraud. You know I am a good Spiritualist when I am with Spiritualists. I am the fast friend of all mediums.... What class of people will be the chief constituency of your lady friend—Catholic or Protestant, white or black?'

"'Why, what difference does that make?'

"'Well, if Catholic, they will prove the more remunerative, as they are much more ready to accept the supernatural. I have a splendid make-up representing a Catholic priest. The Catholics go wild over him. He is very effective with his priestly garb on and with his large cross.'

"'But how is one costume and one medium to represent different priests?'

"'Oh, given little light and plenty of faith and plausible assertion, a Catholic will see just the priest he wishes to see. It is amazing how easily people are deceived in a semi-dark room; with the lights low you can not tell whether an object is three feet or ten feet away. Distances and directions and proportions are extremely deceptive in the dark. As to the Catholics,' he continued, 'if you materialize a well-known priest or two or three dead friends of some one or more Catholics present, for the next week you will have all of the private "sittings" you can care for at $5 or $10 each.'

"I told him that the lady's clientele would probably be Protestant, and that she is rather conscientious and might hesitate to deceive them.

"'Why, my dear sir, why should she? A genuine Spiritualist, as I have already said, is supremely happy in his faith. People who come to seances are as a rule in deep sorrow. The medium wipes their tears and lifts their burdens. Can there be any wrong in this? Is not this doing a charitable, worthy thing? Your friend should learn to prize her calling as a helpful and noble one. These things must be judged by their fruits and looked upon in a broad way.'

"To my repeated questions how this and that was done, his almost constant answer was that these secrets were part of his stock in trade.

"'But,' I insisted, 'I have seen sometimes the medium and a spirit form stand side by side and I have taken hold of their hands and talked to them, sometimes both at the same time.'

"This gave the fellow much quiet fun at my expense. Finally he said: 'That reminds me of a seance I once attended. It was held by one of the best mediums in Chicago. There were a number of fine materializations—understand me, when I am with the Spiritualists I am an enthusiastic Spiritualist. The next day a wealthy woman who was a believer called on me. She said that she enjoyed the meeting the evening before very much, but that she wished to ask me a question. She desired to know whether spirits really perspire, for she had detected the odor of perspiration on one of the forms. She spoke with such earnestness and her question struck me as so ludicrous that I had to excuse myself and went out and laughed myself almost into a convulsion. When I was laughed out I returned, and with a long face said: "Yes, our dear friends materialize in perfectly natural bodies, and hence of course perspire on a hot summer evening just as the rest of us do." Her faith was fully restored.'

"I said: 'I know a man who had his little child on his lap, and it dematerialized while he was holding it.'

"'But,' said I, 'a hand will materialize and dematerialize right before me.'

"'You can not tell whether it is a hand or a foot six feet away. With my radium illumination, the front illuminated and the back not, you turn the hand and you have materialization, and you turn it again and you have dematerialization, amid the ohs! and ahs! of the d. e.'s. So with stars and so with the entire human form. Much success depends upon the skill of the medium in manipulating the black and the white cloth.'

"'My friend has not the power of ventriloquism. How would she be able to represent the different voices?'

"Again he smiled, and finally brought out an aluminum trumpet and several mouthpieces. It was a revelation to hear the different voices he could produce and the rapidity with which he could change from one voice to another. When my back was turned, I could have taken an oath that I heard two different voices speaking at the same time.

"'Do all mediums resort to trickery?' I asked.

"'None do. All are honest, perfectly honest.'

"'But,' I persisted, 'there are some genuine mediums and some non-genuine.'

"He replied: 'All mediums are genuine; they are all good and doing good, cheering hearts and lifting burdens, bringing out "the stars at night," as the poets put it.'

"After some more interchange of this kind of talk I said: 'Speaking seriously, do you mean to tell me that no mediums possess occult or abnormal powers; that it is all humbuggery and trickery?'

"After a few moments' thought, his face growing serious, he said: 'There is something mysterious, something that puzzles me at times about some mediums. I have seen phenomena that I can not explain. At times an outside influence seems to come over the medium, taking possession of her. What it is I don't know. Possibly telepathy will explain it, possibly spirits.'

"He told me much more, and ended by this business turn: 'I can fix up your lady friend and so instruct her, if she is clever—cleverness is essential—that she will be able to earn from $50 to $70 a week. I must have her bust measurement, her neck measurement, and also her height and weight. She need have no fear about detection and must give up all scruples about doing wrong. I showed to Herrmann when he was living some Spiritualistic tricks which he was never able to explain and which he afterward used. The lady can conceal enough of my paraphernalia about her person to produce many materializations of hands, forms, lights, etc., and walk to a private house, visit socially with the people half an hour or more, without awakening the slightest suspicion.'"

1. Notwithstanding the abundance and the disgusting nature of the frauds which attend many Spiritualistic seances, yet so keen an opponent of Spiritualism as Frank Podmore, in his late book, "Modern Spiritualism," is compelled to say:

"Whether the belief in the intercourse with spirits is well founded or not, it is certain that no critic has yet succeeded in demonstrating the inadequacy of the evidence upon which the Spiritualists rely."

"The man who denies the phenomena of Spiritism to-day is not entitled to be called a skeptic; he is simply ignorant."

And the great scientist, Alfred Russel Wallace, recently said that no more evidence is needed to prove Spiritualism, for no accepted fact in science has a greater or stronger array of truth in its behalf.

2. The new psychology which is being shaped largely by current psychic investigations seems likely to modify in not a few ways the interpretation of Scripture, and hence should be of profound interest to the clergy.

3. These cautionary words: (a) When the facts which are now being told are admitted to be true, the reader must not leap to the conclusion that the hypothesis of Spiritualism is proved. There are many chasms, each miles and miles wide, yet to be bridged or filled. (b) There is danger—real danger—along these lines of investigation. I have seen psychic cobwebs—if cobwebs they be—tangle the feet of even intellectual giants; and the shrewdest experts—to change the simile—need to sail these mystic seas with sharp eyes and level heads, for these seas are almost wholly uncharted, and in sailing over them, at times, the ship's compasses exhibit inexplicable variations. Yet these investigations must be made and these seas must be sailed and charted. I. K. FUNK.

ENCYCLOPEDIA
...OF...
BIBLICAL SPIRITUALISM
...OR...
A CONCORDANCE

To the principal passages of the Old and New Testament Scriptures which prove or imply Spiritualism;

Together with a brief history of the origin of many of the important books of the Bible.

BY MOSES HULL.

Much that is in this book appeared in an abridged form in a series of nine full pages of THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER. These articles were prepared at the call of hundreds of Spiritualists who felt the need of some kind of document for ready reference. They only seemed to whet the appetite for more; hence the publication of this work.

The author, Moses Hull, has written many volumes on Spiritualistic and other themes and each one is full of careful study on the subject chosen. Mr. Hull, in his introduction of this work says:

"Hoping that this book will serve to lead the people out of the wilderness of doubt and despair; and that when Spiritualism shall have wrested the Bible from its 'sanctified' enemies, it will not 'spike' it, but will use it to batter down the walls of Christian superstition and ignorance, I send it out on its errand of enlightenment with the humble prayer that it will prove a divine benediction to every reader."

Curious Historical Facts.

An interesting fact in regard to Bacchus, fabled as the Roman god of wine, appears in a note on page 55 of Del Mar's "Ancient Britain," from which we copy. Those students of ancient history versed in mythology, who have taken special interest in this character, will read the quotation with pleasure. The author had shown that our remote British ancestors were divided into two religious sects, one represented by the Druids; the other by the Goths, the latter representing Buddhism, and resembling the polytheism of the ancient Roman commonwealth; that Jupiter Tonaus, of the Romans, became Thor; that Bacchus became Woden, and Venus Friga. He then says, quoting a note to Herodotus by Rev. Wm. Beloe:

"Modern painters and artists have thought proper to represent Bacchus as a gross, vulgar, and bloated personage; on the contrary, all the ancient poets and artists represent him as a youth of most exquisite beauty." Then Del Mar:

"The bronze Bacchus taken from the bed of the Tiber at Rome, in 1885, has the form of a beautiful youth, with feminine features and long curling hair, parted in the middle. As represented in Lanciani's heliotype, he holds in one hand a staff, surmounted by some conical object. If this belonged to the figure, when found, it may be a staff of augury. The other hand, with its raised forefinger, imposes silence, a familiar attitude of the radiated figures of the same god which Mrs. Barker excavated at Tarsus in 1845. * * * Bacchus was known to the Gauls as Hesus."

Opening to Lemprier, article Bacchus, we learn he was identical with Osiris of Egypt. He was a favorite with all peoples who became acquainted with him; his conquests were everywhere made without bloodshed; he taught the use of the vine, the cultivation of the earth, and the manner of making honey. At his death Bacchus went down to hell to recover his mother.

A statue of Bacchus was found at Pontus, on the Black Sea, and was shipped to Alexandria, in Egypt, where a magnificent temple, one of the wonders of the world, was erected, in which he was enshrined; then, under the name of Serapis, he was worshiped as the resurrected Osiris.

All these ancient lesser Gods, as Mithra, Apollo, Harpocrates, Esculapius, etc., seem to merge into each other, and appear to have been avaters of Vishnu of the Indes. The original of the names was Jes Crishna, the 8th, and Buddha, the 9th, avater. Mr. Del Mar says the correct spelling, as he found it in the Sanscrit, for Crishna is Christna, but as Sir Wm. Jones, the first of the English Sanscrit scholars rendered it Crishna, he follows his example. He displays such integrity throughout his numerous works, the fourth of which we are now reading, we dare not suspicion for a moment he is pandering to his creed; but, singular, isn't it? He finds this Jes Crishna was worshiped as the Son of God in Mariandyna, a region in Bithynia, lying along the south coast of the Euxine, now known as the Black Sea, 500 years before our era, and that his worship extended all over Asia Minor and Syria in process of time. These scholars are making wonderful revelations, and it will be difficult for the Jaspers to defeat them.

Jes, with the Latin terminal us, becomes Jesus. The most learned Greek scholars insist christus is not a genuine Grecian word, but an interpolation from a foreign tongue. If so and the Christian author, Del Mar, is correct in his rendering of the Sanscrit, then it would be interesting to know what relationship existed between Jes Christna and our Jesus Christ.

DR. I. K. FUNK.

Dr. Funk's article on our third page this week will be read with great interest. As fragments of the same as published in all the leading dailies have reached at least one-half of the population of the United States, we have thought best to give space to the entire article, thus keeping our readers thoroughly posted in regard to passing events. About a year ago, however, we published the card of Mr. Myers, so that is nothing new to our readers. We have known for a long time of these dealers in bogus materializing paraphernalia, and the facts as given by Mr. Funk will prove an impressive object lesson to Spiritualists generally.

Visit to a Thibetan Temple.

An interesting side-light on Lamaism as it exists in Thibet, is afforded in a dispatch to the London Daily Mail, in which a British officer describes the diabolical rites of the monks, as seen on a visit to the Buddhist cathedral in Lhassa during the service. The correspondent says:

"The monks have extraordinary deep, devotional voices, reaching deeper tones than any western bass. The voice of a thousand monks resembles the drone of a subterranean monster, musically plaintive—the voice of the earth god praying for release to the god of the skies.

"In the inner temple are three enormous images of the Buddhist trinity, set with jewels from foot to crown. In the upper story in a place called 'hell,' some lamas were worshiping the demon protectress of the grand lama. The music here was harsh and barbaric. On pillars and on the walls were displayed every freak of disbolical invention in the shape of scrolls and devil masks.

"The obscene object of this worship was huddled in a corner, a dwarfish abortion, hideous and malignant enough for such rites. All about the lamas' feet ran little white mice, searching for grain, with which they are fed daily. They are scrupulously reverenced, as in their frail bodies the soul of previous guardians of the shrine are believed to be reincarnated.

Some of the rites were conducted in absolute silence. As we watched from a latticed window some acolytes looked up, but the monks sat like stone figures, apparently oblivious of our presence. The reek of candles was almost suffocating. "Thank God I'm not a lama,' said a subaltern at my side, as we clattered out of this unholy atmosphere of dreams."

Making Atonement.

The following choice morsel of news appears in the daily newspapers. It is of special interest as a manifestation of the spirit of Romanism toward freedom of thought and speech:

Rome, Sept. 26.—The pope has addressed to the cardinal vicar a protest against the congress of freethinkers held here last week. The text was published in the Osservatore Romano this evening, with a letter from the cardinal vicar inviting Catholics to attend a service of atonement to be held in all the basilicas of Rome on Thursday next.

The pope, in his letter to Cardinal Respighi, the vicar general of the pontiff, said: "A new cause of bitterness had been added to the many anxieties which, especially in our times, accompany the government of the universal church. We have learned with infinite sorrow that it is asserted that the cultivators of free thought have met in Rome while the painful echo of their speeches is unfortunately confirmed by their grim designs.

"Intelligence is the noblest gift the Creator has granted us, but it becomes sacrilegious when subtracted from dependency on the Almighty or rejects the direction and comfort of divine truth."

The pope says the insult was rendered the more grave by the freethinkers' meeting in Rome, the city which has been destined as a depository of the faith, thus taking from Rome its designation as the tranquil, respected see of Christ's vicar.

"We, therefore," the pope adds, "will make ours the offense offered to God, gathering in our hearts all its bitterness."

The pope recognizes that even on this occasion God sent comfort through the manifestation of filial affection received yesterday from the 1,000 members of the Catholic Association of French Youths, but he wishes to have in Rome a solemn function of atonement for the outrage to divine majesty and for the honor and good name of the city.

An intelligent and impartial reader of history would conclude that if the pope were to invite Catholics to attend services of atonement for the sins and crimes of the popes and church, committed against humanity, they would have their hands full, without service of atonement for the "cultivators of free thought."

This "protest against the congress of freethinkers" is an insult to the intelligence of the age. It proves that the spirit of medievalism and the Dark Ages still dominates the Romish church and would crush all liberty that manifested itself in any degree outside the rule of the church.

Free thought, free speech, free investigation, free schools, free men—all these are contrary to the spirit of Romanism.

Religious Fanaticism.

A peculiar case of religious fanaticism is reported as having occurred near Sterling, Ill., recently. As stated in the Inter-Ocean, Matthew Olsen, believing that he had received instructions from above to have his feet cut off by a locomotive, carried out the instructions to the letter. He walked seven miles to the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy tracks nine miles southwest of Sterling, where, under the cover of the early darkness, and at a curve he placed both feet over the rails, and with his body outside of the track, he permitted the Barstow passenger at 5 o'clock to dismember both feet at the ankles.

The engineer was unable to stop the train in time to prevent the accident. As the train did its awful work Olsen got on his knees and sang, "Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow," and told the train crew that he was a disciple of God, and that he was only doing penance, such as God had directed him in a dream a few hours before.

He was placed on the train and taken to the hospital, but it was under protest, he claiming that God would heal his wounds, and that medical aid was unnecessary. Olsen is a well-to-do farmer, but has always been considered a religious crank, but he was never thought to be demented.

He still insists that he has carried out the divinely expressed will of Christ.

Such fanaticism is of a piece with the church-lauded deeds of Romish religious enthusiasts who, to gain the favor of God, have subjected their bodies to all sorts of painful self-imposed cruelties, in order to "crucify the flesh" and attain religious purification and spiritual exaltation. And for these self-imposed sufferings they have been canonized by the church as "saints."

There is a lesson in this for Spiritualists as well as church religionists, that whatever spirits or "God" or "Christ" may tell them to do, it is their right and their duty to exercise their own reason, judgment and common sense in the matter, and maintain their own self-control.

"Meatless Dishes." Very useful. Price 10 cents.

Spiritualism's Progress

It is as futile for all opposition of whatsoever kind to attempt to check the advance of Spiritualism as for John Alexander Dowie, with his rantings about the use of whiskey, tobacco and pork, to attempt to make the world see as he does, though everyone may know, down in their very being or ego, that not one of these is a necessity to the life and health of anyone. And the daily and hourly occurrences along the occult line among the godly and the godless; among the everyday, common people and the aristocratic lords and ladies of the world; among the scientists, the authors, the inventors, the preachers and the priests, and editors of the secular press; in fact among humanity everywhere, of whatsoever race or color; in the circles of wisdom and among the most ignorant.

The philosophy, or principles and the phenomena are ours, but not to the exclusion of anyone else on earth.

Its principles are true, and being true, must eventually become a part of all literature, all science, all religion.

Religionists may be slow to adopt the name, in fact, quite frequently do rail against it bitterly and harshly, and in the next breath advocate exactly the same principles, and when they do so, now that we have grown large and strong, we should remember the words, almost the last ever spoken by the great spiritual Master: "Forgive them, they know not what they do." They will do better when they know better.

Its principles are right and will push on, but to perpetuate the name we must make it so sweet and good to the public ear that it will be sacred to all; this can only be done by living its truths, its moral teachings. We must keep it white, and clean, and it will attract the clean, pure and sensible portion of the world. We must make the name sound holy, good and right to the world, and not nauseating to the olfactory or harsh to the auricular organ of good people.

It was all right to shout our great and glorious discovery to the world when the discovery was made. It started people to looking and thinking and they are discovering the same thing in every part of the globe, and each one has the right to discovery, and owns all he or she discovers, and there will not be a patent laid upon it in any form. It is as free as the air.

The world is ours and we are the world's.

Read the following editorial, taken from the Sunday Record-Herald, of this city; it portrays the common trend of thought along this line, under the head of "Dreams and Their Explanation":

Dr. Isaac K. Funk, himself a Spiritualist, admits that there is a fraudulent side to Spiritualism and tells of a Chicago man who supplies "mediums" with the necessary paraphernalia for bringing about "spirit materializations." That there are mediums who seem to need adventitious aid no one will deny. Unless appearances are in effect lies, we should as soon associate the spiritual with certain grunting animals as with these queer vehicles of communion between soul and soul.

Is there need of any gross medium whatever, or of any material medium gross or tenuous? Is there such a thing as communion between spirits of the unknown world and those lodged in human bodies? Do the spirits of living bodies traverse space to communicate with one another in scorn of all bodily limitations? These questions still interest people as much as if the fakirs among Spiritualists, mind readers and telepathists had never existed, and every year brings forth its crop of marvelous stories concerning mysteries that are frankly called supernatural, or that, having a supernatural appearance, are scientifically explained upon natural principles. And though a man like Goldwin Smith may scout a comparison between telepathy and wireless telegraphy by saying that the latter has a medium while the former has none, he is promptly asked: "On what grounds does he base his statement and make such an assertion with so much confidence?"

His interrogator is William L. Stone, nephew of the late Francis Wayland, president of Brown University, who contributes to the New York Sun a goodly bunch of mysteries. Once he dreamed that his aunt, Mrs. Wayland, bent over his chair at the dinner table and kissed him. The next morning, on going to his office, he found a letter announcing her death. Recently he thought hard all day long about an old classmate, though there was nothing to bring him to mind, and the day after he received a letter from him which was written while the thinking was going on. He dreamt that an old friend was dying, and got the death announcement according to expectation in the morning paper. Quoting from the "Life of Dr. Wayland," he repeats an anecdote to the effect that when Wayland was a young man and away from home his mother cried out one day to his father, "Pray for my son, Francis is in danger," and about that time Francis was struggling in the waters of the Hudson, into which he had fallen from the deck of a sloop.

Now let us turn from Mr. Stone to Mr. Rider Haggard, who is also a dreamer of dreams, and who adds to the strange experiences not only of human kind but of dog kind also. Mr. Haggard's, or Miss Haggard's dog, Bob, was killed by the cars on a night when Mr. Haggard himself was having a terrible time with a nightmare. And while Mr. Haggard was coming out of the nightmare, with the earnest assistance of Mrs. Haggard, whom he had awakened with the "horrible and weird noises" he was making, he had a vision of Bob lying on his side among brushwood or rough growth of some sort by water. Furthermore, the dreamer's personality "in some mysterious way seemed to be arising from the body of the dog," which, says Mr. Haggard, "was trying to speak to me in words, and, failing, transmitted to my mind in an undefined fashion the knowledge that it was dying."

In commenting on this story Andrew Lang relates several new ones of his own and confesses to the belief that "coincidences between the death or other crisis of one human being and the coincident impression of the events in dream or hallucination on the mind of another human being at a distance" are "the result of a sort of Marconi's waves, or rays, or whatever they are, always pervading space, but very seldom finding a hospitable cerebral recipient; very seldom producing a veridical corresponding dream or vision in a person at a distance."

That should please Mr. Stone, if it does not convince Professor Smith, and ingenious Mr. Lang may be trusted to bring up reinforcements every month in Longmans Magazine for the Stone side if he is challenged to a controversy.

SEEN AND HEARD.

The "Exposure of the Fraudulent Side of Spiritualism," by B. F. Funk, brother of Dr. Isaac K. Funk, has led to the report that the Doctor has changed his views since writing "The Widow's Mite." Nothing could be more untrue. The reader of that volume will remark the impartiality with which the true and the false are treated by the writer and the spurious not allowed to overslaw the genuine. From the beginning of his investigations Dr. Funk was met by this element, and yet he never rejects the wheat because buried under mountains of chaff.

After all, what does this "exposure" by his brother amount to? Simply, this brother responded to an advertisement of a dealer in fake paraphernalia, appliances for the performance of fake mediumship. This dealer said all mediumship was deception. He did not explain a single trick and would not unless paid exorbitantly for the lesson.

It seems quite unnecessary for Dr. Funk to declare that it has not changed his opinion in the least. He says: "This has not changed my attitude toward psychic phenomena. I was aware of the existence of this class of frauds. In the book, 'The Widow's Mite,' I gave much emphasis to the fraud side of this problem.

"But on the other hand, scores of psychologists and other leading scientists, and hundreds of other trustworthy men, make it certain that there are many genuine psychic phenomena, and the researches of these investigators indicate the near discovery and mastery of forces which are likely to prove of extraordinary value to the world, and that at least some of these forces belong to faculties which are in all of us, and in all of us are more or less undeveloped."

True Spiritualists will be rejoiced that Dr. Funk will make no friendship with fraud. They will agree with him "that the best service that can be done to Spiritualism is for those who are friendly to it to mercilessly assail the fraud side of it."

Dr. Funk concludes his remarkable article contributed to the dignified and orthodox "Homiletic Review," with suggestions he says it is well to carry in memory. Among them are the fact that Frank Podmore in his book on "Modern Spiritualism," notwithstanding the abundance of frauds, says:

"Whether the belief in the intercourse with spirits is well-founded or not, it is certain that no critic has yet succeeded in demonstrating the inadequacy of the evidence upon which the Spiritualists rely."

The eminent Doctor would make Spiritualism an interpreter of the Bible, and thus recommends it to the church ministers:

"The new psychology which is being shaped largely by current psychic investigations seems likely to modify in not a few ways the interpretation of Scripture, and hence should be of profound interest to the clergy."

In this we think his expectations will be vain. Spiritualism interprets the Bible so far away from the creeds that the clergy are lost sight of.

In conclusion:

"These cautionary words: (a) When the facts which are now being told are admitted to be true, the reader must not leap to the conclusion that the hypothesis of Spiritualism is proved. There are many chasms, each miles and miles wide, yet to be bridged or filled. (b) There is danger—real danger—along these lines of investigation. I have seen psychic cobwebs—if cobwebs they be—tangle the feet of even intellectual giants; and the shrewdest experts—to change the simile—need to sail these mystic seas with sharp eyes and level heads, for these seas are almost wholly uncharted, and in sailing over them, at times, the ship's compasses exhibit inexplicable variations. Yet these investigations must be made and these seas must be sailed and charted."

Dr. Funk has undertaken a most difficult task, that of educating his fellow church members to the appreciation and acceptance of phenomena he considers of great importance. With his splendid training, he can hold his conclusions in a balance and reject a part without rejecting the whole. But the masses cannot do this. They must have a reliable statement and authority. They will not take his tentative position. They must have certainty on one side or the other. They dare not follow a leader who may at any moment by some new found light turn to the other side.

Preparatory to Preaching.

In no Catholic institution of learning is "hazing" or anything but the treatment one gentleman gives another known among the students. Whatever may be said about their educational methods, here the other sectarian and independent colleges and universities may well find example for imitation. Hazing has become a part of college life, and its unwritten history in each institution handed down from class to class, and each successive class strives to excel the past achievements, in cruelty and brutality. To the appeal of humanitarians, college faculties and managing boards reply that it is impossible to prevent hazing, class rushes, and other manifestations of innate savagery. This is palpably untrue, for the Catholic schools have the same elements to contend with, and have perfect control.

The most contemptible, cowardly and brutal manifestations of this spirit have always marked the classes at Princeton, N. J. This is especially a training school for gospel ministers. Its professors are profoundly orthodox, and from it the full-fledged pastors go forth to teach Christ crucified. The following was reported to the Associated Press, not because uncommon, but because the fight was more than usually severe. A class rush is a euphonious term for a fight, or a battle wherein the savage can have unrestrained license:

"The freshmen, surrounded by juniors, approached the old gymnasium in small groups to encounter a crowd of sophomores prepared to resist their entrance to the building. The upper classmen, however, were equal to the occasion and after some fierce bloody hand to hand encounters succeeded in getting the freshmen into the gymnasium.

After the elections the juniors paraded the freshmen down Nassau street and the attacks of the sophomores caused many bloody noses, cuts and broken fingers. Frequently cabs were called to pick up disabled victims of the fight. In the evening hostilities were again renewed, when the freshmen rushed the sophomores, who were lined up about the cannon back of 'Old North,' and succeeded in carrying off the honors of the day. Several were laid out after the rush."

For aspirants for the mantle of Jesus, young men who believe (?) that they have been redeemed by the blood of Christ, and have entered into work of human salvation, this department of the prize ring is reprehensible, and shows the hypocrisy of those who claim to be divinely called, when to them it means simply an easy way to preferment and honor.

Princeton is not alone for the malady—it is something that affects all Protestant colleges. Last week it was reported that the sophomores of an Ohio college, caught three freshmen and put them in an empty box car. Before they were released the car was taken up and carried several hundreds of miles, and the victims nearly perished from hunger and exposure.

At pious Oberlin, students were taken many miles into a forest, and left bound to trees. In all the freshmen must expect to submit to the grossest indignities, and to have no protection from the faculty.

If good results come of it, in any form, it might be tolerated, but it does not. There is not the least excuse and it is self-evidently demoralizing, brutalizing and degrading. One object of education—and the principal one—is to cultivate the intellectual or spiritual: To bring the animal nature under subjection to the spiritual. The popular pastimes of the colleges tend directly in the opposite direction.

The Color Line.

The students of the Ohio Northern University at Ada, are not to be disgraced by a colored classmate, and have rebelled. There is only one colored student, and he is said to be well balanced, and of more than ordinary ability. He has entered the law course, and the law students are out on a strike. They do not claim to be jealous of the negro or that he will eclipse them in the race; they detest him because of his color, and if he is not expelled, then he will be the only law student at the university! To express their feelings they burned the ambitious colored person in effigy. That is a fool's attack and remnant of the times when it would have been burning the real person at the stake.

If the Princeton students give promise of anything but angelic preachers, these Ada students may not achieve greater success at law. It is reported they gathered around and "formed a howling mob." These embryo lawyers should know that in this country there is no color line, and a black is equal before the law to a white man. If he does things as well, or better, he should have perfect freedom to do his best. It has been made impossible for him to do anything for himself, and then he has been ostracised for not doing.

As George T. Angell, the humane worker, says in his monthly, the colleges are educating devils instead of worthy citizens. In evidence the following dispatch to the Associated Press is one of many which daily appear:

Lafayette, Ind., Sept. 17.—As a result of the annual fight of the freshmen and sophomore classes of Purdue University, Frank Miller is dying of pneumonia at his home.

The sophomores repeatedly drove, or threw, him into the middle of the Wabash River, and Miller finally swam to the opposite shore, making his escape.

He started for his home across the railroad bridge, naked and weak, and fell from exhaustion.

If it is asked why Spiritualists desire schools of their own; why they object to sending their children to the great and world-widely known universities already established, can a better answer be given than these reports of the doings of the young devils, who pursue their cruel sport unreproved by the management of such institutions?

It is a sad outlook for a loving mother and expectant father to send a son to a college, where with class rush, street fight, and ball game, he is exposed to more dangers than on the battle field, and may be brought home any day in a casket. And yet more, the moral effect, and spiritual degradation of such "amusements" and "athletics," is sufficient to prevent parents having regard for the well-being of their children entrusting them to the care of such "strenuous" institutions.

If education means anything it is to purify the character and make kind, tender, loving and thoughtful of others. With the present college instruction it appears to stand for rude brutality which will crush the life out of an opponent; claw, strike, kick and jaw one's way through opposition, regardless of the hurts inflicted on others.

Does any one for a moment think that should a great Spiritual School be established, the Morris Pratt Institute become all its friends desire, that the standard of excellence would be fixed by brute force, and the brawn of the pugilist take precedence over spiritual and intellectual achievement?

HUDSON TUTTLE.

To Those Attending the Convention, or the World's Fair.

To the Editor:—Permit me through the columns of your valuable paper to offer to the delegates and visitors who expect to attend the forthcoming convention in St. Louis, a little advice regarding accommodations.

During the World's Fair all the hotels are overcrowded and we found it impossible to arrange for general headquarters at terms that would come within the reach of most of our friends. There is, however, abundance of accommodations in rooming and private houses for all who may desire to come at reasonable rates. Many of our own people who do not make a business of renting rooms have thrown open their spare rooms for visitors. The rates are from 75 cents to $1 per day per person, where two persons share a room. A single room can be had from $1 to $2 per day. Meals can be had at the many restaurants at prices from 25 cents up; in addition to which the ladies of our society are arranging to furnish meals at the Temple for those who desire to stay. I believe our delegates will be able to attend convention this year as cheaply as heretofore, and will be quite as comfortable. Friends, make up your mind to come to the convention, and as a side attraction we offer you the greatest exposition the world has ever seen. Friends desiring accommodations can write me. Please state if you want a single room or will share. Enclose stamp for reply.

Dowie in Jerusalem.

It is reported that Dr. Dowie declares he will, in imitation of Jesus, enter into Jerusalem, riding an ass. It would be a sight worth beholding were he to do as Jesus is said to have done, as recorded in Math. xxi:5, 6, 7: "Behold thy king cometh unto thee, meek, and sitting upon an ass, and a colt the foal of an ass. And the disciples went and did as Jesus commanded them, and brought the ass, and the colt, and put on them their clothes, and they set him thereon." As of old, we think "all the city" would "be moved" by the spectacle of the redoubtable Dowie "riding upon an ass, and a colt the foal of an ass." Selah.

Wants the Open Court Again.

To the Editor:—Why not open the Court again? Thousands are asking for it. It has done great good. It was a strong elucidation of facts. Not only instructs, but sounds the death knell to frauds. I asked the question to a large audience and it was responded to by hearty applause, and "Yes, Yes!" from everyone. You don't know the good that has done. Let us have the Open Court again. Yours fraternally,

Frank T. Ripley, Peru, Ind.

THE OPEN COURT.

The Open Court was continued for nine weeks, and certain questions were discussed therein by prominent Spiritualists with most excellent results. Those not avowed Spiritualists were not allowed to express their opinion. Heretofore no other Spiritualist paper had dared to open its columns to a discussion of the subjects considered, hence the Open Court created an interest in our ranks heretofore unparalleled. When we discontinued it, we had a vast amount of matter on hand on the same line of thought, but as the sentiments expressed were practically the same as already presented, we thought better to discontinue it for the present. A few, with only a small quantity of grey matter in their brains, railed against the editor for allowing this discussion, and abused us because we did not suppress freedom of speech.

The Progressive Thinker appeals to honest Spiritualists and mediums and never before in the fifteen years of its life, has it been more prosperous than now. Its success has been unparalleled in the whole history of Spiritualism on this entire earth. And now that the Fall and Winter Campaign has been inaugurated, the paper will be especially interesting, and every Spiritualist should try to extend its good work. Send us, as a reward for the Open Court, an additional subscriber.

Will Russia Ever Surrender to Japan?

Our National Affairs Considered. Discourse through Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond.

Mr. Chairman:—These subjects have been suggested by members of the audience and the majority of those voting have voted for them, so we will speak upon them both briefly.

A great many times people say in Spiritualist meetings, "We do not want to hear you speak about politics."

Now we are not going to talk about politics. Fortunately the politics of the nation is in such a condition that we do not have to talk about it. It seems to be at a standstill. Therefore we leave political subjects in the hands of the politicians. National affairs, however, belong to the people.

The first question pertaining to Russia and Japan is one upon which we have many times voluntarily spoken as an illustration of the trend of human life and of nations. We have said in past time, and we say again, that Japan is the rising star of the Orient; the one nation that is to unlock the great store-house of Oriental knowledge and Oriental history, and bring such regeneration to the Orient as is possible. That China, as a nation, will never rally, because China, as a nation, is dead and has been buried many hundreds of years. But the Chinese people, however, are not all dead. There is a vast army of them, millions upon millions of people, some of whom will be absorbed into the new civilization, others will pass out of existence in fruitless warfare. The majority of them will be absorbed by the other nations who are battling for the Oriental commerce.

Russia has long been the shadow upon modern civilization. Absolute imperialism holding its sway has made of Siberia a grave-yard, the cemetery of Freedom; and what Russia has been with Siberia, so it has been to the freedom and liberty that the Russians have sought.

Imperial Russia will be destroyed. The hand of Japan is skillful in conflict, is ready with modern inventions and implements of war. Imperial Russia must yield to the onward march of the civilization of the Orient.

But a new Russia is to be born. Russia will be a republic before Great Britain, before Germany, before any other European power. For the new republic will be born out of Siberia. The hands that have been shackled, the minds that have been fettered, those principles that have been slumbering, or only awakened in minds like Tolstoi, will come forth. Japan will furnish the opportunity to set the political prisoners free.

Russia has been intent upon an outlet to the Orient for many decades of years, for more than a century of time. The intervention of Great Britain with her Indian possessions, conquered partly by force and partly by fraud; the intervening of other nations having their outlets to the Orient has delayed this. But Russia has had her eyes upon the commerce of the East as a necessity for many, many years. The building of these long lines of railroads, the taking possession gradually of territory along its frontier, the pushing into Manchuria and other countries bordering upon the far east have been in response to a purpose.

Even though the Czar of Russia called a meeting of the powers, not long ago, asking that they each partially disarm and lessen their armies, there was no ultimate intention of peace. Russia has been intending to do what she is now trying to do for many, many years. But she reckoned without knowing how much preparation Japan had made, and is still making; she underestimated Japan as did all the western nations, although Japan so easily gained the victory over her formidable enemy, China.

But Japan, realizing the situation, has been steadily going forward making preparation. When in the recent conflict it was thought, that Japan, in her own waters, could easily gain naval victories, it was believed that upon the land the Russian soldiers, better trained and more skillful, would easily conquer the Japanese army. But this is not true.

We do not say that Russia will voluntarily yield, but we do say, that sufficient victory will be obtained by Japan to warrant the intervention of other powers who will insist upon a partial yielding. We do say, that Siberia gains courage from the defeats of the Czar's armies in the far East. And that element which you know as "Nihilism," but which in reality is the republicanism of Russia, will spring into active existence. If you lived there you would be bound to be a Nihilist. Even Count Tolstoi's peace contemplates even with his spirit of non-resistance, this possible republic that is to grow up from Siberia and the persecution of those exiled patriots.

You must remember that imperialism in Russia is only a shell. It is of iron it is true; it is strong as a military power; its surveillance is an eye that is everywhere; it has under its espionage all the people. But liberal thoughts, nevertheless, have been spreading; the spirit of freedom has, nevertheless, been growing. We predict, that it is this new Russia that is to appear after the present conflict between Russia and Japan. We predict that it is to be a republic after imperialism has done its best or worst, and the forces of the imperial army have become more and more demoralized.

Russia is strong, but she is not invincible. Russia is determined, but she is not eternal. That which has been sown will surely be reaped; for remember, those who have been banished to Siberia, who have been exiled because of their advocacy of political freedom, are not the lower strata of Russian subjects, are not those who have violated just laws intentionally, are not those guilty of crime—that is, of any other crime except that of loving freedom. The truth is that there is a better element transported to Siberia than remains in Russia, and that element will form the basis of the new nation, the new republic.

Meanwhile, Japan will go on steadily making up her loss and her preparations.

While there has been a great cry in European countries and in America that the Japanese are really "heathen," that they represent an imperialism as strong as that of Russia, that they have a religion that is "atheistical" and not in harmony with the Christian religion, and it has also been presented that Russia is really a Christian nation, that the Greek church is the direct Apostolic church, and, that therefore, the sympathies of Christian nations ought to be with Russia instead of Japan—the truth is, that the spirit of Russia is not any more Christian than, nor as much as is Japan; that neither nation is fighting for Christ, but both are fighting for their possessions; Japan because hers are imperiled, Russia because she wishes to increase her dominion. The right must forever be on the side of the one that acts in the defensive. No one, not utterly in favor of imperialism, and of the entire latitude of conquest by aggressive warfare can for a moment sympathize with Russia, in any other way than as you sympathize with any plunderer, any robber, who, if he continues to plunder, continues to rob, must have a certain outlet in order to do it. That is Russia's present position.

There have been previous emperors of Russia that saw a little way into the future and have taken steps for the emancipation of the serfs. But this was not wholly an act of an imperial power in favor of freedom, nor the perception of the spirit of freedom. These serfs were not enlightened, they would vote in accordance with the imperial decree, and in that respect would use their influence against the liberal thought which the emperor feared.

There are also times when even a Czar has moments of illumination. There was a period of time when forty years ago the then reigning czar had access to spiritual counsel, understood the meaning of the ministry from the other world, and under that czar there were steps taken for the carrying out of that which was afterwards proposed in the disarmament of the nations. Yet the present czar has no intention of disarming himself or of other nations disarming. The present czar is hedged around, as all kings are, by warlike men; men who look for position and power under imperialism. And being so hedged around, whatever his own feelings or wishes might be they could never be carried out.

We see the conflict in the Orient. It means a new Orient. That out of Japan there shall arise a new Lily of nations, which will unite with that portion of China that is released to freedom, that shall extend into India, and perhaps Egypt as a restored nation will be included in this galaxy of Oriental nations, brighter, perhaps, than those that gleam in the western lands.

This is our prediction of the ultimate consequence of the present conflict. While, as said before, a new Russia will rise from the ashes of destroyed imperialism. The men that have been trained and educated in the school of adversity, with the great sorrows of oppression upon them, will rise to the new banner of freedom, and press forward to the voice of the new republic; which will be, perhaps, the beginning of the fulfillment of Victor Hugo's prophecy.

To this western republic all oppressed people have longingly tried to come. Some of them have failed in coming, have been prevented at home. Others have been prevented by your own legislation.

As soon as a nation fears to have any and all the nations of the earth to participate in the spirit of freedom, it places limitations upon its advancement and prosperity.

Your national affairs we are treating of, not your political affairs of to-day.

If you do with the inhabitants of your Philippine possessions what you have done with the North American Indians, you will do not have much to boast of, for there are only a handful of Indians left, and before another half century is passed they will all be gone. In the St. Louis Exposition you will find an exhibit of the United States Indian schools, in which the children are the peers of any of the children in the public schools of your land. Yet you have been told, told repeatedly, that the Indian could not be educated, that the Indian would not work. But here every branch of industry has been borne forward, every opportunity taken up enthusiastically by these Indians; the arts, sculpture and literature have been encouraged and executed by them, until it has been clearly proven that had the American government taken charge of its "wards," as it called the Indians, and included them in its protecting power; sent the children to school, and given the "braves" and "chiefs" corn and wheat to plant instead of whiskey to drink, and garden seeds instead of the poisonous drugs that have been sent them, you would have had a vast population of vivifying and enlightened people today. The government did not do that. It chose to treat the Indians as separate nationalities. It made a succession of treaties with them from Cape Cod to the Rocky Mountains, and from the Rocky Mountains westward, that were all intended to be broken and have been broken. The only vestige of that which you have of the North American Indian is the exhibit at the St. Louis Fair. The only other heritage is that which you have as expressed from the fair Hunting Ground of the spirit world in the loyalty, the strength, the devotion and the excellence of those Indian guides and controls, who heal your sick, and prepare the way for the manifestations in the cabinets and seance rooms, who take possession of your mediums to strengthen and restore them, and everywhere are messengers of love and peace instead of war. Not having been "Christians," they come from the peaceful hunting grounds to illustrate to you the only practical evidence of the Golden Rule that we find in your national affairs.

If you do with the Filipinos as you have done with the Indians, you know what will befall the races that are capable, strong, and no more "savage" than were the best of the North American Indians. Many of them, (the Filipinos) advanced to a high state of civilization, will be hunted out under the very aggressive Yankee commercial spirit. For it is commerce that the Americans want. You will find in the official government reports relative to the retaining of those islands a most formidable array of facts concerning the productiveness of those islands in agricultural products and mineral wealth as a reason for their being annexed. If you do with the Philippine Islands what you have done for Cuba, although under restriction and restraint, you will do that which you should have done in the beginning.

The Filipinos, the enlightened ones, wished for self-government. They were at war with Spain because they wanted it. You took possession of Cuba to conquer Spain for the sake of releasing Cuba. Who will take possession of the Philippine Islands for the sake of releasing them from you? It is barely possible that Japan may help. It is barely possible that the presence of the new rising light in the Orient may reach the Philippine Islands. You do not need them; you do not want them. In the highest sense you should not have them, even if you have a greedy desire to possess them.

We are saying this in the highest and holiest spirit of American freedom. Colonies under subjection you cannot have. Unlimited possession of territories conquered by military force you cannot have. Provisional governments cannot last forever. The Filipinos who are intelligent have great difficulty in determining their present status with reference to the United States. If you saw them, intelligent, eager, well-mannered, well-spoken, as the one standing before you has, if you conversed with them on their thoughts and ideas concerning their own country, you would feel perfectly assured that you have no more right as a nation to govern their affairs than your neighbor has to govern your business, or your household arrangements because he has driven a robber from your door. You may think and do what you like in reference to this matter, but there is no spirit from George Washington to Abraham Lincoln whose name has been synonymous with patriotism who does not think as we have expressed.

Concerning your internal affairs: Having become a "world power," having followed the example of Rome and the imperial Caesars, you do know what may follow.

The armies of the United States should be volunteer armies. A large standing army and navy is a menace in time of peace, as well as a degradation. The "frontier" has been debauched from the time it was established along the border line territorially until the present time by the standing army. At the close of the War of the Rebellion the war continued along the frontier to support the army. Although your militia of states and nation acquitted themselves nobly, the volunteers of New England, the Middle States and the West saved the Southern states to the Union.

But after the seeming necessity, which we grant, of intervention in the case of Cuba, the spirit of new conquest seemed aroused. While you are celebrating in St. Louis the acquisition of your greatest territory by treaty, by arrangements of peace, you are also continually celebrating the victories that have given you other territory by war. The soldiers who went to the Philippines, the army that bore the brunt of battle and the brunt of malarial fever; the sons, husbands, brothers who never came back in body, or if they came, came as wrecks physically and mentally, these are not to blame, excepting in so far as each one formed one of the body-politic of this nation.

When in 1865 or 1866 Colonel Wynkoop of a Colorado regiment, was asked to go and fight the Cheyenne Indians, who were peaceful, he threw down his commission and said: "I will not fight the allies of this nation." And he did not. This proves that the spirit of justice and freedom is strong within a man who may be willing to be shot as a deserter, but who certainly will not fight against his convictions.

It is a great thing to boast of your conquest over Spain. But you must remember that in bearing forward that conquest to the present condition there is an imitation of Spain, and not consideration for the freedom of the people. The nation to-day seems to have passed a certain stage of its progress, and has reached a stopping place. Perhaps you will believe that it has gone beyond. There was a time, but few years ago, when we said upon these camp grounds, that it was the nation's opportunity to press forward in the fulfillment of the spirit of Washington, of the spirit of the Adamses, of the spirit of Jefferson, of the spirit of Paine, of the spirit of Lincoln. If we tell you that is our opinion to-day, that that great opportunity has passed, that the pathway of this country to-day is not in the direction of Ideal Freedom of the forefathers of the country; that all this physical success and physical prosperity is an indication of decadence instead of progress, you may not accept it, you may not believe it, but nevertheless it is true.

When Rome was given over to material wealth and material power Rome was doomed. When Egypt was given over to material success and material power after a period of peace for a thousand years, Egypt was doomed. When Greece preferred physical conquest to the arts, sciences and literature Greece was doomed.

How is it that the most enlightened nation of the earth, standing upon the vantage ground of the centuries can look back over those empires that have perished and not realize that America is traveling in their footsteps? How is it that the love of material gain takes possession not only of the government itself, but of the people? They forget their duties to their country in the business of seeking wealth and the gain of commerce. The prominent men, the "best citizens," as they are called, withdraw from political interests and look to the slums to the bearing forward of the business of the nation, instead of each one pressing forward to do his public duty. Why is it that gold or wealth becomes the ideal of the nation, that you sell your sons or your daughters for gold and for titles? The flowering out of your civilization is this, the creation of the "six hundred" of New York is this, and the wealth and "culture" of Boston is given over to the imitation of English royalty and nobility. Is this the result of more than a century of republican civilization; that some of the fairest daughters of your land would rather wear a ducal crown, or even the crown of a countess or baroness than marry the noblest American living? If it is true, then that which the so-called leaders of society and the leaders of the country and their slaves do will be imitated by the many. Then what would you do in the event of some one strong enough and arrogant enough seeking to be "dictator?"

Oh we know there are voices millions strong that would uprise against it. But if the crisis were nigh? "A little more sleep, a little more slumber, a little more folding of the hands to sleep" and the lulling of conscience beneath the drowsy influence of the drug of, miscalled, "Prosperity," then what?

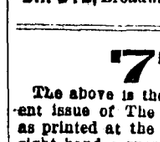
There is only one hope. What is it? The present conflict between capital and labor and the necessity of co-operation, which will follow arbitration.

If arbitration were impossible, the nation is already doomed. If co-operation is not the hope of the future, the nation is already doomed. You will simply wait, but your children's children will live to experience what we say.

The spirit of despotism in the ruling of a class is just as despicable as imperialism in the Czar of Russia. There is no choice.

We are saying this while you are slumbering securely on the seeming foundations of your liberties. While the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States are scoffed at by those who regard them as "traditions of the past," and sneer at them as relics of a prehistoric time.

Let us consider in the spirit of truth that which is upon you, that nothing can save your nation to the spirit of freedom that was its origin and its heritage, until you vote out in the right spirit; if you do not vote with the right spirit your ballots will count to assist worldliness and this beautiful nation will go down as have the nations of the past, until another cycle, and another Washington and another Lincoln shall arise to set your descendants free.



REMARKABLE IVNENTION

AN INSTRUMENT THAT RESTORES EYESIGHT.

Spectacles Can Be Abandoned.

This instrument is in the form of a pocket battery, which the inventors have patented and which they call "Actina," a word which is their trade mark and owned by them.

In the treatment of eye diseases the inventors of "Actina" claim there is no need for cutting or drugging the eye for any form of disease, cataracts, pterygiums and other abnormal growths can be removed and weakened vision restored by the new and more humane method. If this is a fact, there will be no need to go blind or to wear spectacles. "Actina" has been tested in hundreds of cases and has effected marvelous cures. So confident are the inventors that this device is an article of great merit that they give an absolutely free trial. They want every one inerested to make a thorough investigation and a personal test of the "Actina." As it is sent on trial postpaid, any person can give it this test.

They issue a book of 100 pages—a complete dictionary of diseases—which tells all about "Actina," the diseases it will cure, what others think of it, what marvelous cures it has effected, and all about the responsibility of its owners, and it is sent absolutely free upon request. This book should be in the library of every family. Address New York and London Electric Association, Dept. TR, 929 Walnut Street, Kansas City, Mo.

BY DR. T. A. BLAND,

Is a wonderful book, being the personal experiences of a man whose dead sweetheart, after appearing to him many times, etherealized, materialized and through trance mediums, has him put into a hypnotic trance by spirit scientists and held in that condition for ten days, which time he spends with her in the celestial spheres, and then returns to earth with perfect recollection of what he saw and heard in that realm of the so-called dead. He tells his wonderful story to his friend who gives it to the world in his best style. This friend is Dr. T. A. Bland, the well-known author, scientist and reformer.

This book has a brilliant introduction by that distinguished preacher, Rev. H. W. Thomas, D. D., president of the American Congress of Liberal Religions, who gives it the weight of his unqualified endorsement.

He says: "This book will give us courage to pass through the shadow of death to the sunlit clime of the world celestial."

Rev. M. J. Savage says: "It is intensely interesting, and gives a picture of the future life that one cannot help wishing may be true."

The Medical Gleaner says: "It lifts the reader into enchanting realms, and leaves a sweet taste in his consciousness.

Hon. C. A. Windle says: "It is inexpressibly delightful."

Everybody will be charmed with it, for it is not only a great spiritual book, but a most beautiful love romance of two worlds. It is printed in elegant style, bound in cloth and gold. Price $1. For sale at this office.

A COLLEGE EDUCATION.

Some Interesting Points Raised by Mrs. Clara Watson.

Well, the Open Court has closed its session. The testimony has all been submitted, and I suppose the people pronounce the verdict—guilty; that is, all agree that fraud exists in this great world of ours.

The "Court" has been interesting, and let us hope helpful to individuals and to the cause at large, and we will await with interest the next sitting thereof.

But I took my pen to say a word regarding the article of E. W. Baldwin in the issue of Sept. 3, "The Spirit World the Shadow of This." Surely the writer sets forth original and unique philosophy, and gives us something to think about, and we can keep on thinking and speculating and reasoning, and then how will we know? Mr. Baldwin seems to reverse the order of reasoning that spirit was first in evidence in the causation of things, and makes the earth and man first, and quotes scripture to prove it. But, who knows? Who can tell?

But touching upon the Morris Pratt Institute and the Mediums' Relief Fund, it is stated that it is easier to get money for both together than for either separately." Now, that's good, if it only continues true in principles, or rather in practice.

Mr. Baldwin seems to make a college the all-important factor in future enlightened mediumship, and says: "Mediums can understand mediumship sufficiently only through a Spiritualistic college," and further claims that intelligent mediumship thus acquired will be self-sustaining.

But, my good friend, college education does not always insure success in business or on a financial way. A case in point comes to my mind which occurred in my own city. A few years ago there came to this place a Unitarian divine. He was intelligent, scholarly, cultured, and a graduate of a Unitarian college (after which some Spiritualists like to pattern). He had fluent command of seven different languages, and yet he could not get a job; with all his college training he could not earn his own living; his education did not render him self-sustaining, and he had to be assisted and a "ministers' relief fund" would have come in handy there; and this case is only one of many.

Spiritualists are not a privileged people over and above others. Intelligent mediums sent out second-hand from a college will have to compete with intelligent mediums who receive their enlightenment first-hand, or from spirit source, coupled with their own brain power and effort.

If enlightened mediumship can only come through college training, or, if mediumship can be sufficiently understood only through a college, how comes it that Hudson Tuttle, who never had a collegiate training, could write a book of such sound philosophy and concise reasoning on mediumship, spirit and kindred subjects as to constitute it a fitting text book to be used in the Morris Pratt Institute?

Mr. Hull informs us that Mrs. Hull has decided to use it as such in her psychic class, and surely this is well. But what's to hinder any one from buying Mr. Tuttle's book, and other works on mediumship and studying them for one's self, opening up communication with the spirit world in their own home, as Mr. Tuttle did, and having a psychic class of one's own? And then, if sufficient understanding of mediumship can only come through a college, how can people who never had a college experience, be qualified teachers in such an institution?

I quote again: "When mediums understand mediumship which they can sufficiently understand only through a Spiritualist college, there will then be no more need for Mediums' Relief Funds than there is now for ministers' and lawyers' funds."

But, my good friend, there are ministers' funds. The great Methodist church has a relief fund for its superannuated and worn-out ministers, and I am quite sure other churches have, too. And while I am not quite sure about lawyers' relief funds, I do know that in my own state a measure has been introduced into the legislature to pension judges when they get through with active effort through age or decreptitude, and this comes mighty near a lawyers' relief fund.

I quote still again: "Unenlightened mediums attract unenlightened controls. There are exceptions, but it is where mediumship is unconscious."

Not always, kind sir, by any means. Very many of our ablest workers in Spiritualism both conscious and unconscious were unenlightened when the spirit chose them for a great work, and enlightenment and education came with the unfoldment.

Mr. Tuttle tells us in the preface to his Arcana of Spiritualism, though sometimes in an unconscious or semi-conscious state, in the earlier years of unfoldment, yet usually he wrote by impression, and the thoughts which came were a constant source of instruction, and very many others could be mentioned did space permit. One Mrs. Juliette Manley, now many years in spirit life, was one of the first "writing mediums" of modern times. Plato is said to have been her guiding influence and there was certainly in her writings every evidence of superior ability, both in thought and in method of expression, and she was perfectly conscious, and in her normal state, and while possessing an ordinary common school education, yet she possessed no college enlightenment.

And if I may be pardoned a personal reference, I will say that when I was immured in ignorance, superstition, bigotry and fear, with only a desire for enlightenment, then wise and exalted spirit helpers came my way, and I have never had a sign of unconsciousness.

It is true this may be called an age of education as Mr. Baldwin states, and humanity is to be congratulated thereupon, but I can see no reason why this fact should drive the spirit helpers from the field, and I do not believe the faculty of the Morris Pratt Institute nor of any other Spiritualist school that may yet be (possibly) have or will ever have the discernment or knowledge of the latent powers of mind and spirit awaiting unfoldment in the mortal as do the immortal helpers. I do not believe there is a teacher in the Spiritualist college that can take the unlettered and unlearned, and kindle the fires of inspiration within the soul, and quicken the mentality of one of the students therein, as did the spirit instructors of Hudson Tuttle and of scores and scores of others.

Since organized Spiritualism came to the front with its creeds and rituals, its form and "usages," its fads and furbelows, its imitation institutions, the power of the spirit is waning. Spiritualistic theological schools are compelling the wise teachers in spirit life to take back seats, and if they come at all to aid, they must come in under the discipline of the "faculty."

I believe in enlightened mediumship and enlightened Spiritualists, but this does not depend upon a Spiritualist college.

IF DEATH SHOULD COME.

If death should come, O soul,
Though some heart ache because thine own is stilled,
Say not that all life's rarest wine is spilled;
A new to-morrow with its glad surprise,
More sweet than light that shines in woman's eyes,
Would hail thee, comrade, in the spirit land,
And thou need'st mourn the loves of earth no more.
O soul, the lotus flower is at thy hand;
Why longer toil and pull the heavy oar?
Death brings to thee the boon forgetfulness,
No king could ask for more, nor beggar crave for less;

AXEL.

Is Life an Unsolved Riddle?

The writer hereof had a very pleasant interview the other day with an old friend, who is an intelligent and broad-minded gentleman, and who is not a member of any church. He, however, is pleased with the philosophy of Spiritualism, but does not believe that there is or can be any communication between the spirits of the quick and the dead. He gave his ideas pretty fully, and among other things he said, that the Bible is the text book of the Christian faith, and should contain a description of heaven and define the attributes of God. It fails to do so. One may search its pages from Genesis to Revelations and he cannot find out anything about God and heaven. The Catholic priest, when he defined "mystery" to be "a very mysterious thing indeed," came much nearer to a correct definition of that term, than the whole body of the church has ever come to a correct comprehension of God and the hereafter.

Whenever a disciple of the Christian church attempts to describe them, his language is couched in such general and ambiguous terms that he but makes confusion the worse confounded. He is as non-committal as an Ephesian soothsayer. Go to the Bible and one finds a knowledge of God and heaven nowhere to be obtained. No doubt the Bible writers did the best they could; the trouble was they did not know.

Spiritualism is troubled in the same manner as to the attributes of Jehovah and the condition of the human soul after death. It is just as much at sea as regards any knowledge of heaven. It is true that the world is full of mediums, who claim that they convey messages from the souls of the departed to their friends in this world, but such messages are ambiguous and devoid of specific meaning. Spiritualism, in these respects has not improved very much on the church. Its explanations do not explain. In the light of certain and reliable data, it must be admitted that spiritualistic phenomena have not demonstrated, as a fact, the existence of the soul after "life's fitful fever is over." And, assuming that the soul does exist, it has failed to prove that it can and does communicate with the living.

It is very true that there is a great deal of pretended phenomena which tends to prove that there is a future life of some kind, existing somewhere in infinite space, but where that life is and of what it consists, are riddles which baffle rational solution.

Spiritualists as well as Christians have found out that the judgments of God are unsearchable and His ways past finding out.

Now what is the implication of all this? It clearly is that the riddle of life must, during human existence, forever remain unsolved; that by no possibility can we as human beings, know what there is beyond human existence. We may have faith equal to a grain of mustard seed; we may have hope intense enough to anchor the soul; we may have a belief which admits of no doubt, but a knowledge of the hereafter is not to be ours on earth. If life is continuous we will know it when we lay down this life and not before; and if it is not continuous, individual being will cease when we die.

For many centuries finite man has striven to solve the insoluble, and to-day he is just as far from the realization of success in his undertakings as he ever has been. From the very nature of the case fallible man must forever remain in darkness as to the future life, so long as he remains on the earth.

It then becomes the part of wisdom to let the insoluble alone, and direct all of our energies to the affairs of human life. If there is a future life it will take care of itself, and will not yield up its secrets to the children of men.

I give the foregoing views of my friend, not that I agree with him, but in order to elicit light from our many well-informed Spiritualists.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Mr. John W. Ring, of Galveston, Texas, the National Superintendent of Lyceum Work, and a noted inspirational speaker, will lecture at the Rising Sun Spiritualist Mission, 378 So. Western avenue, on Monday evening, October 10, 1904. Subject: "In What Way Will Spiritualism Benefit Me?"

The Cross and Crown Aid Society, connected with the Church of Sacred Communion, Brooklyn, N. Y., elected the following offices for the coming term: Mrs. L. Roach, president; Mr. G. E. Smith, vice-president; Mrs. P. J. Loeb, secretary; Mrs. Semsoth, assistant secretary, and Mr. J. Glover, treasurer.

The Minneapolis Times, speaking of the State Spiritualist meetings, says: "An address by Elizabeth Harlow, of Haydensville, Mass., was the real feature of the evening, the closing feature of which was the reading of messages by Will J. Erwood, the Wisconsin medium. Mr. Erwood read a number of messages from the other world and they were all verified by the recipients."

In Jersey City, a man through prayer, is said to have caused the hair to commence growing on his bald head.

C. W. Leadbeater, eminent as a lecturer among Theosophists, claims everything. The Tribune says: "C. W. Leadbeater, the English Theosophist, talked in the morning on the relationship of Theosophy to Spiritualism, Christian Science, and Telepathy. He declared these are different sides of a many-sided question, while Theosophy embraces them all, and in time will come to be the great accepted religion."

Who has not felt at times an elation of spirits which makes all obstacles to happiness seem as naught and at other times an unaccountable sense of depression when life seems not worth living? Why is it not reasonable to suppose that in the one case some optimistic nature shared its blessing with us, while in the other the pessimism of some unfortunate has detracted from our pleasure in existence?

W. F. G., of Bellport, N. Y., says: "Thirty-seven years ago this January my father was run over at the corner of University place and fourteenth street, and received injuries from which he died a few years later. He was crossing the highway to go to John Duncan's store to get his little five-year-old son some oranges when he met with the accident. That afternoon I had gone to Ferraro's dancing academy with my older sister, and in the midst of the exercise a terrible knowledge came over me that my papa was in danger. I was sure something dreadful had befallen him. I compelled my sister to leave her class at once and take me home, where we found our father on what proved to be his deathbed."

Mr. Leadbeater says: "Remember, every one of you, that there is a great national opportunity. I made a tour of the United States three years ago, and the difference between that tour and the present one is very striking indeed. In the vast majority of places visited I found audiences double, treble and four times what they were then. We are influencing contemporary thought to a very great extent, and I believe the time will come when there will be only one religion in the world, and it will be Theosophy. You can see traces of our influence everywhere—you may see it in the popular literature. And look again at the novels, the stories, the things which people first read and most. You will hardly take up one of those without finding in it something psychic or a psychological problem involved, or a case of apparition or telepathy, or some idea which we have thought of as exclusively ours. So it is true we have largely affected contemporary thought."

Gladstone not long before his death addressed these words to the secretary of the Society for Psychical Research: "You are engaged in the most important work in the world—by far the most important. I am a member of that society, and I do not simply believe in telepathy, I know that it exists. I think that I am not wrong in saying that this opinion is also held by such eminent men as Prof. James, Sir William Crookes, Sir Oliver Lodge, Dr. A. R. Wallace and many other men equally distinguished in scientific research. It seems to me that the S. P. R. has scientifically demonstrated beyond doubt the existence of telepathy."

On Saturday evening, Oct. 8, there will be a social held at the home of Mrs. Nora E. Hill, 705 W. Madison street. There will be a good program and lunch following. A number of good workers will be present, with vocal and instrumental music and recitations and messages. Collection 25 cents. All made welcome.

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

ATTENTION LYCEUMS. — During June, July and August the Progressive Lyceum will be sent to Lyceums for one cent per copy. This will enable you to increase your subscription one-half its present number, with no extra expense. Address J. W. Ring, care of the Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas.

A Voss writes: "A very pretty Spiritualist wedding occurred at the residence of Dr. and Mrs. G. E. Chesbro, 139 W. Fifth street, Los Angeles, Cal. Rev. Chesbro, pastor of the First Spiritualist Mission, officiated, assisted by his wife. The parlor was fragrant with many flowers, the color scheme being white and green. The bride was tastefully gowned in white silk and lace, and carried a cluster of white carnations. Miss Anna Watson acted as maid of honor, while Geo. Runnells stood with the groom. Mrs. Hughes gave her daughter away. Mr. and Mrs. Morse expect to make their home in San Pedro, where the groom is employed in the railroad service."

J. H. N., of Milford, Ct., says: "What is the explanation of the premonition of things about to happen which many people have? Three hours before the breaking out of one of the most terrific fires I ever witnessed, my mother said: 'Something terrible is going to happen,' and was quite upset by her feelings. Why is it that a person can often compel another to look around, as in a crowd or audience, by willing him to do so?"

Wm. Fitch Ruffle writes from Church of the Spirit, Schiller Building, Hall 300: "I desire to announce that owing to the increasing audiences in the afternoon, the lecture will not be given after the 11 a. m. service hereafter, as the time is needed for tests and messages, which we give to all."

Paul Lawrence Dunbar was a full-blooded negro. He was a poet—a fine one, too. More than that his verses were the result of inspiration from the higher spheres. A few days ago he passed to the realm of souls. The Chicago Chronicle says of his poems: "They have reached a larger sale than any recent verses except those of Eugene Field and James Whitcomb Riley. They consist chiefly of short lyrics, negro melodies and songs that touch the popular ear. Only 32 years of age, the poet has lived long enough to justify his claim to the name. He is a credit to his race and has closely identified his interests with theirs. One of his best poems is the 'Tuskegee Song,' in which he praises the ring of the anvil and the sound of the hoe—a song especially adapted for the institution which emphasizes manual labor."

The tenth annual convention of the State Spiritualist Association of Nebraska, will be held in Lincoln, Neb., on the 11th day of October, 1904. The 11th will be devoted to business only, convening at 2 p. m., and to which the public is invited. A special attention will be given to lecturers and mediums being presented to the public during the balance of the week. A special engagement is desired with some good and true materializing medium. We are willing to guarantee a reasonable amount to such a medium. Given under the orders of the State Spiritualists Board, and sealed and signed by G. S. Klock, Secretary S. S. A. of Nebraska.

J. H. Hammond makes favorable mention of the mediumship of Mrs. Zena Stanly, of Anderson, Ind. He says: "Quite a number of church members are (privately) attending her sittings. They want that something the church cannot give, spiritual truths."

F. H. Rice writes: "The first regular meeting for the season of 1904-'05 of the Ladies' Spiritualistic Industrial Society will be held at Appleton Hall, 9 Appleton street, Boston, Mass., Thursday evening, October 6. Supper at 6:30. Services at 8 p. m. All are cordially invited."

Isa A. Cross, corresponding secretary, writes: "I am pleased to announce that on October 9, Dr. Geo. B. Warne will lecture for the Hyde Park Occult Society at 319 E. 55th street. Come out and hear him. We all know he will give us something good as he always does. The young folks are thinking of having a dance at our hall on Wednesday, October 12. Any who are interested in dancing come out; come anyway; maybe you will get interested after you get there. We will manage to have a good time some way."

Mary Skogland writes from Wellington, Ohio: "Let me thank you for the premium books. They are so much better than I had ever dreamed of. Your own 'Encyclopedia of Death' is of untold value. Who can do wrong and believe the spiritual philosophy?"

Mrs. Mary A. Speight writes: "On Saturday evening, Sept. 24, the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Englewood Spiritual Union held a most enjoyable Hard Times surprise party at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. Delphin, 6037 Marshfield avenue. Over fifty friends were present, most of whom were good samples of hoboes. Brother Russell rendered a number of jovial selections on the violin, and dancing was the feature of the evening. Vice-president, Brother Speight, of Englewood Spiritual Union, was awarded first prize as best appearing hobo, and Mrs. C. Nader received the ladies' prize. All expressed the fond hope that at last a nucleus had formed for our much talked-of church, for our amiable president, Mrs. Isabella Powderly, courageously digested a doughnut with sawdust filling, prepared by Sister Oswald. Space will forbid details, but the event will be a pleasant recollection to all who attended."

A. A. Averill writes from Lynn, Mass.: "The many friends (in Lynn and vicinty) of Dr. Alexander Caird, for the past four years president of the Lynn Spiritualists' Association, and honorary president for life of the same society, have presented his name as a candidate for a portion of the Boston Globe's offer of 25,000 for educational purposes. He has pledged himself to devote the same, or whatever portion he may obtain of it, to the educational work of the society and lyceum. We ask all friends of this earnest worker and all friends of Spiritualism to save the coupons, which are to be found in every issue of the Globe, and send them either direct to the office or to the writer. If sent to the Globe they should be filled out as follows: Alexander Caird, Physician, Lynn, Mass. Any assistance in this matter will be gratefully received."

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

Correspondent writes: "The Temple Society of Spiritualists in Newport, Ky., began its season this year on 'Founder's Day,' Sept. 25. The auditorium was beautifully decorated with flags, flowers and palms; a great 'burning-bush' of American Beauty roses, right in front of the rostrum—a white dove just over it, and our Bro. Crawley's portrait (the founder of the society and promoter of the temple) on an easel in front, rounded out the setting. In the afternoon the address of the day was given to a full house by Dr. J. O. M. Hewitt, who was listened to with intense interest. Dr. Hewitt is engaged here for three months, and his Newport address will be at 404 East Fourth street; his home address as before, at 533 W. Madison street, Chicago. After the services of the afternoon, a fine supper was served in the dining-rooms of the Temple, and then came the social good time of mutual greetings, and introductions of friends from Cincinnati and Covington and other near-by towns. Our well-known and loved speaker, J. Clegg Wright, was visiting with Covington friends, and coming over with them, he was invited to give the evening address, which he did to the pleasure and satisfaction of all. So the year is again begun, and we hope it will be a year of success for both the society and the cause."

M. F. Hammond would like to make arrangements with societies for the coming winter to lecture. His terms will be as reasonable as any spiritual society can wish. He would prefer to go south, and any society willing to pay his expenses from Chicago can secure his services for a reasonable time, for a nominal price. Address him in care of The Progressive Thinker.

T. A. Thompson writes from Wichita, Kansas: "Mrs. Maggie Vestal, an honest and successful trumpet medium, in full lamp and sunlight, has been with us the last two winters, a month each. I have engaged her to spend next November with us. Her work has been instrumental in convincing many of the truth of Spiritualism, as many have conversed with departed friends in full daylight, and in full, clear audible voice Much good has resulted to the cause of spirit unfoldment through her ministrations here. Anyone desiring to correspond with her while in Wichita, can address her at 812 N. Lawrence avenue, during November."

Correspondent writes: "On Saturday evening, Sept. 24, the members of the Rising Sun Spiritualist Mission held a benefit for one of their sick members, at the home of their pastor, Mrs. Nora E. Hill, 705 W. Madison street, with about sixty in attendance. The beneficiary wishes to thank all who brought with them their kindly thought, for his speedy recovery."

A member writes from Brooklyn, N. Y.: "Our church is coming up to the head of the list as a place where spirit return is taught. Our medium, Miss E. C. Resch, gives some wonderful messages at our services. Mr. J. D. Glover, our president, is foremost among those who teach the lessons in the Bible. Mr. P. J. Loeb is among the best. We have a nice hall. Our services are free, every Sunday evening at 1246 Bedford avenue. The services are opened at 8 p. m. sharp, and out at as near 9 p. m. as possible."

Wm. Bellairs writes: "Your paper is the only comfort I have in my declining years; it makes me somewhat acquainted with the country and inhabitants of the land to which we are all hastening, thereby making us in a better condition to progress when we shall have arrived there. When I have read my papers I then go on a missionary tour, distributing them to my neighbors. Many a home has been blessed and comforted by the light of Spiritualism through The Progressive Thinker. Surely it is a light that shineth in the darkness."

Geo. E. Blake writes from Galesburg, Mich.: "We have had C. J. Barnes of Chicago, trumpet medium, with us for one week. He has been holding bota light and trumpet seances. The best people of this place were pleased with his trumpet seances."

Dr. S. N. Gould writes: "Spiritualist Anniversary of the West Braintree (Vt.) Spiritualist Association was held in Hall Chapel, Braintree, Vt., Saturday and Sunday, Sept. 17 and 18, consisting of three sessions each day. The attendance was large and appreciative. The speakers, Mrs. Holt, of Montpelier, Ida Lewis of Bethel, A. F. Hubbard of Plymouth, and Rev. D. H. C. Thompson of Barre, rendered very able service at the different sessions, which were interspersed with good music. Mrs. Holt and Mrs. Lewis pleased the audience by many very satisfactory tests and spirit messages. Officers of the association elected: President, Sarah E. Tarbel; vice-president, Minnie Batchelor; secretary, S. R. Batchelor; assistant secretary, Minnie Batchelor; auditor, Pearl Flint; board of managers, Henry E. Farr, Minnie Batchelor and S. N. Gould. The chapel was beautifully decorated with autumn leaves and flowers. A vote of thanks was extended to the speakers, singers and all who had helped to make the meeting a success. The last session closed by singing, 'God be with you till me meet again,' and the following words from Achsa W. Sprague's poem, rendered by A. F. Hubbard:

"'Good night! My soul pours out its prayer,
That Heaven's eternal light
May be the mantle thou shalt wear,
Good night, good night, good night!'"

W. V. Nicum writes from Dayton, O.: "The Light of Truth Society of Dayton, Ohio, have leased a new hall at 112 South Broadway, on the ground floor and furnished it in first-class style. It began its winter campaign the first of September, and the audience every Sunday evening quite large—made up not only of Spiritualists but church people, Theosophists and New Thought persons. This is very encouraging, when we can interest the outside world enough to get them to attend our meetings, give us their support and good wishes, then we can rest assured we are making some headway toward changing the race thought of the age into a broader concept of life. The writer has been engaged as the regular speaker until January 1, 1905."

H. F. Coates writes: "Moses Hull, of whom you have read and heard so much about, speaks for the Church of the Spirit Communion, Kenwood Hall, 4308 Cottage Grove avenue, October 9, both afternoon and evening. His subjects are, 3 p. m., 'Angels; Are They the Spirits of the Dead?' 8 p. m., 'Angels; Do They Administer to the Inhabitants of Earth?' Mr. Hull also speaks for us October 16, at 3 and 8 p. m. We will begin sharp at 3 and 8 p. m. Good music and messages by different mediums will be a feature. Our afternoon meetings will be continued from now on. Come and take a part in them."

Mrs. Ella M. Dole, one of Chicago's best mediums, is now in Boston, Mass. She will visit all the attractive localities around that Hub of the Universe, and expects to return to Chicago in about one month. She has a large clientele in this city, who will carefully watch The Progressive Thinker announcing her return.

Wanted.—A first-class, honest female medium to come to St. Johns, Mich., and spend one month. Board and lodging given free, with a chance to give readings and hold circles. Address A. B. C.

Dr. G. B. Warne visited Whitewater, Wis., last week to attend to business in connection with the Morris Pratt Institute.

Chas. H. Green writes: "Sunday, September 25, 1904, Rev. Mrs. N. E. Hill addressed the Rising Sun Spiritualist Mission at its hall, 378 S. Western avenue, describing her trip through several neighboring states, which she had just finished. That evening Judge W. L. Snell, and ex-States Attorney Hon. Chas. Hughes, addressed the members of the mission and their friends, who made an audience of exceptional size considering the inclemency and threatening condition of the weather. Mr. Snell delivered the first lecture, using as his subject, 'Religions,' speaking first of the early forms and of their development using a manner of speech that captured his hearers with its originality. Mr. Hughes, owing to lack of time, was forced to postpone the lecture that he had prepared for that evening, and in its place substituted one, although short, that displayed to the greatest advantage his natural oratorical ability. Sunday, October 9, Miss N. G. Warren will deliver an inspirational lecture. That evening Dr. J. A. McFarland will lecture. Both discourses will be followed by spirit messages. We cordially invite all to attend."

Dr. J. A. Bailey writes from Galesburg, Ill.: "It has been quite a while since I sent a report to The Progressive Thinker of my pilgrimage, as I have been attending camp; now, however, I am again devoting my time to the work, and feel that the friends of he cause should know where I am, and what I am doing, for I do not believe in keeping one's light under a bushel. If you have any aspirations to gratify, any truth to reveal, any hopes to mainain, or any knowledge whatsoever to impart that will enable mankind to give a higher expression to their individuality, why, by all means, let your light shine through the columns of The Progressive Thinker, or wherever and whenever you can, that good may come from it. We have announced a meeting for Sunday, in which I am to lecture and follow with tests. I will respond to calls for funerals within a reasonable distance of Galesburg. Address me at No. 312 E. Simmons street."

Harry J. Moore delivered two lectures last Sunday before the Hayesville, Iowa Spiritualists Society. Mrs. Eva McCoy followed both of his lectures with messages. Address Mr. Moore for the present at Hayesville, Iowa, care of Geo. Richardson.

Simon Westway, of Salem, Mass., writes: "Please continue The Progressive Thinker. I have become addicted to the habit now, and think I shall have to continue thinking progressively. Yours for truth, 'though the heavens fall.'"

The Chicago Tribune says: "'I don't believe much in old women's dreams,' said Ald. Carey yesterday, 'but this one certainly was all right.' The alderman was referring to a vivid premonition which came to him in his sleep last Tuesday night of the falling of the building which is being erected for him at Ashland aenue and West Fifty-fifth street. 'I was not surprised when I heard of the accident,' said the alderman. 'It appeared the fitting outcome of a dream I had Tuesday night. I retired at 11 o'clock, and in the early morning was visited by such a vivid dream of the collapse of my building that it awakened me. I heard the groans of the injured and saw and almost felt the crashing timbers. I thought it was my residence that was falling. I jumped out of bed to see if everything was all rignt. I can't understand it.' Yesterday morning the dream came true. The center of the west wall gave way, carrying three bricklayers to the ground and severely injuring one. Three other men were on the roof structure."

Mrs. Henry writes: "On Saturday evening, Sept. 24, at the residence of Mrs. Blondin, 2903 Groveland avenue, a social was held under the auspices of the Universal Occult Society. About sixty attended, and it was a very enjoyable entertainment. Mr. Coe from the West Side entertained us with a song entitled 'The Old Musician and His Harp,' and we had a great many mediums who gave messages and tests. Mr. Hillis gave quite a number, as did Mrs. Cooper, Mrs. Vaughan, Mrs. McMenamin, Mrs. Dixon and others; then Mr. Fraser gave some very fine messages blindfolded. Then we had a recitation by Miss Jessie Charlson, entitled Christmas Eve; it was highly appreciated. On Sunday, the 25th, our services at the Universal Occult Society, held at 77 E. 31st street, in hall C, consisted of song and messages. We were favored by several songs by Mr. Roberts, a talented singer and music teacher; also by Mrs. Lora Holton Upson, and messages by our mediums connected with the society, Mrs. Vaughn and Mrs. McMenamin and Mrs. Hartwell and some very clear messages by Mr. Fraser, and tests from Mr. Stoler, who will lecture for us, October 2."

A Worker in the Good Cause writes: "I wish to ask all who can, to help make up a box of most any kind of fruit and send it to the Morris Pratt Institute before freezing weather commences. As the canning season is nearly over most any housewife can spare a can of fruit of some kind. Some might like to send table linen, which would be very much appreciated also. As there are many farmers, they could perhaps, spare a few bushels of potatoes for the Institute. This is a request of spirit friends to one who has done and will do likewise yearly."

Chas. A. and Allie Buhland write: "We have been appointed missionaries of the Indiana State Association of Spiritualists. We are now ready to hear from all persons or societies who need our assistance. It is our desire to make this a banner year for our cause in the state of Indiana. Let us hear from you at an early date, so that we can map out our route accordingly. Address us at No. 1224 North Senate avenue, Indianapolis, Ind."

In five months five witnesses have died in the case of the people vs. Catherine Gillespie and Eva Carson. An old colored man hovered around the courtroom at the first trial, sprinkling a white powder about and muttering that death would overtake the witnesses against his friends. Evidently died through fear.—Chicago Daily News.

W. F. Nye, a prominent Spiritualist of New Bedford, Mass., has been paying a visit to Chicago. Although nearly an octogenarian, he is as bright intellectually as when in his prime, and we hope he will live to reach a hundred years.

Margaret E. Sangster says:

"Live in the sunshine, don't live in the gloom;
Carry some gladness the world to illume.
Live in the brightness, and take this to heart—
The world will be gayer if you'll do your part.
Live in the housetop, not down in the cell;
Open-air Christians live nobly and well.
Live where the joys are, and, scorning defeat,
Have a good morrow for all whom you meet
Live as a victor, and triumphing go
Through this queer world, beating down every foe.
Live in the sunshine, God meant it for you!
Live as the robins, and sing the day through."

AN IMPORTANT MESSAGE.

To the readers of The Progressive Thinker, who are residents of the state of Washington:—As the friends at our recent state convention saw fit to elect me to the position of State President, I would like to say that I shall be at liberty to meet engagements to lecture or organize societies at any time after October 1. Up to January 1, 1905 I would prefer to give my attention to Western Washington. After January 1, to the territory east of the Cascades.

I will be prepared also on due notice to furnish speakers and psychics to those localities needing co-operative effort. I shall be pleased to correspond with reference to the same.

Expenses will be made to bear as lightly as possible in all cases. The ubiquity of The Progressive Thinker which permits me to thus notify you by sending this message two thousand miles to you, my neighbors and associates, is very suggestive and also thoroughly appreciated.

"In union there is strength." Let us work together. R. F. LITTLE,
President Washington State Spiritualist Association.

A VETERAN SPIRITUALIST.

He Gives His Views in Regard to the Manufacture of Material for Bogus Materializing Mediums.

To the Editor:—Stunned—practically stunned—at the startling sensational revelation made in last Sunday's Chicago American, telling of the Myers' factory manufacturing on a large scale, to order, certain bogus ghost show equipments, for exploiting in dark seances, at a dollar a head, by certain bogus ghost show fakirs under the name of "materializing mediums," in Chicago and elsewhere, and telling of their great demand by that class of fakirs everywhere.

Intensified with curiosity at this startling revelation, I determined to see for myself, and know for myself the truth or falsity of this newspaper report as communicated by Mr. Myers himself. Interviewing Mr. Myers, he acknowledged the truth of the report in every detail. Upon asking for some names of his patrons, he positively declined to give any, asking, "Do you want me to be killed," remarking that he was already threatened with death should he reveal any. I did not, therefore, press him for names. Suffice it to say that I have learned that there are in Chicago and elsewhere quite a number of so-called "materializing mediums" who, in fooling the people, are doing quite a land office business.

Now, Mr. Editor, as delusive tricks in dark circles are vile, intended only to deceive, and a disgrace to Modern Spiritualism, I maintain that a continual fight for their suppression must be inaugurated, and when begun will be among the noblest and most important work of the spiritual press, for years to come.

Protection, in the interest of Spiritualism, against the wicked delusions of the dark seance, is a vital necessity, and as publicity in exposing them would be the only rational means of suppressing them, Spiritualist journalists in particular should open their columns for a continued crusade against them.

What The Progressive Thinker, as a Spiritual journal, has done and is still doing in this direction, battling for the true against the false in mediumship, is of greater worth to the spiritual public than that of all other Spiritual journals combined.

In the face now of this new revelation, it is to be hoped that the victims—the innocent victims—of the dark seances, who in their childlike simplicity will swallow anything and everything, however absurd, presented them in the name of Spiritualism, will profit thereby, and consider how easy it was for them to get fooled by such ingenious equipments in dark seances.

Of course we have no fault to find with the skillful manufacturer, Mr. Myers. Such is his business. He manufactures to order all kinds of things wanted in dark seances. For these he gets spot cash, and for spot cash, he delivers the doors. No, we have no quarrel to make with Mr. Myers.

And now in conclusion, for what the Chicago American has providentially done, I for one, a Spiritualist, am grateful, and as a token of my gratitude I hereby move that we, readers of The Progressive Thinker, give to the Chicago Sunday American a hearty vote of thanks. DR. R. GREER.

It gives us great pleasure to announce the discovery of a positive cure for Asthma, in the wonderful Kola Plant, a new botanic product found on the Congo River, West Africa. The cures wrought by it in the worst cases, are really marvelous. Sufferers of twenty to fifty years' standing have been at once restored to health by the Kola Plant Compound. Among others, many ministers of the gospel testify to its wonderful powers.

Rev. S. H. Eisenberg, Ph. D., Centre Hall, Pa., perhaps one of the worst cases, was permanently cured after many years suffering. Rev. D. S. Hopkins, Wilson, Ind. Ter. writes May 25th, his wife was cured two years ago after eight years suffering. Rev. F. F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist, Abilene, Texas, writes was cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma after eight years suffering and had no return of the disease. Mr. L. H. Johnson, of Gainesville, Ga., Manager of the Gainesville Shoe Co., writes, the Kola Compound is a death blow to Asthma. It cured my daughter after all hope had gone and words are inadequate to express our gratitude to the Importers.

To prove to you beyond doubt its wonderful curative power, the Kola Importing Co., No. 1166 Broadway, New York, will send a large case of the Kola Compound free by mail to every reader of The Progressive Thinker who suffers from any form of Asthma. This is very fair, and we advise sufferers to send for a case. It costs you nothing and you should surely try it.

"An Infamous Dynamite Roman Catholic Conspiracy Detected and Exposed," "Romanism Exposed." Two pamphlets by Rev. J. G. White, author of Startling Facts. Price 10 cents each, or two for 25 cents.

The Cause at Wellington, Ohio.

Perhaps the workers along our lines of thought would be pleased to know that notwithstanding much opposition our little Progressive Thought Society in Wellington is undaunted and is facing the future with hearts of hope, and with the determination to give to those about us, as far as we can, the blessed truths of spirituality. We have decided to hold meetings every Sunday afternoon during the winter, and shall have speakers furnished us twice a month by the Ohio Association.

We have a developing circle, which meets every Friday and is meeting with good success.

The books sent us with The Progressive Thinker are indeed more than worth the price paid. We shall form a circulating library, with a librarian to attend to all the details.

A dear old lady from Independence Mo., responded to our request for books by sending us, we paying postage, five good books, for which we feel like making public acknowledgment and thanks, while the request for books is still open.

Mrs. Baird, of Elyria, has been more than kind in coming to us, and giving us convincing messages that none who receive them can gainsay their truth; and we would not forget Mr. F. W. Martin, of Elyria, who comes without money and without price, and gives us lectures, also exhibiting slate-writing and photographs which he has received in his investigations. Then there are Mr. L. M. Jenney of Oberlin, and Mrs. Elizabeth Schauss of Toledo, all of whom have been most kind.

As I have been penning this, my beloved spirit friends have rapped their approval in the secretary before my desk. Yes, they do come. I hear them often in this secretary as I sit thinking. I have become clairvoyant and they show me such beautiful symbols, teaching me such divine truths. I feel their touch upon my face and hair. Last night I beheld a vision of the material of which the streets of the spirit world are composed. It was beautiful beyond description; and I was allowed time to examine closely. It seemed to be a sparkling substance not unlike diamonds, yet looking more like the glistening snow as it is sometimes seen in the sunshine. I asked of what it was composed, and was told that it was a chemical composition resembling diamond, yet not exactly the same. That we of earth would some day learn to manufacture it in small quantities, but that it would never become of common use. I could write for hours of what I have seen and heard through this spiritual sight. And yet when I tell my dear loved ones of earth of this, they tell me it is my imagination." Every day I see before me the exemplification of these whom the man of Nazareth called "blind leaders of the blind." And if the blind lead the blind they shall both fall into the ditch. Thanks to the angel world, I who was once blind and deaf, can now see and hear. And I can truly say with the good brother in the last Progressive Thinker, "I know that Spiritualism is true."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

B. T. Spencer: Q. How much reality is there in "Divine Healing," and can those who make the claim be really honest?

A. This correspondent has particularly in view the claims of Mrs. M. R. Woodworth-Etter, who as an evangelist supplements her revival work by healing the sick. Crowds attended her meetings at Indianapolis, but were disappointed in her method. Not all who come are treated. She exercises her gift only on those who are converted! She said:

"Those persons who may come to my meeting expecting me to heal them when they are unprepared spiritually, will be disappointed. They can not hope to be healed until they have accepted Christ and believe in His saving power. The moment that faith comes I can help them."

It is thus made evident that it is hypnotic or mesmeric power and not "Divine" influence that heals. The convert is promptly hypnotized by the united influence of the believers, directed by the speaker, as in all revivals, and while in this condition the suggestion of being healed dominates all others. Ignorant of the cause, and educated in the church ways, she may honestly believe that she is carrying out the assurance of Jesus to lay hands on the sick and they shall be healed. Very few ministers have faith like this. They may be as ignorant of hypnotism, but they have not the courage to bring their faith to this test, any more than they would to pray for a mountain to tumble into the sea.

As an illustration of the exercise of this power as mesmeric and not "divine," the instance Mrs. Etter gives is a complete refutation of her belief.—

"My most remarkable cure was in restoring sight to a little blind girl. She was also helpless from paralysis and had to be carried into the tent. She became converted after a glorious outburst of religious enthusiasm and when I placed my hands on her she was healed instantly. She could see plainly and was able to walk."

"A glorious outburst of religious enthusiasm," means the surrender of personality of a concourse of people, to a dominant religious idea, and its united, spontaneous expression. A susceptible person present, is by it as thoroughly brought under its hypnotic influence, as can a subject under the will of the most skillful operator. The "Divine healers" see in this the influence of God, or Jesus. They misinterpret the facts, and may be honest.

This influence may come in another form—that of self-hypnotism, that is the dominance of an idea or suggestion which is made by the recipient. In illustration take the following reported in the account of the Etter meeting:

"I healed myself through divine faith many years ago," said the Rev. John Vinson of Indianapolis, who took an active part in last night's meeting. "I had the catarrh so badly that it was affecting my memory. In prayer one morning I promised to enter the ministry if God would heal me. Instantly the catarrh left me. That was more than twenty-five years ago and I've been in the ministry ever since."

The good minister is no doubt honest, and believes he had a "call." He may have done a great deal of good preaching for twenty-five years, but his "call" was out of his own conceit and not from Jesus.

Eugene Pohl: Q. Which is the best book on Nature's Cure?

A. As all "cure" is Nature's cure, the best books on the subject are the standard works on hygiene and physiology, and the worst are those which treat of the subject as a specialty under the catch-name of "Nature's Cure." The "cure" may be briefly stated as pure food, pure water, pure air; rest when weary of body and mind, with exercise of both if needed.

Seeker of Light: Q. What is the cause of the lights, which appear to me?

A. Such lights usually are produced by spirit friends, to signal their presence. They indicate according to their frequency and intensity the sensitiveness of the recipient, and invite to the using of the means for its cultivation.

H. H.: Q. In case of ghostly appearances, as in haunted houses, how is it that such spirits "materialize" without a medium or cabinet?

A. The researches of the Psychical Society have proved as completely as facts can prove anything, that there are such appearances, and that they occur without an arranged cabinet, or medium. Hence we may conclude that these are not absolutely essential for such appearances. Such ghostly forms are more often seen by the sensitive, and it may be inferred that without some degree of this state it is impossible for them to appear. Those not usually mediumistic may become so to an intense degree, perhaps once only in a lifetime. But such "appearances" are more "etherealizations" than "materializations." They are shadowy forms which fade into the unseen. The persons who see them furnish whatever mediumistic power that may be required. The house or room frequented by the spirit, perhaps having been its earthly home, has the requisites of a "cabinet."

Sarah J. Armstrong: Q. How can lost mediumship be regained?

A. Having been rarely blessed with various phases of mediumship, this correspondent has now lost them all, and repeated seances have been failures. Such experiences come into the lives of all sensitives, even the most developed. At least it proves conclusively that the influence, whatever it may be, does not emanate from the medium.

Sensitiveness is such a multiplex state, so many conditions enter therein, that it is difficult to determine what may prevent it in any special instance. The influence of surrounding individuals; the health; mental strain; the shock of grief, or expectation; the health, any of these may negate mediumship. Especially is the psychic influence of associates, in instances this acts as forcibly in destroying sensitiveness, as an acid neutralizes an alkali. There is a spiritual chemistry more potent than of physical elements.

Seances with a harmonious circle, or alone with concentration of mind is the only means recommendable to bring restoration.

A Little Child's Voice.

"Papa! Papa! Papa!" It rang out clear as a bell—a little silver bell, made to be sweet rather than powerful in its tone.

"Papa! Papa! Papa!"—and the little silver bell of a voice made the music that for the moment caused everyone in the great newspaper office to forget all about his work.

The electric fans were humming, the typewriting machines were clicking away like mad, the cries of "Boy," "Copy," were making the place a veritable pandemonium; but through it all there floated the music, the peace, the joy of that little one's voice.

Her "Papa" worked in the office. She had come to pay him a short visit, and midst the confusion and din of the place she was calling for him—"Papa! Papa! Papa!"

The men in the office were busy with larger and important matters. A great war was on in the Far East, and they were getting the news on that. A great presidential canvass was close at hand, and they were interested in that. Beef strikes and railroad strikes, big fires and monstrous murders, the markets in Wall street, and the revolutions in South America, all had to be looked into and reported to a waiting public.

It was a busy, bustling, a wild, mad, furious place—that great newspaper office; but in a flash that little silvery voice had captured every one's attention!

Nothing else was worth thinking of—wars and rumors of wars, the prospects of presidential candidates, the rise or fall of prices in Wall street or of governments in South America—were trivial matters compared with the simple goodness and unspoiled joy that rang out in that little one's voice!

It was the best "story" of the day, and if it could be printed as it was felt all the world would be better for it.

"Thank God," said every one in the office, "thank God for the little children!"

And, well, too, was that sense of gratitude; for what would this old world be, with its wars and rivalries, with its commercialism and competition, with its labors and worries, if it were not for the eternal good cheer that comes to us from the little one whom God has decreed shall be always with us?—Rev. Thomas B. Gregory in the Chicago Examiner.

Letter From Nellie S. Baade.

To the Editor:—As it has been some time since I made any report of my work, will say The Progressive Thinker has reached me and seems like a dear friend. I cannot get along without it and while I remain here during the remainder of this month and October shall do all in my power to secure subscribers for our favorite spiritual paper.

I commenced my spiritual work here this month and found a society that owns a pretty little church, remodeled, refurnished, a large addition having been built of late consisting of large parlors, kitchen and everything necessary to make it complete—a furnace in the church proper, electric lights, etc., has made it one of the most convenient and pleasant places I have ever seen during several years of travel.

The president, Mr. Mattison, is a capable and efficient officer, filling the position with dignity and is an honor to the society.

Sunday, September 18, the church was re-dedicated. the beautiful memorial chairs were covered with a profusion of white flowers in loving memory of Mr. and Mrs. Davis, who before their transition presented this church to the spiritual society.

Quite an interest has been manifested by the people of this city regarding the meetings, and a good audience greets me at every session. The choir furnishes good music and next Sunday a Spiritual Sabbath-school is to be organized which we hope will be of interest to all concerned. I shall suggest that The Progressive Lyceum, published by John W. Ring, be used in the school as an incentive to right thinking and living. My only regret is that I cannot remain with the good people of Watertown for an indefinite time; but serious illness in my family calls us home in the near future; but no matter whether actively engaged upon the Spiritual rostrum or otherwise, my desire is to see the cause prosper and good accomplished. With regard to my work here should any society in adjoining cities desire my services for week-day work some portion of the time in October, I would be glad to make arrangements to that effect. SCINTILLATIONS

As They Emanate from Mrs. Clara Watson, Dr. J. M. Peebles and Pottawattamie Jones, in Regard to Obssession or Evil Spirits.

SHE GETS SOMEWHAT EXCITED.

Dr. Peebles' Demonism of the Ages Sets the Noted Lecturer, Mrs. Clara Watson, to Thinking Along the Line of Devils.

Holy Moses! What a smoke!

Talk about The Great Psychological Crime book! Judging from the review of Dr. Peebles' latest work, "The Demonism of the Ages," as published in The Progressive Thinker of recent date, The Great Psychological Crime is a gem of beauty in comparison.

I have not read the Doctor's new book, but perused the review by James Voldo, with wonder and with horror, and felt like crying out, "Where is the safety, if the book is true?"

Here Spiritualism has been fighting the "devil business" idea for more than a half century, and many of us who in early life had the devil, satan, demons and imps stamped into our mentality, and who after years of study and travail of soul through which we passed in unlearning the false teachings of the past, had laid their hideous carcasses on the shelf of oblivion, and for a few brief moment at last had breathed in the atmosphere pure and bracing, untainted by foul breath of devils, only now, in the dawn of the 20th century to have the devil-demon "racket" revived by one of our leading Spiritualists, with vehemence a thousand times stronger than the old Bible concept, leads us into the Slough of Despond, deep, dark, damp and dismal, and if the picture be true to fact, I may add disastrous, diabolical and damning.

Not one supreme, pompous, potential devil as of yore, but now ten million billion demons crowding the atmosphere to suffocation. It seems the good Doctor has ransacked the sacred (?) literature of the ages, of the barbarous and ignorant past, for proof of his diabolical theory.

Only think—kind reader—millions and billions of demons surround us, that were once mortal, "with greater power to do evil than when on earth," and not one of us exempt from liability to their malicious influence. The rule that "like attracts like" seems not carried out in the demon realm, but the pure and good are subject to their diabolical power. "Sad beyond language to describe have been the obsessions, the possessions, the delusions, the betrayals, the infernal psychological crimes practiced in all ages upon innocent, trusting, virtuous, worthy, but wholly unsuspecting media, victimized to their physical, mental, if not moral ruin"—so says the review.

But there is a "Balm in Gilead," and the demons play an important part in human unfoldment, for they give incentive to the development of the "power over demons" in, and give employment to the "exorcists," who, with incantation, enchantment, magic, sorcery, etc., can drive them out of us, to roam at large and enter someone else. Of course, if we have enough of the almighty dollars with which to richly remunerate them.

The review makes good Brother Peebles say that: "Almighty God is over all." But of what use is an Almighty God that won't take care of the demons in his own kingdom and not let them loose upon unsuspecting humanity? Almighty means all-power, and that means power to stop "demonism" were it deemed advisable to do so. And if Almighty God allows demons to prowl around in the dark to entice people to sin, can a mortal "exorcist" thwart an Almighty God's almighty plan?

But my soul is sorrowful that again as of the days long past, I must even dread the approach of devils, and never more can sweet peace of mind be mine. Alas, alas, it were better humanity had never been. Waking and sleeping, demons our boon companions. Selah.

CLARA WATSON.

Jamestown, N. Y.

Dr. Peebles' Strictures Upon Mrs. Clara Watson's Article.

There is this virtue in Mrs. Watson's articles, be her subject what it may—we know just what she means, for she writes in good, plain, though not always in calm classic English.

She frankly admits that she has not read my book, "The Demonism of the Ages, or Spirit Obsessions," and so she does not—cannot conscientiously review it. She only reviews the review of one of the reviewers of this book, Mr. Voldo, a literary gentleman, and an old-time Spiritualist. Personally, then, I might consistently drop the matter right here, but as the book is a production of mine, I feel it to be but justice to offer a brief reply.

Mrs. Watson's first exclamation shows considerable excitement. It is this: "Holy Moses!" If she here refers to Moses of the Pentateuch, he was not holy, but a murderer according to the Jewish record. If she refers to Moses Hull, towards whom her prolific pen has often bristled, I have to say that he has never pretended to be holy, but has pretended to be, and as I believe, really is, an excellent, upright man—a most zealous worker, and one whose views upon biblical Spiritualism are in perfect harmony with my own.

In her third paragraph she states that she has read Voldo's "review with horror, and feels to cry out, 'Where is the safety, if this book be true?'" Keep calm, my sister, the book points directly to the safety. See it on page 371;—"There is one eternal, omnipresent, omniscient, omnipotent all-energizing Force at work in an evolutionary and orderly way in cosmic dust, in the mineral, in the vegetable, the animal, the man, the spirit, and all pointing unerringly to the upper regions of an angelic and seraphic blessedness. The highly developed, harmonial man is immune from demon influences. When lived in moral purity, Spiritualism is the safeguard against—the happy preventative of obsession, for it wards off and puts up electro-etheric auras against all low, insidious influences from the Tartarean spheres of darkness."

Mrs. Watson has read a review, and then painting a picture from her own fancy, exclaims, "If the picture be true to fact, I may add, disastrous, diabolical and damning."—Our sister in her article slings around the words "diabolical," "devil," and "devils," quite too freely, it seems to me, to be either logical or convincing.

I have not believed in a personal, semi-omnipotent devil for these sixty years and more. Has she not heard that he was "dead," and have I not been helping to bury him out of human belief and consciousness these sixty years and more? Devil, demon, and satan have different meanings in the original, and the cultured invariably differentiate them in their writings.

"The ten million billion demons crowding the atmosphere to suffocation," of which she speaks, are only human beings relieved of their mortal bodies. And assuredly Mrs. Watson will not contend that these millions of the uncivilized, the barbarous Hottentots, the polygamy-practicing cannibals, the thieves, the liars, libertines, lynchers, and malignant murderers of this country are all, in the physical act of dying, purified and transformed into saints and sages. She will not contend that their identity—consciousness, memory, tendencies, and purposes are annihilated by death!

Where, then, are these millions? She surely will not argue that they were translated in the twinkling of an eye into the beatific splendors that make radiant the summerland. She will not argue that a hempen rope jerks blackhearted murderers into joys and glories unspeakable.

Where, then, are they?

Mrs. Watson will doubtless say, as do all intelligent Spiritualists, they are residents of the encircling lower spheres, the lower, over-arching zones of spirit life,—in brief, earth-bound, and here!

Very well,—what are they doing? Are they asleep? Are they hibernating? Have they become unconscious stupids? Are their wills paralyzed, their feet fettered, their lips pad-locked, and are they mechanically chained, police-bound and barred away from earth and its inhabitants, where their thoughts, purposes, schemes, and attachments were and necessarily are? If so, our clairvoyance, our clairaudience, our trance testimonies, our thousand spirit communications are illusions, blinding, bewitching illusions that have only dazzled to deceive and curse.

Mrs. Watson continues, "The review makes good Brother Peebles say that Almighty God is over all." Will Sister Watson permit me to inform her that long weary years ago I discarded all belief in a limited, located, human-shaped personal God, and so that arrow, rebounding, falls at her own feet.

Again, all tearful in spirit, she pathetically exclaims, "Nevermore can sweet peace of mind be mine! Alas, alas! It were better if humanity had never been; waking, sleeping, demons our boon companions!"

Cheer up, cheer up, beloved Sister! Surely there is a "balm in Gilead," and this balm of Spiritualistic comfort you will find on pages 375, 376 of this book, which by confession you have never read. Here are the cheering words: "Though obsessions prevail, though vast multitudes of earth's discarnate dwellers people the Cimmerian shadowlands of Hades, the Divine Impulse changes not. The altruistic work of rescue goes on. Uplifting grace spans all worlds. The angelic voice of good will to men is ever being enchanted in all spheres from lowest hells to highest heavens. Up from the mud and slime the early flowers spring, and beyond the cross lies the crown. Under the roughest exterior, mortal or immortal, there lies the Ego, the divine spark, the buried image of God, awaiting the perpetual resurrection call: 'Awake, come up higher!' * * * Obsessing spirits are hearing, believing, and vast multitudes of them are moving up on to higher planes of existence, where, after a time, they become divine helpers. Sometimes they bring these dazed, distressed spirits of the lower spheres into quiet, orderly seance rooms, that they may the more fully cognize both their shadowy environments, and their moral incompleteness. Seeing, kindles in them the smouldering fires of aspiration and soul-unfoldment. Evolution is tireless. Leading, it shouts from every moral mountain-top, in all spheres, and in all realms, 'Come up higher.'"

There, Sister! Do not these optimistic words cheer and gladden you? Let us all add to our fears hope, to hope faith, and to faith knowledge. Did not the apostle say that "perfect love casts out all fear?" Twenty-four pages of this work have the heading, "Rescue Work on the Border-land." It is from the pen of Henry Forbes Kiddle, worthy son of the illustrious Prof. Henry Kiddle, who had charge of all the New York public schools.

Be it said to Mrs. Watson's praise that her writing is most tender and genial as compared with one Olive Pennington, who writes and publishes that such a book as mine "is a crime, and I for one (she says) wish it were punishable by the law. * * * I wish some grinning devil would impale the aforesaid Doctor (Peebles) on his red-hot pitchfork, and dip him a moment in the seething cauldron of fear that he has prepared for so many others."

How is that for venom, spite and the spirit of a professed Spiritualist? Is Olive obsessed by the spirit of John Calvin, or is it rather by one of those old Roman Catholic priests that kindled the flames which burned the martyred Giordano Bruno?

Only think of it! Now in my 84th year, wriggling, twisting, frying on a "grinning devil's red-hot pitchfork,"—and all this in the 20th century by a self-pronounced Spiritualist!

People differ; I will put Clara's and Olive's words and opinions against those of W. T. Stead, editor of the London "Review of Reviews," Moses Hull, Prof. E. Whipple, and other fair-minded reviewers.

W. T. Stead:—"A book calculated to give very salutary warning to many persons who are disposed to display carelessness upon matters psychic and occult—a very timely volume."

Moses Hull:—"I have finished your book upon obsessions. It is a timely book. The world needs it. * * * This book will throw much light on the questions introduced. I hope it may have thousands of readers."

Prof. E. Cushman:—"This fine-appearing volume throws a searchlight and many side lights upon the subject of Spiritualism. Tersely stated, it is at once an alarm, a tonic and a safeguard."

Prof. E. Whipple:—"Dr. Peebles never wrote a more entertaining, reasonable, or thoroughly useful, and important volume than this. No work that has emanated from his fertile pen has been charged with such potential qualities for accomplishing practical good as this book that lies before me. The 'Psychological Crime' gave great offense in some quarters, but 'Spirit Obsessions' (their cause and cure), while it presents a wonderful array of facts, is nevertheless, sympathetic and just towards all classes. It is the book for our troublesome times."

J. R. Francis, ever earnest, able and practical, said editorially awhile since, "Obsession will not down." Emphatically, it will not down, because a fact—a well-established fact,—a positively demonstrated fact, and while affecting sensitive spiritists, it is literally festering in the ranks of churchianic sectarists. This question of obsession has to be met. To shirk, to shun it as a fact, is impossible, and none are so competent to cope with it as Spiritualists.

J. M. PEEBLES, M. D.

Battle Creek, Mich.

The Book Defended.

To the Editor:—I cannot tell you how sorry I am for Dr. J. M. Peebles. It seems such a pity that a man of his years and learning should make the egregious mistake of publishing so great a work as his "Demonism of the Ages," without taking into account the shocking effect it might produce on the delicately attuned nervous organism of Clara Watson.

How he is destined to suffer when he comes to realize the depths of sorrow and despair into which he has thrust that supersensitive soul. Out of the depths she cries unto him in the bitterness of her agony, "My soul is sorrowful that again as of the days long past, I must even dread the approach of devils, and nevermore can sweet peace of mind be mine. Alas, alas! it were better humanity had never been."

Knowing somewhat of his chivalrous disposition, I can understand how such a wail from such a soul would tempt the good Doctor to write another book at once to prove,—

1. That he never wrote "Demonism of the Ages."
2. That if he did write it, he didn't mean to.
3. That when he wrote it he was "obsessed" by a "demon."
4. That there is no such thing as obsession or demons.
5. That if he was obsessed when he wrote the book, this fact of itself is sufficient to condemn it as unworthy of serious consideration by supersensitive women.
6. That therefore, Mrs. Watson ought to come up out of the depths immediately and read the book.

Truly, it seems incredible that a woman of sufficient intelligence to be a "lecturer," should thus figuratively throw up her hands and tumble down with such an awful thud, without first having read the truly great book to which she refers with so much unchristian charity.

Why is it that anyone with seeming intelligence will thus jump into print and with the bitterness of blind fanaticism condemn a work she has never read, is a psychological problem which might be discussed in your Open Court department with much profit.

If Mrs. Watson will take the time and do herself the courtesy and Dr. Peebles the justice to sit down and study the book from beginning to end, she will at least then be in position to write intelligently of its contents.

On the first three pages of the book, in his introduction, the author lays down eleven propositions which constitute a foundation of fact and principle, and on the basis of these he asks a number of questions which he proposes to discuss.

The great body of the book is devoted to a presentation of a vast number of authenticated cases of "obsession," including many that have come under his personal observation and treatment. His object in this array of illustrative data is evidently to answer as many of those questions as possible which lie in the field of his intended consideration.

If there is any one of his eleven preliminary propositions that Mrs. Watson is able successfully to dispute, that would be a matter of interest to those who have read the book but who lack the knowledge necessary to disprove it.

If there is any one of the hundred or more cases of "obsession" referred to by the author, which Mrs. Watson is able to prove was fraudulent, or in any material way misstated, it would be entirely proper for her to give us all the benefit of her superior knowledge—unless she preferred to embouy it in one of her "lectures" and charge a fee for it.

If she is able to demonstrate that the author's data is false, or that he has drawn conclusions therefrom which are not warranted by the facts, all honest and unprejudiced readers of the book should be thankful to have her do so. Even good Dr. Peebles himself could find no fault with her, though it might make it necessary for him to write another book in order to set himself right with his readers.

But facts are stubborn things, and will not down, nor take to the woods even though an angry woman who signs herself Clara Watson, should throw up her hands and in a spasm of ridicule, cry, "Holy Moses! What a Smoke!"

As the parrot said to the preacher, "What we want are FACTS!" And Dr. Peebles has crowded his book full of them.

Has Mrs. Watson any on the subject of "obsession" to submit?

HIS NEXT MOVE.

When Dowie rides into Jerusalem
On the back of a milk-white ass,
The Hebrews will doubtless all rubber-neck
To watch the great prophet pass,
And the fringe of his face will wildly wave
Like a bunch of fluttering grass.

When Dowie rides into Jerusalem
With a halo glued fast to his pate,
His deacons will hurriedly follow him in,
Each one of them passing a plate,
For they'll have to pay a good price for the show
And the show will surely be great.

When Dowie rides into Jerusalem
On the back of a milk-white ass,
Will the mule lift his voice like Balaam's of old
And talk to the folks as they pass?
And what would he say if he should speak out
In a voice of the texture of brass?

When Dowie rides into Jerusalem
Will the ass chuckle loudly: "Hee-hee!"
And say: "There are two of us in the same boat,
My funny old master, and me,"
And begin to hee-hawing at his own joke,
And to wriggle his ears in his glee?

When Dowie rides into Jerusalem
Will the stinkpot reporters be there,
To take some snapshots as he trundles along
While the rocks and the mountains stare,
Or will his own press agents see to the job
And publish him everywhere?

When Dowie rides into Jerusalem
On a mule that is white as a ghost,
No doubt he will make a most touching appeal
To the opend-eyed, rubbering host,
And if they don't cough, gee whizz and great scott!
But those natives will get a hot roast.

HOW THE LIVING MAY TALK WITH THE DEAD.

There are many things in Spiritualism and Theosophy that are in perfect harmony. The student of psychic science can explore with most excellent results both of these enticing fields. It will not do for Spiritualists to become narrow or circumscribed, in view of the fact that spirit return is common to all humanity, goes as freely to the humble home of the peasant as to that of the king. The experiences of Mr. Leadbeater will be read with great interest.

Bringing a philosophy, not at all new, but decidedly picturesque, the Theosophists again came to Chicago last week, says the Inter-Ocean.

Theirs is a science that explains evolution before the world began, and describes invisible things in realms marvelous and strange. They have come to say that their investigations have not been confined to physical sciences alone, but that they have inquired into the occult, the hidden, ghostly side of things.

These realms, where wraiths abide, they assert, are not thousands of miles away, as conventional religions picture heaven, but are right here, interpenetrating the world that we see, so that it is not necessary to move in space in order to get into touch with people who are dead and gone.

One of the oldest students of Theosophy, C. W. Leadbeater of London, came to Chicago to attend the convention. From the quiet life of an English vicar, he has risen to a plane where, he says, his thoughts and feelings ascend above this mundane world. He is recognized as one of the most reliable teachers of the philosophy.

For the past twenty years he has devoted his life to the investigation of the ordinarily invisible side of nature and man. A member of the Royal Asiatic society, a university graduate, a world-wide traveler, a close student of philosophy and psychology, he talks not only on a scientific basis but to bring the lessons home to every-day life and conduct.

Unlike most teachers, Mr. Leadbeater is a man of sincere modesty. The wonderful experiences which he relates he does not describe as his own. To his fellow students he admits that they are his. To the world he tells them in the third person. He believes it would not benefit theosophy to tell the public that he passed through these experiences which to the ordinary mortal are unbelievable.

Through the Sunday Inter Ocean are given some of the most interesting of the experiences. His friends and fellow students say they are his own experiences.

It appears that the most important work done on the finer planes, according to his teachings, is the helping of persons in distress. Those who do this work are called "invisible helpers." An older helper—generally admitted to be Mr. Leadbeater—and a younger, by the name of Cyril—his nephew—are concerned in the following experience:

"This Cyril is always particularly sensitive to children in trouble, and seems to have a rare faculty for finding them out and assisting them," Mr. Leadbeater has this third person say. The times that I have come to his help and through my advice directed him, are among the most pleasant events in my memory.

"One day Cyril and I (the third person) were traveling through the astral world when suddenly we heard the cry of a child in pain. We moved in the direction of the sound, and, coming to a lonely cliff, found that a boy of 10 or 11 years had fallen over it, and, cut and bruised, was hanging to a projecting root.

"Let us help him quickly or he'll die," exclaimed Cyril.

"I saw that in order to stop the bleeding it would be necessary to have physical help. One of us must be materialized, that is, must be made visible in the ordinary world, to tie the bandages and so that the wounded boy might be reassured by seeing some one aiding him. I materialized Cyril and stayed at his side to tell him what to do.

"Under my directions he took the neckerchief from the boy, bound it around his thigh, and with a stick twisted it tight to stop the flow of blood. The boy saw and felt the ministering hands, and, rousing from his stupor and fright, said to the white figure at his side: 'Be you an angel, master?'

"'No, only a boy come to help you,' replied Cyril.

"The boy's immediate needs cared for, I hastened to go for the mother, more than a mile distant. I found her at home about her daily work at the time, not giving a thought to her son. She could not see me, but mentally I urged on her the boy's needs.

"'Well, I don't know what's come over me, but I must go and find that boy,' she finally declared, dropping her work and starting in the direction I was leading her.

Saw Angelic Figure.

"When the mother came to her boy Cyril vanished, but not before she had seen his angelic figure. That night, while again in my astral body, I returned to the humble home. The mother was relating a story of divine intervention to the wondering neighbors. She told of the white figure she had seen, and how her boy had refused to let her remove the bandages because he said the kind angel boy had tied them. The physician who was called later said that if the bandages had been removed the boy would have bled to death.

"In connection with this unusual rescue I found a strange situation. It seems that in their pre-existence, 1,000 years before, Cyril and this boy had been playmates. At that time the boy was Cyril's slave. He saved Cyril's life and was given his freedom. It was 1,000 years before Cyril had an opportunity to save the life of his friend."

Few persons, unless they have the clairvoyant power developed, can remember events and incidents of the astral plane after returning to the physical life, according to Mr. Leadbeater. However, everybody, consciously or unconsciously, is in daily communication with the inhabitants of the astral world.

"When we sleep we really leave our bodies in slumber," said he, "whereas we, the true men within, go out into the universal ether that interpenetrates physical matter, and there we can meet and do meet our dear dead friends. The many dreams that people have of their loved ones are in truth not dreams at all. They are real meetings.

Can Leave Body at Will.

"If men would only develop these powers within themselves by pure living and right thinking, the hours of night while they are out of their physical bodies would be as clear, as real, and as useful to them as the hours of the day. The clairvoyant when sufficiently trained is able to leave his body at will and project himself into an ether finer than physical matter, where the dead are, and, returning, relate what he found. Such reports have been verified again and again by different investigators."

To the Theosophist one of the most important contributions of clairvoyant investigators to the important problems of life is the light they have thrown on the subject of death and the life beyond it. The methods used in this case are not those of Spiritualism, which for its manifestations demands a return of the dead to this earth life. Theosophy recognizes death as merely a process by which man drops his physical body and then remains living in a finer matter, something like the ether of science.

The influence of dead people on the affairs of the living is verified by another story from one of Mr. Leadbeater's statements:

"A friend of mine possessed an Indian dagger which had the grewsome property of inspiring whoever took hold of it with a longing to kill some woman. Two women were known to have been murdered with it. The moment I took the dagger a curious dragging, as though some one were trying to move me, began. I refused to stir and looked to see what it was.

"I saw a wild-looking man, very angry because I would not go where he pushed. I questioned him, but he could not understand. I went on a higher plane, where I could read the records of nature, and saw that centuries ago his wife had left him for another man and that he had murdered them both with the other man's dagger, the one which I was holding. He had sworn revenge on the sex, and had murdered two women before he was himself killed.

Agreed to Destroy Dagger.

"I handed him over to an Indian friend who could understand his language. He was gradually led to a better life and agreed that the dagger be destroyed. I broke it up and buried it. It seems that this vengeful man had been attached to the dagger, obsessed its various owners, and with considerable success urged them to murder women.

"Just as it was impossible to communicate with this Hindoo, so persons on the astral plane have their varying capabilities and limitations as on the physical plane. It seems that a great mathematician, recently deceased, came to a clairvoyant full of delight over certain additional discoveries he had made since his death.

"He was anxious that they be published to the world, and I well remember how he was disgusted because the physical brain of his friend was unable to grasp the intricacies of the wonderful new discoveries. He did not realize that they had been possible only by his mastering the law of the fourth dimension after his rise to the astral plane."

One evening while the two helpers, already mentioned, were moving along they were attracted by the sight of an immense summer hotel in flames. Everybody had been rescued except one small boy, sleeping in an inner room. His parents were away, unconscious of the fire, and the helpers tried in vain to make any of the many spectators and firemen remember him. It is doubtful if physical aid could have saved him as it was.

Cyril to the Rescue.

Cyril, entering the boy's room, roused him, half-stupefied with smoke, from the bed. They attempted to escape through the central passageway, but the flames cut them off. They returned to the room, and with Cyril supporting him on the outside, the boy walked the length of a narrow window ledge, one foot wide. He entered another window, climbed down the elevator shaft and onto the veranda of the hotel, Cyril always guiding him.

Sliding down the posts of the veranda Cyril reached a boat, and rowed out into the lake. They were seen from a steamer, and Cyril then vanished. Reports were that two boys were in the boat, but that one had fallen overboard just before they were rescued. It was two weeks before the boy's parents heard of his rescue, though the helpers, according to Mr. Leadbeater, had mentally attempted to assure the parents of his safety. They had given the boy up as lost.

His miraculous rescue has never been accounted for by the parents. When the boy timidly suggested that the mysterious figure which came to his aid might have been an angel, the older persons always shook their heads knowingly.

Many other illustrations of the good which this Cyril, and the older helper, have done could be given. One will be sufficient. One of two brothers, who were almost inseparable, died. The other was inconsolable. Cyril and the one called the "older helper" brought back the departed brother. Taking the hand of the living brother, he assured him that he was always near.

Indian Shouted, "Spring Back!"

An account of friendly intervention which saved his own life is given by Mr. Leadbeater. It was on an exceedingly wet and stormy night that he was plodding along a dark street with his umbrella pulled down close in front of him. Suddenly a voice he knew full well as that of an Indian teacher, supposedly thousands of miles away, shouted in his ear, "Spring back!"

Without stopping to think, he jumped backward. As he did so a huge metal chimney pot crashed in front of him, knocking the umbrella from his hands and wrecking itself at his feet. The warning voice of his Indian friend, he says, had saved his life.

At another time the apparition of a very dear one who had long left this world came to him and advised him against committing a certain act of retaliation. He followed the advice, and in after years found that he had done rightly.

One of the questions which many are always asking with regard to this life beyond the grave is, "Shall we meet and recognize our friends?"

"Certainly we shall," says Mr. Leadbeater, "for neither they nor we shall be changed, and the affection which is still there will act as a magnet to draw together those who feel it, far more readily and more surely than it does here."

THE N. S. CONVENTION.

To the Editor:—Kindly give space in your valued journal for the following important announcement concerning the place of meeting of the N. S. A. convention to be held in St. Louis, Oct. 18, 19, 20 and 21.

The committee of the World's Fair Congresses assigned to this association—as to others—the music hall of the great Coliseum, for convention purposes, and we had every reason to suppose all was in readiness for our occupancy. At this late day comes the information that Music Hall has been rented for the season to a musical company, and that another hall has been allotted to the convention societies. Investigation shows that the second hall is not adequate for our purpose—its acoustic properties are not good, and as the musical company aforesaid gives a musical extravaganza day and evening its sounds are sufficient to completely drown the voices of our speakers and delegates. Hence the N. S. A. official board has decided that the convention be held at the Spiritual Temple in St. Louis, 3015 Pine street, where the reception of Monday, Oct. 17, at 8 p. m., will also be held. We regret exceedingly the necessity of changing location of meetings at this late day, but are so obliged to do in justice to our people. Pine Street Temple is reached from Union Station as follows: Take 18th street car to Olive, transfer west and ride to 30th street, walk one block south; or, take Laclede car and ride to 30th or Garrison, and walk two blocks north.

All delegates and other friends who intend to be in St. Louis during the time of convention, are requested to arrange their plans for visiting the Fair or sight-seeing, so as to enable them to attend all sessions of the convention—day and evening. Important business is sure to come up at all day sessions, while the evening meetings will be more attractive to Spiritualists and investigators, by the able and brilliant talent we shall present. All are cordially invited. Come one and all and help to make this the grandest convocation of Spiritualists the world has ever known.

N. S. A. CONVENTION.

OCTOBER 18, 19, 20 AND 21.

Headquarters of the N. S. A. official board will be at the Lindell Hotel, St. Louis, Mo., from October 12 till Oct 22.

All convention meetings will be held in the Spiritual Temple, 3015 Pine street, St. Louis, also the reception on Monday, October 17, at 8 p. m.

All meetings—day and evening—absolutely free. No admission fee. All are invited to attend.

Evening talent of the best, will be presented. Among those who are to participate as speakers are Will J. Erwood, Dr. J. M. Peebles, W. J. Colville, Mrs. R. S. Lillie, Mrs. Laura G. Fixen and others of note. Mediums: Rev. E. W. Sprague, Mrs. Maud Lord-Drake, Mrs. G. G. Cooley, Mrs. E. A. Sauer and other well-known test workers. A grand time is expected for our cause.

Business sessions will present many features of the utmost importance to our cause. The usual routine will be followed, but it is expected that many questions and issues of great value will be presented which will call for wise deliberation and much discussion on the part of the brainy delegates who will be with us. No person should miss even a single session. Kindly arrange your plans for sight-seeing so as not to interfere with your attendance at the meetings.

The N. S. A. cannot make terms for rooms for delegates or others. Information on this matter can be obtained from our trustee, Thomas Grimshaw, at 3015 Pine street, St. Louis, by addressing him with stamp for reply. A list of rooming houses, comfortable and convenient, is to be found at his address.

In reply to critics, we are led to announce that it is impossible for any outline of convention work to be published prior to the meetings; for aside from the Amendments and usual routine work that have to be presented, we have not sufficient data of what is to be done to enable us to give any intelligent idea of the special work to the public; nor can we give our annual reports at an earlier date, as we do not close our books nor make up reports till October.

As reference has been made in one of our journals, to the liberal spirit of the N. S. A. treasurer, but with the remark that money is not everything, it is my duty to herewith say, that in addition to his generous monetary help, Mr. Mayer being a man of keenest business acumen and sagacity, is of invaluable aid, not only at conventions, and board meetings, but also during the entire year as adviser, helper and one of far-seeing judgment at headquarters in the management of official affairs. Your secretary feels deeply indebted to him for his generous aid, as should every member and society of this association.

N. S. A. Secretary.

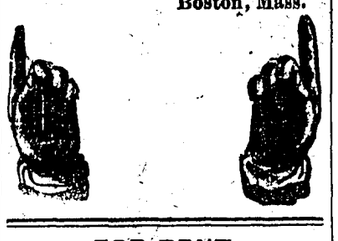
IMPORTANT.



Owing to the fact that the courts have in every case decided against Psychic Healers who advertise to cure the sick without drugs, where the case has been between the U. S. government and a Healer (deciding that it is a clear case of intent to defraud) to advertise to diagnose also, without leading symptoms being given. Therefore I have decided, as a physician in good standing, to not advertise my gift of Psychic Healing, but will diagnose disease and not ask a fee for so doing. I will therefore hereafter diagnose disease

A PUZZLING THEORY.

Illusion—Illusion—All Is Illusion.

September 11.—I attended Christian Science meeting to-day, and I did some hard thinking while there. I wonder they do not all become insane. I know I had "a swelled head" while there and since—not from an overplus of brains, but for the limited capacity for action within my—there it is—I was going to say cranium; but I bethought me, I have no cranium—it's an "illusion!" I am some like the fellow named Ami, who had been somewhere with his oxen and wagon. Coming home, having imbibed too much of the "illusion" liquor he became illusively intoxicated, and fell into illusive dreams, during which period the oxen became detached from the wagon in which he was, went on and left him. On waking and finding himself alone in the wagon, he commenced to soliloquize: "Am I (hic) Ami, or am I not Ami? if (hic) I am Ami, I have lost (hic) a yoke of oxen; if (hic) I am not Ami I (hic) have found a wagon. If I am (hic) Ami, where (hic) am I? If I am not (hic) Ami, who the (hic) hell am I anyhow?"

The subject was a sermon or lecture compiled from Mary Baker Eddy's writings and was called "Spirit and Matter." I was sorry I had not taken my note book along so as to have taken verbatim extracts. It commenced by stating that "Matter was not life. Matter is inert. Spirit is life!" from which an argument was made that matter is illusion, and therefore it cannot be diseased, etc.,—you've heard the statement before. And here is where I got up a brain action, or one was got up within me, provided I have a brain, or that which I think is brain is not "illusion," which it would seem it is.

If matter is not life, how comes it that particles cohere? Unless there is an affinity, there can be no coherence. In the first place the particles must be drawn together by some process, and whatever that process is is a manifestation of life. What draws two drops of water together? How comes it that lodestone has such an affinity for iron, if there is no such thing is inherent life in matter? But stop! Matter is illusion—there is no such thing as matter! It is not a thing without a name, but a name without a thing—that is, something that is nothing (confound it, here it comes again) a mere name without a relation—a combination of letters if you please; but there it is, again; letters are elementals of sound—and sound is a concussion on the tympanum; and there is no tympanum, neither can there be any concussion (Good Lord! somebody help me out before I forget what I wanted to speak about!), for there can be no such thing as "airwaves" since matter is "illusion!" But this integration of matter: I wanted to say more of it—only the matter—the illusion—(now I have got it! Illusion is not denied; so I will call it by that name). If there is no life to matter—illusion—why do the planets not disintegrate to atoms, and become a mist? How comes it that the rays of the sun interpenetrating the atmosphere create an electrical friction and consequent heat?

If matter is not, if there is nothing of us but spirit, why do we wear clothing? Without matter there can be no such thing as heat and cold, and if we have no bodies—if all is "illusion"—heat or cold could not hurt us. Neither do we need clothes to hide our nakedness, for we have no bodies to screen—there is nothing of us but spirit—no bodies to hide from the gaze of others.

Out in the barn a man has hanged himself, and if we do not haste to cut him down, it will be impossible to save his life! Hanged himself! Impossible; there was nothing to hang! He was all spirit, and that body that you saw hanging there was "illusion." Go and tell the man he is not hanging; that he just thinks he is hanging; that he is a spirit and can't hang! Cut the rope! why, you can't cut the rope; the rope is matter and matter is an "illusion!" and cannot exist! Beside you cannot have a knife to cut it with without having matter, and matter is non-existent, an "illusion;" therefore, you cannot get a knife to cut the rope. There is no matter; therefore, no rope, no place to tie a rope, no neck to put a rope around; no knife to cut the rope—all is "illusion!" All there is is spirit, and that is wholly disconnected with matter.

We talk about beautiful scenery! That, too, is all "illusion." Without matter there can be no scenery; and as there is nothing but spirit, and spirit is entirely divested from matter, what we call beautiful is "illusion;" for if there can be no pain, there can be no pleasure; there is nothing either beautiful or ugly! All is one eternal monotony. Spirit is independent of all but itself—companionless and alone. It is mind with nothing to think upon, for since there is no matter, and since all is spirit, divested of all but itself, there can be no relation of things, for there are no things to be related, and where there is no relation of things there can be no thinking. Therefore, there can be no mind, because mind is a conception of relations, and there can be no conception where there is nothing to conceive.

Olympia, Wash. D. W. HULL.

It is only necessary to grow old to become more indulgent. I see no fault committed that I have not committed myself.—Goethe.

Friendship must be something else that a society for mutual improvement—indeed, it must only be that by the way, and to some extent unconsciously.—Stevenson.

We should avoid whatever may display bad feeling, and attend with civility to what may be addressed to us; all hearts are conciliated by politeness and affability.—Socrates.

Nothing destroys authority so much as the unequal and untimely interchange of power, pressed too far and relaxed too much.—Bacon.

Better a thousand fold abuse of Free Speech than denial of Free Speech; the abuse dies in a day, but the denial slays the life of the people and entombs the hope of the race.—Bradlaugh.

MISSIONARIES' MONTHLY REPORT.

Work Done by Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague.

During the month of September we held twenty-seven meetings and organized one society. We served the Battle Creek (Mich.) Society the Sundays and Tuesdays of the month and on other week days we visited four other towns, viz., Chesaning, Centreville, Rockford and Girard, Mich.

We opened this season's meetings for the Battle Creek society. Our meetings here were not as well attended as usual, because the Sundays were warm and many people spent them at the beautiful resort at Coguac Lake, near town. Nevertheless our congregations increased in size and interest while we remained there. We added six new members to this society, and the officers and members were pleased with our labors.

Dr. J. M. Peebles took an active interest in our work there, attending every meeting excepting one. In this we felt especially honored.

At Chesaning we found the society that we organized one year ago last February, doing a splendid work. They have held meetings regularly ever since. They have employed leading speakers and mediums to help them to present the teachings of Spiritualism to the people of that vicinity.

They make it a rule not to allow a member to be buried without a Spiritualist funeral, if so desired. The good work of this society is primarily due to the work of the missionaries in organizing it, as there was nothing being done previous to its organization.

At Centerville we were antagonized by two ministers of the Dutch Reformed church, who made the attempt to destroy the influence that our meetings might produce upon the community. They seemed to think their task would be easy and that they could readily break down our arguments and proofs. They acted very ungentlemanly, asking some trivial and unimportant questions, quoting certain passages of scripture that they thought would baffle us, etc. In replying to some of these scripture passages we quoted other passages from the "Holy Book" that were direct contradictions to the ones they had presented. Every one of their questions proved a boomerang and this, together with their conduct, helped to win for us the victory.

We had the full sympathy of the audiences that packed the house to overflowing, as their repeated applause plainly showed.

We held three meetings in this place and organized a society of twenty-two members, composed of some of the best people of this town. These ministers were of the "Reformed church," and we made a supreme effort to start them on the road to reform. We undoubtedly made a total failure in their case, as they appeared to be beyond redemption in this particular. These two ministers will not be likely to attack a Spiritualist in the same way again, for they certainly learned a lesson that will be lasting.

We were treated lovely by the other members of the congregation. The lectures and Mrs. Sprague's messages reached the minds and hearts of the listeners and touched the tender side of a goodly number of the church members, as was proved by their conversation with us. One of their leading members said to us in private, "I endorse every word you uttered tonight." But enough! We feel that our work was a great success in Centreville, since there had never been a public Spiritualist meeting held in that town previous to our going there.

At Rockford, we served one of the oldest societies in the country. Meetings have been held there for many years. A large number of our leading speakers and mediums have served this organization. This society has a lovely little church of its own, and has a standing in that community equal to the other church societies of the place. Where our people own their church or temple, it is certainly a great help to the society and to the work.

The society at Girard, we found in a flourishing condition. It is fortunate in having an excellent speaker in the person of the president, Mrs. Emily D. King. The officers and members of this society are composed largely of farmers living some distance apart. They have held regular meetings ever since we organized them one year ago. They have a nice lyceum and are planning to build a new church of their own. There was no public work being done here before we organized this society. Who can say that missionary work is not profitable. We must have it, and the more the better.

Address until October 25th, 725 W. Jackson street, Bloomington, Ill.

PAYING THE FIDDLER.

Every time the traitor Folly chases
Reason from ther throne
Someone has to be the victim—some poor sinner must atone;
It's an old and truthful saying—printed on each page of fame—
They who dance must pay the fiddler;
it's the ethics of the game.

In this world when Folly's minions are so largely in excess,
Many a "fiddler" gets his money, quietly, as you may guess;
And the world is none the wiser—not a chance is left for shame
To the man whose purse is equal to the limit of the game.

But, alas! for those who falter, those who hesitate to pay
For the music and the dancing through
King Folly's night and day;
Such a one disgrace, dishonor, even penury, shall claim—
They who dance must pay the fiddler—
'tis the order of the game.

REV. H. W. THOMAS.

Do the Dead Return to the Living?

Dr. Thomas for many years was one of the leading liberal divines of Chicago. Until recently he has been pastor of the People's Church, but on account of his ill health he was compelled to relinquish his arduous duties in connection with the work in hand. His influence on the mental and moral atmosphere of Chicago has made a deep impression for good. His article will be read with great interest, emanating from such a master mind.

Through the countless years [as set forth in Unity] since man came, the ships of time have been sailing away from the shores of time. Freighted with human lives are these ships of time, and followed by the love of the living for the dead.

Do these ships of time all sail one way? Do the lives that go away from our world ever, or never, come back again? Is there a world, a life beyond; or does all end with the few years of this earthly existence?

From the sense-side of the material, death seems to be, is, the end; the organs of sight, hearing, feeling are gone, and with them goes the sense world of existence.

But somehow a man is more than sensation; he thinks as well as feels. The things perceived through the senses are taken up by the power that we call mind and placed under the laws of thought; and in this way is revealed a mind world of the true, the beautiful and the good; and from the relations of one life to another, arise, are felt the emotions and principles of the moral order; and from these comes the consciousness of relationship with the Infinite.

It is from these higher and larger visions that Reason postulates the continuity of life beyond the change called death, and love asks for the longer years of the forever.

With such a scene of the coming and the going, the disappearance of the physical and the loss of sense relations, it is not strange that the generations of the past have stood before the opening and closing doors of life and death with mingled emotions of wonder, hope and fear; nor strange, that these thoughts and feelings have found so large a place in the literature, the philosophy and the religion of all peoples.

Over against the fact that to the senses death ends all, is the fact that somehow the millions have believed in a life beyond death. But it has been a belief, a hope rather than an assured fact; a faith; not a positive knowledge—and it does seem strange that after all these thousands of years and the going away of countless millions, the question of a continued existence should still have to wait for a positive answer; and yet, may be not so strange; for in the nature of the case, it is not possible to prove the negative, or that souls do not live after the death of the body. If man is not immortal, this fact can never be known; those who have ceased to be, cannot themselves know it; nor can those still living know it; nor they that are soon not to be.

We have to die to know as an experience, as a fact of consciousness what it is to die. We may, and very many do feel an assurance of the continuity of a personal existence that leaves no place for doubt; but we must die, to know that we live beyond death.

There is one and only one way by which the living can know that the dead live; and that is for those who have died to in some way make themselves known to those who are still living. Can this be done? Has it been done? Do the ships of time sail only one way? Or do they come back to the shores of earth?

If we turn over the pages of the legends, traditions and mythology, of the literature and history of the past, and the Bibles of the great religions, they all directly or indirectly bear evidence to the fact that the souls who once lived on earth have come back and made themselves known to those still living. In our own Bible there are explicit instances and statements to this effect.

Upon other subjects, as the ages of geology or the great events of history, we accept and rest in the statements of what has been; but when it comes to the return of the dead to the scenes of the living we are not satisfied with statements or facts of the past however well verified. We do not look for a return of the ages of geologic formations; nor that great events of history are to be repeated; but in the mind or soul-world we expect the profound experiences of mankind to be continuous. If souls returned to earth in the old Bible times, why not now? If there was a Divine inspiration in the past, why should it not be continuous? The present should not be asked to live wholly upon the past. Souls are going away from earth; the living love those who have gone; hence the fact of the possible return of dear ones in spirit form must ever be a present question in the great hours of life.

Some such reflections as these may help us to a larger looking, seeing and understanding of the strange facts and questions of life and death that all the ages have had to face, and that rise up before each mind and heart of the millions now on earth.

That the physical body dies is not questioned; and with this the senses through which the living hold communication are cut off, and hence should not be thought strange that between the living and the dead there is a feeling and the fact of separation. To our tenderest words there is no answer; to our tears and caresses, no response. And yet, in spirit form, the dear one just gone may be present, may know and understand it all, but has no power to reach those who sorrow. Or, if materialism be true, there is no soul, no spiritual being; death ends all.

But somehow, in spite of the sense appearance that death is the end, there has always been the feeling, the faith that the real being does not die; hence, the looking and longing to in some way see again or hear from those who have passed beyond the visions and voices of the living; and hence it is at this point or dividing line where the ordinary methods of communications have ceased, that the extraordinary have naturally been appealed to. Not in the light, but in the dark; not in the sounds of voices, but in the silence; the anxious souls watch and wait and listen for some word or sound or appearance; anything to assure them that loved ones have returned. And naturally, the more sensitive or impressionable minds among the living become "mediums" through which the disembodied can make their presence known.

This line of separation between the living and the dead has always been present; it is being drawn anew every day and hour in the homes of earth; this strange border land between the two worlds. Not strange that it is the land of mystery, of superstitions, frauds and impositions, many; but it is also to many souls sacred; the land of vision, of love and hope. When the darkness of death is lost in the light of life.

Things come to our world. Judaism came; Christianity came; Mohammedanism came; the Magna Charta, Cromwell, Luther and the Reformation came. Science, the new astronomy and our own great age of invention came. Modern Spiritualism came; Christian science and new thought have come.

The practical question is, what are we to do with all these forces and powers that have come into our world? Much is lost to the minds that shut themselves up in their own party, sect or ism and refuse to look at the teachings of all others; denounce them as false and wrong. Rather, should we think there is some truth, something good in all; that the great things that come, that are born out of some new time or condition have a meaning and a mission in the growing life of the ages.

By not a few, the strange phenomenon of Modern Spiritualism has been denounced as a fraud, as wholly false, an imposition upon the ignorant and the superstitious. And such accusations have not been made without good grounds in many cases; but they are too sweeping. That which is wholly fraudulent cannot long hold its place; and Modern Spiritualism has continued to grow in numbers, intelligence and social standing.

As never before, our great age is fearlessly facing all questions, facts, mysteries with the one purpose of finding that which is true. In this spirit the Society for Psychical Research has for a number of years been making a careful study of psychical phenomena in the whole wide range of mediumship, clairvoyance, telepathy, clairaudience, apparitions, secondary personality, obsessions, spirit photography and spirit identity. In these studies many of the ablest scientists, philosophers and clergymen of Europe and America have taken most earnest parts, and every fact and question is placed in the clearest light of the latest and largest thought and knowledge.

The purpose of this paper is to call the special attention of the readers of Unity to the very interesting work just published by Funk & Wagnalls Co., The Widow's Mite, and Other Psychological Phenomena, by I. K. Funk. Dr. Funk is widely known, not only as the head this large publishing house, but as a scholar, author and clergyman of large ability and unquestioned integrity. To the many who are interested in this field of thought this work is a saving in both time and money. The most important facts and results of the Society for Psychical Research are given in sufficient detail; that of the Widow's Mite, or the coming back of Henry Ward Beecher and the finding and return of a lost coin, is given in full.

What we shall make of all these things must be a matter for each one to decide. Trained scientists who look only for the facts in any and every field must be most exacting in their methods; and the fact that there has been so much fraud and so many impositions upon trusting and sorrowing souls has called for public exposures, and may explain the seeming unwillingness of some to accept facts so thoroughly attested that upon any other subject they could hardly be questioned.

It may not be—I think it is not—wise to try to force open the gates of the unseen world; nor is it wise to try to keep these gates closed. That the dear ones gone continue to love and care for those left on earth is surely a most beautiful and comforting faith; and it seems so natural and reasonable that it should be gladly cherished. And more than we know or think, it is. Very many who are neither clairvoyant nor clairaudient—who see no forms, hear no voices—are often conscious of the spirit presence of those who once walked with them on earth.

Our world seems to be in the morning of a great new day. We stand amazed at the powers and possibilities of man in the realm of the material. The telegraph, telephone, phonograph, the cable and wireless telegraphy are facts. In the realm of mind, clairvoyance and telepathy are accepted as facts, and our latest psychology teaches that there is a subconscious or subliminal mind. The vision of what man is as a child of God, of what Great Nature is; and what man should be and do, is just dawning upon these wonderful years. The day may not be distant when the unseen world will be as near and real to the spiritual consciousness as is now the world of matter and sense.

PRAYER TO THE GOD OF BATTLES.

The Utter Absurdity and Foolishness of Prayer Directed to the God of Battles—The Writer Laughs to Scorn the Russians Holy Synod's Ready-Made Orison—Civil War Prayers.

Some time ago the 'Holy Synod" of the Russian established church formulated a prayer which the czar, by an imperial edict, directed to be recited by all Christian Russians in all churches, religious assemblies, etc., on Sundays and holy days, for the purpose of securing God's blessing upon the Russian army, the emperor and his country, for victory, for long life to the victorious troops, and for the repose of the souls of those who fall in battles. The following are some of the strong points in this hand-made prayer:

"Although unworthy, we implore Thee, who art strong in battle, for aid and humbly beseech Thee to accept our weapons in Thy cause, to give Thy Christ-loving army victory and to permit it to subdue the enemy.

"Send from on high Thy hand and touch the hearts of the enemy, so that they shall make supplication to Thee, God of peace, who loves his creatures.

"Stengthen us with Thy might. Defender of the orthodox faith, send Thy arrows to confound the enemy. Strike them as with lightning and give them into the hands of Thy faithful troops.

"Thou who harkened to Moses, bless the emperor's doings, multiply his glory and confirm his empire. By Thy Almighty hand preserve this army. Send Thy angel to fortify his troops and give them salvation.

"Send peace upon us. May Thy invisible finger defend Thy servants, show them the right path, forgive their sins and bestow upon them the crown of glory. Grant the emperor peaceful life and well-being, the fulfillment of his desires and a conquest of his enemies."

This effort to induce "the God of Peace" to get behind the guns and help one portion of his children slaughter another portion, may seem to an earnest advocate for peace as a rather queer proceeding; and yet that is just what the Christian world has been doing for centuries and is yet; acting upon the supposition that there are no agencies by which God can establish His kingdom of "peace on earth and good will to men," except sword, musket and cannon.

From the days of Constantine and the crusaders on down, the evangelization of the world has been pushed forward by armies and navies. The gospel of peace and good will which Jesus introduced has been carried to heathen lands on the point of the bayonet; and today salvation by faith is being pumped into the inhabitants of the isles of the Pacific by Mauser rifles, rapid-fire guns and—the water cure.

Throughout all these centuries of war, bloodshed and misery, this same God of Peace has always been addressed as the "defender of the orthodox faith;" informed that "his holy cause was in jeopardy!" and the modest request made that "the enemy might be struck as with lightning" or squelched in some other equally effective manner.

So long as the "Christ-loving armies" were hurled against professedly heathen nations, it was easy to claim that prayers like the one referred to above were really answered because as Napoleon Bonaparte said, "God is usually on the side with the most men and best cannon;" but since the Christian banner has been planted in every land, such prayers are not so easily answered for the reason that "Christ-loving armies" are on both sides in every war nowadays.

To illustrate: The seeds of Christianity have been planted in Japan, and there are more protestant Christians there than in Russia. These, as a matter of course, have been offering up to the same God petitions directly opposed to this ink and paper prayer of the "holy synod" and up to the present writing the answer is somewhat doubtful. God's "invisible finger" has apparently been pointing in the wrong direction. Manifestly the "angels have not yet been sent to fortify the czar's troops and give them salvation," but they seem to have been left to seek safety in flight.

How forcibly are we reminded of the following incident in the siege of Troy as narrated by Homer:

"—Thus the king prefers his solemn prayer;
Oh; thou whose thunder rends the clouded air;
Who in the heaven of heavens has fixed thy throne,
Supreme of Gods, unbounded and alone,
Hear. And before the burning sun descends,
Before the night her gloomy veil extends,
Low in the dust be laid yon hostile spires;
Be Priam's palace sunk in Grecian fires;
In Hector's breast be plunged this shining sword,
And slaughtered heroes groan around their lord.
Thus prayed the chief. His unavailing prayer
Great Jove refused, and tossed in empty air,
The Gods averse, while the prayer arose,
Prepared new toil, and doubled woes on woes."

This case seems to stand on all fours with the effects thus far produced by the shop-made prayer of the "holy synod," and the value and efficacy of the stereotyped prayers ordinarily offered to the God of peace in time of war is yet an open question, or rather, the spiritual value of all such supplications is simply—Nil.

The secession ordinances passed by the southern states in 1861 split wide open every religious body in the United States and each denomination then had its church north and its church south, each worshiping the same God, each believing that He was fighting exclusively on its side and each hating the other because it was denying God. Each regiment enlisted on either side had its chaplain drawn from some of these churches, and the Christ-loving soldiers on both sides had prayer meetings in their tents, all beseeching one and the same God to give each side the victory, and crush the other out of existence.

We are told that "with our God nothing is impossible." But for my part I do not see how it was possible for any God yet discovered to have answered all those prayers without depopulating the United States for let it be remembered, that the enemies on either side were not merely the armed soldiers, but the men, women, and children who sympathized, aided and abetted on both sides.

On the evening of September 19, 1863, at the close of a hard day's fighting, the issue of the great battle of Chickamauga hung in the doubtful poise and we of the orthodox, Christ-loving faith felt that unless we secured the aid of the God of Battles on our side the scale would turn against us. Prayer meetings were held in different localities all over the field and most earnestly did we pray that victory might perch upon our banners and the enemy be crushed on the morrow, but before sunset of that morrow our whole army was executing a masterly movement to the rear in the direction of Chattanooga, leaving over 20,000 of us dead or wounded on the field.

When we wipe the dust and cobwebs of creed theology from our eyes and look facts honestly in the face, we find that no God which creed theology has yet discovered is able to answer one-tenth of the prayers with which the "empty air" is being constantly burdened. And when we scratch through the thin veneering of creed theology we also find that the Jove of the Greeks, the Jehovah of the Hebrews and the Jupiter of the Romans are all one and the same mythological personage; one and the same mighty thunderer on Olympus, Sinai and the Seven Hills of the Tiber, one and the same God of gods and Lord of lords; jealous, easily provoked; great, and mighty and terrible in battle; riding forth gloriously, sword on thigh, conquering and to conquer all his own and the enemies of his dear chosen people; and who, in each of his threefold characters is being rapidly relegated to the limbo of the Thors, the Odins, the Jotuns, the Frost Kings and other dignitaries of Oriental mythology.

It is time for the Christian world to realize that the God of peace does not march side by side with the God of war; that the angry vindictive god of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Moses, Joshua and David, is not the God of the dispensation of love, peace, justice, liberty and equality that is now being ushered in, not for the special benefit of an elect few, but of all humanity.

WHEN TOO CONCEITED

When a man gets so conceited
That he thinks himself completed,
And the world must move along exactly to his mind,
It is time for retrospection
Just to find his true connection
With the universe he thinks so far behind.

It is time to hold the mirror
Of his soul a little nearer,
And then swing it round the world a little bit;
It is time to take the measure
Of this world's long-hidden treasure
When a man gets swelled up with the thought that he is "it."

It is time to change his notion
Of the size of this great ocean
By presenting to his view the world in full.
It is time to change the plaster
Of this freak before disaster
Falls upon the world and grants it him a pull.

When a man gets so elated
O'er the thought that he's created
Just to rule and govern others as he please,
It is time old Gabe was blowing,
Just to make him think of going
Ere he takes the hand of Justice in his squeeze.

THE QUALITY OF RADIUM.

To the Editor:—Having received the following explanation of Radium and its elements, which appears to be based upon scientific principles, I deem it of sufficient interest to require publication.

Radium is nature's electro-magnetic battery holding in perpetual harmony of combination the elements of electricity and magnetism.

This perfect union of fundamental forces can alone supply undiminished radio-activity.

As the simple vapor from radium differs from the mother mineral, because certain elements will not be vaporized, it proves that natural chemistry defies competition.

Nature's compounds are alone complete. Individuality of mineral life will demonstrate the scientific fact, that proportional unity of forces is everywhere supreme.

The elements composing Radium combine in perfect form the highest degree of concentration; and nothing can more fully illustrate that nature has provided ample storage bateries for all human needs.

Mankind must discover and appropriate to use this opulent provision, which cannot fail to suggest that nature's methods invariably express "Multum in parvo" (much in little).

At the Shrine of the Higher Birth.

FUNERAL SERIVICES OF MRS. NANCY J. MARSHALL.

Dear friends, at the shrine of the higher birth, which is miscalled death, we have come unto the mortal house of our friend, Mrs. Nancy J. Marshall, to celebrate with suitable memory and loving thoughts her transition to a higher life after seventy-four years of earthly pilgrimage.

We, who were her friends, feel that it is a blessed, though solemn, privilege to stand here at this hour and give our tribute of love to her, and praise and thanksgiving for her release.

Hymn: "Nearer, My God to Thee."

"And there shall be no more death." "And there shall be no more sighing and no more sorrowing."

A modern writer has said: "That is not death which cometh into the house of human birth, but it is the Great Awakener."

In the twofold state of human existence, dear friends, the family, the household, the life-long friends of our sister stand to-day. Under the shadow of physical separation, whatever the time, or place, or hour, or under whatever circumstances this messenger comes, it seems to come suddenly; it seems as though the people are unprepared; but let no one make the mistake of supposing that in this house, or in this time, or in regard to this personality, who is a living spiritual presence, there has been any removal.

In the thought of what the world calls death, the shadow of the natural change is here upon the earth. But the shadow is not only brightened, but made more beautiful by her life, by its ripeness and readiness, and by the knowledge that was hers and is that of her friends, that it was the next great step in existence.

To be born into human life is frequently to be born into sorrow and pain, and always into struggle, but to have this added step in the promotion of life, —it is a great, wonderful, all-potent, glorious change. When it comes in infancy you say, "Oh, the babe is too young to die." When it comes to those just starting out in material life you say, "Oh, their pilgrimage has just begun; it is too early in the morning of life for them to go." When it comes to the middle-aged, you say, "Oh, their usefulness is just in its height, they should not go." But what can you say, however beloved, however tender, however beneficent, however useful the life, when more than three score years and ten have crowned that life with the rich harvest of earthly experience?

By nature our friend was endowed with the gentlest disposition, with the sweetest temper, with the service in giving and loving; her whole life was a life of loving service. Receiving at the hands of others loving kindness, which was her due, and giving loving kindness as was her nature to do.

Personally, the one standing before you and many of those present have known her for nearly thirty years, and in that length of time no word was ever heard from her of unkindness or criticism of another. Never was she surprised at human weakness; she had a word of excuse for all. If people injured her they were received with gentle remonstrance, frequently tears. She would suffer a wrong rather than retaliate or be angry.

Early in life she was called upon, as most women of her generation were, to experience trial and work; and later, an early bereavement which left her with a mother's charge. Still she had no word of complaint, but kept on with great patience and great endurance. You all know what a loving friend she was. Anything entrusted to her in confidence was as safe as if it were held in the secret archives of eternity. She gave consolation and encouragement, but never seemed to give blame. As a friend she was strong and true. As a member of our congregation she was faithful; as a worker always willing when able in body. Only the lack of health of herself or friends ever kept her from us. In all those years the line of loyalty, of fidelity, of faithfulness was carefully and distinctly preserved. You knew where to find her; there was no changing as with summer friends, no endeavor to appear more than she was, in fact, you always found her, in her dwelling, or wherever she might be, the same true, loyal heart. This being true of her fidelity to friends, she was the same in her love for her family.

When bereft of the one upon whom she would naturally lean in married life, her brother, with strong, loving heart, gave her refuge. She was the home-maker, home-keeper for him for many years. In later years in this home, the home of her daughter, she has also taken her place, also been the care-taker, and always felt, as one of her nature should, to do her part, and always most willingly and lovingly.

These lives that are given to human existence illustrate the best of human life; not those known to fame, or who by some sudden burst of fortune or circumstance are brought before the world. It is the mothers, the sisters, the wives and daughters of the world who do their part, thus living their lives they make up the great sum of the fruitage of life that is of the garden of the spirit. Though there are many weeds and tares in the outward world, these sacred places are kept alive by just such an existence as hers.

It is because of that, that we come here today, in this beautiful Sunday stillness, as a part of our Sunday worship, to give thanksgiving unto the Great Giver of all life, that she has had her wish; that her prayer is at last granted. For although willing to stay as long as needed in human life, your speaker has heard her say many, many times: "I wish the time would come for me to go. I long to go." And what was the reason?

Because underlying this great sweetness of nature, and added to this her true womanly strength, she had an abiding knowledge of the future life and an abiding knowledge of the existence of the spirit state as the next step in life. So she set to prepare herself. Not by any great effort, not by studying into the occult, mysterious and strange, not by straining a point of attempted goodness, but by being as true to her convictions as possible. She knew she was preparing the way for the next step, as pupils do for the next step in the schools, so is this great school of life the preparation for the next step.

Happy would the human family be if they realized that the spirit nature is that which survives the change called death. That the mind must co-operate with the spirit, and that the body is simply the instrument for carrying out the wishes of the spirit while here. Many times, in her case it was in feebleness, many times through periods of great suffering physically, but at the same time with fortitude of the spirit, and always returning loyally to the endeavors of life and taking it up and carrying forward the thread, knowing that the time would come when the curtain of material existence would be fully drawn aside and she would see face to face and soul to soul.

Such gleams as were given to her at times were to her a priceless heritage. She knew of the "beyond" as it is called; that bourne to which many of the people she knew had passed. It was not afar off, it was not a kingdom removed by impossible barriers of belief, it was just the next step into the upper house of life that was then invisible, the upper portion of the habitation that belongs to every human being; but which few really occupy.

Most people are contented to live in the basement, pursuing the daily cares of material life, as if there were no other part of life. Most rarely do people get beyond the intellect, which is the next upper story. But her life was also in that larger upper room, in the great, wonderful, beautiful, yet partly veiled dwelling which impinges so closely upon human life, and which people know so little about.

As universal as is this change, the ignorance upon the subject of man's spiritual nature is almost appalling. This is because materialism on one side and a material theology on the other have veiled that existence to human understanding, and made people believe that they could not know to a certainty about that next step of life. It is just as criminal as if you should say to your children: now you are always going to be children, you can never know anything about growing up, when day after day, and hour after hour they are hungering and thirsting for knowledge that may lie beyond. They grow to that estate by what you say to them, by the schooling that you endeavor to impart to them. It is a criminal offense if this spiritual nature shall be forever starved of its needs and requirements; that the longings and questions shall be stultified.

Happily, through the open window of this twentieth century—coming in the latter half of the nineteenth century—there has come that knowledge. Happily it was her privilege to know of this, and her household participated in it. She lived many years after she became aware of it. And to-day it is because of this that there are no drapings of woe, but these lovely blossoms that attest the love of friends, and are the symbols of that spiritual blossoming into which she has entered.

It is not a time for a doctrinal sermon, but these are not doctrines, they are verities.

The human casket must be laid aside, the human drapery must pass unto the dust. But if that intelligence that is beloved, that life that you know and appreciate, and that appreciates you, is not awake and conscious, then there is no hope for humanity anywhere. It is because of this revealment which has come into the great light of this century of discovery of science, and of art, that the world has not lapsed into the materialism of doubt and discouragement concerning the thought of immortal life.

Even the churches have been imbued with it. We have stood side by side with ministers of every denomination on similar occasions to this, and they spoke the words to those that were present in perfect accord with what we are speaking to-day: One Episcopal clergyman, a Boston D. D., officiating at a funeral with us, in Boston, said, "It is given to the wife of this husband and friend, whose form is laid away in the casket here beside you, to know that her husband is as much here to-day as before this change came; that he is in attendance upon these services; he is aware of these loving thoughts and tributes; he is not dead." That would have been called Spiritualism if we had said it. But coming from him people did not seem to wonder.

The only wonder is, that with all the revealment and teaching of the past, with that which came upon Olivet, with that which came by the sea of Galilee, and that which has pervaded the church all these years, that the people do not know more about it, that their spiritual nature has been left to grow fallow and neglected; that weeds have been allowed to grow where flowers should blossom and the beautiful fruitage of the spirit appear. It is as necessary to know of that which shall follow this life as it is to know of youth and manhood when the child is young. If the father and mother did not allow this knowledge to increase and expand they would be considered neglectful. The children of human life have been neglected by those who were limited in knowledge or for whose interest it was to keep the doors of that immortal world closed.

But from the angel side of life to-day there is floated into the outward consciousness of many hundreds of thousands this sweet, all-pervading message: "We are not dead, but we are living still, we can and do minister to you." There is no habitation, however lowly, that has not its guardian spirits; there is no palace however exalted, that has not need of ministering presences. Whenever and wherever the beautiful angel miscalled Death appears, these ministering ones are ready. When the spiritual vision is opening and the earthly vision is fading, lo! they are perceived to be near.

She made no question but what this was her last illness; she did not even care to know the technical name of the thing that was bearing her away into the other world. They might do what they would with the body, she had business in the other world. Her vision turned to that other and greater light of the immortal realm. But she remembered everything well even while the body was losing its hold of the spirit, after the suffering was over and she was waiting for her release. So when that morning light arose, when its full splendor was upon her, when this habitation was not less, but that greater habitation more near, she knew the loved ones around her here, and also knew the beckoning ones who gathered near from the other side; members of our congregation who had passed on, and loved ones from everywhere, who were all pressing around. Thus she sank peacefully asleep, her work finished, her spirit released for that larger work.

No one can doubt that she is as much here as she was before. Nay, she is more here now, because she has no feeble body, she is not conscious of the limitations of time and sense, but in this loving presence, in the presence of neighbors and friends, whom she knows have tenderly cared for her household, in the presence of this larger Band of Harmony, she is one with us as before. Restored to that perfect youth, which even cast its brightening influence over the countenance, because when the spirit is about to take its flight it often lights up the human face with a lingering look of joy and gladness because of the release that has come and leaves the stamp upon the human countenance of the great light into which the spirit is entering.

Thus, dear ones, we have given our thought of her, knowing that if we were to talk for an age there could be nothing added to this beautiful life, to that which has come to the present realization of it, to know the wonderful guardianship that will make it possible for her to abide with the household and still be one with each one of you in your various homes, whether you are sick or well, whether you are in the midst of the congregation or in your own homes, there will be the knowledge that she is one of those ministering ones, that she can be near to you whenever a thought of love is uplifted to her. Now it is a condition that is known even in human life, that those you love will reach you from afar; especially is this true of those that are released from the mortal form, by the subtle "telepathy" of the spirit, by that wonderful "wireless telegraphy" that gives to you instantaneously the knowledge of their presence and makes them aware that they are near when you need them, that your thoughts are with them in love. So around this home to-day is the encircling presence of the arisen ones, and she is in the midst arrayed in the form of the spirit in raiment that is woven of peace and gentleness; that have been woven in that fineness of spiritual drapery which was the aura of her goodly life, in that inspiration that led her ever on and on to seek inwardly the higher truths that she never could find language to express, but which were expressed with deeds and words of loving kindness.

How beautiful it is in the autumn time thus to know that the garnered sheaves of the human life have been gathered, and what is grain will be borne unto the eternal life while the imperfections that are incident to every human life pass with the chaff and the straw away to help make the earth more beautiful.

Dear friends of the congregation; you will find her in your midst more than heretofore because the body will not keep her by its physical weakness.

Dear neighbors, who have been so kind in all your thoughts and deeds, remember she is one with you and would thank you for all you have done.

Dear members of the household, do not feel that she is gone. To the brother, whose noble love has been her strength, she gives still the sisterly care, and to his wife she is a sister also. To the dear daughter of her heart, there can be nothing more nor nothing less than the tie that binds a mother to her child. There is no heaven so far away, no wall so high that could keep a mother's love from seeking her child. To her dear granddaughter, of whom she has had charge from her earliest life, she who has watched you through sickness and health, and growth into womanhood will ever be a gentle and tender remembrance of uplifting and strength. You will know this none the less because her form must needs go back to the dust.

Now in the knowledge of this, let us all feel that while we sympathize with those who in this hour feel the mortal loss, we also must understand that the praise and loving kindness given unto others make preparation for that life into which she has entered.

Even as around her form to-day
These blossoms of your love appear,
So all along that upward way
Are the blossoms of each human year,
Sown in patience, in toil, in pain,
To be restored in bloom again.

The lilies of life—as she understood—
Grow in the gardens of your God;
Not by miracle, but by good
Deeds on the pathway you have trod.

The great whiteness of that love,
Which is Infinitude, is evermore
Perceived most from above,
But reaches those within the mortal sphere.

Her light of inspiration came;
Her star of love its guidance gave,
And, all-blessed, the hallowed flame
Of that inspiration had power to save.

Let us abide in its perfect light;
Let us understand this from to-day:
The passing out of the human sight
Symbols the love of heaven alway.
But there no doubt is ever given
This change is life, is the Love from heaven.

Unto thy ministering spirits, unto the love, that is the heritage of all earth's children, thy triumphant daughter has entered Our Heavenly Parent. May thy blessings be with those who are here, who still awhile must walk the paths of earth; strengthen their hands to do their work, their minds and spirits to do their part in human life. May they realize, that when the doorway thus is opened all ministering ones appear, and the light is not far nor dim, but close at hand. May the benediction of this hour, the sacredness of this divine human sympathy that welleth up in the loving heart make a true and more perfect bond unto that kingdom of Life and Light within the spirit. Amen.

Hymn: "There's a Land That Is Fairer Than Day."

Now may the baptism of her ministering presence abide with this household; may other spirits of the loved and arisen ones be near; and may the light of thy perfect love, our heavenly Parent, abide forever. Amen.

IS IT MEMORY OR HOPE?

Each flower that blooms and fills the land with bliss,
Each bird that sings its happy note to-day,
Somehow reminds me of a joy I miss,
As if 'twere mine in some dear far away!

I cannot tell if it were ages gone,
Or if it is of time that's yet to be,
For to the heart the years so swift pass on,
But this I know, the joy belongs to me! —William Brunton.

Seeking the Light.

Questions and Suggestions to Dr. J. M. Peebles.

To the Editor:—With your permission, I would like to ask a few questions and, perhaps, offer some suggestions to Brother Peebles.

I do not aspire to placing myself on an equal footing with that veteran Spiritualist, whom I very much admire as an outspoken soldier in the cause of truth. My vista of years stops far short of his; and his opportunities have outnumbered mine far more than in the limit of time. And, though I am a lifelong Spiritualist, I am still open to new ideas (new to me) and new thoughts. I admit no creed, for I claim all of the freedom to which I am entitled by the right of natural inheritance. I am my own thinker, and I enjoy the privilege of polishing my ideas; hence this request.

Brother Peebles—Esteemed Brother:—Your questions in your article, in last week's issue of The Progressive Thinker, under the heading, "Important Subjects Considered," have led me to desire a talk with you on this subject. I may not be classed a mental scientist, for I feel that I have not yet mastered the cult; but I have been thinking along those lines.

Your questions suggest to me this hypothesis: The action of the mind is thought. Being an action, it expresses motion—it thinks, it reasons with the subconscious thoughts creating new ideas. Also, being an action it is a thing. Webster defines "thing" as "event or action; any substance," etc. Motion creates vibration, be it vacillating or otherwise. Then, if thought is action, it is motion, and is creative. As it creates vibration, why is it not transferable? Being a thing, is it not a vibrative thought, going out in waves, like the waves of the ocean—vibrating less and less, as the force which sent it out diminishes? If it be thus, would it not be fair to maintain that the intense thinking of a thought directed to a certain object, would send the vibrative thought to the object on which it were directed?

Whether this be so or not, this I do know: I have sent thoughts out to different persons, at different times, and they have been received. Their thoughts have returned to me in answer to my thought; and showing their subconscious thought as well. Again, I have done the same by accident, without previous arrangement. Then, can it be other than acting through a natural law? We might suggest the intervention of spirit power. But is it fair to suppose that a spirit can be with us and in a place a thousand miles distant at the same time? To me, it seems a fair conclusion that, as spirits transfer their thoughts to mortals, so we transfer our thoughts to one another. For, are not we, all, spirits? And, is not the body merely the expression of the spirit in earth-substance? If this be a fact, is it not easy to discern what thoughts have created? True, there is "purpose, skill and persistent energy." But, do not these ingredients enter into the composition of thought? Neither are they subjects of avoirdupois. But they are implied things; and they are creative.

To me, mental science is the science of the mind; and it is the scientific proof of a spirit control. It is the science of Spiritualism. The two are inseparable.

Now, Brother Peebles, as you are inclined to treat this subject to a dose of sarcasm, allow me to ask: Can there be any deception or hypocrisy in an honest thought? Along the line of my study of mental science, I have met with some grand, soul-inspiring thoughts. And I must confess that I have never found one which is not a factor in the upbuilding of mankind; or which does not tend toward elevating man to the boasted, but unattained, estate of being the noblest work of, so-called, creation.

In answer to the inquiry concerning the housewife's bonnet: Would it not be fair to conclude that the transformation of an old bonnet—newly cleaned, newly polished and newly trimmed—would pass, quite respectably and morally, for a new bonnet? The parable of the wine does not fit this age. If the bottles which Christ referred to had been made of glass, the old, tried bottles would have been better than the new. All the newness required would have been new corks.

You may call me an optimist, if you will. For I fully believe that everything is good, negatively or positively, and is for the best, as is eventually proven. But I am determined to keep out of the ruts; so, I am ever ready to submit my ideas to the process of repolishing.

SARAH E. SWEETLAND.
Grand Rapids, Mich.

Dr. Peebles' Reply.

The perusal of Sister Sweetland's article gave me great pleasure, breathing as it did, the spirit of inquiry, suggestion, charity and good will. I believe in suggestion and suggestive therapeutics, yet am brainy enough, I trust, not to use suggestion, hypnotism and mesmerism synonymously.

But to these questions and suggestions. "The action of the mind is thought," says Mrs. Sweetland. Possibly I can accept this when she defines mind, its origin and force. "It thinks," she states. What thinks, the thought, or the action or the motion? To say that the thought thinks would be equivalent to saying that the Spirit spirits, the mind minds. If it be action which thinks, then a boulder in action rolling down a mountain must be a mighty thinker.

Perhaps she really, candidly means that the thought "thinks" and "reasons," (as she states,) "with the subconscious, creating new ideas." There! that's the first "new thought" that I ever heard advanced by the New Thoughtist Cult. It must be considered, as I am not clear about the "sub." The prefix "sub" means under; and if the subconscious thoughts "reason" with the upperconscious thoughts, to create ideas, they must be a set of horrible mental hybrids, because there are so many wicked thoughts swarming in low, undeveloped souls. The word "create" used by our questioner, died when the devil of theology died. Evolution has taken the place of creation.

"Motion," we are told by this lady, "causes vibration." It does nothing of the kind. Motion is a result and not a conscious cause. In fact, motion is not in any sense the equivalent of thought, and neither of them creates vibration. Hoping to instruct this new sect of mental confusionists, permit me to illustrate. A stalwart, strong-willed man, stone in hand, stands upon the hilltop and, with the vim of conscious will-power, he hurls the stone into a calm, placid lake. Now then, the force of the will-hurled stone striking the water, caused the vibratory waves, which, widening may reach the farthest shore. But mark the cause was the mortal-vestured spirit, and the stone was not transferred; neither are thoughts as "things" transferred something as bullets are shot out of guns. Spirits do not transfer their thoughts to mortals. It is the etheric vibrations which are transferred.

Mrs. Sweetland gives us Webster's definition—definition in part, of thing; but did she not know that Webster and Worcester are largely out of date. The great Standard Dictionary before me thus defines thought, (and thought is the subject under consideration): "The act, process, or power of thinking; any mental activity; the exercise of the mind in the widest sense; more strictly, that of the intellectual faculties only; psychol, in the strictest sense, the exercise of the comparative faculty." How audacious then, in any one, to inject into the Standard Dictionary's definition such avoirdupois-meaning words as "thing," "substance," matter!

Sister Sweetland accuses me of "treating this subject to a dose of sarcasm." No—no! You do me injustice. The sarcasm is in the phrase "thoughts are things." By stirring it up, I expose the sarcasm, and the silliness of the theory—that's all. Personally I am as calm and tactful and smooth and suave and serene as are June's loveliest evenings. If my pen slips in controversies, I quickly give it a disciplinary lecture on courtesy. Square pegs sometimes get into round holes causing disputations. None are perfect.

Here comes a square question from our sister: "Can there be any deception in an honest thought?" What there can be or cannot be in this measureless universe, is hard to say. But the woman with the drunken husband, who put the ink-bottle in place of the eye-water for him to use on his liquor-inflamed eyes when reaching home in the darkness of midnight, no doubt cherished the "honest thought" that this "deception" might help to reform her husband. This makes of "honest thought" and "deception" very close bedfellows—does it not?

"Mental science—the science of the mind, is the science of Spiritualism," we are told by this writer. Not so! If it be true that Spiritualism is based upon the fluctuating science of the mind, upon mental science or Christian Science—heaven pity it. No—no, Spiritualism is based upon pure, immutable spirit—upon well-established facts—upon a combined phenomenon and philosophy, and upon immutable principles. And moreover, it is all-embracing, encouraging all reforms, and leading on and upward to all the incoming reforms that must enlighten and uplift humanity.

Still do I insist that to call an old, unfashionable, last year's bonnet, because "cleaned and trimmed," a new bonnet, is morally dishonest. True, Mrs. Sweetland thinks it "would pass quite respectably." Yes—and this very "passing" would constitute the quintessence of the deception. Never have I as yet, though a liberal-minded searcher for the truth, been able to fish up from Mental Scientists, or New Thoughtists a single thought that was both new and true. Their wares are old, renamed, revestured, retrimmed and so, the more deceptive.

I, too, like Mrs. Sweetland, am an optimist, an earnest, hopeful optimist, but not such a consummate idiot as to believe that broken limbs, cancers, fibroid tumors, syphilis, rape, and lynchings and black-hearted murders, are either as she states in substance "negatively or positively good." If they are good—good in any way, why, the people should continue in the practice of their good, and further, they should encourage and cultivate this negative demonism though black as the perishing Gehenna.

Optimism, evolution and Spiritualism are a trinity in unity. Under the lowest inherited debris there glitters the divine spark—the divine impress—the uplift of divinity—the infinite possibility for all intelligences. And so, as the poet sings, "Upward all things tend."

ASTROLOGY TO THE FRONT.

Trying to Tell Who Will Be Elected President.

Theodore Roosevelt.

From the present time until Oct. 10 Mars will be in evil aspect to his sun from the fourth house, and as Mars will also be in evil aspect to Mercury and Uranus he will be in danger of accident during his time. Jupiter is in aspect to his sun, this giving him almost a charmed life.

After Oct. 10 the evil indications will be passed, and on Oct. 27 Mars will leave the fourth house and Mercury will come in good aspect to his sun and Mercury's own place, indicating some move on his part, which will assure his success.

Nov. 8 Jupiter will be in good aspect to his sun, in good aspect to the cusp of the house of nativity, will be passing through the house which rules his friends, and this, with his strong circle, will leave no doubt as to his success.

"There appears to be no doubt of Mr. Roosevelt's election," said Mme Seera. "When I read his horoscope—that is, the beginning of it—it seemed doubtful to me that he would be successful for the simple reason that there are ominous days ahead of him. But as I approached the day of election the situation brightened and the indications for the eighth day of November could not be more satisfactory for him."

Judge Alton B. Parker.

The 2d of October Mars enters his house of life and will continue there until Nov. 7.

Mars will be in evil aspect to the sun, to Jupiter, the moon, and Mercury on Nov. 8. This coming from the house of life is very evil.

At some time between Sept. 27 and October 5 something will happen or be done by Judge Parker that will ruin his chance for success.

There is considerable danger of accident about him on election day, but his health will be good.

On Nov. 8 the sun and his ruling planet, Mercury, will be within orb of the beneficent Jupiter in the radical figure, which will be an excellent indication for his health. But Jupiter, in turn, is transiting the great malefic Saturn and afflicts the sun at birth, and this will be the one great obstacle in the way of his success.

"Judge Parker's evil days appear to be upon him, from the position of his ruling planet. The worst period for his success in public life will begin Oct 2 and will continue until Nov. 7, and it seems that while President Roosevelt is about to do some one thing that will insure his election, Judge Parker appears doomed to do something between Sept. 27 and October 5 that will virtually mean his defeat in his life's greatest ambitions.

N. S. A. CONVENTION.

To the Editor:—Kindly give space in your valued journal for the following important announcement concerning the place of meeting of the N. S. A. convention to be held in St. Louis, Oct. 18, 19, 20 and 21.

The committee of the World's Fair Congresses assigned to this association —as to others—the music hall of the great Coliseum, for convention purposes, and we had every reason to suppose all was in readiness for our occupancy. At this late day comes the information that Music Hall has been rented for the season to a musical company, and that another hall has been allotted to the convention societies. Investigation shows that the second hall is not adequate for our purpose—its acoustic properties are not good, and as the musical company aforesaid gives a musical extravaganza day and evening its sounds are sufficient to completely drown the voices of our speakers and delegates. Hence the N. S. A. official board has decided that the convention be held at the Spiritual Temple in St. Louis, 3015 Pine street, where the reception of Monday, Oct. 17, at 8 p. m., will also be held. We regret exceedingly the necessity of changing location of meetings at this late day, but are so obliged to do in justice to our people. Pine Street Temple is reached from Union Station as follows: Take 18th street car to Olive, transfer west and ride to 30th street, walk one block south; or, take Laclede car and ride to 30th or Garrison, and walk two blocks north.

All delegates and other friends who intend to be in St. Louis during the time of convention, are requested to arrange their plans for visiting the Fair or sight-seeing, so as to enable them to attend all sessions of the convention—day and evening. Important business is sure to come up at all day sessions, while the evening meetings will be more attractive to Spiritualists and investigators, by the able and brilliant talent we shall present. All are cordially invited. Come one and all and help to make this the grandest convocation of Spiritualists the world has ever known.

N. S. A. CONVENTION.

OCTOBER 18, 19, 20 AND 21.

Headquarters of the N. S. A. official board will be at the Lindell Hotel, St. Louis, Mo., from October 12 till Oct 22.

All convention meetings will be held in the Spiritual Temple, 3015 Pine street, St. Louis, also the reception on Monday, October 17, at 8 p. m.

All day meetings will be free; 25 cents admission to evening services.

Evening talent of the best, will be presented. Among those who are to participate as speakers are Will J. Erwood, Dr. J. M. Peebles, W. J. Colville, Mrs. R. S. Lillie, Mrs. Laura G. Fixen and others of note. Mediums: Rev. E. W. Sprague, Mrs. Maud Lord-Drake, Mrs. G. G. Cooley, Mrs. E. A. Sauer and other well-known test workers. A grand time is expected for our cause.

Business sessions will present many features of the utmost importance to our cause. The usual routine will be followed, but it is expected that many questions and issues of great value will be presented which will call for wise deliberation and much discussion on the part of the brainy delegates who will be with us. No person should miss even a single session. Kindly arrange your plans for sight-seeing so as not to interfere with your attendance at the meetings.

The N. S. A. cannot make terms for rooms for delegates or others. Information on this matter can be obtained from our trustee, Thomas Grimshaw, at 3015 Pine street, St. Louis, by addressing him with stamp for reply. A list of rooming houses, comfortable and convenient, is to be found at his address.

In reply to critics, we are led to announce that it is impossible for any outline of convention work to be published prior to the meetings; for aside from the Amendments and usual routine work that have to be presented, we have not sufficient data of what is to be done to enable us to give any intelligent idea of the special work to the public; nor can we give our annual reports at an earlier date, as we do not close our books nor make up reports till October.

As reference has been made in one of our journals, to the liberal spirit of the N. S. A. treasurer, but with the remark that money is not everything, it is my duty to herewith say, that in addition to his generous monetary help, Mr. Mayer being a man of keenest business acumen and sagacity, is of invaluable aid, not only at conventions, and board meetings, but also during the entire year as adviser, helper and one of far-seeing judgment at headquarters in the management of official affairs. Your secretary feels deeply indebted to him for his generous aid, as should every member and society of this association.

New Cure for Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc.

Our readers will be glad to know that the new botanical discovery, Alkavis, has proved a certain cure for all diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood, or by disordered action of the kidneys or urinary organs. It is a wonderful discovery, with a record of 1200 hospital cures in 30 days. It acts directly upon the blood and kidneys, and is a true specific, just as quinine is in malaria.

Among the many testimonials received is one from the Rev. W. B. Moore, D. D., of Washington, testifies in the New York Christian Witness that Alkavis completely cured him of Rheumatism and Kidney and Bladder disease of many years' standing. Many ladies also testify to its curative powers in disorders peculiar to womanhood.

So far the Church Kidney Cure Company, New York, are the only importers of this new remedy, and they are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free sample of Alkavis prepaid by mail to every reader of The Progressive Thinker who is a sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder disorder, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Gravel, Diabetes, Pain in Back, difficult or too frequent passing water, or other affliction due to improper action of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. We advise all Sufferers to send their names and address to the company, and receive the Alkavis entirely free. Address Church Kidney Cure Co., No. 404 Fourth Avenue, New York.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH
OR
Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the FORMATION OF CIRCLES AND CULTIVATION OF MEDIUMSHIP with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory lefters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

There are 285 pages, with six full-page illustrations, including photogravures of the author and Clair Tuttle. It is bound in blue with aluminum embossing. Many of the poems are especially adapted for recitations.

The Mecca says: "Psychic Poems."

That erudite critic, Wm. Emmette Coleman: "To all lovers of good poetry this book is confidently recommended."

Will Carlton: "I have read with great interest:"

Sarah Thorpe Thomas, the Humanitarian says: "A most exquisite bouquet. * * * * the thoughts echo and re-echo through the deepest recesses of my heart. I have some word of praise for every page."

The author says in the dedication: "To those whose thoughts and longings reach into the unseen Land of Souls, this handful of asphodels, mixed with common flowers, is offered hoping to give rest and pleasure while waiting at the way stations on the journey thither."

CHAPTER V.

Resurrection.

Music, soft and gentle. Oh, how sweet. Is there anything known among men that will soothe the stricken soul like sweet music? That sweet harmonious sound, coming from, it may be many voices of well trained musicians who with one accord all touch upon a single note at the same time, and continuing in a regular rise and fall of tone, they tell of a story of their lives of peace, harmony and love. Or it may be a band of music, giving forth a volume of sound; or perhaps a union of both, and all giving forth that most intense harmonious symphony, that to the ear is like the lullaby of the fond mother to her babe which becomes the only balm to soothe it to its gentle and peaceful sleep.

The siren lures the thoughtless youth to his destruction by her sweet low harmony in unison with the eaves. The angels have been spoken of as giving the sweetest music that mortals have ever heard; their harps were attuned to the finest strains of music that could be imagined; many loved ones, after lying in a drowsy state for hours, have brightened up, and lifting their eyes and hands upward have expressed their gratitude for the harmonious sounds that have been wafted from the unseen shore to them, as the pearly gates opened for them to go and join the great majority in God's land.

I opened my eyes, after how long a time I may never know; but long before I had any desire to move or see, my ears were filled with that most delightful musical harmony that it is impossible to describe; it seemed that to move was to drive it away; I hardly dared to breathe lest I should lose one note, one sound that filled my soul with untold joy. My every fibre, my very spirit, was burning with emotion that was caused by the exquisite sounds that soothed and held me in ecstatic bondage; had there been one disturbing sound or thought to mar my perfect bliss, I should have been turned into a howling fiend.

Now the sounds would die away until I found myself shedding tears for fear they would not return; again they would swell into a full round storm of music that seemed to fill the whole universe; then, when coming with full volume, every note by each voice or instrument was as distinct as when they were barely audible. The music seemed to tell a story of perfect peace and love; it seemed that the music without the words were pictures of perfect beauty, describing the unseen treasures of God to man; of His goodness for all errors that had been the retarding force of man's progress towards perfection. There were no sorrowful notes, words or tones; nothing to start a pang of sorrow or tear of remorse; but every sound gleamed with gladness, and love, and joy, and peace, and sunshine, perfect rest and extreme happiness; and seemed for my benefit, as if to bring me back to life, and compensate me for the anguish of those few minutes on the shore of that river where I suffered that second death.

I did open my eyes, but I was grieved for so doing, for that feast of harmony immediately ceased; I closed them to hear more, for, like the glutton, I was not satisfied. I was already filled, but I cried for more. It had gone; the seraphic sounds had died away. Again my eyes opened, that I might discover from whence the music came. To say that the music was a picture, detailing the unimaginable beauties of God's wonderful kingdom; to say it was perfect harmony of sound; to tell of the exquisite gratification to the sense of hearing, is only to speak of the beauties that now met my gaze.

I had trod the soft yielding ground. I had been taken aboard the strange vessel in mid stream and had been privileged to roam at will and feast upon everything that the mind could wish; I had by the same unseen power been wafted to the yet stranger aerial vessel and there allowed to view the wonders of a new world from a dizzy height, while traveling with the speed with which the light of the sun comes to the earth. I had been left where I started, and my last look was of sorrow, sadness and bewilderment; now, bewilderment came in another form. Where was I, now? Not a sound broke the stillness of death; I was surrounded by an indescribably beautiful picture that I will try to tell something about, although words fail me to describe it. I was now in a swinging bed of some light and airy material that seemed to be a part of myself; the rough coarse garment with which I had left the ship, and which so far I had worn in this strange land had now disappeared, and in their place I was now clothed in a loose flowing robe like which all the people I had seen were clothed in. The robe was not white, nor was it black, but of quite dark gray color.

I had no desire to stir. I felt supremely happy. There was no one desire in my soul. I felt contented to lie there and drink in the beauties of my surroundings. To say that my ears had been filled with all the perfect sound that they were able to contain, does not half express the feast of beauty that my eyes now behold. Nor was that all, for the air I breathed was filled with the aroma of the sweetest flowers of all the earth; and with all this bewildering beauty and fragrance in my immediate presence, I could look through the walls of the house I was in, and see all I had first beheld when I first roamed at will through this wonderland.

Again, I asked: Was I dreaming? Was I delirious? Was I dead? Surely, this must be heaven. As I wondered and cogitated, and tried to realize what my satisfied condition was, and wondering at the beauties of my surroundings; yet with the fear that my thoughts would disturb the harmonious conditions of dream, everything seemed to blend each into another and many strange yet most exquisitely beautiful scenes met my gaze.

I was in a large high room, the ceiling was studded with sparkling gems, shedding a light, that but for the wonderful atmosphere, would have blinded me; now I could look at them without tiring my eyes, and they blended into a beautiful picture of exquisite work; the walls, which were very lofty, were covered with the same kind of gems forming other beautiful pictures, in which suns, moons and stars were represented with burnished gold. Suspended on the walls were pictures made of the same materials, and of immense proportions, in frames that were inlaid with some kind of beautiful pearls reflecting all the hues of the rainbow so beautifully and harmoniously were they blended. The pictures, or paintings were of a great variety, representing all that would be ennobling and elevating to anyone who gazed upon them. There was no repetition of scenes or subjects. The floor was tessellated, and represented scenes of what I afterwards learned was ancient history; as if to show the significance of putting the things of the past beneath our feet. Doors and windows, which were numerous, were wide open; and although all things seemed substantial and solid, yet I could look through the walls and ceiling, and even through the beautiful pictures as well as I could see through the open doors and windows; and while I looked at the beauties near, and could see them so plainly, when I looked through them at things remote, I could see everything equally plain. The atmosphere seemed to act like a powerful telescope to aid the sight. There was nothing to mar the scene, or jar the intense rapture of all my senses.

Yet I was alone, and no one seemed to take the least notice of me. I could see hundreds of people in all directions; I could see their every move; I could hear the hum of their voices, and all the various noises that would naturally accompany so many people in such a diversity of occupations. Machinery of all kinds; the puffing and clatter of powerful engines; joyous shouts of happy children; the peaceful pursuits of suburban life; in fact there was nothing wanted that could be found to-day that humanity sees or thinks about that was not brought within my vision; yet everything was distinct to both the eye and ear.

To me, coming from a world where everything was in its almost primitive state, it seemed as if I had been transported to elysian fields, where everything was in such an advanced state, that there was no jar between any of the people, or anything that was there. I know that I should not have been human had I been able to continue in that sublime state for an extended time, after I had once taken in all that grand panorama; and yet I was almost afraid to move or think, lest that beautiful scene should vanish; but because I was human, my thoughts began to work.

Again, I began to wonder where I was. I thought of my terrible experience on that terrible wreck in the ocean; I thought of my home, away, somewhere among the green hills of my native country. I could not believe I was in a land anything like the one I had left. I thought of the crew of that fated vessel; if they were dead, why did I not see them, when I could see every other thing so plainly? I again thought of my flippant remark as that fated "Hawks-Eye" swung from her dock, and so many waved adieu to their friends on her decks. I thought of what her captain said to me at that time. The shrieks of "Old Nick" again rung in my ears. I lived my life over again amid the terrible scenes of that wrecked vessel, and I closed my eyes, and again the ravishing music with which I had been soothed back to life came to my ears and I slept. I dreamed I was in my old home; it seemed as if I had been far away and I had just arrived home; my good mother had embraced me and led me into that old log house; and there beside the great fireplace where the huge backlog was fiercely burning, sat my dear father complacently smoking his cob pipe, while opposite were seated my two brothers and sister, who eagerly listened to the wonderful story their long lost and truant brother was relating. I told with minute detail, of my terrible experience with its happy ending. Then I told them of the wonderful country I found myself in; and I thought I told them that I must return, for I was now only on a visit to let them know I was not in trouble, neither was I dead. Then I thought my fond mother hung on my neck, and begged me not to go; and in my efforts to soothe her, I awoke to find myself in that same floating bed, in that same wonderful room amid all the beauty and harmony with which I had been surrounded when I first regained consciousness, and standing by my side was one of the most beautiful creatures my eyes ever beheld. I wish I had language at my command, with which I could fully describe her. Were it possible to depict the way those strange people conveyed their thoughts to each other, or better, were it possible to convey a faint idea how they read each others' thoughts, then I might be able to give a slight description of the beauteous creature that raised a shapely hand and placed it on my head.

I gazed at her in raptured wonderment; I dared not speak, and had I wished to, I could not have uttered a sound. You, who have stood before some mighty cataract, or listened to the eloquence of some famous orator; or been a spectator of some mighty upheaval of nature, may realize something of the awe with which I gazed at her who had been designated, as I afterwards learned, to be my teacher and companion, by the power that controlled that strange land and people, and was the first one to speak to me in that enchanted country.

Oh, how her voice and touch thrilled me. Through all eternity, I will never forget it; it thrilled every fibre of my being with new life. It seemed as if my weight had suddenly disappeared. I was a new being; the sensation was like a mild electric shock. Where before, everything was so vivid to my sight and hearing, now, it was all redoubled. What before had been like a dream, was now a living reality; I was a part of the beautiful surroundings, all was a harmonious whole, and my companion was the connecting link that had united me with the rest. I was completed in her power, and I fully realized it from the moment she laid her hand on my brow.

She spoke not, neither did she move; yet I was aware of an indescribable power which she had exercised over me, which plainly told me that I was to submit to her in everything; even my thoughts were from that moment to be in unison with her, and I had lost my identity to that extent that I was to begin to become one of the people whom I found myself among.

I was assured that I was not dead, neither was I a prisoner, for I was to have my liberty to go and come at my pleasure; yet I fully realized that to do aught but what was right was to retard my progress to that state which I plainly saw was the condition of those whose robes were of the purest white. My companion's robe was nearly white, it contained a faint tinge of pale olive, and the contrast between hers and the one I wore told a story that showed I had a task to perform that would require diligent study and a great amount of patience. It was all plain now, and I could easily see what was expected of me; and I resolved in the time she held her hand on my head, that I would be a diligent scholar, and ever be faithful to the trust that had been placed upon me.

CHAPTER VI.

No restaint. But—

"Brother," she said, in accents low and musical, "be assured that you are among friends; your past is all known to me. Realizing how your gross body has suffered as it came in contact with the still more gross material and necessary conditions of that gross and undeveloped sphere from whence you have just issued, and that you necessarily partake of that undeveloped sphere, the law of this more highly developed sphere compels me to come to your aid, and commence the work of assimilation of your being to the more fully unfolded state which is but a step up the great ladder of progression of all things by the great plan or cosmic force, which will ultimately lead to the apex of the vast whole, where such sorrows as your tired nature has suffered, will no longer be known.

"Listen while I unfold to you, and explain to your wondering senses, the scenes of this, to you, wonderland. Coming as you do from the sphere where everything is just from the molds as it were, the rough corners protruding from all things, the paths are strewn with sharp stones and thorns, everything is dark except at intervals, and when the light does break, it causes heavy shadows; where all things are of such yielding nature, that when brought in contact with each other, they each partake of the other, and the partially developed become contaminated with the more gross, and all conspire to retard the progress of the whole.

"No doubt you wonder at the seeming harmony of your present surroundings. The comparison between this sphere, and the one you came from is vastly too great for any mind in your sphere to comprehend, however great it might be thought there. There, there are but few with education, yet that few show their little learning by ostentatious display and arrogance, and keep the many in a state of ignorance, all for one reason; that is, simply that they may enjoy their own self-gratification on all occasions. Each works for self alone, regardless of their fellows; whereas, if they were to work in unison for one common cause, the whole world would be advanced to a far greater extent, and the development of the people there and all things in nature would develop faster; the laws of nature which are the same there as they are here, would be better understood, and the so-called laws of man would be modified or abolished altogether.

"The masses there are controlled in such a manner that it almost becomes slavery; and they are controlled mostly by a so-called religion, which has been established by a few ambitious persons, who having a strong psychological power of which most were ignorant that they possessed, and styling themselves emissaries from an imaginary Deity, sent to reform the world, and after he has been deprived of his life by some horrible torture, the teachings of this self-styled reformer have been gathered by a few, and after the lapse of a few centuries have been scattered broadcast over a small portion of the earth, and all who could not, or would not accept them as the only truths, have been subjected to a state of ostracism that amounted to a kind of slavery; and in the zeal of the projectors of any one kind of those so-called religions, the leaders have lost sight of the good and true principles of their originators; and instead of making humanity there better, it has been the means of retarding the progress of all things. So, dissensions, bickerings, bloody and cruel wars have ensued; science, art, literature and music, and the understanding of natural law has been retarded.

"So your sphere is at the present time in a state of comparative chaos; and if there be a few who dare to throw off the shackles of superstition and ignorance, they are immediately set upon by the others, who in their blindness hold on to the teachings; and made to feel the hard reproaches of the dogmatic religions. This does not apply to any one particular religious sect, for throughout the whole of the planet, called Aer in this sphere, or Earth, as you have been taught to call it, there are numerous sects there; in fact, there are many hundred sects there, and did anyone have the power it would destroy all others, if they dared to say aught of that particular sect; here, where you now find yourself, all work for the common good; there are no restraints upon any one except to those who may be in a less developed state; and to those there is no harsh treatment. If there be those here to whom the conditions are irksome, because the law tells them that all must be governed alike, or in their ignorance they fail to understand that it is best to do right regardless of other considerations, then they are immediately instructed in the law which they do not understand.

"With your people there is a great amount spoken and written on the subject of charity; with us, charity is a law; and if one goes contrary to law, charity becomes the prosecuting attorney, and also the officer that executes that law, and enlightenment is the penalty inflicted.

"With us, wrong is a disease, and unlike disease on Aer, it is not removed by ingrafting other disease, but the cause is readily found and removed; the effect, which is the opposite, good, immediately asserts itself and harmony is the consequence. We have no retreats with us where those who might become helpless might be taken that others would be compelled to care for. We have no false teachings; for each and all are taught by the law, which is written so bright that all may and can not help but learn; and as we have no man-made law, we have no need of the judiciary; consequently, there are no unnecessary encumbrances; all live here by the law that governs the whole universe. The same law that causes the grass to lengthen, the trees to expand, the light to come from yonder sun, governs us in all our lives.

"Of course there are grades of development here the same as on Aer, and as great a diversity as there; but where the highest leaves off there, the lowest begins here; there is no great difference as on Aer; for there each must continue in their particular sphere in which they chance to be born, while here, the lesser are invited, I may say they are compelled to seek the society of the minds of those who are higher developed, so as to receive the full benefit of the evolution of thought, as is made manifest from the highest teachers in their study of the great and beautiful laws of the grand whole, so as to get all the information they are capable of retaining as quickly as possible.

"Again, unlike the inhabitants of Aer, the lesser developed here never presume to mingle with those so far above themselves that they can not comprehend, but each one advances just as fast as they are able to understand, and no faster; but there is in each and all an ambition to climb; the highest want to go higher, and the least have a desire to reach the round of the ladder of understanding where their teacher stands; there are none without a teacher, consequently there are no drones.

"You will then, readily see that all those numerous depositories of mechanics with their supplies, as well as the art studies, and immense laboratories where the mysteries of chemical law are studied; those huge telescopes and microscopes which show up the mysteries of minute and distant nature; and the school-houses where the people go from time to time to learn their lessons, provide the sole occupation.

"Unlike Aer, the objective point of all here is not to hoard a decaying wealth, but to store the understanding with a knowledge of all things that nature has so lavishly spread out before us, to better understand why we have a being, what makes that being, how to perfect it, and if possible to pierce the seeming unfathomable mystery into which each may go as they unfold to an understanding of their destiny.

"Brother, do you wish to remain? Do you aspire to the same grand heights of knowledge which all may here attain? Can you comprehend what I, your teacher, have so crudely in your crude language tried to impart to you of the possibilities of this sphere? If so, I will abide with you, and will conduct you to apartments suitable to your rank and unfoldment, and there commence my task in earnest, of teaching you in the rudiments of the knowledge which awaits you, and which I see your mental capacity fits you to receive; as I have told you already, each one has a task, and as soon as that task is finished another commences; and so on, as soon as one overtakes his teacher in understanding, then he becomes a teacher and continues to teach, and be taught, until he graduates to a higher sphere; to continue on in the grand evoluting process, how far, no one has yet been able to tell."

She stopped, and gazing into my face, with a most seraphic smile, I could not prevent the tears that came to my eyes; they were tears of joy. Her words were so plaintive, her look was so kind, and being the first that I had heard from any lips but my own for such a long time, I could hardly comprehend my situation. With a sigh I said:

"Can I ever return to earth? Can I ever see those dear friends I have left? Must my life here ever be a continuous task or growth? Can there be no rest? Are all here compelled to work and study with no cessation? No rest? No relaxation? Is there no recreation?"

She answered: "My brother, I will answer all your questions in the affirmative. What you ask is but natural. When we consider that you came from a sphere where everything is done by force; where pleasure is but a second consideration; where the recreation you speak of is so feebly understood; where everything has to be done for the direct support of the gross body; where the intellectual part of man is a second consideration; where nothing comes of its own volition, where the laws of the universe are little known; where the ignorance that prevails perverts what little knowledge the few possess; where the masses know little and care less about actual knowledge, we must be most considerate with all your demands; therefore I must answer you that you may have all, and everything that your poor tired aching soul may exact.

"On Aer, the capabilities of a child or an adult are not studied to ascertain its fitness for any occupation; one who is fitted for a tiller of the soil, is often singled out to be a so-called teacher in some church where the most sensitive natures congregate; such a one cannot enter into the less gross condition of those who assemble to listen to his teachings; there is no affinity between teacher and listeners; consequently his work becomes a failure, and your people are often shocked, because another thought-to-be good man has gone astray. One whose occupation should be the servant of some ruler of your people, is intrusted with the wealth of the community, he continues to hold the position for a lengthy time and all place implicit confidence in his honesty; he suddenly departs with the wealth of those who have trusted him, and the would-be teacher discourses upon the depravity of the race. The mechanic essays to be a lawyer, a lawyer tries to be a merchant, the merchant tries to assume the role of the philosopher, the philosopher would be a mechanic; the nautical man attempts to be an agriculturist, and all things become mixed. In this sphere, all things are arranged according to the law of eternal fitness; all beings assume the task they are qualified for; and as all things are connected in some way, so all beings have a position in some of the colleges and schools of music, art, sciences or mechanics as teachers or pupils; no one is required to fill a position he is not qualified for, and no one aspires to such a position; consequently each and every occupation assumed becomes a pleasure, is a recreation; and there is no desire for relaxation, as it is enough for one to enjoy the pleasure of having done that which his ambition has led him to; each chooses his own vocation; and if one should discover a mistake in his calling, then he can readily change; very few mistakes are made as it is as easy to understand one's qualifications, and choose one's position here, as it is for the carpenter on Aer to choose the piece of timber requisite to complete his building.

"So my brother, you can readily see that there is no force here, as you understand force; everything comes naturally, and all things work in harmony. Law, that which is the great governing force, is the fundamental principle by which the whole grand combination of all that is is kept in motion; and the understanding of law is the objective point to which all knowledge tends.

"Again, my brother, I would have you understand that all people choose their occupations, and are not bound to follow them, only so far as it is a pleasure, and what might seem of little use to you in the unfoldment of the law, might be a pleasure to the one so doing; therefore, none question the acts of another; and should one be restless and make frequent changes, that one is the only one to suffer, and even then, the only suffering there may be, will be the retarding of that one in the advancement he would otherwise make.

"You, my brother, must remember that there will be no restraint put upon you; you will be privileged to go where, when, how you may desire; every desire you may express, or that may arise within you will be gratified to the fullest extent.

"Now, can you see an affirmative answer to your questions? Here the law provides food, raiment and habitation. And while I can see that you would ask whence comes the compensation, I answer: By the contentment of all; the steady unfoldment, and the better understanding of the infinite law, by all.

"You have now been a resident of this sphere long enough to begin to realize, with what I have said, that you have been transported to a place superior to that where you were conceived, and while it is contrary to the teachings of Aer, yet it is a fact you will learn later, that you have come by a law that is immutable, and you are now outside those crude conditions that so cruelly controlled you while you were an inhabitant of that planet. Conditions there, my brother, are but a crude understanding of the same laws that are in force here; but because of the crude flesh with which all are surrounded there, the conditions are like the dross that covers the fine gold as it is taken from its bed in the more dense matter called earth.

"I will now try to answer more of your questions I see you would ask in regard to the wonders you have so recently beheld. Of that wonderful power, the easiness of sight, whereby your vision is not impeded, and all the wonders that have been exhibited to you. Let us go forth, and I can more readily answer your questions as they arise."

The Poor Pope Objected to the Presence of the Freethinkers in Rome.

To the Editor:—You will notice that his holiness the pope, is very much shocked at the idea of the Freethinkers daring to "disgrace" Rome with their convention. The fact is, Rome is one of the most appropriate places in the world for Galileo to appear. He and Garibaldi have a right to appear in that holy vicinage.

The pope invites "Catholics to attend a service of atonement." This is fanaticism unadulterated.

I suppose he will fumigate the whole city with holy incense and anoint the faithful with holy water and sacred ointment, ointment pure as the sacred oil of Moses. Exodus, chap. 30, verses 23, 25, 25; the penalty for counterfeiting this was death (verse 33).

If Freethinkers are to be ostracised by the edict of any one person, though he claim infallibility, it is time for Americans who believe in a republic to awaken from their lethargy and inquire where we are at. Is the Inquisition of Torquemada with his rack and thumbscrew only waiting for a favorable moment to exterminate heretics like Washington, Lincoln, Jefferson, McKinley and nearly all men of science who are not Catholics? Nearly all who are not Catholics are Freethinkers. Nearly all inventors are Freethinkers.

Thousands who do not belong to a Freethinker convention are just as much opposed to the "infallible" pope, as those who are styled Freethinkers.

Message of Pope Pius to Eucharistic Conference.

During the mass at St. Patrick's Cathedral in connection with the Eucharistic Conference, Monsignor Lavelle read the pope's message. Translated it was as follows:

"Since nothing can be dearer to our heart than the desire to see the honor and adoration due to the sacrament of divine love extended and increased more and more every day, we are ready to use our authority to promote whatever tends to foster this devotion. Wherefore we indeed have rejoiced to learn of the proposed Eucharist Congress, to be held the coming month in the city of New York, under the auspices of its illustrious archbishop, our venerable brother, John M. Farley, who has invoked our paternal interest in this important event. Most willingly and most gladly do we approve of this excellent means of eliciting a public manifestation of the living faith and profound piety which must needs be drawn down from our Lord's blessings in abundance.

"Furthermore, to all who are interested in this congress, as a pledge of divine favor we impart the apostolic benediction, and at the same time lay open to them the treasures of the church. Confiding, therefore, in the mercy of Almighty God and in the authority of His blessed apostles, Peter and Paul, we graciously in the Lord grant a plenary indulgence to all the faithful who take part in the congress, provided they go to confession and receive holy communion worthily, and on any day during the congress devoutly visit a church, praying before the blessed sacrament for the liberty and exaltation of the Catholic church and of the Apostolic See, the extirpation of heresies, the conversion of sinners and the concord of all Christian powers, to the faithful of the city, as well as the ecclesiastical province of New York, who may be prevented from attending the congress, but who will unite themselves with it in spirit and be interested in its proceedings, we concede a partial indulgence of seven years and seven quarantines, provided they visit a church on any day during the congress, praying before the blessed sacrament according to the intentions mentioned above; finally, a partial indulgence of 300 days may be gained by all who assist at the congress, as well as by all the faithful of the city and ecclesiastical province of New York who at least are contrite of heart, visit a church on any day of the congress, praying before the blessed sacrament according to the intentions already indicated.

"Anything to the contrary notwithstanding these presents having force for this year only."

In the above it would seem that after all the falsehoods spoken and published denying that the Catholic church deals in indulgences, now the pope announces a plenary indulgence to those who attend the congress at New York; held there by 1,000 priests and others. The Pope also grants a partial indulgence to others for attending church, etc. "These indulgences, plenary and partial are applicable to the souls in purgatory."

I hope some one will read up on "indulgences" a little and give us some history in your paper about Tetzel and Pope Leo X.

These present indulgences are for the "extirpation of heresies," etc. What a crime to teach poor deluded Christians that any man, though he claim to be infallible, can give any one permission to disobey God's laws with impunity. Just think—grant an indulgence to commit sins contrary to nature's laws! Are we back in the Dark Ages again, and reason dethroned?

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Editor-at-Large for the National Spiritualist Association.

Mr. Tuttle has been engaged to answer all attacks in the secular or religious press on Spiritualism. Send him clippings when an attack is made, giving date and name of paper. Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

Theodore J. Mayer.

Spiritualism in the past half century has been greatly blessed with leaders and workers generally, men and women who were specially adapted for the niche into which they seemed to fall as though born for it. From time immemorial has this been the case in any great crisis or emergency.

Without naming the staunch old workers, who are ever in the memory of all old Spiritualists, and those of more recent awakening who have taken the pains to read the literature, we have one who came to us and virtually gave us a home; a good home; a home that ought to be appreciated by even the common kicker in the ranks, equally with those who are naturally appreciative.

When our cause became thoroughly organized, and still a homeless wanderer upon the face of the earth, Theodore J. Mayer, of Washington, made the N. S. A. a proposition that if accepted was to give it a home and a splendid bank account; two of the most important things in the life of the institution. He opened his large heart and said: "Here, if you, my brothers and sisters, want a home for your beautiful cause, meet me half way, by raising for your treasury in cash a sum that will equal the value of the property and the home is yours."

Has anyone done better?

Has anyone done as well?

He had found the wealth of life to be in the motive, in the doing, not in dollars or worldly possessions, when he found the light of Spiritualism, and up out of his noble soul came that proposition which has proven of so much value to Spiritualism.

Would that we had more such philanthropists, such generous souls as Theodore J. Mayer, the present treasurer of the N. S. A.

There are men of greater wealth in our rank who are doing naught. Their Spiritualism has not reached the soul and loosened the bonds of selfishness yet.

Spiritualism should have the means to work more strongly along charitable lines. There is much to do for the homeless, broken-down mediums, and if we had a few more such substantial, able men, willing to do their duty, even according to their means, Spiritualism would soon be where it should be, where its teachings merit, in the front rank of beneficent institutions of this world.

Religion and Peace.

In his address of welcome to the International Peace Congress recently, Secretary Hay said he agreed with Tolstoi that religion was the remedy for war. In view of the world's history, it seems a strange assertion to make. Religion has been the cause of more wars than all other causes combined.

Of course the Secretary meant the Christian religion, and yet to-day the most aggressively warlike nations of the world are so-called Christian nations. These are the nations that burden themselves with armies of soldiery and expend millions upon millions of money to create naval monsters of destruction, largely as a matter of defense against each other.

Certainly, looking to the past and the present condition of affairs, and the warlike attitude of Christian nations, it does not seem sane and reasonable to claim that the Christian religion is the remedy for war.

With far greater reason could the claim be made for Buddhism as the religion of peace.

In view of the church's bloody history, it would almost, if not quite, seem that the proper and direct way to abolish war would be to abolish the Christian religion.

Alderman Carey's Dream.

Several persons were injured in the collapse of part of an apartment building in course of construction. The building is owned by Alderman Thomas Carey, and was about half-completed.

According to the reports in the daily press, Alderman Carey said that when he received word that the building collapsed, he was not surprised.

"No, I wan't a bit surprised," said the alderman. "Last Tuesday night I could not sleep because I dreamed that my building had fallen. I could plainly see the walls crumbling away and I could hear the cries of the injured. The dream was vivid and when I was told to-day that the structure had collapsed I was not surprised. My dream was so realistic that I felt as if I had been warned."

It would be interesting to know whether Alderman Carey had, previous to his dream, had any misgivings that the work of construction was not being properly done.

Also, whether other persons concerned in the work of construction were aware of faultiness therein, and feared evil results therefrom. If so, telepathic influence might have caused the dream.

Are Animals Immortal?

Among those who believe in the immortality of the soul of man, it has still been a mooted question whether animals below man are also immortal. Reputed spirit teachings are at variance on the subject, some denying and some affirming.

It would seem that an observant study of animals themselves, their mental attributes and manifestations, would have an important evidential bearing toward elucidating and deciding the matter, by inference from observed facts pertaining to animal life and its mental capacities.

It is an admitted fact that some animals manifest a degree of mentality that bears at least a strong cognate relation to the mental manifestations of the human being. The difference seems to be of degree, rather than of nature or quality; and even in this it may be said that some animals stand in a higher degree than some humans.

Viewing the subject from the ethical side, what humane person can doubt that many a poor abused horse is more worthy of immortality than the brutal human that cruelly maltreats and abuses it?

In this connection, the Chicago Daily Journal has this to say, on "The Interesting Problem of the Educated Horse":

"Herr von Osten, owner of Hans, the 'educated horse,' which has created such a sensation in Germany, says man is just beginning to learn how to train animals, and that 'in another generation they will be intelligent helps to him and no longer merely drudges.'

"One thing is certain, and that is that nobody has been able to find any trickery in Hans' astonishing performances. He appears to understand the German language as well as the average German child of 10. He can spell words of some length and can do simple sums in arithmetic. For example, when he was asked by a savant who was investigating his case—Herr von Osten not being present—how many twelfths must be added to seven twelfths to make the number 1, Hans stamped his hoof five times.

"It is possible, of course, that it is all a humbug, and that is the presumption. But thus far no cheating has been discovered, though the most rigid watch has been made and kept for it.

"Supposing that Hans' manifestations are genuine and that the lower animals generally can be educated, what imagination can picture the changes that will be made, not merely in our every-day life, but in the thought of mankind?

"The discovery that the intelligence of which man prides himself as being the sole possessor among the animals differs only in degree and not in kind from that of the horse and the dog would drive him to the conclusion that perhaps he is not so important in the scheme of the universe as he has always supposed. He would no longer be set apart among created things, but would have to content himself with being a little more highly developed in the plan of evolution than they.

"And if the animals are our inferiors only in degree, must they not then be granted souls and immortality, if we are?

Here is another charming bit of fact concerning animal nature as manifested by the bird family, and showing a mental link connecting birds and humans:

"Even in his boyhood days, William D. Scott, curator of the ornithological museum at Princeton college, exercised a peculiar power over birds. The most timid of songsters would come at his call and light on his shoulder. The evidences of this power increased as Scott grew older, and for over thirty years he has studied the members of the feathered tribe at close range, making the acquirement of knowledge of birds his life occupation. It was because he knew more about birds than any other man in America that he was called to Princeton some years ago to devote himself to the department of ornithology.

Now he is to have the dream of his life realized. C. C. Worthington, a millionaire, has furnished funds to build what might be called a laboratory for the study of live birds, and Mr. Scott is to have charge of it. It will be the only one of its kind in the world. Fifteen years ago he began to collect the live specimens that were attracted to him, and he now has over 500 of them to stock the laboratory with. Each one of the 500 is the personal friend of Mr. Scott. When liberated they return to him and light on his shoulder in the yard. He does not hold them captive by force. They do not care to leave him.

One of the peculiarities of his method is that in no case will be confine a bird against its will. His aim is to have the feathered creatures act in a perfectly natural way.

"The new laboratory will be fitted with big cages, giving the birds ample room to fly in, and there will be soundproof rooms for the study and classification of bird songs and bird language. The daily study of given specimens will include a record of growth, habits, health and temper of individuals, as well as variations of different species and heredity. One specially interesting section will be the department of talking birds and the facilities for scientific study here will surpass anything ever attempted.

Several acres of field and woodlands have been secured in Monroe county, Pennsylvania, and temporary buildings have been erected for laboratory use. Changes and additions will be made to suit the requirements. The millionaire friend of the new enterprise has promised to pay all the bills, and no expense will be spared in securing live birds from all parts of the world as Mr. Scott may desire. He will assisted in his researches by students from Princeton, and naturalists of international repute have signified their intention to devote part of their time to the researches of the laboratory."

It is an established fact that man possesses the power to hypnotize animals; also that animals can hypnotize man. This has been proved by many well attested instances.

Is there not in this fact an indication of mental relationship between man and animal, that is suggestive of an extension far beyond what is ordinarily attached to its meaning.

Here, also, as stated by the Journal: "The idea opens up a vast field of speculation."

The Preachers' Dilemma.

Preachers, it must be admitted, have a hard time in these modern days of progress and free thought, to minister acceptably to their congregations. If their sermons adhere closely to the straight and narrow creeds of orthodoxy, they are sure to give offense to the progressive minds of their audience, those who, while retaining a lingering love for the old church associations, and for that reason, maintain an outward attitude of faith in the creeds, which they do not in their hearts believe, because they have mentally grown away therefrom and cannot return.

On the other hand, if the preacher gives voice to modern, up-to-date thought, he will be adjudged a heretic by the non-progressive mossback orthodox who cling to their creed as written and expounded by the church fathers.

What the Chicago Chronicle says on the subject is very interesting, not only for what it says, but as an index of the trend of thought and freedom of expression of the modern daily press. Says the Chronicle:

Preaching, like everything else, takes a fresh start in October. Many pastors will make their first appearance in their own pulpits today since they went away for their vacations, and all of them will feel on the first Sunday in October that they are face to face with the labors and responsibilities of another year's preaching. What shall it be?

The difficult problems which confront a thoughtful preacher at the present day are innumerable, but there is one that overshadows all the rest, and that is, what shall be his attitude toward the changed and changing religious thought of the age? Shall he ignore it or shall he compromise with it or shall he antagonize it?

How great the revolution in religious thought has been will be realized if we consider the change that a single cardinal doctrine has undergone. Let us glance at the old-fashioned doctrine of the punishment of the wicked. The following almost incredible extract is from a sermon of Jonathan Edwards:

"The world will probably be converted into a great lake or liquid globe of fire in which the wicked shall be overwhelmed, which shall always be in a tempest, in which they shall be tossed to and fro, having no rest day nor night, vast waves or billows of fire continually rolling over their heads, of which they shall ever be full of a quick sense within and without; their heads, their eyes, their tongues, their hands, their feet, their loins and their vitals shall forever be full of a glowing fire, enough to melt the very rocks and elements. Also they shall be full of the most quick and lively sense to feel the torments, not for ten millions of ages, but forever and ever without any end at all."

In like manner Jeremy Taylor, preaching on the same subject, says:

"God's heavy hand shall press the smart and the sorrow, the guilt and punishment, out from all our sins, and pour them into one chalice and mingle them with an infinite wrath, and make the wicked drink off all the vengeance and force it down their unwilling throats with the violence of devils and accursed spirits. The torment comprises as many torments as the body of man hath joints, sinews and arteries, being caused by that real and penetrating fire of which this temporal fire is but a painted fire."

These frightful teachings, it is needless to say, have now been gradually modified, and the same may be said of most of the fundamental doctrines of the Christian religion, such as the inspiration of the scriptures, the fall of man, the atonement and the second advent. Moreover, the greater part of this revolution of Christian doctrine has taken place in the last ton of fifteen years.

Every modern minded preacher must experience great anxiety and unhappiness in view of the present unsettled condition of the public mind in reference to these topics. He can not shut his eyes to the fact that there has been a great change and he is conscious that he himself has undergone a change. He honestly believes that, in spite of these changes of form in these doctrines, the essence remains and the foundations of faith are unmoved and immovable—and still he is in trouble.

One reason is that religious speculation is fatal to devotion. Doubt and piety are the poles asunder. The effect of unsettled views on the prosperity of the church is almost as great as that of downright infidelity. Another reason is that if the preacher shows in his sermons that his mind is running in the same channel as the public mind the people infer that he is thinking more of that sort of thing than he is saying, and the effect is not only to chill the ardor but to undermine the faith of his flock. On the other hand—and this is a third reason for trouble—if he ignores the change or combats it many of the people of his congregation get weary of him and drop out, even if they do not also doubt his sincerity.

It would be a wise man, in deed, who would be able to give wholesome and helpful advice in such a case. There is only one thing that can be said with perfect confidence, and that is of a general character—the preacher ought at all events to be honest with himself and his people. He can outride every storm until he becomes a hypocrite, but hypocrisy will before many moons make him an outcast.

There would be immense congregations in all the churches to-day if it were known beyond all peradventure that every preacher would say in his sermon exactly what in his heart of hearts he believed.

Credit to Whom Credit Is Due.

We would like to ask if Dr. Greer, our veteran Chicago Spiritualist, did not misplace his gratitude to the Chicago American for its publication of matter about Meyers' paraphernalia depot? That paper, always keen on the scent for a sensation, made use of Rev. Dr. Funk's article in the Homiletic Review and amplified the same. But Dr. Funk himself was in no wise an astonishment to the readers of The Progressive Thinker, for six months before appearance of his loudly trumpeted discovery, the last named paper had called attention to the very same house. In its issue of April 2, was published the following mention over the signature of President Warne, of the Illinois State Spiritualist Association:

"Chicago Spiritualists are just now having their attention called to a new or else a re-located 'supply house' whose quite tasty card reads: 'Radium, Mediums' Paraphernalia—Crowns, Belts, Hands, Heads, Veils and Full-size Figures all illuminated with the new Radium light. Will appear, gradually float about room and disappear. All work confidential.' Here is an opportunity to realize the melancholy aspirations of childhood; everyone can now become an angel and with the angels stand, a crown upon his forehead and a harp within his hand. At the same time he may become an angel to somebody else. No wings, but only a pocket-book required."

Again, under date of June 25, the editor of The Progressive Thinker prefaced an article by Prof. Wm. Lockwood with the exact wording of the above card in black-faced type, to which he added:

"The above is the card of a business man in Chicago engaged in selling paraphernalia to tricksters, whereby they are enabled to deceive the gullible public, and produce 'phenomena' excelling that of honest mediums. It adds impressiveness to Prof. Lockwood's article. The name and number of the card are omitted."

Let us give credit to whom credit is due. The Progressive Thinker was the forerunner of Dr. Funk and the daily press in bringing this very iniquity to light. Spiritualists are not all fools, cowards or laggards. Let the work of the able New York Clergyman open our eyes to the fact that trickery will inevitably be unmasked—murder will out—time avenges every deception. Be honest from policy if you cannot from principle. A chain is only as strong as its weakest link. Why is not Dr. Funk an ideal Spiritualist, proving all things, but holding fast only to the genuine?

A BATTLE ROYAL.

The Open Court, which attracted world-wide attention and did a vast amount of good, will be followed by A BATTLE ROYAL, commencing sometime in November. J. S. Loveland, a master mind on the Pacific coast, attacks Dr. J. M. Peebles' late book, "Obsession, Demonism of the Ages," and attempts to annihilate this work by the learned Doctor. Others will write pro and con on the subject, making A BATTLE ROYAL, that every Spiritualist should witness. Price of the book $1; postage, 19 cents.

Every Spiritualist in the land should read A BATTLE ROYAL. Call your neighbor's attention to the paper, and induce him to subscribe.

To Those Attending the Convention, or the World's Fair.

To the Editor:—Permit me through the columns of your valuable paper to offer to the delegates and visitors who expect to attend the forthcoming convention in St. Louis, a little advice regarding accommodations.

During the World's Fair all the hotels are overcrowded and we found it impossible to arrange for general headquarters at terms that would come within the reach of most of our friends. There is, however, abundance of accommodations in rooming and private houses for all who may desire to come at reasonable rates. Many of our own people who do not make a business of renting rooms have thrown open their spare rooms for visitors. The rates are from 75 cents to $1 per day per person, where two persons share a room. A single room can be had from $1 to $2 per day. Meals can be had at the many restaurants at prices from 25 cents up; in addition to which the ladies of our society are arranging to furnish meals at the Temple for those who desire to stay. I believe our delegates will be able to attend convention this year as cheaply as heretofore, and will be quite as comfortable. Friends, make up your mind to come to the convention, and as a side attraction we offer you the greatest exposition the world has ever seen. Friends desiring accommodations can write me. Please state if you want a single room or will share. Enclose stamp for reply.

The Night She Died.

In submitting this experience of her own life, the author, a valued contributor to these columns, and well known to the readers of The Times, wrote as follows: "I am dubious about offering this, even as my own enlightening and comforting experience, and yet, because we know so little, each real and attested bit of knowledge so hardly won may do something for other people. Give it no signature if you use it, and if you return it, at least remember that it came from one who feels like Lazarus—freed forever from the fear of death."—Editor of The Sunday School Times.

The doctors and nurses stood about the bed. The matter had passed beyond their control and they were waiting. She, too, was waiting, consciously, indifferently, in some shadowy region between the land of struggle, of acute sensibility, of the torture called Life, and that other region which she named to herself as Death, and concerning which she felt little interest.

Vaguely aware that before the mighty Presence there was no such dread as had lain always beneath the gladness of life, she waited; and then, because she was weary, she slipped away, and in the darkness a grateful wind blew in the face turned without fear to the night. The tormented body lay quiet on the bed. She was not conscious of leaving it; she knew only that it was quiet, and that it had been left. Great fields of black broken ice lay beneath, as the soul, the spirit, the subliminal self, this freed being—call it what you will—moved slowly on in utter content, in absolute loneliness, unhurried, unlighted, unafraid, across the wind swept land of the Outer Dark. There was no body, no desire for one, no need of one, but there was a recognition that this was not a loss, but a gain, in that the freed soul, knowing itself with swift, sure knowledge to be ever and unchangeably itself and no other, rejoiced in its emancipation.

On and on through the wide, wind-filled silence and the clear, unobscuring darkness, toward the lights that lay at the black horizon line; on and on over the broken ice, through the unpeopled spaces of the Land Between. At last, first faintly borne and then more clear, came a voice on the wind—a voice unvoiced; and the message was terribly, bitterly human, and smote the hearing with a pang of forgotten pain: "Two, motherless, two motherless."

And for human love and longing, love stronger than death, longing keen as life, the soul, once so content, took up anew the burden, consciously, reluctantly, and turned with a sense of failure and of defeat back over the dark way it had come, to the light which in some inner fashion it knew to be the light of earthly love and home.

Everything was as it had been. The soul stood pitiful, aloof, at the foot of the bed, and watched the body as it lay still as the bodies, of the veritable dead. To this separate vision the most trivial details were clear. The eyes of the body were closed, but the soul saw all that went forward—saw futile effort and useless remedy, saw the bowed back of one who sat with his head buried in his hands, saw from the foot of the bed, as the body, even with senses keen and eyes wide and conscious, could not have seen.

The soul moved forward, and was enshrouded in red mists of pain, caught in the agony of renewed struggle, and after endless striving, like the fighting upward of those who drown, once more the eyes of the body unclosed, the soul looked forth, and adjusted its strength anew to the burden of living.

And out of it all—what? An unshakeable belief in the immortality of the soul; a joyous realization of the naturalness of death—death now known to be life from its outer side; a conviction of the permanence of personality,—"I shall know, even as also I am known"; a freedom forever from an inner haunting dread, the dread of those "who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage."

Spiritualism and Spirit Return.

There should be some other word besides "Spiritualism," to embrace the wonderful spirit phenomena that are constantly coming in one steady stream from the realms immortal. The above is an example. The wonderful manifestations that occur outside of Spiritualism, and in no wise connected with it, furnish irrefutable evidence that the soul lives after the death of the body.

Truth belongs to the world, and no cult, sect, creed, club or society is its exclusive owner. Spirit return in the Wesley family, in the Catholic church, among the Mormons, the Indians, etc., has been equally as suggestive and impressive as that which occurred at Hydesville, N. Y., in 1848.

Spirit return is a world-wide truth, and will come to all who are prepared to receive it.

You cannot contract or enlarge the truth. Words can not destroy it, nor increase its dimensions.

Simple spirit return is in all respects the EXACT TRUTH. What the spirits say may be true or it may be false, wise or foolish; their advice may lead to the highest advancement or to ruin; their opinions may be harmonizing or may lead to endless disputations, and the foundation of different societies with codes of belief diametrically opposite. But the ONE TRUTH, that spirits can and do return, is the common property of all, and about which there is no conflict. The conflict commences when the conflicting spirit teachings, etc., resulting from spirit return, are presented to the world, and on which a society is founded, and designated Spiritualism; hence that which is designated Spiritualism is kaleidoscopic in its character—harmonizing, conflicting, widely divergent, wise or foolish; but the one glorious truth, SPIRIT RETURN, remains intact, without a single blemish, and is the common heritage of all.

Faith and Doubt.

Faith and doubt are both necessary states of mind, and both are essential to progress. Both may be abused. Neither separate from the other would insure progress. Doubt leads to inquiry, inquiry to conviction and knowledge. A man who never doubts never learns anything beyond mere traditional belief. A man who has no faith has no positiveness, no force, no character and no success in life; but faith in excess becomes credulity and superstition and leads to all kinds of extravagances in conduct as well as in creed. Doubt, which has its proper place, in excess becomes unreasoning and unreasonable incredulity, and as such it is fatal to the acceptance of new thought and the assimilation of new views and methods.

To condemn men for their faith or their doubts is unwise. These conditions of mind depend very largely upon temperament, education and environment. A multitude of circumstances combine to form opinions. Beliefs are not formed by mere volition. One cannot believe or disbelieve as he chooses. There are thousands of things which one would like to believe but in the absence of proof cannot. There are a thousand things which one would be glad to disbelieve, but which by the force of events have to be recognized as true. Belief being a product of inherited mental conditions and of circumstances which cannot be controlled or determined by the individual, is therefore involuntary and cannot be a matter of moral merit or demerit. It is, of course, agreeable to come in contact with those whose views are broad, whose spirit is generous, and whose attitude is courteous, but such persons are so by reason of their natures, and of the individual and social environment in which they live and move. The narrow man is so, not by his own choice, but by reason of circumstances beyond his control. Therefore nothing can be more irrational than to attach blame or censure to a man's opinions, be they right or wrong.

Many Spiritualists are in the habit of condemning investigators of Spiritualism or those who have not investigated it at all, because of their disbelief, but there is no good reason for this. There is no good reason why Spiritualists should be especially anxious for sudden conversions to their faith. Every great truth will make its way gradually as minds become prepared to receive it. If it is difficult to understand, it will be accepted, first by the few, and then it will percolate down through the various intellectual strata until it reaches the masses in such form and in connection with such other conceptions as they are able to grasp. The attitude of some of our Spiritualist friends toward skeptics, often those who are honestly investigating the phenomena and are as yet unconvinced and indisposed to make any statement of their position, is very much like the attitude of the theologians towards honest skeptics who are not prepared to believe in the dogmas taught from the pulpits or to accept the Bible as a divinely inspired production. Invite people to investigate the claims of Spiritualism but do not condemn them because they are unable to accept its truths. If, while accepting some, they are not able to adopt all the ideas that are current among the mass of Spiritualists, they may be no less worthy, morally, and indeed, they may be very much nearer the truth, for much that is taught now under the name of Spiritualism has but a tentative value and is useful only as a stepping stone to higher and broader views. In other words, current ideas respecting Spiritualism are no more finalities than current conceptions respecting other subjects of investigation and belief.

"Your course in regard to the Blue Book fake mediumship, and the Open Court cannot be endorsed too highly. Let the good work go on. You are all right. Spiritualism, natural, pure and undefiled will come out of the fire of criticism stronger and more glorious than ever."

WORTH REMEMBERING.

A Statement That Should Receive the Cordial Endorsement of Every Spiritualist.

Rev. Minot J. Savage says, in "Life Beyond Death:" "One of the worst enemies of Spiritualism is the dishonest practitioner, the 'fake medium,' or the people who cover them up through any personal favor, or as they mistakenly think, for the honor of the cause and to save it from disgrace. If there is any man on the face of this earth meaner, more utterly contemptible than any other man, it is he who will take money coined from the broken hearts, from the hopeless tears of those who long to know whether or no their dead are alive; and take it, not even for what they believe to be a genuine message from the other side, but simply for the sake of money. When a person will do that, I do not believe there is anything on the face of the wide earth too mean for him to do."

DREAMS AND PROPHECIES. BY GEO. B. FERRIS.

"In a dream, in a vision of the night, when deep sleep falleth upon men; in slumberings upon the bed; then God openeth the ears of men and sealeth their instruction."—Job xxxiii:15.

"If there be guardian spirits, they may not be inactively about us in sleep; and many strange hints, instigations, and discourses, which are so amazing unto us, may arise from such foundations."—Sir Thomas Browne.

To the thoughtful Spiritualist and critical investigator into the subject of psychic phenomena, the study of dreams and premonitions offers a profound, as well as intensely interesting and instructive field of research. It is, moreover, a subject that has not received its proper share of attention; and in view of its unusual importance from a practical standpoint it seems strange that there are so many Spiritualists who, if not entirely ignoring the matter, give it, at most, but slight attention.

If you have been almost persuaded to believe that death is a calamity that leaves the spirit wandering in "fog-land," I know of nothing better calculated to bring you to a knowledge that

"Where'er we go, in weal or woe, whatever fate befall,
In sunny glade or forest shade, a heaven is over all,"

than an earnest study of this question. If the "hue and cry of fraud" has caused you to doubt the reality of spiritual phenomena, a careful consideration of this subject is certain to materially strengthen your wavering faith. And if the manifold difficulties in the way of perfect communication with the spheres of life invisible cause you to become discouraged at times, a thorough investigation of this matter cannot help but induce a feeling of respect, amounting almost to reverence, for the perfection of mind that enables man discarnate to predict with accuracy the occurrence of events, days, months and even years before, by our own reasoning powers, we would be able to gauge with any degree of certainly or even to roughly outline the trend of events.

Now, ere I proceed, just a word in regard to another matter that had perhaps best be explained. I am fully aware that there are many dreams—perhaps the greater number—to which absolutely no importance can be attached. Mince pie and kindred delicacies are unquestionably the foundation upon which are builded many terrifying and fantastic dreams, and I wish to give them due credit for all the deserved punishment they visit upon those who do not heed the admonotion that "we eat to live; not live to eat." To be candid, I must say that if this cause were removed, a great many people who are known as inveterate dreamers would enjoy peaceful, dreamless slumber.

And then in regard to premonitions, I have no doubt that a goodly percentage can also be traced to this same cause. Not every morbid fear is a premonition of impending danger, any more than every dream is an evidence of spirit action. There are dreams that are merely dreams and nothing more, and there are also premonitions that have no significance except as proof that the condition of a person's health is not as good as it should be.

But we will now pass on to the consideration of dreams and warnings that have an important meaning, after admonishing you to be more careful what you eat, and as a result have fewer unimportant dreams and more visions of a kind that have a purpose and a value; to live right to think right, and to have fewer morbid and meaningless fears, the result of a disordered imagination, and more real premonitions and helpful advice from your spirit friends.

It will no doubt be noticed that I seem to take it for granted that our spirit friends are responsible for those dreams and previsions which cannot be logically attributed to a disordered imagination. Yes, I do, except in certain instances where telepathy plays an important part, and I think I have valid reasons for such a belief.

No hypothesis yet advanced, except the Spiritualistic explanation, can in a rational manner account for the various phenomena of this nature that have been observed and recorded. Other hypotheses may be made to account for some of the phenomena observed, but they will all be found inadequate in other instances. Sub-conscious self and similar high-flown and transcendental terms may be so juggled as to explain away some of the facts observed, but there is not one vestige of proof, nor any logical reason for assuming that these mystical and undefined attributes of incarnate man—attributes the powers and limitations of which have never been determined, have one tithe the influence that is credited to them by a certain class of theorists and pseudo-scientists.

We have proof—absolute proof—that discarnate spirits can and do return to warn us of impending danger, but there is not on iota of proof that we are possessed of any mysterious faculties that can, without conscious effort on our part, probe into the distant future and take cognizance of what is to befall us, when no matter how acute our minds may be, we would be unable to perceive these happenings by our usual mode of calculation. We doubtless have powers and possibilities that are beyond our comprehension, but there is a limit to their field of action and I opine that it lies quite a distance this side of some of the phenomena of this description that have been recorded.

When we observe a certain phenomenon and seek its cause, that explanation which best fits all the facts is the one that is most likely to be the correct one. There are some visions and premonitions that telepathy can account for, there are others that other theories can account for, but after eliminating all doubtful instances there remains a vast array of cases that none of these hypotheses can satisfactorily account for. It is entirely likely that some of the facts observed may be the result of one cause and some of another, but the influence of disembodied spirits accounts most satisfactorily for the greatest number of facts of this description, and therefore I think we are justified in attributing to spirit power the majority of prophetic dreams and premonitions. It was Archbishop Whateley who allowed, in his "Elements of Logic," that "Where we cannot answer all objections, we are bound in reason and in candor, to adopt the hypothesis which labors under the least."

Telepathy can only account for those cases where the facts portrayed are already known to some other individual. Thus premonitions of death at or near the time of transition can be explained by this hypothesis, and a great many such instances have been recorded. It is thus possible for a person to be made aware of events that are transpiring in another part of the world long before the facts could be transmitted by the usual means of communication. But, strictly speaking, these are not prophecies, and although this particular phase of the subject offers an interesting and important field of study, this essay is intended mainly to draw attention to the work of spirit intelligences in this connection, and we have neither the space nor the inclination, in this article, at least, to elaborate upon anything except the influence of discarnate spirits.

And now, in this connection, as showing the marvelous foresight of our spirit guardians, let me quote a short article published in the daily papers some time ago. It is but one of thousands that have been recorded, many of which are more wonderful than this, and for everyone that finds its way into print there are hundreds of others just as important that never become known to the world at large:

"Laporte, Sept. 9.—Mrs. B. S. Bywater of this city, has in her possession a letter written by her sister, Mrs. George Chase of Galien, Mich., in which the latter confided her belief and fear as the result of a dream which forecast a tragedy. The day following the receipt of the letter by Mrs. Bywater, a tragedy was enacted at Galien, Mrs. Chase and another sister being struck by a Michigan Central train and instantly killed. The dream revealed that she was to meet the fate which befell her."

It will be noticed that the above mentioned dream was not fulfilled until the day following the receipt of the letter by Mrs. Bywater. We may also safely assume that another twenty-four hours, at least, elapsed between the time of the dream and the receipt of the letter by Mrs. Bywater. It is thus evident that the spirit, or spirits, who impressed this dream were able to perceive the danger forty-eight hours or more before it was due. Consider for a moment the depth of reasoning that was necessary to presage an accident of this description so far in advance of its occurrence. First there was the train to be taken into consideration. What time was it due to arrive at the crossing? That could easily be determined. But would it be on time to the second? This is more difficult; in fact, it would be well-nigh impossible for a mortal observer to determine this, and the problem becomes more complex when we consider that a difference of ten or fifteen seconds and probably less in the passing of the train would have prevented the accident. But great as was this difficulty, it sinks into insignificance compared with some of the other problems to be solved.

For instance, what time would Mrs. Chase arrive at the crossing? Doubtless at the time of her dream she had this fatal trip in mind. It is also possible that she knew what hour she intended to start. But when we come to consider that a difference of not more than one minute of starting would have eliminated all danger, the problem becomes still more complex. Then again the train runs on schedule, but when a person starts out on foot or travels in an ordinary vehicle there are many things that make it difficult to determine the precise moment they will arrive at any given point. And even if it could be determined that they would arrive at the crossing the same instant the train was due there would ordinarily be no cause for alarm. It is something that happens thousands of times every day. And then when we reflect that the danger was foreseen and the warning given two days previously the wisdom of the unseen guides becomes apparent. And in addition to this, the question naturally arises as to how long the guides were aware of the danger before they were able to give the warning.

Death a change that leaves the liberated spirit an inane wanderer in Charles Dawbarn's "fog-land"? Indeed! Would that there were a few mortals as "befogged" as the spirits who gave this warning. The world has great need for them.

The more we study this question the more the conviction is forced upon our mind that the spirits who give these warnings must be aware of our every thought. They must also be aware of what our conduct will be in any given emergency; and further, they must be able to foresee what difficulties and what experiences of every description we will encounter, long before we are due to meet them. I do not hold to a belief in predestination, but from a consideration of this subject we are forced to the conclusion that our usual course of action must be very clearly mapped out long, long before we ourselves are aware of what we shall encounter and what we will do; otherwise it would be impossible for these predictions to be made. Our conduct, past, present and future, must be as plain as an open book to these spirits.

From "The Arcana of Spiritualism" I quote the following prophecy, since it differs somewhat from the instance above mentioned, and offers some problems of a slightly different nature for solution:

"A. F. McNeal, a well-known citizen of Rawson, Ohio, died on the 26th of November last, after a short illness, and now comes a strange story connected with his death which is fully authenticated. On the night of January 28th last, he dreamed that he had died and gone to heaven. In the dream the date of his death, November 26, was firmly fixed upon his mind. In the golden city of his dreams, Mr. McNeal met Mahlen Provenmire, of Ada, an old friend, and asked him when he had died and left the earth. Provenmire replied that he died a week before. There were other striking circumstances in the dream equally as strange, which so impressed Mr. McNeal that the next morning when he awoke in his usual good health, he reduced the details to writing, and laid the manuscript away in his desk. His wife found and read it with fear and trembling, but said nothing, although it made an impression upon her mind which she could not efface. On the 26th of November last, Mr. McNeal died exactly as indicated in the dream, while Provenmire passed to the land of the unknown just a week before. Mrs. McNeal is in possession of the manuscript containing the substance of her husband's dream, as above recited, dated January 29, the morning after the vision came to him."

In this instance we find that the vision was given nearly ten months before Mr. McNeal's death, and yet the exact date of his demise was correctly given. It must also be remembered that Mr. McNeal appeared to be in perfect health at the time he received the vision. And it was not alone Mr. McNeal's death that was prophesied, but his friend Provenmire's as well. The spirits that made this prediction must necessarily have been informed regarding the exact physical condition of both individuals. The above report states that Mr. McNeal died after a sudden illness, but there were evidently symptoms which an observing spirit could discern ten months previous to their fatal termination. But is there one person on earth who would be able, unaided by superior beings, to determine the exact date of a person's death from natural causes nearly a year previous to its occurrence? The more we consider this problem the more profound becomes our admiration for the unseen intelligences with minds capable of solving problems so vast as this.

Of the methods by which these predictions can be made and the laws governing them, I think Hudson Tuttle is well qualified to speak and the following is from his pen:

"There is a fixed belief that spiritual beings are able to predict the future; that the coming time is as open to their gaze as the past. There yet lingers the superstitious feeling which once attached to the prophet, as the mouthpiece and leader of the gods. With the repudiation of the pretenses of these prophets, prophecy itself, which once occupied an important place in the government of mankind, became ignored. The prediction of events was claimed to be impossible, because law ruled, and the shaping of history did not depend on the will of an arbitrary ruler or God. If we consider for a moment, we shall see that for the very reason that law rules, fixed and unswerving, prophecy is possible. Because of the chain of causes and effects, the knowledge of causes gives the power to predict or foreknow the effects. Whereas if creation was ruled by an arbitrary being, changeable in purpose and swayed by human interposition, even his own declarations would not be of certain fulfillment. He might change, repent, recede, or do the very reverse he promised. But when the causes are known, and the laws, which are the channels along which such causes run to their effects, then these effects may be predicted. Thus we may say confidently that if we touch a lighted match to the wick of a lamp there will be a flame. It is a prophecy always fulfilled. We know the law of gravitation, and by it that if a person is suspended he will fall. We prophesy this with certainty. These illustrations are so simple it will probably be said: 'Why this is not prophecy; it is knowledge.' If we take more complicated affairs where a great number of causes converge to one effect, we find a wider and more comprehensive knowledge necessary, but if we possess it we are as certain of the result.

"On predicting events in the future of the nation or the race, not to say the individual, such an infinite number of causes and effects must be known, that to an ordinary mind the problem becomes too intricate to be comprehensible." Yet to the mind able to grasp these, the prophecy may be as easy as that of the lighting of a lamp above alluded to."

The above offers a most satisfactory explanation of how spirits acquire their knowledge of future events, but in the following paragraph I think Mr. Tuttle has come to a conclusion which is, to a certain extent, at least, erroneous and unwarranted. He says:

"It is noticeable that premonitions of events, whether received waking or by dreams, have little to do with changing the order of events, which seem unalterably fixed. A person, for instance, dreams of being drowned, or seeing another, at a certain time and in a certain manner, and no attempt to avoid the danger avails."

At first glance this no doubt appears to be the case, but I am confident that a more careful consideration of the matter will prove that premonitions very often do prevent disaster, and that this inability to change the order of events is more apparent than real. For instance, if a premonition succeeds in averting disaster it is seldom that we hear anything in regard to it, for the reason that when the danger has been avoided there seldom remains any proof that the warning was valid, while if it fails, and the recipient has told, or lives to tell of it afterward, it is often made public. Take as an example, the railroad accident above cited, if Mrs. Chase had postponed her trip or exercised more caution the accident would have been avoided, and there would have been no evidence to show that there was any danger of its occurrence, with the result that her fears would have been considered groundless. The number of accidents avoided in this manner would be difficult to determine, but it is likely the greater share of such warnings are more or less successful, in which case, except in rare instances where the danger is afterwards apparent, the premonition is credited to a morbid imagination.

Yet we must admit that at times the guiding spirit can impress with a sense of danger and yet be unable to control events so as to avoid it. This was apparent in the case of Mrs. Chase above quoted. She could be warned, but she could not be influenced to postpone her trip. And the difficulty that a spirit finds in altering the plans of mortals is further illustrated by the fact that the train was not delayed slightly in order to allow them to pass unharmed. A few seconds delay on the part of some passenger in boarding the train would very likely have prevented the tragedy, and shall we say that the spirits who presaged the accident did not try to prevent it in this manner? Or, perhaps they also knew that it would be impossible to influence any of the passengers or trainmen. At any rate, it is probable that the utmost was done to prevent the accident, and that only through this dream was there any chance to succeed. And in cases of failure like this it is not upon the spirit world that we should place the blame, but upon the mortals who either do not understand or do not heed the warnings when they receive them.

It is scarcely necessary to say that dreams and premonitions are not always to be depended on. Spirits are not always correct. It must be expected that they will sometimes make mistakes, for nothing short of a god would be infallible in predicting events so far in the future. But there are other causes for erroneous impressions beside the mistakes of the invisible operator. This is especially true of those received in dreams, for a slight disturbance of the sleeper may destroy the accuracy of the dream. This was evidently known as far back as Plato's time, for this philosopher seems to intimate that all dreams might be trusted if people would only bring their bodies into such a condition before going to sleep as to leave nothing that might occasion error or perturbation in their dreams.

In illustration of the effect of outward sensations, Tuttle quotes the case of a French physiologist who had many experiments made on himself while asleep. An attendant tickled his lips with a feather and he dreamed that a horrible mask of pitch was applied to his face. "Eau de Cologne" applied to his nose sent him to dream of a perfumer's shop in the streets of Cairo. Any number of similar instances might be adduced if necessary, and the lesson they convey is that we should not be too hasty in crediting our dreams to spirit impression. To ignore these facts may result in great harm, and as the following instance, quoted from an old and trustworthy volume, entitled "Aubrey's Miscellanies," would seem to show, may sometimes result in a fatal termination:

"Mrs C—, of S—, in the county of S—, had a beloved daughter, who had been a long time ill and received no benefit from her physicians. She dreamed that a friend of hers, deceased, told her that if she gave her daughter a drench of yew pounded she would recover. She gave her the drench, and it killed her. Whereupon she grew almost distracted; her chambermaid, to compliment her, and mitigate her grief, said, surely that could not kill her; she would adventure to take the same herself. She did so, and died also. This was about the year 1670 or 1671. I know the family."

This and similar cases could also be attributed to the influence of evil spirits, as a perusal of Dr. Peebles' book on "Spirit Obesssions" will readily show. Owen also mentions the case of an Italian merchant traveling between Rome and Sienna, who dreamed that he was murdered on the road. His host, to whom he told his dream, advised him to pray and confess. He did so, and was afterward assassinated on the way by the very priest to whom, in confession, he had communicated the knowledge of his wealth and his apprehensions. This dream was probably caused by a malicious spirit having some grudge against the merchant. He saw that through this dream he could get his revenge. He made the attempt and was successful. The merchant walked directly into the trap laid for him.

Another peculiarity often noticed in connection with prophetic dreams is that very often they are given in the form of symbols, the event prophesied not being given literally as it is due to occur. "This is because," as another writer upon this topic has said, "persons usually have signs, well determined in their own minds, by which they recognize the coming of events. Thus one believes that if he dreams of fire, he is sure to have a quarrel, or if dark or turbulent waters, there is sickness in store. If, it is said, a spirit can impress these signs, why not impress the plain truth? We say, because the sign is more easily impressed. If the spirits attempted to impress the details of sickness or disputation, they would be obliged to call into activity the organs of fear, combativeness, etc., which might at once destroy the passiveness of the person, and abruptly terminate the communication. By using a sign that the sleeper, during sleep, does not recognize as significant this is avoided. But they do not employ signs except in those cases where from experience they have found them necessary. The passivity of individuals varies; and often the unvarnished facts can be presented even when revolting, without destroying the essential conditions, or not until presented, when the sleeper generally passes at once into wakefulness."

There is an imperceptible gradation between clairvoyance and other generally accepted means of communication with the spirit world, and premonitions and a certain class of dreams. Premonitions are merely spirit impressions of unusual activity, and a condition of complete control lies just one step beyond. Dreams bear an intimate relation to clairvoyance; and during the interval in which the vision is being transmitted the recipient must be in a state bordering very closely on the trance. It will also be observed that communications which are sometimes given through mediums are at other times given through dreams and presentiments.

And the ability to receive premonitions and prophetic dreams is, like all other methods of spirit communication, capable of cultivation. To some the faculty is probably a natural gift, gained without effort; to others it may only come after patient and persistent effort; while others again may be so constituted that they seldom, if ever, have warnings either awake or asleep, and are unable to cultivate this gift. Some people are so constituted that ordinarily they are not susceptible to spirit impression or control. It is unusually difficult for a spirit to transmit impressions to their minds, and except in times of great danger, or when for some reason or other they are more sensitive than usual, they do not attempt it.

And then there is another class of people who have no phase of mediumship whatever, not because they cannot develop any phase, but simply because they do not try. And so there are many who could receive visions and presentiments and are not aware of the fact. You may have dreams, but if you make no effort to remember them they may pass from your memory when you awake. The erudite Robert Dale Owen, in his widely read volume, "Footfalls on the Boundary of Another World," relates the following personal experience in confirmation of this statement:

" * * * My attention having been attracted to the subject, so that I acquired the habit of taking special note of my sensations at the moment of awakening, I became aware, after repeated observations, that in every instance I was conscious of having dreamed. Yet, with very few exceptions, the memory of my sleeping thought was so vague and fugitive, that even after ten, or perhaps five, seconds it had faded away, and that so completely that I found it quite impossible to recall or repeat my dream. After that period I remembered nothing, except that I had been conscious of having dreamed; and, to obtain in every instance the certainty even of this, I had to awake with the intention of making the observation."

From the above it will be seen that the more attention you pay to your dreams, the more interest you manifest in them, the more you will receive and the more clearly they will be impressed upon your mind. Our spirit friends have no time to waste in unappreciated and ineffectual efforts to impress and instruct us either awake or asleep, and if we do not care to be guided by dreams and premonitions they are laboring under disadvantage in giving them to us.

But now, having barely commenced our inquiry into a subject too vast to be given more than a superficial consideration in one article of this kind, we must bring this effusion to a close. I have merely offered a few facts and theories to show the practically limitless field of research before the investigator into this branch of psychic study; and to bring the reader to a realization of the fact that, although not generally considered as such, dreams and premonitions are often only another method of spirit communication; and that, since other forms of mediumship are subject to cultivation, a painstaking effort to aid your invisible helpers by endeavoring to cultivate and understand these warnings must result in making them clearer, more accurate, and more efficient, a benefit to yourself, a satisfaction to your spirit friends.

"I give you the end of a golden string;
Only wind it into a ball,
It will lead you in at heaven's gate,
That invitingly opes to all."

ELLA.

Dear little soul with the wondering eyes,
What is the great mystery that in them lies?
Behind the darkness and behind the pain,
What great lesson have they to gain?

That they shine so beautiful and clear,
While earth life seems so sad and drear?
Set in a casket of pain and decay,
They shine with the radiance of golden day,

Looking from surroundings of darkness and gloom,
So bright that we forget the pall of the tomb
And think only of the soul upward and away,
Spurning earth and its passing forms of clay.

Looking into thine eyes of deepest blue,
I read only lessons which are true;
Life and its earthly cares grow dim and small,
And I see only eternal life, life over all.

I forget the petty cares of to-day
And grow broader—all smallness fades away;
For thine eyes do show this lesson sweet,
That life, beautiful life, is not complete

In this one little narrow span
Of the present expression of man,
For I can read in thy soul-lit eyes
Greater life, greater work before thee lies.

For thou art standing with trembling feet
Just at the foot of the mountain sweet;
The pathway seems weary o'er which thou hast trod,
But the mountain top sweet has the smile of God.

And down, down, from its steep incline
Its radiance is mirrored in those eyes of thine;
When thou hast looked up through mists of pain,
Some shine has been caught, ne'er to leave again.

DEAFNESS CURED

By No Means Until "ACTINA" Was Discovered.

Ninety-five per cent of all cases of deafness brought to our attention is the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The air passages become clogged by catarrhal deposits, stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Until these deposits are removed a cure is impossible. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying, hence the inability of aurists or physicians to cure. Ear drums are worse than useless. That there is a scientific cure for deafness and catarrh is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. The vapor current generated in the Actina passes through the Eustachian tubes into the middle ear, removing the catarrhal obstructions as it passes through the tubes, and loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, making them respond to the slightest vibration of sound. Actina has never failed to cure ringing noises in the head. We have known people troubled with this distressing symptom for years to be completely cured in only three weeks' use of Actina. Actina also cures asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are directly or indirectly due to catarrh. Actina is sent on trial postpaid. Write us about your case. We give advice free, and positive proof of cures. A valuable book—Professor Wilson's 100 page Dictionary of Disease, Free. Address New York & London Electric Association, Dept. IN THE WORLD CELESTIAL.

BY DR. T. A. BLAND,

Is a wonderful book, being the personal experiences of a man whose dead sweetheart, after appearing to him many times, etherealized, materialized and through trance mediums, has him put into a hypnotic trance by spirit scientists and held in that condition for ten days, which time he spends with her in the celestial spheres, and then returns to earth with perfect recollection of what he saw and heard in that realm of the so-called dead. He tells his wonderful story to his friend who gives it to the world in his best style. This friend is Dr. T. A. Bland, the well-known author, scientist and reformer.

This book has a brilliant introduction by that distinguished preacher, Rev. H. W. Thomas, D. D., president of the American Congress of Liberal Religions, who gives it the weight of his unqualified endorsement.

He says: "This book will give us courage to pass through the shadow of death to the sunlit clime of the world celestial."

Rev. M. J. Savage says: "It is intensely interesting, and gives a picture of the future life that one cannot help wishing may be true."

The Medical Gleaner says: "It lifts the reader into enchanting realms, and leaves a sweet taste in his consciousness."

Hon. C. A. Windle says: "It is inexpressibly delightful."

Everybody will be charmed with it, for it is not only a great spiritual book, but a most beautiful love romance of two worlds. It is printed in elegant style, bound in cloth and gold. Price $1. For sale at this office.

"After Her Death. The Story of a Summer." By Lilian Whiting. No mind that loves spiritual thought can fail to be fed and delighted with this book. Beautiful spiritual thought, combining advanced ideas on the finer and ethereal phases of Spiritualism, leading the mind onward into the purer atmosphere of exalted spiritual truth. A book for the higher life. Price, cloth, $1.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Dr. Millard F. Hammond, whose messages on "Compensation, the Law of the Universe," are now being published in The Progressive Thinker, and attracting much interest, will answer calls to lecture. He is a pleasing, interesting and instructive lecturer. He can be addressed in care of this office.

Oscar A. Edgerly's engagements so far as made for the lecture season of 1904 and 1905 are as follows: October, Battle Creek, Mich.; November, Findlay, Ohio; January and February, 1905, with the Spiritual Temple Society, Newport, Ky.; April with the First Spiritualist Society, Lynn, Mass. December, 1904 and March, 1905, are still open for engagement. Mr. Edgerly has been re-engaged to act as chairman at Grand Ledge, camp-meeting, 1905. Address during October, No. 249 Kalamazoo street, Battle Creek, Mich.

Oak Hill Place, that beautiful country home of Mr. and Mrs. Noah Merrell, just east of Lake Brady, Ohio, was the scene of a joyous gathering lately. It was the occasion of the annual reunion of the descendants of the father of the host, Noah Merrell, Sr., who came to this township sixty-seven years ago. Oak Hill home never looked more lovely, more inviting, than on this occasion, and it has been the scene of many a pleasant gathering, too. Mr. and Mrs. Merrell's guests came from Pittsburg, Springfield, Cleveland, Wellsville, Kent, Ravenna, Windham, Streetsboro, Cuyahoga Falls and other points. All departed late in the afternoon, happy over a well spent day.

Georgia Gladys Cooley will serve the Spiritual Society of Geneva, Ill., Sunday, October 16. She served the society at Lima, Ohio, Monday, October 10.

"About 1875 Madame Blavatsky and Colonel Olcott, both having previously been Spiritualists, decided to go to India, ostensibly to study the ancient religions. They became wonderfully interested in Buddism, and Colonel Olcott published in English a Buddistic catechism. Madame Blavatsky began to operate in the realms of the miraculous. Among the so-called miracles she was said to have performed was when, with a party, she was dining out under the open sky, roses apparently dropped from the sky on the table. On another occasion, when on a picnic with a party of seven, it was found when they came to set the table there were only six cups and saucers. Madame Blavatsky said not to worry; that if they would go and dig in a certain spot they would find something. Some of the gentlemen dug and discovered a seventh cup and saucer of exactly the same pattern as the others.

John W. Jones writes: "Stand up, Spiritualists and voice this sentiment! All honor to the editor who, while advocating one of the grandest means for elevating humanity, dares to publish the whole truth. Let Brother Francis know his efforts are appreciated while he is yet in the mortal state."

Concord N. H., Oct. 5.—The legality of the practice of Christian Science in New Hampshire has been upheld by the Supreme Court of the state in a decision handed down in the suit of Mrs. Jennie Speed, of this city, to recover damages for alleged injuries as the result of treatment by Irving W. Tomlinson, a Christian Science practitioner. Mrs. Spread claimed that Tomlinson had failed to cure her and that her cure was greatly delayed by the time spent in taking his treatment. The case was decided in favor of the defendant in the lower court and was appealed. The Supreme Court now affirms the decision and dismisses the bill.—Chicago American.

For ten years public morals have become so vitiated by the prevailing code of party ethics that he who exposes the public officers in their semi-legalized looting has been viewed as an enemy of his party, says William Allen White in McClure's. Only within the last four years has there been growing among the people any considerable sentiment favorable to the public servant who exposed a fellow servant whom he caught stealing. But with the visible growth of moral perception in matters political among the people the lever of the party system may begin to act for the people. Spiritualists, too, are becoming awakened to the fact, that Spiritualism, pure, honest and elevating is the one thing demanded by the angel world.

All criminals are great believers in dreams. Some time ago, at Manchester, Eng., a daring thief awaiting trial, told a warder he had dreamed that he had seen a rainbow. From that he deduced that he would be acquitted at his trial. To everyone's surprise he was.

Fred P. Evans, prominent as a medium, has returned to San Francisco, Cal., and is located at 1112 Eddy street.

Mrs. Hull writes from Whitewater, Wis.: "The Morris Pratt School is fairly opened. Not all of the students have arrived. Some are expected this week, and still others next, yet the work is being taken up and pushed as vigorously as if all were in their places in the class rooms. The studies this year will be of the greatest interest and importance; not only the regular branches will be taught but some special work as well will enter into the year's curriculum. Some primary work is being taken up under special classes. The oratory department is commanding attention from the citizens, who are organizing special classes to be taught by our teachers; an adult class in which are a number of the city teachers, and a boys' and girls' class; this means recognition in a practical way. It is with the greatest pleasure I announce the fact that Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond of Chicago, Ill., has consented to deliver a course of lectures each month at the school during the year. Probably arrangements will not be completed before the holidays, but after that it is expected this valuable acquisition will be made.

Thieves are generally superstitious. No thieves like buying absolutely new boots. In no circumstances can they be persuaded to part with footgear during the period of wearing which their depredations were successful. When compelled to leave off wearing them from sheer necessity, a thief will have a wrist strap or some other article he can wear made from the uppers.

Correspondent writes from Galveston, Tex.: "Mrs. Nellie S. Noyes has lately spent a season in Galveston, where her services were most heartily enjoyed. In company with Mr. John W. Ring, the regular speaker in Galveston, Mrs. Noyes went to Houston, where her services were so well received that arrangements were made for her to stop in Houston a night as she went to San Antonio, where she attended the eighth annual meeting of the Texas State National Association of Spiritualists."

Clara L. Stewart writes from Whitewater, Wis.: "As the school is well open, and the different ones in the house assigned their respective duties, it is not necessary for me to be here constantly, and I would like engagements with societies or in localities where there are no societies, if persons interested in our cause would arrange for meetings. I would prefer to work in the states nearest Wisconsin until after the holidays, and will make reasonable terms to any who will write me. I hope for steady employment during the fall and winter."

In the cities of Japan women are seen going about the streets with long, narrow pieces of cotton stuff, in which they invite other women to put a few stitches. On each piece of cloth are a thousand black dots, and when each side has a thread passed through it by a different woman the stuff is believed to have power to protect the wearer from all danger in war. Very often a little crowd of eager women gather in the streets round someone who is anxious to obtain the necessary stitches for a husband, a son or a sweetheart.

We, of Seymour, Ind., are more than pleased with the impression made by the Rev. Frank T. Ripley, of Tipton, Ind. He opened the season here after two years of indifference on the part of the many Spiritualists in this vicinity. One noticeable feature was the large number of men in the audience. Two-thirds of the congregation were men. Our churches reverse this condition; but few men are attracted to the the Christian churches as the bosh they have to listen to drives them away. His inspirational lecture on the Philosophy of Spiritualism, was a masterpiece, and the eloquence of the speaker was grand. His tests were considered the most accurate ever given in this city. He is developing a new phase; he is getting independent slate-writing in the light. We had a sitting with him, furnished my own slates. They never left our own hands, and got one of the most satisfactory tests we have ever received. He will only give these slate tests when his guides direct him to do so. He will be with us until Oct. 30. Any society needing a good speaker and test medium will make no mistake in securing his services. Signed: John Condgon, William Durham, Geo. Frederick, J. A. Weaver, Ben McCann.

Mary Speight writes: "Invitations have been issued by the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Englewood Spiritual Union to a Harvest Home Festival and Ball, Saturday evening, October 15, 1904. Tickets twenty-five cents. Grand prize to be given for the best farmer costume. A good old-fashioned country supper will be served in the dining hall. Wear your 'easy close' and 'calliker ties,' and help eat the 'punkin' pies."

J. Viser of Florida, wants to know why some materializing medium does not accept Mr. Hale's challenge, and infers that all materializing mediums are fakes. Such is not the case, my good brother. The power of spirits to materialize under certain conditions has been thoroughly established.

J. A. Toren writes: "The Church of the Psychic Forces, held at Wilcox Hall, 361 East 43rd street, is having good success at both the afternoon and evening meetings, there being great interest shown at the conferences; every Sunday aftrnoon two good subjects given and handled by able speakers. I also draw your attention to our list of speakers for the month of October, evening lectures: Oct. 9, Walter DeVoe; 16, Dr. J. H. Randall; 23, Dr. Louis H. Freedman; 30, Dr. C. Burgess. I wish to say also that on the 23rd, Dr. L. H. Freedman will give free demonstrations in the hall in the evening. All who are sick and ailing, come up and let the Doctor cure you. He is well known on the South Side for he has cured many. Our pastor, Isa Cleveland, will be present at all meetings to give messages. We invite everyone who wishes to investigate the grand truth."

Mr. and Mrs. A. Norman, mediums for spirit photography and slate-writing have returned from the Lily Dale camp to their home at Minneapolis, Minn., 2721 Elliot avenue.

Frank T. Ripley writes: "I have been very ill. Three days ago I was very near the spirit world, but by the kindly help of the spirit world I am destined to remain on earth for some time."

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

The Universal Occult Society holds meetings at No. 77 East Thirty-first street. The Hon. R. Gilray, pastor; Rev. H. S. Fraser, assistant pastor, assisted by Mrs. Vaughn, Mrs. R. A. McMenamin and Mrs. Upston. Conference at 3 p. m. Evening services at 8 p. m. Rev. H. S. Fraser will lecture upon Spiritualism and Its Relationship to Natural Laws. Special music. All welcome.

Mrs. Allie Buhland writes: "Sept. 18, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Domhoff of Indianapolis, two dear little earth cherubs, nephew and neice of the above parties, received the floral spiritual baptism, their own dear loving and spiritually aspiring mother acting as sponsor. She, we know, took the pledges that will cling to her being as long as activity is with her, and we are sure she will more gently and sweetly lead them along their paths here, for the memory of the spiritual presence of that day will be the means of bringing them closer and closer as day passeth day. That the ceremony performed by your writer was impressive, was proven by the tears of sympathy that coursed down the cheeks of those in attendance."

Isabelle Powderly writes: "The Englewood Spiritual Union has adjourned for a time. I will hold meetings every Sunday evening only. Dr. Gustafson lectured for us last Sunday on Materialization, followed by messages from the mediums, Mrs. Keisler, Mrs. Martin, Mrs. McClere, and Powderly; good attendance. Sunday, the 9th, Dr. Taylor will lecture, controlled by King Charles, subject, the Dark Ages."

Mrs. Emma Snow Hoyt writes from Battle Creek, Mich.: "We wish to have it known that our society is still alive and working. We had Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague of Jamestown, N. Y., with us for the month of September. They did a fine work, made several new members and stirred things up in general. They are fine workers, and any society able to employ them can get none better. We have for the month of October, Mr. Oscar A. Edgerly, who is too well known to need any eulogy. November, our grand old worker and resident speaker, Dr. P. T. Johnson, serves us."

Wm. F. Ruffle writes: "Church of the Spirit, Schiller Building, 109 E. Randolph street, third floor take elevator) Hall 301 adjoins. I am pleased to report well attended meetings at both the services and circles. The ladies' class Tuesdays at 3 p. m., bids fair to be very popular, whilst the Wednesday and Friday circles are well attended. I desire to announce that on Oct. 16, at the 11 a. m. service, Dr. J. H. Randall, will lecture. We hope for a good attendance; tests to all. There is no lecture at the 2:30 or 7:30 p. m. service—only song service followed by messages to everyone in attendance."

Madame Blavatsky teaches that there are seven worlds, six being invisible to the uninitiated. In regard to man, theosophy holds that he has a sevenfold nature. He is denied individuality and the soul of man is held to be as eternal as God, never having been created.

Mary E. French writes from Clyde, Ohio: "Some few weeks ago E. W. Sprague, missionary for the N. S. A., organized a society here, chartered under the name of the First Spiritual Research Society of Clyde. Since then we have been forming a library and have between one hundred and twenty and one hundred and fifty books donated. We have works on fiction, biography, history, scientific and religious. If any of The Progressive Thinker readers, authors or publishing houses can send us one book or more from their libraries, we will appreciate it very much. Should we ever disband the books will be returned to the donors; or if unclaimed, sent to the National Library. Many homes have books that after once read are left year after year to be handled and dusted, doing no one any good, and the above is a good way to scatter not only our literature, but any good reading matter."

Mrs. Clara Wagner writes from Defiance, Ohio: "We have changed the name of our society. At first we called it the First Spiritual Society of Defiance. By the request of the spirit of Anthony Wayne, we changed the name to the 'Church That Pleases God.' We have services every Sunday evening in our hall, and Lyceum on Thursday evening. I am trying to start a Ladies' Aid Society which I think will help our church. I will offer my services to lecture and give messages, in either English or German, to any one of the adjacent towns. I hope every town will soon have a Spiritualist church so the Bible can be explained to those that are brethren. The scripture teaches us, 'Now concerning spiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant.' Address me at No. 407 Highland street, Defiance, Ohio."

Allard W. Weisman writes as follows in reference to Mrs. Lucile de Loux, who resides at 2952 Cottage Grove avenue: "My wife and I have traveled all over the country, and have visited mediums everywhere, and have sat in many circles and witnessed many manifestations that I regret to say, I am convinced were fraud; but I never sat in a circle where spirituality and goodness so pervaded everything and everyone as have the three circles I have attended at Mrs. deLoux's parlors. This is said without prejudice, as we only seek the truth. I would say that Mrs. de Loux's work is purely mental, and of a nature positively convincing."

Virginie Barrett writes: "I just returned from Danville, Ill. I found very many there asking for our beautiful philosophy. The society which I served has interesting and good members, but needs more harmony for a perfect society. I was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Buchanan and her mother, who is an old-time Spiritualist. I lectured to a number of old soldiers on their grounds, which is indeed a beautiful home for these weary ones. There are upon these grounds fountains in which pretty gold-fish pass their time in graceful dance. Large forest trees and pretty gravel paths and flower beds can be seen everywhere. Electric lights are seen from the buildings, and the band stand with its illuminations gives the appearance of a soldier tent. I will be pleased to hear from friends wishing my services. Address me at No. 29 Gladstone avenue, Indianapolis, Ind."

Mr. A. B. French delivered a lecture for the society at Clyde, Ohio. "Hades, the Land of the So-called Dead," was his subject. The audience was delighted. The music was fine. "Only a Whisper," "Only a Thin Veil Between Us," and "Shadow Land" were beautifully sung. It is too bad that A. B. French cannot come prominently before the people again. He is a man of great eloquence and could do a world of good on the rostrum.

Referring to Henry M. Tefft, Esq., of Norwick, N. Y., who is at present visiting and lecturing in Ohio, a state paper says: Mr. Tefft has won a great reputation as a lecturer on various subjects on which he speaks. Those who have listened to him say he is a word painter. Sublime thoughts, ideal images and pictures float before his mind and are continually finding expression in words. He in turn astonishes, pleases, and sometimes shocks his audience with the boldness with which he puts forth some of his most radical thoughts. He does not argue, he asserts his positions with the apparent confidence that tney are axioms, self-evident truths, ready to be received by all mankind. He always leaves his audience with plenty of material to digest, even if they do not fully concede all that he claims. His lectures, not only show a deep study of the past but the last word, the newest thought in science, literature, and theology, are all fresh in his mind. Each sentence stands out distinct, like pearls in a necklace, clear, perfect, and polished.

Some one writes from Rockford, Ill., as follows, but fails to give full name, which should always be done: "The Psychic Research Society resumed its meetings for the coming fall and winter after a vacation of six weeks; opening meeting conducted by Mrs. Clara Stewart on the second Sunday of September, giving us a fresh heart impetus, and greater courage, and we feel we can 'see the star in the East.' Last Sunday we had with us B. F. Boulen of the Morris Pratt Institute. He seems to be full of determination and courage, which bespeaks for him a bright future. Next Sunday, the 9th, we will have Clara Stewart, and through the month of November, Will J. Erwood will be with us."

Mrs. Carrie H. Mong, Secretary of the Indiana State Spiritualist Association, writes from Muncie, Ind: "The N. S. A., together with the Indiana State Association will hold a three days' Mass Meeting at the First Spiritualist Church, corner New York and Alabama streets, Indianapolis, Ind., on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, October 14, 15 and 16, 1904. We have endeavored to secure the very best talent for this occasion, both in speakers and platform mediums, and can promise an interesting and instructive time to all who attend."

Harry J. Moore and Mrs Eva McCoy conducted meetings in the Opera House at Gladbrook, Iowa, last Sunday. Mr. Moore is arranging his speaking tour in Iowa so as to get into St. Louis in time to attend the N. S. A. reception, which convenes next Monday evening. Address him at 104 North 1st Avenue, Marshalltown, Iowa.

Mrs. Kirchner, wife of the President of the Rising Sun Mission, arrived home on Thursday evening, October 6, after an extended tour through the East for seven weeks, during which time she visited a number of societies and spoke and gave spirit messages. Upon her arrival she was surprised to meet a number of members of the Mission, who welcomed her home. Quite an enjoyable evening was spent, after which luncheon was served, all seeming glad to have our sister and co-worker back with us again.

T. W. Sherk writes: "Services at the Church of Spirit Communion, 4308 Cottage Grove avenue, will be conducted by Rev. Moses Hull, next Sunday, October 16, both afternoon and evening. Messages will be given by Mr. Coates, and other mediums. Our afternoon meetings were opened for the season last Sunday with a conference, the enthusiastic and exalted spirit of which presaged good things for our society in the future."

Mr. Ira Cross writes: "The Hyde Park Occult Society was very much favored by Dr. C. A. Burgess, Sunday evening, October 2. His talk on the Indian was something out of the ordinary, very interesting and instructive, and we hope he will come and speak for us again. On Sunday evening, October 16, we will dispense with the lecture and give the mediums full swing. We would be glad to see many mediums present; they will have a chance to show whatever they can do in their line. We hope there will be enough mediums present so all will get a message. On Wednesday evening, October 12, we will have a social dance; a good time, and good music are guaranteed to all who attend; also refreshments. I think the charge is to be 25 cents. Hall at 319 E. 55th street. Take Jackson Park car on Cottage Grove avenue."

Charles H. Green writes: "Sunday, October 2, 1904, Dr. J. H. Randall, Dr. Hammond and Mr. George Mostow of Onset, Mass., addressed the Rising Sun Spiritualist Mission, at its hall, 378 S. Western avenue. The remarks of all three gentlemen proved very interesting. Mr. Mostow is a pioneer in the cause of Spiritualism, having for more than twenty years been a staunch adherent to the cause. Mrs. N. Trafton also made a few remarks and gave some psychometric readings. That evening Rev. Thomas S. Warner used as the subject for his lecture, 'Decision.' It was delivered in a convincing and most interesting manner. Mr. Hammond also favored us that evening with a few thoughts. Sunday, October 16, Mr. John N. Clarke will be the speaker, his subject will be 'Life, One and Invisible.' That evening Rev. Mrs. N. E. Hill will lecture, after which our mediums will give tests and spirit messages. We cordially invite all Spiritualists and skeptics to attend our meetings."

M. C. Matthews writes from Pittsburg, Pa.: "We are glad to report that the First Church of Spiritualists, on Boquet street, Pittsburg, has secured as speaker, Rev. B. F. Austin. We find him an eloquent and fluent speaker, coming to us from the ranks of the clergy of the M. E. church of Toronto, Canada. He has identified himself with Spiritualism and has become a worker in and for the advancement of the cause. He is a thorough Biblical scholar. On Sunday, Oct. 2, the subject was 'Make Yourself Over.' In the evening the subject was, 'What Does Spiritualism Stand For?' He said that if Spiritualism is true, it is the grandest truth ever discovered, and there is no such a thing as materialism. It brings the highest hopes to mankind. It is the very nectar of divine consolation. It stands for a religion of demonstration. We should accept nothing without an investigation based on the best of reason. It stands for the highest concept of true liberty, and the abolishment of war. It stands for a rational view of God."

E. D. Babbitt, M. D., has removed his Academy of Higher Sciences from Geneva, to No. 62 East avenue, Rochester, N. Y.

Mrs. LeSieur writes: "The first Band of Harmony of the year met Thursday, October 6, in Hall 512 Masonic Temple. We had a large and enthusiastic gathering. The afternoon meeting was devoted to the giving of loving tribute to the memory of one of our dear departed members, Mrs. N. J. Marshall. Mrs. Richmond gave us a message from her, telling us how much she wished she could make us realize how happy she was to have made this change. The evening session, the guides of Mrs. Richmond answered questions on many different subjects, which were unusually interesting. Many strangers were present. Mr. LeSieur gave a message through Mrs. Mullins, and other spirit friends. Mrs. Turbett gave several readings to persons in the audience."

E. J. Bowtell desires engagements with societies Sundays or week nights for season of 1904-5. Address 21 Washington street, New London, Ct.

SEEN AND HEARD.

A Startling Admission.

The Rev. Dr. Josiah Strong, president of the American Institute of Social Science, in an address before the International Congress of Arts and Sciences at the World's Fair, made the following startling admission:

"The ministry of to-day lacks enthusiasm for the reason that it lacks a message. Many a preacher speaks not because he has something to say, but because he has to say something."

He illustrated this by saying that he recently talked with five New England pastors, each of whom said that if he could live over his life, he would not enter the ministry, nor would he let his son enter it if he could prevent it. He continued:

"It is not strange that under such circumstances there is much restlessness on the part of both pastors and churches.

"It is probable that a majority of all the pastors and churches in the United States are at this moment desiring a change."

They may desire a change, but are chained by the bands of their inflexible creeds. They are thralls of the past, and fear the consequences of new ideas.

Is It Folly or Menace?

The following is from Newport, where the "400," supposed to be the flower of civilization hold forth in their summer homes:

Although Harry Lehr denies that he ever gave a monkey dinner, he cannot deny the fact that on Wednesday he gave a genuine dinner to dogs to celebrate the third anniversary of the birth of Mrs. Lehr's tiny Pomeranian dog which she calls Mighty Atom.

Seven invitations were issued and all came. The pride of "Arleigh" sat at the bedecked table, the decorations being the dog's favorite flowers, the cactus and deep red dahlias. Silver candlebras were used at each end of the table with red shades. The poodles were seated in high chairs around the table, their mistresses seated directly behind them in order to assist the five butlers in serving the guests to the delicate menu, which consisted of veal cutlets, frankfurters, salads, ice cream, cigars and cigarettes and chocolates. For an "extra" more meat was served as the canines all howled for more. After this second course of meats, a birthday cake was brought in delicately frosted with "the pride of Arleigh" fretted on top, which was made visible by three lighted candles in honor of Mighty Atom's third birthday.

The dinner over, the guests sauntered into the magnificent drawing room of Arleigh, but time began to draw very heavy. So the master of Arleigh called a servant and told him to usher in a few cats, which he did. Many fights followed, until the several ladies picked up their tiny treasures and called their carriages.

Rome in the height of her arrogance, when the wealthy in wanton abandon, strove with each other in extravagance, presented nothing comparable with this folly. The corrupt nobility of France before the revolution which they precipitated by their abandon, gave no example of such idiocy. Think of it! Eight ladies—arrogating to be of the select, with flourish of footman and coachman, bring their poodles, arrange them in chairs around a table set with costly viands and order the servants to feed them! "Cigars and cigarettes" at the close! Have these moths of fashion taught their dogs to smoke? The idiotic farce was too tame and the servants broughts in some cats. The ladies enjoyed the dog and cat fight exceedingly. Where were the humane officers? Where the teeling and sense of shame of these ladies? They do not appear to have any. They attend the cruel polo games, and cheer the victors.

If the silliness was all, then there would be less meaning in this and similar occurrences—the "cream" of society might attend "monkey dinners," and celebrate the birthdays of their dogs. But there is more, vastly more. The millions of working people read these reports, and contrast the condition of their children with the surfeited dogs. It is conservative to say in the City of New York one hundred thousand people are in a chronic state of starvation. Their dwarfed growth and pinched faces reveal the revolting story of deprivation.

Waste and profligacy cannot forever flaunt their shame in the face of destitution! If these wealth-mad idiots must have monkey suppers and dog parties, if they must surround themselves with obedient flunkies, in common decency let them draw the curtain of concealment over their wantonness, and not advertise their shame in the yellow journals.

Every Fifth Child a Bread-Winner.

To make possible this extravagance, the children of less fortunate or endowed, have to be pressed into the treadmill of labor. There are almost two millions of children in the United States, pressed to toil. They begin at the tender age of ten years, in factory and mine, and this is not to count the children of the farms whose service, ofttimes is made as severe. They work to eke out the scanty income of father and mother. They never know childhood, and work under such conditions is slavery.

Pius X. Protests.

The Freethinkers of the world have met at Rome in convention, and the pope is indignant. In a letter to his vicar general he says:

"A new cause has been added to the many anxieties which, especially in our times, accompany the government of the Universal Church. We have learned with infinite sorrow that it is asserted that the cultivators of free thought have met in Rome. The painful echo of their speeches is unfortunately confirmed by their grim designs. Intelligence is the noblest gift the Creator has granted us, but it becomes sacrilegious when subtracted from dependency upon the Almighty, or rejects the direction and comfort of divine truth."

Continuing, the pope says the insult was rendered the more grave by the Freethinkers meeting in Rome, depository of faith, thus taking from Rome its designation as the tranquil, respected See of Christ's Vicar.

"We, therefore," the pope adds, "will make ours the offense offered to God, gathering in our heart all its bitterness."

He wishes Rome to unite in solemn atonement for this outrage to divine majesty, and further vindication of the honor and good name of the Holy City.

Oh, for the days that are past! Oh, for the temporal power once held by the pope! The diabolical spirit of intolerance is there, but the tiger's claws are cut, and his fangs broken. He can only howl his maledictions.

The pope talks bravely of "Intelligence" being the "noblest gift of the Creator," yet his definition of intelligence is not that of the dictionaries. To him it means thinking exactly as the church teaches, and abject obedience to his dictation!

It is galling to have the heretics set themselves down under the shadow of the vatican, and proclaim their infamous doctrines, and the pope gnashing his teeth in rage, powerless and helpless, bound hand and foot by the intelligence of the age! No Torquemada, with dungeon, rack, and thumb-screw; no auto da fe or fagot flames possible!

SPRINGFIELD, MO.

Building a New Spiritual Temple.

As it has been some time since I have seen any mention of the work going on here in Springfield, Mo., I deem it my duty in justice to the cause and our society, to write you an account of the work being done here.

The Springfield Spiritual Association was organized in March, 1903, by a few faithful Spiritualists who held together and worked hard, and complained little. In January of this year we had made such large strides that we deemed it best to be incorporated, which was done under the laws of the state. From the time of our organization to the day we incorporated, which was about nine months, we had accomplished a work that very few, if any, religious organizations ever performed in the same length of time.

Here our society struggled against great odds, trying to build up what others had torn down. Only those who are acquainted with the situation of the Spiritual cause here can fully understand what a task we have had. But thanks to our unseen friends whom we know have guided us through aright, we have the grandest society ever organized in this city. In the short space of nine months spoken of we had collected in dues from the faithful, and donations, over $375, which was put to very excellent use, by our then incorporated society, by purchasing a lot on which to erect the first Spiritual Temple that Springfield has ever seen.

On last Monday, Sept. 26, we all rejoiced over the fact that the workmen had commenced the erection of this Temple, which we had worked so hard for.

Before closing I wish to say a few words in praise of a sister who is also a member of our society. Mrs. Mary Sharron-Shaw, but the readers of The Progressive Thinker will, no doubt, recognize her by her one-time name of Mrs. Mary Garrett, of Cincinnati, O. Mrs. Shaw came to us some two months ago, from St. Louis, Mo. She has accomplished more good here, in the way of awakening an interest in the Spiritual cause, and gathering new sheep into the fold, than any worker who has yet come under my observation. A worker who knows no evil, has a great big heart, and looks only on the bright side of everything. She has a grand, noble soul, and this society will never be able to repay her for the great good she has done for it here, although she would say, "I am repaid a thousand times, by the pleasure it gave me in being able to do you all so much good."

On October 9, we will have with us for one day only, Mr. John W. Ring, of Galveston, Texas, National Superintendent of Lyceum Work. Mr. Ring needs no introduction to the Spiritualists, and we are looking forward with great pleasure to his coming.

By Thanksgiving day, we expect to be able to throw open to the world the door of our Temple, and invite all to come in and participate in the good things that are served from a Spiritual platform. As our Temple is to be of stone, we expect it to stand for ages as a monument to the grand truths and teachings of Spiritualism.

The officers of our society are, J. Ed. Black, Pres.; Mrs. Eugene Clements, Vice Pres.; Mrs. Charlotte J. Dixon, Sec'y., and Mr. N J. Shaw, Treas.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Amelia J. Curtice passed to spirit life at North Adams, Mich., Sept. 23, in her 79th year. She had been a firm believer in the truths of Spiritualism, and had been a Spiritualist all her life. Wilson Curtice, her husband, had been a medium for thirty years when he passed to the life beyond.

A Wife's Telepathic Message.

About four years ago, while living in Baltimore, my husband was required to make a business trip to New York. I did not hear from him for a week, which was rather out of the ordinary, as he is a careful correspondent. One evening I found myself sitting alone hour after hour, with only a dull consciousness of being in an unusual frame of mind. At 11 o'clock I arose to retire and stepped across the threshold into the next room As I did so I involuntarily lifted my foot, for it seemed to me as though I had stepped upon a vibrating wire, and at the same moment the whole room became filled with the sound of my husband's voice. It was inarticulate and unusual in quality, but instantly recognizable, and I was reminded of the one only time I had conversed with him over the telephone.

I fled up stairs in terror, wringing my hands and sobbing, "Oh, something has happened to him, something has happened to him!"

In the morning a boy called with a note from my husband's employer stating that he was about to leave for New York, as my husband was there ill in a hospital. Had I any word to send? By degrees I learned that he had been attacked with appendicitis at the St. George Hotel and taken to St. Vincent's Hospital in an ambulance. Does this come under the head of coincidence?

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give what ever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

"A Spiritualist." Since the publication of the Arcana of Spiritualism some unknown friend of Spiritualism has taken upon himself to act as free distributor of the same to the great public chairs, scientific men, divines, professors, and all the foreign officials at the World's Fair. His appreciation of the work thus expressed counts more than fulsome praise and has placed the book where no spiritual literature has ever been before. The seed thus sown, may in many cases fall on barren ground, but some is sure to return a harvest. The last order of this "veiled missionary," who subscribes himself "A Committee of one," is for ten copies to be sent where I think the most good will result. It is difficult to make a selection, for a thousand can be sent, where the chances are equal. I gave the matter to the consideration of Mrs. Tuttle, and as the only way I have to communicate with this unknown friend of the cause and express the thanks for the great help he has been, I subjoin a list of those to whom the books were sent: Rev. C. H. Parkhurst, New York; Rev. Francis Wayland Parker, President Chicago Institute; Rev. Morgan Dix, New York; Rev. Jenkyn Lloyd Jones, Chicago; M. Gaylord Wilshire, Editor Wilshire's Magazine; Dr. Chas. B. Parker, Professor Surgery Western Reserve Medical College, Cleveland, Ohio; Rev. Wilbur Fisk Tillett, Professor Sys. Theology, Vanderbilt Theological Seminary, Nashville, Tenn.; Rev. Morgan Wood, Cleveland, Ohio; Rabbi Louis Grossman, Cincinnati; Horace Howard Furness, chairman Seybert Commission, Philadelphia, Pa.

The remainder of the order to his direction was mailed to Hon. Richard Bartholdt, President International Parliament; Dr. William T. Harris, Com. Education, Washington; Mercantile Library, New York.

James L. Dow: Q. Does the spirit world have a common surface upon which spirit homes are built? If so, is that surface around the earth and at a uniform distance from it? Does it revolve with the earth upon its axis and follow it in its orbit around the sun? Is the surface of the spirit world or the foundation upon which spirit buildings are built any different from any other location in space? Would a spirit building or the surface upon which they are built have any resisting powers to the passage of a human body or any other gross material?

Abby A. Judson in her communication published in The Progressive Thinker, No. 773, says that she has built her home upon a slight elevation overlooking a beautiful river; now I would like to know if that slight elevation and river was always there but was never taken by any one until she went over there and built on it? From whence does that river come, and where does it empty? Can a spirit pass through the material of which their house is built, and through the material which forms the surface of their country upon which they build and walk, without its being any obstruction to them?

A. These questions arise in the mind of all who attempt to understand the philosophy of spirit life as taught by Spiritualism. The conditions of that life are different from those of earth, and we have no words to express the things we know not of. All descriptions of that world, hence, must be comparative, and the things of earth used to illustrate. So far as possible all these questions, which would here, to fully consider, occupy too much space, are answered in the Arcana of Spiritualism and Life in Two Spheres.

Geo. Rice Jones: Q. Is a physician justified when a patient has an incurable malady, and in great suffering, to give morphine and remove him from his misery?

A. This question is called out by the case of a physician who had a patient, a lady in the highest social circles of the city, suffering from a virulent cancer. After her sudden death some of her friends brought her case privately before the mayor, not wishing their suspicions for the time to be made public. He called the physician to his office to hear his version of the case, and decide if it was best to prosecute. This is the physician's story:

"I know what I have done, and under like circumstances I would do the same thing. Hers was an utterly hopeless case. She had at best but a few months to live, and every minute would have been increased agony. Her sufferings would move a stone to tears. She often implored me to increase the dose of morphine, which I administered to ease the pain for a few minutes. 'Only a little more, doctor,' she would beg, 'just enough to put me to sleep so that I won't wake again.' The afternoon of her death she asked me for the hundredth time how much longer she would have to live. When I told her she prayed I might be wrong, that death would come sooner.

"Her physical pain at that instant was more than even I, accustomed to such sights, could look upon. She beckoned to me and whispered: 'Are you going to give me some more morphine?' I nodded my head and soon was ready. She asked me for the hypodermic syringe, and whispered: 'Put in enough to put me to sleep so I can see how much it will take.' I did so. She again took the syringe, and thrusting the needle beneath her skin pushed the plunger down and I made no effort to stop her. She went to sleep. She had cured herself."

"That is to say," I broke in, "she committed suicide."

"No, not that."

"Then you committed murder."

"No, I cured her. In her case the only cure was death. It is my office to relieve suffering. There was but one way to relieve her. What I did was done before by physicians and will be done again and again. And it is right that it should be done."

In his investigations the mayor consulted the leading physicians of the city and was surprised to find that they unanimously agreed not only that the "doctor had done right, but had performed his simple duty."

Whatever may be the verdict in this or similar cases, the leaning must be toward the position taken by the doctor. There is probably not a physician who has practiced for any time who has not had similar experience. Doctors may not avowedly give an opiate with the intention of producing death, but they give doses that they know will produce a lethargy from which the patient will not awaken. They are called to patients in supreme agony, and there is only one means of alleviation in their hands, and it requires a delicate calculation to determine how much to give to alleviate the pain and not cause death. They know in certain cases that the pain itself, by exhaustion will bring the coma of relief, which ends in death, and why allow such needless suffering? It is inculcated by the Humane Society, that when an animal is suffering hopelessly, to cut its life as painlessly as possible.

Yet there is one supreme consideration. To grant this as right for physicians, places them above the law, and grants them a fearful power, which no human being can justly exercise over another.

The conscientious physician, impressed with the responsibility imposed, cannot be condemned for yielding to the voice of sympathy, and desire to alleviate suffering.

REGARDING AURAS AND COLORS.

To the Editor:—I was interested in the article copied concerning Marguerite Gladstone Stuart, of Newport, regarding auras and colors.

A confirmation of this theory was printed some years ago in The Popular Science Monthly. A man wrote the editor he could see the color of a person's thoughts. He said they were of various colors, and some even were black. He could distinguish them when the person was beyond a partition.

At that time I wrote the following poem. This year is to be an exemplification of the science of our views.

A Philosophical Ethical Allegory.

The angel in waiting in heaven was told
To take a fair circlet of gems and of gold,
And speeding to earth, give the diadem fair
To him most deserving the treasure to wear.

But the angel looked not on the external form,
But saw life within, where intentions are born;
And not only sin's many phases passed by,
But many things seemingly worthy and high.

If fame was the object, and self was the goal,
If love did not soften, and kindness control,
No lavish of money or burden of care
Attracted his notice the deed to compare.

At last he returned to the mansions of day,
Still bearing the crown he had carried away,
Saying: "Rays of brightness shine forth from the brain
Of those who are anxious the good to maintain.

"As the loving and tender, the humble and true,
Are decked with the hues correspondingly due,
Their temples already a diadem wore
More lovely than this which by order I bore."

Juniata, Neb. C. H. DOTY.

Woman Constitutionally Classed.

The state constitutions of Wyoming, Colorado, Idaho and Utah make no discrimination against sex. Women are citizens and vote on equal terms with men. All other state, constitutions make invidious distinctions. The majority classify women, idiots, criminals and unfaxed Indians, in the category of the disfranchised. This official brand of inferiority reflects on the moral tone of the nation. Politics—the religion of our national life—is a synonym for corruption and vice. The morality and purity which women could infuse into public affairs is denied on the most illogical of pretexts, while the naturalized foreign felon is admitted to participate in citizenship.

So lightly do we hold the claims of men from the standpoint of fitness to govern, that in fourteen states a foreigner, knowing nothing of our institutions or principles, can vote "on intention of being naturalized," even though he has just landed on our shores. The American born woman, with a line of American ancestors, is superseded by these alien hordes.

That one-half of the people of the nation should be dominated by the other half, upon no better credentials than those of sex is an injustice that mocks our republican motto of "equal rights for all."

Warm Weather Spiritualists.

I am very strongly impressed that down through all the ages of time there has existed a class of people who are like unto the Spiritualists. I am also inclined to think that some of the old-time Spiritualists had a hand in making part of the book that is called the Word of God. And I think there is about as much truth in that book as there is in Spiritualists (so-called) to-day. I do not by any means believe all that the book contains, neither do I believe all that all Spiritualists claim and teach to-day. But all that is good, all that is noble, all that is true, I want, and I accept the truth from all and any quarter whence it may come.

There was a Spiritualist once who uttered the words (it is said), "Seek and ye shall find; knock and it shall be opened unto you." That language is as appropriate and as truthful now as when first uttered.

Our little society though not now an organized one, has been meeting every Sunday the whole summer. I see by your paper and also from other sources that many of the societies have disbanded till after the camps and as some express it till after the warm weather. I have but very little confidence in one's religion that is so cold it can't stand a few hot nights without melting. I think they simply cease to seek and to knock. And whilst they have been taking their ease and their slumber, we feel that a few of us have been growing day by day, and that we have gained much strength.

I hope to see soon a well organized body at this place, well officered, one that can stand all the fiery darts of the wicked, one that will be a bright and shining light for ages and ages. There is no use talking against our cause, for it is the truth and will stand, whilst all that is false and deceitful will be crushed to the earth. We have been well paid for all our labor.

That old-time Spiritualist said at another time, "Happy are ye when men will say all manner of evil against you falsely for my sake" (the truth's sake). Now I believe this statement as much as the first one. And if it is true, why are so many just the opposite to happy? It must be because their deeds are evil. Well, poor souls, I pity them, and pray sincerely that they may turn from all their evil and false ways to seek the light. Knock at mercy's door and it shall be opened to you.

The last day of the camp we brought Mrs. F. V. Jackson of Michigan home with us, and she lectured and gave tests for us that Sunday evening, and on the following Monday evening we had an ice-cream and cake social. The hall was well filled and she gave many tests which were gladly received. It was a grand success for us socially and financially. It was so good that we will repeat it. Mrs. Jackson came back and spoke for us last Sunday in the afternoon and evening. At night the hall was filled to overflowing, the best attendance we have ever had. She made many beautiful illustrations, and did not utter a word but what I could sanction. Everybody was more than pleased, and we hope to have her back with us again at some future time, and we bespeak for the sister all the confidence and respect that a faithful and honest worker deserves. Do not be afraid to welcome her in your homes, for she carries sunshine wherever she goes. We will never forget some of the pleasant hours that she spent in our home. It put me in mind of Martha's last night with her aunt and Mrs. Austin.

I feel that there is a great impetus back of all our efforts. The spirit world is surely back of us. One of the greatest feasts my soul ever enjoyed was Sunday in the afternoon meeting. Mrs. Jackson had a severe sore throat and thought by turning the afternoon meeting into a kind of conference it would enable her to talk better in the evening. My wife made a little speech (excuse me for saying it was good). She was overcome and sat down in tears, as were many others, but in a moment she said she did not want to cry but she couldn't help it, and all at once a lady, Mrs. Myers, of Kokomo, with uplifted face with eyes streaming with tears, took my wife by the hands and said: "Oh, mamma! mamma! you couldn't help it; you couldn't help it." It was surely the grandest case of impersonation I ever witnessed. Now it was my daughter speaking through Mrs. Myers, and it was as natural as life, and oh, how I turned my eyes toward her, thinking I would surely see my child face to face. There were very few dry eyes in the audience. This all happened in the broad daylight and is something that can be sworn to by a score or more of us. Now Mrs. Myers knew nothing of my child's voice, as she had never seen or heard her.

Oh, my dear people, such grand truths as are being fully demonstrated to us daily. All of these happy seasons are the consequence of seeking and knocking.

Where would we have been had we let our meetings go by the board on account of a few warm nights. I will never give up till I can see as I am seen, or hear as I am heard.

The old question, If a man die, shall he live again? My answer would be no. If a man die, he is dead; but man is not dead, because it is impossible for him to die. Yet if we were compelled to believe that book that so many love, this question would be answered as I have answered it—No. "As the cloud is consumed and vanisheth away, so he that goeth down to the grave shall come up no more."—Job vii:9. "The dead know not anything, neither have they any more a reward."—Ecc. ix: 5.

"They are dead, they shall not live. They are deceased, they shall not rise."—Isaiah xxvi: 14.

But by this same witness the testimony is as strong that we shall live and shall not die. "The trumpet shall sound and the dead shall be raised."—1. Cor., xv:52.

"The hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth."—John v:28, 29.

So I conclude that with such a contradictory witness all such testimony becomes worthless. So the main question is not, is man living again? but is, does he die at all? "If a man die." No, no, my friends, there is no such thing as death. This old body may pass back to mother earth, but the spirit, the life, the ego, can never die. And the only sensible reason I can give is, because it always had an existence. I think it very reasonable to believe that anything that never had a beginning will never have an ending.

But the greatest evidence we have is, that we do not see them, and do hear them.

So let us not weary in well doing, but let us search diligently, prove all things, and hold fast to that which is good.

ADDRESS OF A. J. WEAVER

At the Opening of the Morris Pratt School, September 27, 1904.

To-day is the third opening of this school. I do not say "our school," because it is not our school in any true sense. It was founded by Morris Pratt, of his own free will, and given to the Spiritualists of the world for educational purposes. We are only agents elected each year by the trustees to carry on the work. At any annual meeting new officers and teachers may be chosen.

The purpose of this school is to equip more thoroughly those who may attend for the work of propagating truth, and especially the truths which are most helpful to the welfare of the race.

Let me lay before you the general plan of the school, that you may see its reasonableness and its use. The work is divided into three departments or steps, each one of which is required to make the whole complete. The first of these steps is the acquisition of knowledge which includes mental culture that follows as a result. Knowledge is the basis of all intellectual and the highest moral growth. Without knowledge the deepest sincerity will be wrecked on the rocks of error and superstition.

In the regular course of nature the first means of acquiring knowledge that comes to humanity is experience. It is marvelous how much knowledge one acquires during the first eight years of his life by this simple means. From one thousand to two thousand distinct words are learned and brought into use. A wider knowledge of the human body and its parts; of the visible world and its countless objects; of the operation of nature's forces and their results, and numberless other things are gained by every child from experience.

As age advances experience widens and the increase of knowledge goes on. A puppy and a babe born beneath the same roof at the same hour, and living eight years within the same environment, reveal a difference of knowledge which clearly marks an almost infinite difference of nature between dog and man. With no other means but experience, a human being rises by rapid strides above all other forms of life and takes his place as head.

Besides this there are other means provided in the natural course of events by which knowledge comes. We get knowledge unconsciously from other people. We get it through daily conversation; through listening to lectures and sermons, and through general reading.

Every student who comes here brings with him a great fund of knowledge gained in these general ways. Some bring more, others less. What we attempt in this school to do is to provide additional means of acquiring knowledge—means which, if you did not attend school, you would not be likely to get—means which, if diligently entered into by you, will greatly widen and deepen and strengthen your amount of knowledge.

The branches taught for this purpose in this school are general history, in which the important events for the past six thousand years are so arranged as to be grasped and held by the mind of the faithful student; the history of the struggle which science has been compelled to carry on with religious intolerance and ignorance in the Christian church since the fifteenth century; knowledge of the Bible and the Spiritualism which it contains; knowledge of its origin, its character, its authorship, its age and its whole history as a human book; knowledge of the various religions of the world, and their relation to modern thought.

Physical geography is a branch of geology. Evolution, which is a history of how the various species of vegetable and animal life came on the earth. Psychic lessons, which impart a knowledge of the laws and principles of mediumship, with Hudson Tuttle's "Arcana of Spiritualism," as a text book; Psychology or a study of the human soul with all its powers and relations so far as taught by science; and logic, which teaches the laws by which to reason so as to distinguish truth from error.

It takes two years to cover all these. They do not by any means include all the means of knowledge taught in schools; but they are the fundamental ones. They are all that can be covered in the time specified. They prepare the student so that when he leaves the school he is ready ever after to be a seeker for knowledge—to enter the various fields of science to be a learner for life. What though the knowledge here gained is but a trifle, it is one step in the broad road to truth, which reaches into eternity; it may be but little, yet if it is enough to kindle in the mind the love of knowledge—an abiding and ever increasing love of intellectual wealth—you will be well repaid for every day's time and every dollar's expense it has cost you, for leaving these halls with a truth-seeking mind your whole future life will be like a river whose waters broaden and deepen at every mile of its onward flow.

I have taken some time in explaining the first department in the work which is done here, because of its great importance. Without a continual desire for truth to inspire the soul, all education becomes but a mere ornament—a polish on the surface of life.

The second step in the school work is to acquire such a use of the English language as to be able to put all one knows and one may ever know in such form as to give it position and power among the scholars of the world. One may possess the wide knowledge of a Bacon; the mathematical genius of a Newton, or the intellectual power of a Descartes, if he clothes his thought in barbarous English he crucifies his own intellect on the cross of illiteracy. He defeats his own highest and best ends. He is false to himself; he commits intellectual suicide.

He is attempting to cut down the mighty trees of error and superstition with the blade of a jack-knife, instead of using the keen edge of a steel axe. The worst feature of the case is that he does not know a jack-knife from an axe. In all his talk he murders the English language, and wonders why what he says or writes has so little effect, ignorant of the fact that his best ideas are disfigured or obscured because he leaves out the subject or the predicate, or in other ways makes the sentence awkward and ungrammatical.

In this department we begin with spelling, followed by that of diacritical marking, grammar, rhetoric and continuous work in composition.

The third department, which completes the work we attempt to do, is a constant and thorough drill in oratory. So many public speakers meet with failure simply because of faults in their delivery that this work is made to reach through the whole two years' course. It is the keystone of the educational arch. It perfects our work.

KNOW THE TRUTH.

Phenomena Under Conclusive Test Conditions.

At eight o'clock p. m., on Saturday, September 24, 1904, I met according to special agreement, W. C. Marshall of 1267 Pearl street, A. H. Waterbury of 1830 Grant avenue, A. B. Montgomery and Mrs. S. E. Montgomery of 123 West Bayaud street, Miss Nellie C. Kline, Hotel Belvidere, Anna Black, 915 West 6th-avenue, E. L. Nollen, West Bayaud street, Anna B. Lainheart, 1618 Tremont street, A. B. Emery, 531 18th street, Oakland, Cal., Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Moorman, 601 Majestic Building, and Mrs. Peterson, at the home of the medium, Mrs. Alice Gehring, 1618 Tremont street, in the city of Denver, for the purpose of testing the genuineness of the spiritual phenomena which is, and has been for some time past produced through her mediumship.

The house was literally turned over to us, Mrs. Gehring agreeing to all conditions and restraint requested.

A committee of ladies was appointed who retired with her and made a thorough search of her person for small trumpets or any other instrument by which any part of the phenomena might be produced. It is useless to say that they found nothing; so that fact is stated for the benefit of those who waste their time conjuring up excuses or other explanations of the phenomena, rather than accepting the truth.

All chairs and tables being removed, a large piece of mosquito netting was placed over the floor. This was to head off the trap door theory. A large oak dining table was then placed in the center of the room. Around this table came a four-cornered iron frame over which was placed another large piece of the netting. A guitar, two small bells and three trumpets were placed on the table. The mosquito netting which was over the iron frame around the table, was then fastened to the floor by the use of carpet staples, not tacks.

The medium, having selected Mr. J. A. Patterson to sit with her, a committee of gentlemen escorted him into privacy and searched him for instruments with the same results as in the case of Mrs. Gehring, the medium. They were then seated facing each other and their hands bound together with waxed cord. A third piece of netting was then placed over their heads and chairs, covering them completely. This netting was then fastened to the floor with carpet staples. Then every door and window in the room was sealed and every occupant of the room was bound together two and two, with waxed cord, and the lights extinguished.

The phenomena occurred. The bells rang. One trumpet and the guitar were thrown under the table. During the second song a voice was heard to join in the singing with one of the trumpets. Several of the so-called dead returned and conversed with relatives present.

Viola, one of the medium's guides, talked independently of the trumpet, in as clear and sweet a voice as ever fell on the ear of mortal. The phenomena lasted for about one-hour. Fraud, imposition or delusion was out of the question. The fastenings were found as placed, when the phenomena were over.

Of those fixed in their religious opinion I can only say: "Let them alone. they are given over to their idols." And to the doubting investigator, "Come and see." W. H. HUNT.

Spiritualists' League Meeting.

The smaller hall in the Kimball Building, 243 Wabash avenue, Chicago, was filled by an intelligent and interested audience at the meeting of the City League of Spiritualists held there on the evening of October 4. Members said at the close it was one of the most instructive and enjoyable which the body has yet held, for it dealt with a live question and gave excellent demonstrations of the of message giving.

It was pleasant to hear one of the officers say privately that this was not to be the permanent place for holding the league meetings because the piano playing in other portions of the building was so plainly heard as to be an annoyance to both audience and speakers. Regular programmes are to be given on the first Monday evening of each month in some down town hall and the gatherings are to be made a harmonizing center for workers from all parts of the city—a rallying point for all who best can work and best agree.

The North Side Spiritualists were not out in so strong force as were those from the West and South Sides. Doubtless Prof. Ray, Mrs. Hilbert, Mr. Hill, Mrs. Fixen and others from that division will amend this record next month.

The chair was filled during the evening by President Warne and Vice-president Gilray. Dr. Warne prefaced his address with the explanation that the committee upon the program had drafted him for the occasion in his absence, and he did not wish it understood that he was in any sense a volunteer for the work. After a few words and an illustration pertinent to reformations needed in Spiritualism he took up the subject of telepathy and pointed out some very important points in which it failed to convince Spiritualists that mediumship was nothing but thought transference, at the same time cautioning ministers not to overwork this theory or they might get caught in the rebound, as in the incident of Jesus meeting the woman at Jacob's well.

The evening's address is always open to criticism by volunteers in the audience. Upon this occasion the critics seem to either coincide with or supplement the views of the speaker. Parker C. Marsh, Dr. Beverly, Brother Gilray and Dr. Freedman took part in this stage of the proceedings, and to the profit of all and the delight of old friends.

Mrs. Maude Lord Drake, who was recalled by a question from Dr. H. A. Cross after being seated and gave several messages by way of illustration of psychic powers. Brother Drake spoke, all too briefly, but on the time-worn excuse for trickery that you only get fraud from mediums when you go to them with fraud in your heart, said very emphatically you never get fraud from a genuine medium and also called upon anyone to show that thought transference ever occurred without the assistance of disembodied spirits.

Messages given impressionally by Dr. C. Burgess were very interesting and the audience wished for more. Mrs. Cleveland's messages were well received. Mrs. Hooper, a medium from Columbus, Ohio, was introduced and gave pleasant greetings to the audience. She may settle in Chicago for a time. Materialization will be considered at the November meeting of the League.

SEEKING WORLD PEACE.

International Wars Are Meaningless Military Murders.

There may have been good causes and excuses for wars between national civilizations and barbarisms of the past; but that time has gone by, and the time for wars between nations to cease has fully come. All future international war contests are now merely meaningless military murders and maiming, and crimes that are unlawful in the citizen. While man lives and continues the race in clay, the force of the parental palm may remain one of the punitive panaceas in child training; corporeal constraint and restraint, in some form, may continue to be one of the modes of maintaining the disciplinary mastery in the public schools. Peaceful men may in civil society have to repel the robbers' assault betimesby force. The city's police will have to continue to use the bludgeon on the bully, and the faultless female may at times have to resist the ravisher by force; the peaceful head of a family may sometimes have to shoot at the burglar in its defense, and the state constabulary may have to use club and revolver to stop or arrest the runaway criminal; and the sheriff may head with shotgun the posse commitatus of his bailiwick, once in a while, to preserve law and order; and the mob on the way to lynch an untried man may have to be met and matched by another one to prevent lawless murder. In such cases there seems to be reason and justication for the use of physical force.

But suppose a case of the presidents of two republics, or of the royal heads of two or more kingdoms, that cannot agree on the amicable adjustment of a mere commercial transaction, and that then, instead of calling on some competent and disinterested parties to deside, levy men and money in their respective nations, cast cannon and deal in dynamite, and put the battalions to the butchery of battle, until one or the other, for the sheer lack of more men and means, and after each have wasted millions above the value of the original consideration—not to count the murdered and the maimed, and the pauperized families, and the myriad millions to be yet raised in pensions, and not beginning to count any heart agonies in survivors.

Suppose that after all this and much more of indescribable horrors have taken place, so that the amount and matter originally involved as its cause, is a mere bauble and bagatelle; and suppose to adjust it, the same parties are willing, who refused to do so at the outset; the one ready to dictate most any terms, and the other helpless to refuse submission—now suppose a condition and proceeding between two nations of something like this: What human soul does not wish to have the voice of an archangel and trump of God to sound out a protest against it? We are justly made to feel sad when by an unforeseen and unavoidable railroad or other accident a score, more or less, of human lives are lost, but what shall we say to the events when two or more nations deliberately plan with malice aforethought to engage each other, again and again, in battle for the express and no other purpose then to kill and maim, and so well succeed to butcher human beings by the thousands. No wonder God permits a few small accidents in innocence to man so long as man yet deliberately plans all along for wholesale slaughters that could be easily prevented by him.

War has become a too great, self-evident barbarity to be continued. And it cannot help also to be in the way of future international commerce among the neutral nations. And while the peace people ought to continue to meet and talk and protest in the matter publicly, yet they ought also to pursue their ends more practically by petitioning their respective governments to have them to seek by friendly mediations, through their foreign ministers, and by special embassies, the preliminary adjustment of every controversy between other nations which involve the chances of war. This is one of the broad fields with great opportunities; and here in our own beloved land, the United States of America, ought to be induced to act with its great friendly power, in the forefront of all others.

Then the Church of God in Christ, herein, ought to raise its potent voice in pulpit, pew and platform to help turn the state to favor the peaceful adjustment of all questions between them which may lead to war.

There is still another method that the peace organizations should enter to secure the abolition of international wars, and that is by using the war power of an international military alliance. If we have to have military arms in the governments why not use them for the purpose of compelling peace? And this point I cannot elaborate now, but only suggest.

And here again there is a great opportunity for "Columbia." The peace organizations ought to set their aims high enough to labor to have the United States of America to lead in the way for a peace league among a half dozen or more of the leading nations of Europe, which should seek to embrace England, France and Germany, if practicable, and there should be added to the international law this foundation principle: That to The Hague or some other international court to be agreed on, there should be referred every controversy which any two or more nations cannot or do not settle peaceably between themselves. That any one of the nations that is a party to such controversy should have the right to state its case to such a tribunal and cite the others to make their appearance and come to a hearing. And that after a final decision it should stand as a settlement of the question in dispute; and then the international league of nations should back it by their combined war power—if necessary. For if we have to have war anyway, then we should use it in the interest of mercy and not for a mere meaningless slaughter. For there would be no single nation that would be so fool hardy as to attempt to resist such a force, and especially would not do so after having had its case tried and decided by an international court, which had been thus made a part of the international law of nations.

It can hardly be conceived, that this country and any of the leading nations of Europe, should ever have occasion to engage each other in the brutal conflict of a war with the modern weapons of destruction, and so they could the more easily be brought to combine and lead in the creation of this new principle of international law; and which would at the same time make a new world. And it also could be fully understood and agreed that this new principle should solely relate to and have reference to the international, and not to the internecine strife or internal economy or conduct of the nation's affairs, but which would remain subject to its control as before.

The peace societies have by argument and logic well enough settled the ideals of international peace; and hereafter their chief labor should be directed toward obtaining the practical results

AMOS STECKEL,

CONFESSION OF A VIVISECTOR.

A Practical Operator Relates a Little of His Experience.

The Zoophilist, an English publication, publishes in its June number a story which shows the depth of moral obtuseness one must sink to in order to be an accomplished vivisectionist. It is not often an operator so simply tells the truth, but we thank the physician for this particular view of nature, which reveals the ins and the outs of this dire art, in all its spiritual degradation and physical agony. It is taken from "The Confessions of a Physician," a book written first in Russian, by V. Veresaeff, and translated into French, German and English, of course attracting wide attention everywhere because of methods disclosed regarding medical education.

The vivisector must be remorseless. Dr. Veresaeff says: "It is necessary, to fully grasp the tremendous importance of vivisection to science, to be able to understand there is but one way out of the dilemma—that of stifling the reproaches of conscience, of choking down pity, and closing one's eyes to the living agony of the animals sacrificed."

When a human being is so educated as to dehumanize him, is he worthy of trust in any position in this world? Read the following true picture, and remember it long as an example of the degenerating effect of what Ingersoll called the cruelest cruelty.

The Story of a Vivisected Monkey.

"Two monkeys of the Macacus species were purchased by our laboratory for inoculation with recurrent typhoid fever. During the three weeks they remained with us, before the commencement of our experiments, I had time to become greatly attached to them, especially to the male specimen, whom we had named 'Stepka.'

"Whenever I entered the laboratory, he used to rush up to the front bars of his roomy cage, in expectation of a present of sugar. After having fed my pets I used to let them out. The female, 'Jilda,' was more timid; she would run about the floor clumsily, looking round at me in fear.

"If I made a slight movement she would turn and fly back to the cage. Stepka, however, treated me quite as a familiar chum. As soon as I sat down he would immediately clamber on my knees and begin to search my pockets, eyebrows lifted and his large close-set eyes peering forth with comical seriousness. Pulling my percussional mallet from my breast pocket, he would set up a suppressed cry, his eyes open wide, and then commence to examine the bright instrument with minute curiosity.

"After having gazed his fill, Stepka would drop the hammer on the floor, and with the same melancholy seriousness, as if performing a necessary but very tiresome task, proceed with the search of my person.

"Carefully taking me by the beard, he would remove my glasses with his thin brown fingers. But all this soon palls on him. Stepka climbs up on my shoulder, sighs, looks about him, then, espying a corked phial, of a sudden—quick as a dart—springs on the table—his favorite amusement is the uncorking of bottles. Stepka quickly and neatly draws the stopper, stows it away in his cheek pouch, and tries to escape to the ceiling, via the blinds; he knows I will deprive him of his prize. I capture him half way. 'Tsi-tsi-tsi!' he chatters with displeasure, drawing in his head, screwing up his eyes, and trying to get away. I possess myself of his plaything. Stepka contemplates the scene sorrowfully. Suddenly his eyes brighten; he jumps on to the window sill and begins to chatter excitedly. Outside a cab is drawn up in the street; Stepka cranes his neck and stares at the horse with insatiable inquisitiveness. I stroke him, but he removes my hand impatiently with his own little paw, settles down more comfortably, and continues to scrutinize the horse. A dog runs across the street. Stepka is alert, the fur on his neck and back bristles up, his eyes become restless, and he again commences his chattering, greatly excited, and peers first through one pane, then through another. The dog runs away. Stepka scampers across the long table, upsetting glasses, and follows the dog out of sight from window to window.

"One might have passed whole hours in the rascal's company without being bored. I felt that a bond of common sympathy united us, and that we had arrived at mutual understanding.

"I did not like the idea of cutting out his spleen myself, and a comrade performed the task for me. When the wound healed, I inoculated Stepka with typhoid. When I entered the laboratory now, Stepka no more rushed to the bars as of yore; weak and ruffled, he sat motionless in his cage, staring at me with strange darkened eyes; every day he got worse; when he essayed to climb on to his perch, his hands failed him, he lost his hold and fell to the bottom of his dwelling. Finally, he became too weak to rise at all; wasted, he lay still with grinning teeth, and moaned hoarsely. And it was before my eyes that Stepka died.

"An obscure martyr to science, he lay a corpse before me. I gazed upon that pitiful little body, upon that pretty naive little face, from which the death agony even had been powerless to efface its customary serio-comic expression, and experienced a most unpleasant feeling. To tell the truth, at heart I was a little ashamed of myself. When I recalled all his engaging little tricks and funny ways, I could not drive away certain vague misgivings as to whether my crime had been, after all, so very many times less grave than if it had been perpetrated upon a child? Such sentimentality, in regard to the lower animals, strikes you as ridiculous! But are the criteria of sentimentality so very hard and fast and immutable? Two thousand years ago how loudly would a Roman Patrician have laughed at the sentimental person who expressed indignation at his casting a slave guilty of breaking a vase, to the murenae (i. e., the fish-ponds). In his eyes a slave was a 'lower animal,' too."

Continuing, the Zoophilist tells us that:

"Dr. Veresaeff had sensations which he says were very much like pricks of conscience. On entering the laboratory of a colleague, one was struck by the din of groans, barking and yelping, that filled the room; some of the dogs were in their death throes, others lay still, whining feebly. The eloquent eyes of these dying dogs ennobled by their torments were almost human in their expressiveness, and filled him with shame.

"He records the words of a great surgeon who had vivisected remorselessly; in his latter years he said, 'I would never be able to bring myself to perform the same cruel experiments upon animals which at one time I carried out so zealously and with such nonchalance.'

"'None of this can be denied,' says Veresaeff. 'Mais que faire?' and declares that 'To renounce vivisection were to place the future of medicine in jeopardy, to condemn us doctors forever to the uncertain and barren paths of clinical observation.'

If that is the result, let the doctors be condemned to the dissection of cadavers and to clinical observations.

STATE OF TEXAS.

Eighth Annual Convention of the State Association.

The Texas State National Association of Spiritualists held its annual convention Sept. 30 and Oct. 1 and 2 in San Antonio, Texas.

The usual routine of business was disposed of, the chief points of interest being the reports of the different societies of the state, which showed a marked increase in interest and growth.

The report of Mrs. Isa Wilson Kayner, who has been acting as missionary in this state a part of the past year, showed successful work and she will probably continue working in that capacity the coming year.

Mrs. Laura B. Payne also gave a report of her missionary work during the past year, which showed that she had not been idle in the great field of Texas.

The societies sending in reports of their progress were Galveston, San Antonio, Flatonia, Comanche, Houston, Marshall, Austin, Dallas, the German society of Galveston, and Smithville.

The matter of ordination was discussed at length, as applications for ordination papers had been placed before the convention to be acted upon. It was unanimously agreed upon by the convention that the Texas State Association fall in line with the N. S. A. and adopt such ordination usages as were adopted by that body at its last convention.

The officers elected for the ensuing year were as follows: Laura B. Payne, of San Antonio, president; Geo. B. Wilson, of Houston, vice-president; Mrs. Minnie Malone, of Smithville, secretary, and W. M. Smith, of Austin, treasurer. The trustees are Alice Baker, of Dallas; John W. Ring, of Galveston; H. H. Hall, of Austin; Mr. Aikin, of Beaumont, and C. E. Godfrey, of El Paso.

Mr. John W. Ring was elected delegate to the National convention to be held in St. Louis in October. Laura B. Payne was elected alternate. Dallas was selected as the next place of holding the next convention of this association.

The evening meetings consisting of interesting programs of songs, lectures and messages, were well attended and the greatest enthusiasm manifested. The mediums and speakers participating in these exercises were John W. Ring, Mrs. Nellie Noyes, Mrs. Alice Baker, Mrs. Isa W. Kayner and Laura B. Payne.

Mrs. Payne delivered the address of welcome, which was scholarly and eloquent and had the office of making all visitors, workers and delegates feel at home.

President John W. Ring responded in a forcible and eloquent address, which was listened to with rapt attention.

All the speakers and mediums seemed to be at their best, and each one was highly appreciated by the audience, and taking it all in all this has been one of the best conventions ever held in the state.

Just as the convention was about to adjourn a telegram of kindly greeting from the National president, Harrison D. Barrett, was received and gladly read. COR.

The Locality of a Will Pointed Out by a Spirit.

To the Editor:—On the night of June 14, 1904, I attended Mr. Allen W. Kiser's spiritual trumpet seance. After a while, when sitting in the circle, my uncle, Harmon Pember, came and told me his full name. He died January 10, 1848, when I was only five years old, and I did not remember him. He called me by name, and told me in the presence of all in the circle, that I must go out to his sister's house in Pemberville, Ohio, and I would find his will in a little box on the shelf in the pantry, and to take it to Judge Millard and he would probate it, and see justice done for him, and to the living kin, my sister, myself and niece. I did not have any faith in what he said, but to convince myself I went out to Pemberville June 18, and to my surprise the will was there, and I received it from his sister. It had been concealed in the dark for 56 years. On my receiving it I complied with his message and took it to Judge Millard and he filed it for probate in the court house in Bowling Green, Ohio, July 16, and was admitted, July 18, 1904.

There are lots of land involved in it, in Pemberville, which has enhanced in value and no legal title to it; but since the dark mystery has come and cast its light on me by receiving the spirit message, it will not only make me a progressive thinker, but will lighten up the links of title of the present owners of the land whereby they may receive clean legal titles for same, and I expect, since the will has come to life again I do not hesitate to say that the great power behind the throne will see that justice will shine on us here on this middle circuit where life exists.

A Battle Royal,

DYSPEPSIA CURED

If you Suffer from Dyspepsia, Stomach, Liver, or Bowel Trouble of any kind, read this liberal offer. IT WILL BE WORTH MONEY TO YOU.

Do you suffer from dyspepsia, indigestion, or stomach, liver, or bowel trouble of any kind? If you do, why not let us cure you? We do not mean Help you by dosing you with a strong, stimulating Sods and Rhubarb Compound, or patent "Dyspepsia Pill." Such things will stimulate and ease temporarily, but in the end will only irritate and further weaken the already diseased and weakened membranes. We Will Completely and Permanently Cure You. We will go to the very foundation of your trouble, will remove the causes, strengthen and tone up the affected membranes, perfect the digestion, regulate and strengthen the bowels, and make you as strong and hearty as you ever were. We could give you testimonials by the thousand of those we have cured of stomach troubles in all forms and stages, but they would not tell to you what the treatment will do for YOU. The only absolute proof is in the treatment itself, and knowing the Wonderful Cures we have made for others, and believing that we have a treatment that will Positively Cure any case, no matter how complicated or long standing, or how many have failed in the past, that we will send a two weeks' treatment to any one desiring to test it. Many are cured by this test treatment alone. Why not make a trial of it yourself and learn what it will do for you. IT IS FREE. Address Dr. Peebles Institute of Health, 28 Main St., Battle Creek, Mich.

IMPORTANT

Owing to the fact that the courts have in every case decided against Psychic Healers who advertise to cure the sick without drugs, where the case has been between the U. S. government and a Healer (deciding that it is a clear case of intent to defraud) to advertise to diagnose also, without leading symptoms being given. Therefore I have decided, as a physician in good standing, to not advertise my gift of Psychic Healing, but will diagnose disease and not ask a fee for so doing. SPIRITUALISM'S OPPORTUNITY.

An Earnest Plea for Purity in Our Ranks, and for More Efficient Humanitarian Work.

Of the many good ideas advanced by the able contributors of The Progressive Thinker concerning the evils of fraudulent mediumship, its cause and cure, none I think strikes the keynote more clearly than B. F. French, of San Francisco, Cal., when he says:

"We are giving our central thought to the mere occult and neglecting the industrial and material, which practically are the foundation of all mental, moral and spiritual activity."

So long as the majority of Spiritualists place the phenomena above the philosophy and the practical application, or rather say THE LIVING OF OUR SUBLIME RELIGION, just so long will dishonest mediums monopolize the field of mediumship, and unless we wish to see Spiritualism with its infinite possibilities as a factor in man's development, disintegrated and weakened, fake mediumship must be banished and driven out from our ranks as a wolf from the fold.

After all that has been said and written regarding this point, it would seem that further argument were unnecessary; every candid thinker must see the necessity, nay the imperative duty of eliminating this monstrous evil.

When we recognize the existence of an evil, the next question is, what are we going to do about it? And some practical and concerted plan of action is better than a useless waste of time in words.

As the editor of The Progressive Thinker so justly and truly says, "HONEST MEDIUMS SHOULD BE SUSTAINED."

We cannot banish commercial mediumship altogether, as that would be a cruel injustice to our honest mediums, as well as a great loss to our cause. True mediumship has been the prime factor in the revival of Modern Spiritualism, and by and through it has been formulated the philosophy and present scientific status of the grandest religion the world has ever known.

No, clearly we cannot and ought not to suppress our honest mediums. "What, then, shall we do to be saved?"

The plan proposed by Will C. Hodge, is both practical and just, and needs only to be applied, viz., "that of forever debarring all mediums found guilty of defrauding the public in any way whatsoever, from the platforms of all camp associations and local societies, also from holding seances on our camp grounds." And not only that, but when a medium is caught deliberately practicing fraud, he or she should be prosecuted to the full extent of the law in such cases made and provided.

It is not right to temporize in this matter any longer; this evil must be grappled with in an effectual manner, if it is ever to be suppressed; we have talked about it long enough; action is what is demanded of us now. And on the other hand (as there are two sides to every question), is it not our duty as Spiritualists individually to be more careful in selecting the mediums we patronize, and more discriminating in regard to the phenomena obtained through their agency, and not swallow anything that may be given us, like young robins in the nest.

This plan if faithfully pursued cannot fail to in time drive out the greater portion of the frauds infesting our ranks; make it impossible for them to make a living by their nefarious practices, and they must perforce seek other fields.

Now as to Spiritualism's golden opportunity, what is it? In the present disturbed conditions existing on this planet of ours, when everything seems to be in a state of upheaval which always precedes the transition from lower to higher altitudes of development, one of those periods when "the old order changeth, giving place to new, and God fulfills himself in many ways," in such a time as this which we are now passing through, the vital question arises, what is the mission of Spiritualism, and what our duty as her disciples?

We say that our religion has been a greater factor in breaking the shackles of superstition and freeing the minds and souls of men from the tyranny of creeds and dogmas, than any and all other forces combined; also that it has demonstrated the fact most universally longed for by the human race through all ages, the blessed truth of the soul's immortality; also the possibility of communication between the two worlds, has literally erected or rather discovered the bridge between.

All true, but is this all the mission of Spiritualism? Are we now to rest upon the heights attained, and congratulate ourselves upon our superior knowledge and intuition, and forever discuss and discuss it, or are we going to join our forces and unitedly and effectively exert our influence toward redressing human wrongs, and the evils which exist everywhere?

"Are there no beggars at our gates?" No ignorant, homeless, starving children upon whom the sins of the fathers are being visited with crushing weight? No social evil representing bestial manhood and degraded womanhood, the foulest blot upon our boasted civilization? No political rottenness festering in this nobly planned government of ours?

In view of all these glaring wrongs to be grappled with and righted before the human race can be truly civilized, have we not as Spiritualists great opportunities and duties confronting us? The greatest, most inspired teachers who have blessed the world, have taught that our highest duty is to love one another, and that only by helping one another can we develop the God within ourselves and add our mite toward the progress and advancement of mankind.

The orthodox church to-day with all its shortcomings, and especially the Salvation Army with its shelter depots and rescue homes, can give us pointers in the matter of humanitarian work. The establishment of a Medium's Relief Fund was a start in the right direction; but let us not stop there, nor confine ourselves exclusively to work in our own ranks. "The world should be our country; to do good our religion." We are not poorer than other denominations and do not believe in the erection of costly temples, so, unlike our orthodox brethren, will have that much more to devote to the cause of humanity.

Spiritualism has reached the point now where it does not need to rely upon mediumship alone for converts; our national and state associations, and local societies, with their able expounders of its philosophy, together with the progressive lyceum, will insure a steady growth in numbers, provided we as a body maintain the dignity of the cause and prove to the world that Spiritualism is all that we claim for it.

We say that our religion is not a matter of faith but of knowledge; that we know whereof we speak, and if "faith without works is dead," what, then, shall be said of knowledge without works?

Spiritualism came to bless and uplift the human race, descending from worlds on high flashed upon the sensitive, receptive souls of earth by glorified, ministering spirits, conscious of the needs of the great human family, and we as Spiritualists hold in trust mighty possibilities and responsibilities, and the grave question confronts us, what shall we do with them?

There can be no higher mission or purpose for any religious body than humanitarian work; in fact it supersedes all else, and is it not clearly our duty as Spiritualists along with our quest of things spiritual, to exert and direct our best efforts and influence in the cause of humanity and the righting of some of its grievous wrongs; the lifting and easing of some of its heavy burdens?

If "the greatest study of mankind is man" might it not be as truly said, the greatest duty of mankind is man?

Synopsis of Lecture by Harry J. Moore.

Text: Proverbs22, 6th verse.

We all have souls and we certainly want them saved. In the first place, Spiritualism demonstrates that inasmuch as some spirits have returned and manifested their consciousness after having passed through the experience called death, all human beings survive the eclipse called death.

In the second place, to my way of thinking at least, Spiritualism does not, nor can it, scientifically demonstrate immortality. It does not naturally follow that, if a soul even lives thousands of years in spirit life, it will live on until eternity ends. We should therefore put forth as much effort in preparing to be immortal as we do in preparing our bodies so that they may live to three score years and ten or four score, or in the cultivation of our minds to keep them from sinking into atrophy or death.

I am not so much concerned in having my soul saved in the hereafter as I am in helping souls in this life.

Some people tell us that if we do not believe in certain doctrines our souls will be lost. These people, however, do not give us their authority for this warning. Now let us reason: If God made us, then we can not lose ourselves from our creator. Again: We can not lose ourselves from ourselves providing we live always in either heaven or hell, and all orthodox churches teach that we shall at last at some time in the future either suffer or enjoy to all eternity. Now the only sane explanation is, that we will drift from our relations and friends in the next life, and if this be true, then that is nothing more than what obtains in this life; so we as Spiritualists are justified in affirming that life in the realm of the soul is so near like this life, that it will take some people quite awhile before they can distinguish the difference. In other words I mean to say that there are spirits who neither believe, nor can they be convinced, for some time at least, that they have really passed through the experience called death.

My subject this evening being, "What must we do to be saved? or the best way to redeem the human race," I must proceed, giving my way of viewing it, to submit to you what I think is the only solution that if put into practice will eventually redeem the human race.

Is it not reasonable to suppose that if we put around the mothers of the future generation the proper conditions, we will have a better generation of boys and girls? Is it not also reasonable to suppose that if we as men and women take as much interest in the instruction we give our children, even before they are born into this world, there will be fewer criminals in two or three generations hence? In substance, my dear friends, we have got to begin one hundred years or more before our children are born, to instruct and mold them! When we learn that maternity is the very Christ, the only savior of mankind; when we open our eyes to this glorious truth, children will not be damned into this world, as most of them are now, but properly born into it! O, for an awakening to our duty along this line! I can see the dawning of the day when men and women will be willing to sacrifice pleasures for the sake of the future generations! I know that when that day dawns we will take each other by the hand and we will say, brother or sister, we are all united link into link to the endless chain of cause and effect. Then Spiritualism will have indeed served one of its greatest missions on earth, and the angels will again sing, "Glory for the good wherever and whenever found, and on earth peace to men and women of good will!"

Unity in Diversity.

I have seen the surface of flowing rivers made smooth, solid ice by cold. I have seen this ice, congealed water, disintegrate by warmth. During the process of disintegration, I have seen it go rushing down the great rivers like a cavalry charge of Cossacks and sweep away iron bridges that safely carried the commerce of a nation on its mighty freight trains. I have seen these battalions of ice charge and beat and thunder at the gates of the imperial cities of civilization.

I have seen the surface of human thought petrified by conversation, egotism and inaction. Under the warmth of wisdom's operations, I have seen this petrification break into countless projectiles and blindly at first, hurl themselves against the walled cities of error until citadel and dome and tower reeled and fell.

Such is the condition on earth now. As the huge blocks of ice that beat down all obstacles to their movements, finally disintegrated and became one with their primal elements, so will individual opinions—diversity of thought—melt and blend into a harmonious whole.

When all operations are cognized as wisdom, we shall have "Unity in Diversity."

While we may agree to differ in our concept of wisdom's purposes, we will all agree that all operations are caused by the wisdom of Infinite Life operating through the law of necessity.

"LIFE IN SPIRIT REALMS."

Realistic Statements are Urgently Wanted.

I beg permission and opportunity to express a moiety of my grateful sense of indebtedness to Mrs. Carlyle Petersilea and her band of personal inspirers for the invaluable presentation of the truth concerning Life in Spiritual Realms. For the pleasure and profit, the instruction and confirmation of realistic life in the spheres, as written out through her hand—I have only gratitude and blessings.

These several chapters from the various communicating friends are as natural as life itself. They bear the impress of truth thoughout the series and happily corroborate what has occasionally been communicated by and through others.

In this connection the graphic letter in The Progressive Thinker of September 17, from spirit Abby A. Judson, was especially valuable for its many clear statements and minute account of conditions existing "over there." She was known while living here as one possessed with a good amount of sturdy common sense combined with unusual spiritual insight, which finding expression in her writings furnished food for instruction and profit. The same mental and spiritual traits, augmented by later experiences, give her present observations from "over the border," a value above any material price.

Her philosophical reflections concerning the other half of evolution, namely involution, were specially satisfactory to the writer, as confirming the view he took in remarks made before a ladies' club in New York City, twenty-five years ago; and since then, through a somewhat extended correspondence with Descartes' chosen instrument, Dr. Nelson, of Boston.

The details of life in the Summerland from the standpoint of an intelligent participant, must be profoundly welcome to all students of spiritual philosophy.

Generalizations, in accordance with individual perception of spiritual laws, we have had in abundance; but particulars, regarding so-called daily affairs, of common duties, of personal employments and acts performed—these have been wanting.

Now by way of complementing, or as supplementary to the many general descriptions of life on the other side of the Great Divide, given by returning spirits ever since the inauguration of this distinctive movement known as Modern Spiritualism, there is great need of a succinct summary of everyday existence so to speak, a minute, realistic picture in graphic word-painting, of those concrete verities that constitute real life in the Beyond—from a practical, matter-of-fact personality, a dweller in spirit life.

What Miss Judson has to say of the great difficulty heretofore of ordinary human instruments spiritually shadowing forth to any satisfactory degree of fullness, home realities and relationships, has certainly long been a cause of deep regret to all seekers after spiritual knowedge. May we not reasonably hope and expect after this, not only a fuller presentation of spiritual facts comprehensively considered, but a far more complete account of those actualities which go to make up the sum total of Life in Spiritual Realms.

GEORGE A. BACON.

A Spirit Tells of the Death of His Mortal Body.

In reading the account of Mr. Forbes in your paper of October 1, I concluded to have a talk with him as a spirit, and find what became of him. According to his statement he went by the way of White Cloud, Mich. At that point he missed his train, and he then tried to go on a freight which was there, ready to go north, but they would take no passengers. He, however, made up his mind he was going anyway, and if they would not take him as a passenger, he would steal his ride, and with that object in view, he crawled on to a brake-beam under a box car for his ride. He was in a cramped position, and after he had rode about two miles he tried to move, and in doing so he lost his balance and fell off, his head striking a tie and killing him instantly. He says he lay there on the track about an hour and a half, when a man came along. He was a farmer, and lived probably about a mile from there. He is considered a good straight man, but not very well fixed financially. At first he thought he would notify the people at White Cloud, but concluded he would see if he had anything in his pockets, and he found about $175, and also a watch, which he took and thought he had better hide the body in place of saying anything about it. So he took it, and laid it under some bushes close by the road and covered it with some brush. The place is on the right hand side as you go north, and it is about two miles north of White Cloud, Mich., where this happened. There is an embankment of the railway of about four feet high.

The above is the statement of the spirit Forbes, and if not correct, he is to blame, as I wrote it just as he informed me, and I hope this will lead to the recovery of the body.

PAST—PRESENT—FUTURE.

Among the many curious and interesting things that have come to St. Louis in connection with the World's Fair, our attention has been called to a series of groups of oil paintings representing Past, Present and Future, by G. A. Kestelic, of 3141 Bell avenue, St. Louis. There are ten groups, fifteen pictures in each group, five for each epoch of time represented. The groups are as follows: Art, War, Street Scenes, Family Life, Industry, Amusements, Spirit Manifestation, Religion and Justice. The first five in each series represents the most primitive ideas. The middle pictures or Present, being a chaotic combination of savagery and civilization, while the third, Future, represents scientific, co-operative activities. For instance, in Art, the first group pictures the sphinx, obelisks, pyramids, war and death.

The second represents the building of war-ships and church spires, priestly robes, beautiful sculpture and implements of destruction. In the third group Science has taken the place of Superstition. The building and architecture representing scientific demonstration.

In the War group, the first set of pictures is a combination of barbarous cruelties and crude methods of expression. The Red Cross and temporary hospitals make their appearance in the second group, though scalping, lynching and inventions for cruelty have a prominent place. But in the group marked Future, war ships have been turned into free excursion steamers, cannon are used for shooting loaves of bread to the hungry, and electricity is used for the extermination of many evils belonging to our present so-called civilization.

The first street scene represents the humiliation of the people before kings and priestcraft and other degrading practices. The second set pictures our present recklessness of human life, in machinery, street cars and other engines of destruction. While in the third, all these evils are done away with. In the garden-like streets, human life is held sacred and machinery made to do its will.

In the group representing Family Life, the first set is a pleasing representation of pastoral patriarchism. "Home, sweet home," love and labor in rural life combined.

The second or Present, is less pleasing, showing married flirts, masculine cooks and general family disruptions. The third or Future depicts co-operative family life with labor-saving machinery and general good feeling.

The Occupation series vividly portrays the different labored methods of the past with machinery and human competition of the present, though the introduction of the sweat shop, poison cigarette factories and Chinese laundries of the present is by no means an improvement. But in the Future rain is made and rocks are melted by electricity with ponderous machinery to plow down hills and level them for agriculture.

The amusements of Past, Present and Future vary as does everything else. Cock fighting, bloodless bull fighting, with other questionable means of entertainment in the present have replaced the barbarities of the ancient arena where human life is the sacrifice. While in the Future is represented the forces of nature utilized, tree planting, mountain camping, etc.

Religion and the evidence of spirit existence are paired together. In the past the Holy Ghost and the persecution of religion is depicted. In the Present there is hypocrisy and trickery in the seance room and in the pulpit with evidence however that worship and belief in the unseen is not a delusion.

While in the Future, faith has taken the place of knowledge and the denizens of both Celestial and Terrestrial spheres, walk hand in hand.

The instructions of the past are more noticeable by their absence, with the evidence of ignorance and brutality in the pictures of human torture and the fact that writing had to be made a life study. But in the Future amusement and instruction are pleasingly combined.

The last series which represents Justice, in the first set of pictures rulers are depicted as having absolute authority over the lives of their cringing subjects. Cruelty instead of Justice sitting in the seat of power. In the Present cruelty has evolved to selfishness although some humane measures have been introduced. In the Future crime is recognized as disease and treated accordingly, and the Sunlight of Truth is permitted to penetrate the dark recesses of life and glorify it.

Notwithstanding the counter attractions at the World's Fair, the societies here all have good attendance, and often old friends from other parts drop into the meetings, reminding us of the comings and goings of camp-meeting times.

Moses Hull's engagement at the Church of Spiritual Unity meeting at the Odeon, brought excellent results, not only to Spiritualism but to Socialism as well. At least his arguments along the line of co-operation, free land and public ownership were unanswerable though non-political.

Dear old John Hutchinson, of the once famous Hutchinson family of singers is still in the city. He is called the "Peace Patriarch." His long white hair and beard, clear complexion and sparkling eyes make a striking picture. He says, "I am eighty-five years young," and to hear him sing and play, both in public and at social gatherings, made his extreme youth seem scarcely possible.

It has been our privilege to attend a course of W. J. Colville's wonderful inspirational lectures. Like good wine, Brother Colville improves with age, for he has gained rather than lost during the seven years since we heard him before.

His optimistic views of life both here and hereafter can have but one effect upon his hearers—that of lifting them from the negative condition of disease, despondency and misery, to the positive one of health, hope and happiness.

His idea of purity being an attainment, rather than a gift of nature to be treasured and if lost never regained, will take the stigma from repentant criminals and give them hope and self-esteem. What an incentive to a better life this idea would give to fallen women whom other women regard as having committed the unpardonable sin. "Innocence and purity," says Mr. Colville, "are not synonymous."

The New Thought movement is progressing rapidly towards its fruition in the congress to be held here on the 26th of this month. New Thought and Spiritualism have so much in common it is hard to consider them separately.

The N. S. A. meeting here just prior to the New Thought convention and in the same month, we hope will form a bond of union for the progression of humanity on both planes of life.

Heaven a Condition of Love and Peace.

One of our good orthodox friends would say, "The people on the wrecked steamer, General Slocum, were ready to go, but God gave the Spiritualists another chance." You see it makes all the difference in the world, that little point of view from which we take our stand. This brings to mind a personal encounter with a most devout orthodox lady, a visitor to Oregon. She thought our Band of Mercy work was lovely, but was horrified to find that I believed all life to be immortal. She immediately proceeded to instruct me in regard to the "human chance of being lost—let alone animals who had no souls." But the explosion came when I informed her that according to natural law there could be no loss; that a continuity of existence for one, meant a continuity of existence for all; that our condition depended upon the life we lived, and not upon our belief or acceptance of any creed or dogma—and as progression was a law of nature, those poor souls she called "lost," would evolve from their darkened condition into a state of light.

"No! it cannot be!" Heaven would be too crowded. There must be some lost!"

Think of it a pretty, sweet-faced young woman insisting that there must be some of the human family lost (and all creatures) so there would be room for herself and those that believed as she did!

As she turned the corner of the street these words floated back: "Mrs. Flint, you will never go to heaven as long as you believe as you do." As heaven is a condition of love and peace to me, I kept my heaven and sent love and kindly wishes to the poor soul so blinded by orthodoxy.

But you will want to know about Spiritualism here. This is the psychic age in Corvallis as well as elsewhere. Persons are continually coming to me to learn the meaning of this or that manifestation—or the unfoldment of psychic powers. And sometimes a bit of mediumship is reported.

The First Spiritual Union of Corvallis does not expect to hold public services before October, but some of the members are getting restless for their meetings, and the outsiders are making inquiries. My health is improving, and voice coming back. Expect to be able to do my part of the work when the time comes.

The New Life.

An Invaluable Lesson Taught in Allegory.

There lived in the Land of Materialism, a man named Barzillai. And Barzillai was ill at ease and filled with discontent, for he had trod in the paths of self all the days of his life.

And it came to pass in the evening, there came over him a shadow, and this was the shadow of remorse. And whilst this shadow was upon him, he fell asleep and had a dream. And the dream was thus:

There appeared, as it seemed to Barzillai, an angel, of noble mien and commanding stature, and the angel spake unto Barzillai: "Unless thou forsake thine evil ways, and undertake a new life, thou art doomed to dwell in misery and unhappiness. For the course thou hast until now pursued is that of the evil-doer. I say unto thee: Arise, get thee hence, and take thought of the future state, for no man shall taste of its blessings unless he be worthy of it."

And Barzillai answered the angel and said: "Disappointment upon disappointment has been my lot, and I am worn with strife and contentions my life until now has held. But I see no relief until my life I lose, and then I have gained nothing, for I can take nothing with me, and while here I have had naught but struggles. Tell me, I pray thee, who art thou, and what must I do to gain the eternal bliss?"

And solemnly the angel spake: "I am Love, and am come to show thee that for which thy spirit yearns."

And the angel closed the eyes of Barzillai and took him by the hand and led him on.

And when they had come to their journey's end, Love opened the eyes of Barzillai, and behold such was that which Barzillai saw:

There were spirit forms, clad in the whitest and finest of robes, and there was music in the air, but no band was there. And the music was sweet and never has any mortal heard like. And the spirit forms danced to this music, and the dance was a minuet. And their feet did not touch the ground, they glided above it, gracefully and fair, and as they danced garlands of flowers entwined them, and the garlands appeared in air, and each blossom and each leaf shed music. And their faces shone with joy and happiness, and not a word was spoken, but the air was filled with music coming from an invisible band. The scene was one of perfect harmony.

And the angel again closed the eyes of Barzillai and led him away, saying: "Such as thou hast seen is the reward of the just and the faithful. To gain this reward thou must be born into a new life. Overcome thine evil ways with good, forget self in the doing for others, and set up for thyself lofty ambitions. I have shown thee the spirit world, and having seen it, discernment has been taught thee, and it will not be difficult for thee to choose that which is right. And forget not to inform thy brethren, for thou canst not do well for thyself unless thou also doest for them."

And then the angel disappeared.

And it was in the morning and Barziliai awoke, and he bethought himself of the vision and he was filled with a new joy.

And he went and told all his people, and his people's people, and they went in great multitudes to acquire eternal bliss.

And before they began their journey they girded themselves with the garment of determination, and put on their heads the helmet of perseverance, and in their hands they carried the staff of wisdom.

And they came to a field filled with beautiful flowers, but the flowers had hidden thorns and it was not good to put hand to these flowers. And the flowers were those called Pride. And there were some of the multitude, who, beholding these flowers, were filled with admiration and wonder, and they dropped their staff of wisdom. And having lost wisdom they were filled with desire, and they set out to gather the flowers. And in so doing they lost their helmets of perseverance, and the hidden thorns caught their garments of determination and held them fast, and they were unable to proceed with the multitude.

There were those who had continued the journey and were anxious to rest when they had come to a place called Slothville.

And Slothville was beautiful to the eye. It was as though all of Slothville was contained in one great grove. There were rustic seats under trees, and the trees cast a cooling shade over them. There was a rippling brook singing a merry song, and its banks were clothed with grasses green. There were birds warbling their songs of joy. And the whole place was one suggestive of ease and rest.

Now, there were some who had grown tired of their journey and upon beholding this grove cried: "We will rest for a while; there is time to reach the eternal bliss, and when we have rested we will arise and speed on our way to follow our companions." And they turned in at Slothville, there to rest, and left their companions.

And those who had continued on their journey came to a place called Prosperity Station, and all stopped to view the place, and the city was well to look upon. All its dwellings showed thrift and care, and the inhabitants also gave evidence that disappointment and poverty were unknown; and behold, this pleased the followers of Barzillai, and they said: "We shall tarry here; this is the place we are in search of."

But Barzillai spake: "Nay, onward, still onward, away from this place, for here is where spirit meets foes and we must not challenge opposition. On again, I say; on, till we reach the true state of bliss. This is not it."

But the majority were content to stay. So Barzillai and his followers of about thirty were obliged to proceed alone.

Now, after they had traveled a day they came to a place called Deception. Its entrance was smooth and of crystal, and its streets were the same. And there were some that entered therein and as they walked on the crystal, they were carried further into the city, for the crystal was laid on rollers.

Now, there were left twelve that remained with Barzillai, and in the course of their travels they entered into a small woods, called Laxity, and its trees and shrubs were fragrant and shed an intoxicating odor, producing an indolent effect.

And all those with Barzillai tarried and inhaled freely of the aroma, and they became heavy and unable to move. And Barzillai left them and set out alone. Yet he was undaunted, for his gown of determination had not been sullied during his travels.

And he came to a large tree and this was the tree of Weariness, and he sat down to rest, and behold, he heard a voice call: "Arise and tarry not; thou hast been faithful, do not lose courage. Arise."

And Barzillai saw a faint light in the distance, and he sped himself towards it, and the light grew brighter until he could discern the gates from when came the light. And the gates were of gold. And there met him at the gate the angel of Love, and the angel led Barzillai inside. And Barzillai saw that which he had seen in the dream. And his heart was filled with love, and he turned to the angel and said: "I pray thee, grant me to go in search of my fellow travelers, and let me help them and others onward to where I now am."

And the angel answered and spake: "It is well, Barzillai, thine heart has been filled with the divine, and so it yearns for universal peace and harmony. Go thou, and help thy brethren."

And Barzillai having entered the spirit stage, traveled with great speed through space, and set about to find those who had deserted him.

And arriving at the Pride field he released the wayward from the clutches of Pride and enabled them to continue their ourney.

At Slothville and Prosperity Station he wrought influence for progression; as also he did at Deception and Laxity.

And thus he was ready to remain at the Eternal Bliss, there to dwell.

And again he arrived at the Golden Gates and Love awaited him and crowned him with the Crown of life, saying, "Thou faithful one, such is thy reward. Thou shalt dwell in peace and joy, and harmony and love forever."

AIM LOW.

That Is the Advice Given by N. E. A.

The young man is told to aim high. That is all right. One must have ideals, but when it comes to execution, do as the commander in battle tells his soldiers to do—aim low.

Aim at men's hearts.

If you aim at men's heads they may dodge. Or, if you should hit the head, it is surrounded by a bony structure that is hard to penetrate. The heart is more vulnerable.

Mr. Preacher:

Aim low. Aim at men's hearts. If you attack their heads they will argue with you till the cows come home. Orthodoxy may be your doxy and heterodoxy their doxy. But if you preach the simple gospel to them you must aim low. The gospel is a heart message.

Mr. Editor:

Aim low. If you want your editorials to be read by the people and not simply by the intellectual few, aim at the heart. It doesn't matter so much what the people believe about politics as that they be honest and true. If they love justice and righteousness they will "wabble right." Your duty is ethical.

Mr. Artist:

Aim low. Tolstoi's definition of art is true. True art is the message from the heart of the artist to the heart of the people. That is true whether the art is music, or oratory, or poetry, or painting, or literature. The things that move and thrill and sway—the heart-throbbing things—are the ones that live. If you aim at the head the critic will get you. If you aim at the heart you can snap your fingers at the critic.

Mr. Man and Mrs. Woman:

Aim low. Keep husband's and wife's hearts warm toward each other. That is the only way to make the home safe. Get a string around the hearts of your children. It is the only string that will hold. In the home, aim low.

But out of the heart are the issues of life.

Aim low N. E. A.

AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Bible as a Text-Book in Our Public Schools.

Now that the question of the propriety of introducing the Bible as a text-book into our public schools is agitating the contributors to the "Battle Ground of Modern Thought," of the Sunday Record-Herald, it may not be amiss to pursue its investigation a little further.

If the measure is advocated with the view of checking the decline in the interest of old theology, its adoption in my opinion, would have the opposite effect, or that of accelerating such decline. That the interest in old theology is declining, is acknowledged even by the orthodox church. Prof. Scott, of the Congregational Theological Seminary, Chicago, has recently said:

"One result of religious uncertainty is the disappearance of the theologian. The younger scholars, under radical influences, have turned away from theology; so that it is now very difficult in America to find men qualified to become professors of theology."

The Presbyterian of Philadelphia, says:

"It is said that in our theological seminaries very few students are making a speciality of systematic theology. The times do not favor fine theological distinctions and definitions. Doctrine is not prized, nor understood, as in the days of our fathers. Doubt and uncertainty abound. Loose thinking is dominant. All sorts of opinions prevail in and out of the church. A hearing is given to all kinds of isms. Indifference in regard to what men believe obtains. The reading of the day can hardly be called theologic, even in ministerial circles.

Without calling in question the cause of this present general attitude toward old theology, as given in the foregoing quotations from orthodox sources, viz.: "Loose thinking," etc., otherwise than to say, in passing, that its opposite, or close thinking, profound thinking, scientific thinking, rational thinking, progressive thinking may be found to be an important factor in it, I maintain that as long as this is the status of theology, it is entitled to no place in the curriculum of the public schools of this country.

When the public school pupil is obliged to study theology, if he studies it, not "loosely," he will learn that centuries before the time of the Christian's Christ, Chrishna was represented as the true savior, as God incarnate in man, as born of the Virgin Devoki, as having died for the sins of the people, as having arisen from the dead, and as now sitting on the right hand of God. He will learn also, that Buddha is represented as the true Savior of men, as God incarnate, as having been born of the Virgin Maya, as having been tempted by the devil, as having fasted, died, rose from the dead, and ascended into heaven. He will discover also, that Mithra is represented as the true mediator between God and man, as having suffered and died to redeem men from original sin, and given to man the plan of salvation. He will also learn that Osiris is represented as the true savior of the world, whose birth, death and resurrection were miraculous. He was born on the 25th of December, over five thousand years ago. He rose from the dead on the 25th of March, Easter, and now sits at the right hand of God as the only mediator between God and man.

Indeed the public school pupil in his studies of theology, will find quite a number of saviors, all having been sons of God, all having been born of virgins, all went about doing good and working miracles, all were put to death by enemies, all rose from the dead, all ascended into heaven, all are now sitting on the right hand of God to pass judgment upon all men after they die. Of what benefit will all this be to the public school student? It will take up much of his valuable time, and to what purpose?

If, as science now teaches, man lived and died thousands of years before Adam put in an appearance, how can the public school student accept the teaching of the church that physical death is the direct result of Adam's transgression? Not until theology attains unto something like scientific accuracy, should the Bible be adopted as a text-book in our public schools.

Thoughts on Auras.

The human aura is not a definite something that can move from place to place.

Aura is derived from the Greek word meaning air. Each soul has its own rate of vibration and operates through the chemistry of life in the functions of the body, thereby causing the phenomena of blood circulation, heart action, and the marvelous movement of brain cells—a mystery deep and yet unsolved.

The new concept of electricity—or the effect of substance in motion named electricity—explains soul aura. The effect of the vibration (soul motion) or life, on etheric molecules vibrates the air for a certain distance in a circle from the solar plexus—centre—which is the dynamo of the body, at a rate that produces appearances or colors.

No one carries his aura from place to place, but simply vibrates the substance called air wherever he goes.

Auras change tints under different environments, planetary conditions or new concepts of life.

SEEKING THE LIGHT.

Some Peculiar Teachings Controverted.

In the Sept. 17 number of The Progressive Thinker, Emma M. Ward of New Canton, Ill., writes an article with the above heading, and speaks of some things in an exaggerated manner. In referring to this, the editor says, "The spirit of toleration should exist on all sides in reference to the opinion of others," and he further says, "Some of the statements made in the following communication diverge from the commonly accepted opinions of Spiritualists, and we hope for more light thereon at no distant day."

In other words, he wants light from anybody; our editor possesses the wisdom to explain these spiritual phenomena, but he throws open his paper as an open court or conference platform whereon his readers can express their opinions pro and con, even to exaggeration. If we, as readers, don't like the ideas we can put in our con and help to make the paper more interesting, but don't stop your paper if you don't like all the ideas. If you are so wise that you know more than the editor and all of the correspondents, don't stop your paper, but send in your opinions and criticisms in good manuscript form, so the rest of us readers can enjoy your philosophic explanations.

We all have different experiences and "no two can see exactly alike on any important subject," as the editor says.

Emma M. Ward says, "For the first time in the history of the world, spirits are able to demonstrate the underlying principles of spirit manifestations."

My! what a great assertion! How does she know what has or has not been done in all ages past?

"How many do you think are ready for spirit teaching not blended with mortal force?"

Why, all of us are ready to learn any truth. As we yet live in the mortal, how can anything we experience be outside of our senses? or be not blended with mortal force? Any force is blended with the machine or medium through which it comes or acts.

"Until mortal spirit power has been demonstrated, and its limit of action, independent of the body, reached, no mediums should think they have connection with spirits out of the body."

All the actions of any and all human minds are constantly demonstrating and illustrating "mortal spirit power" and "its limit of action." As all mortals are not alike in their development and growth, we can not lay down a rule or "limit of action" of their "mortal spirit powers" independent of the body."

When a medium is alone and is controlled in private with such strong emotions as to imitate another person's character, that medium has a good reason for thinking she has some connection with spirits out of the body, for no such mortal is acquainted with her or even thinking about her. Then who but a spirit out of the body is controlling her? Even if one or two persons were present, the medium may be controlled to do and say things unknown to their wishes, so their minds or "mortal spirit power" have nothing to do in controlling the medium.

"Consequently all manifestation, be it good or bad, has been charged to spirits out of the body, when the truth of the matter is, there is absolutely no true spirit power there, no connection whatever."

What a broad assertion! What a great exaggeration! If Emma M. Ward keeps on writing thus, her own "atmospheric conditions" won't be very good and she will surely need to "go beyond the mountains," as she expresses herself.

THE PHONOGRAPH.

The Part It Can Be Made to Play in Spirit Manifestations.

I wish to say a few words of the grand circles we had during the last two weeks of September, Mrs. J. De Bartholomew being the medium.

I have a good Edison phonograph, and have practiced for quite a while to manage the same in the dark, and I wish every reader of your grand paper could hear the result made by the spirits through the trumpet. My son Henry made four records, two talking and two singing; the great Indian chief Tecumseh, gave us a grand lecture. The great man, Bismarck, had to use two records to finish his speech, and they are as plain as those made by the Edison Company.

Spirit Tim, D. L. Herrick's control, whom people call Timothy, made a comic record, and very loud. Abraham Lincoln also made one in a fine lecture. You would surely think every one of the fourteen records made, was done by spirits in the mortal body. Of course they had to be made at two different sittings, as it takes a great power to make records. The spirits have to talk very loud through the trumpet which they hold, and then again through the trumpet which is attached to the phonograph.

Mrs. Edward came to my house. She has a husband and three sons in the spirit world. I asked her if she would like to hear a new record made by a great man—part song and part speech. She never thought of a spirit record, but when she heard the song and message given and the name Tom Edward, her own son, his familiar song and message, she was surprised.

Mrs. Bartholomew is now at St. Louis. In October she will be in Brooklyn, N. Y. I hope some one there will get the chance to make some records from departed friends, as such are to me worth more than all the money on earth.

MODERN CIVILIZATION.

Its Permanency Soberly Considered.

Starting with the assertion that only the truth is immortal, and that the statement is a true one is apparent to ordinary intelligence, hence the fact becomes clear that no human institution, however magnificent it may appear, causing the builders to exclaim, "see what we have constructed, nothing before ever equaled it in glory; it is a temple reared upon an everlasting foundation," can be permanent, for it is of necessity more or less influenced by that finite condition imperfection.

Let us make an inspection of the foundation upon which our modern civilization rests, and see in what measure it is established upon the truth. It has transmitted to it from the past conditions that were everything but perfect. It is trying to improve upon them and in a measure has succeeded, showing that it has established itself upon the truth as far as it is capable of understanding what it implies.

We have the history of ancient civilizations which in their day, when in the height of their splendor, appeared to the superficial observer to be established upon an enduring foundation, but were are they? Gone, disappeared like the dew of the morning before the rising sun, and some of the most ancient of them have so completely vanished that only the faintest traces of their existence is left as a testimony and evidence of their greatness. It is not from a spirit of modern boastfulness when we assert that with all their greatness they lacked some of the elements needful for permanency which have been incorporated in our modern civilization. They were without doubt the best the human understanding of that time was capable of evolving, bringing forth from the great laboratory of universal life, and the comparisons drawn with the present is not to find fault with past, but to show that there is a power in human life that is capable of manifesting itself in a more progressive manner as experience gives it the needed lessons. Our present civilization has had the benefit to be derived from reviewing the systems of human society that have passed, marking the locations where danger existed and has been able to avoid some of the conditions which overthrew the ancient systems.

There is another great law that it is important to understand when dealing with the question of the rise and fall of human institutions, and that is the law of destiny. All organizations are evolved because there is a necessity for them; the demand was for that special form and it was materialized. It was the one that could at least be understood by the phase of development which at the time was dominant. Whether in the growth of nations and races from savagery and barbarism up to the higher planes of life, or in the evolving of religious sects or political parties, they come forth obeying the great law of destiny, and when they have performed their mission, accomplished the work for which they were intended, the same great law which brought them forth and made them the dispensers of that portion of the truth which had been revealed, retired them, preparing other instrumentalities better adapted to carry forward the work of human advancement, proving that what we call the law of growth and decay or change are one as related to the great law of progressive development as they supplement each other and are both indispensable factors.

Our modern civilization has, like its predecessors, a mission to perform, a destiny to work out—and then what? Its retirement, to be succeeded by a more modern and advanced civilization, one better adapted to the needs of progressive life. The present one shows that it is lacking in the elements that are necessary for permanency, but it is the best the world has ever seen; it is the result of the mighty struggles that have been made for human liberty religious, civil and political. The martyrs that laid down their lives for the advancement of human institutions up to their present plane of existence, have left an influence that is enduring and that will be an inspiration to coming generations, they knowing that they could not attain unto what they have if it had not been for the advance guard, the forlorn hope that preceded them.

There are crucial periods in the history of races, nations, political parties and religious associations. These crises are the testing of the moral and spiritual forces to see if they are strong enough to triumph in the struggle that is necessary to evolve higher conditions. If they are, they will be endowed with a new lease of life and power; if not, they must be retired, take a secondary place in the procession. Our present civilization is nearing the time when it will have to pass the crucial test, to be tried as by fire to show whether it is ready and willing to leave those conditions of the barbarous past which have come to it by inheritance and which it has not before been able to eliminate from its organization. All that claim to be ranked as civilized will need to be ready to meet the forces of reconstruction which will strike deeper than ever before to the foundation of their civilization, to test and see in what measure it is founded upon the truth, and all of its conditions political, social or religious that are not on that foundation must be removed as the intelligence and moral force is developed so as to understand the necessity for such action. That is the way advancement has been made from the crude beginnings which accepted many things that at present are not recognized.

The feudal system that was established in Europe on the overthrowal of the Roman Empire, how crude it may appear as we view it from our present standpoint, was a great improvement over the barbarism that preceded it. It was a preparation for something more advanced which would in time make that system obsolete. So our present systems will be replaced by something as much superior to them as they are superior to feudalism. The unification of the nations of the world produced by the wonderful inventions of modern life has enabled it to more intelligently deal with the problems that are forcing their way to the front and demanding solution, which our predecessors were unable to do, and the rapidity with which these questions are handled makes what transpired last week ancient history.

We of the present have special problems that belong to this age and which we must solve, conditions of life that are the outgrowth of our political, social and religious development but which cannot remain permanent fixtures of the present civilization, for to retain them beyond a certain limit would be retrogression. The question is, will it be able, have energy enough, to eliminate those excrescences which have grown on the body? If it has and uses that energy to work for the needed reformation, a longer life lease will be granted that it may more completely fulfill the law of its destiny. If not, then prayers and supplication are valueless to prevent the enforcement of that great law which operated in former civilizations removing them when they became incapable of performing the duties that were required of them.

The great flood tides of successive civilizations that have carried human life to its present level have had their periods of ebbing as well as flowing. That seems to be a law of their being, but each succeeding one advanced a step farther than its predecessor and did not recede as far; proving that the law of progress is permanent, that what has been gained cannot be lost though it may be obscured and dormant for a time. The more perfect utilization of the material forces of the world in making the industries on which human life is dependent more powerful, has enabled civilization to enlarge its boundaries, and what formerly was only done by human and animal muscular efforts, now is accomplished on an extensive scale unthought of before. These are some of the great civilizing forces that the former ages had not evolved. Not that human culture is dependent entirely upon the development of the material forces, but its field would be limited; a select few would receive most of the benefit and the masses remain in primitive ignorance. The development of these forces has given a permanency to our present civilization that the former ones did not possess, for the larger the number that are benefited by the improved conditions, the more permanent is the structure that is reared.

That our present civilization will be able to meet each duty as the progress of time brings them to the front, demanding that they be recognized and performed, we believe, and that the transition from the present to a civilization superior in every respect will be by the gradual replacement of the present systems by superior ones, a merging of that part of the present which is worth retaining into the larger body of the higher civilization.

The expensive and brutal methods of solving the problems of life by the arbitrament of war must cease. It has been the method all along down through the ages, but with the power given by science to the destructive forces, there must be a limit to the using of them in that capacity, or annihilation will result; but it will cease, and the glory of the coming time will be in the more perfect development of the resources of peaceful life, making the coming civilization one before which the present one will look dark and gloomy when brought into comparison to the glory of that higher development.

Our Next-Door Neighbors.

BY CHARLES DAWBARN.

It is a startling thought that all human life is bounded and limited by about eight degrees of temperature. The doctor's thermometer is believed to tell a tale of great danger to his patient if it shows a temperature nearly reaching this narrow limit in either direction.

Everybody, save the few remaining crass materialists, is aware that the patient himself is not really in danger. It is the house-body in which he dwells, which is in danger of falling to pieces, and whenever this happens its occupant, quietly and naturally, moves into another house-body across the street. This change was merely a question of one or two degrees of temperature—merely an alteration of vibration—at which one house-body falls to pieces and another, very similar, becomes the home of the man we knew.

But the change was really a most startling one, for the old house-body had been furnished with a full set of sense furniture adapted to its special use in earth life. Through this sense furniture the man had seen, heard, tasted, smelled and felt of his surroundings. But once outside that narrow limit of temperature both sense furniture and house-body fell to pieces. There was no question of rent. The man did not leave his house. The house, and all within its walls, left him. None of his neighbors saw him move. Even the doctor could not chase him to collect his professional fee. He had simply disappeared, and his old house-body was in ruins. And all this had happened just as soon as the temperature inside his old house home had passed its limit.

Till quite recently it has been counted as a mere matter of belief that the man himself had really moved into a new house, with new furniture, but this belief has gradually become a knowledge, attested by some of the world's leading scientists. That is to say, the new man-house, with its new sense furniture, is now counted as a fact in nature by these learned men, and the result of a mere change of temperature of one or two degrees. But as none of the old sense furniture can be used in the new house-body, and the new sense furniture is of no use to a mortal, we seem to have reached the scientific limit when the new man-house had once been accepted as a natural fact. The man himself has never been seen on either side the line, but only his house-body with its sense furniture, which house home with its sense furniture on either side, is normally invisible to the other.

It is obvious that a change of one or two degrees in the vibration we call temperature, though it changes him from one house-home to another, with a different style of sense furniture, can have very little effect on the man himself—the man invisible, and who remains invisible, so far as we can conceive, no matter how many changes he may make from one house to another. There is, at best, but little satisfactory communication between the folks in the new house and those still left in the old man-house. There is a dense fog between the two, and in that fog everything is dim, distorted and mushy. But that fog, made by these two or three degrees of difference in temperature, is Nature's dividing line between our man-houses and those on the other side. Still we have discovered enough by psychical research, and what is called "spirit return," to know that the manhood on the two sides of the divide is almost precisely the same. Naturally there is a difference of expression, and, for the most part, there seem to be family discords in the man-houses on both sides, whilst close to the divide.

Nature seems to have a hard-and-fast rule that progress shall always be the result of effort, and not come in any other way. On our side the divide this law is universal, and undoubtedly a couple of degrees of temperature would not change the law for our next door neighbors. Progress is always from the lower to the higher—from disharmony to harmony. From hell to home is only expressed by sensation. It has hate at one pole, and love at the other. Still there are certain changes that must be noted as the result of crossing the divide. The most startling is that man's new house-home cannot be destroyed like his old one. He cannot murder or be murdered. Yet we are told he can quarrel and fight with weapons unknown to us, and described as psychical. He can thus suffer and cause suffering, for he carries with him the hates, loves, passions and appetites that were his in earth life. In a word, these two or three degrees of temperature change the house, but not the man, who has merely moved across the street.

He has, however, acquired a new faculty, so distinct from anything in earth life, that, were it not for constant proof, it would seem impossible. He can change his appearance at will. This fact is the foundation of Modern Spiritualism, and the puzzle of Psychic Research. The medium sees your spirit visitor in form and garb as you knew him in the long ago. The old mother who passed on a generation ago, comes with the same old form, and with even the same old dress. Not a wrinkle is missing from the dear old face. That vision stands to you as a convincing test of spirit return. Most likely she could just as easily make her appearance reformed and bedressed for another appearance wherein you would find no test of identity. So she is bringing with her no lesson as to the present house form her true self is wending across the line.

The writer has known an investigator overjoyed to greet a sister he had last seen in budding womanhood. The past was reborn for him, although they had parted half a century ago. For another brother she appeared as he had known her in middle life, and was gladly identified. So in neither appearance was there a hint as to the form she wears in her everyday life. Yet the believer in spirit return must, if he will stop to think, realize that such a sister spirit might be unrecognized by either brother if she appeared as she actually is in her life of to-day, in the spirit world just across the line. The writer has a neighbor who is a worthy citizen and a married man, although but three feet high. When he passes the divide he must return as a dwarf if he is to be recognized. Surely that will not mean that he is a dwarf in spirit life, and is to remain so throughout eternity. Yet that is what "spirit return" as vouched for by its believers, seems to teach. We thus see that this power of picturing or reflecting your own resemblance, which seems to inhere to every spirit, is not much help towards realizing spirit life of to-day in the spirit world, just across the divide. But it is of immense importance when we would study the extent and limit of the power of these "neighbors" over mortal life.

There is a great deal of experience of both spirit return and spirit power which is far too personal to be given to the world. Yet it is this very experience which embodies almost all the knowledge we are seeking. We occasionally meet a sensitive who is willing to tell us, in confidence, much that the world ought to know, but, almost invariably, the history, whether of weal or woe, is marred, because its value depends upon the character and ability of the sensitive himself. The power of accurately picturing one's own experience is rare. And still more unreliable is the history when the sensitive knows and cares nothing for the rules of evidence under which the search for truth is conducted by science, and in our courts of justice. Such a sensitive simply demands belief because he says it, and is indignant if his tale be doubted for lack of proof.

The more sensitive the mortal the more likely he is to have the very experiences we are seeking. But, usually, these very experiences are gained only when he is most abnormal. Such a sensitive is generally unfortunate in his relation to our everyday life, so is at once counted as a mere visionary, and his statements are viewed with a suspicion and doubt that destroys their value. For such reasons many an author whose works we gladly lend to some investigating friend, utterly fails to convince the skeptic, who merely sneers at our easy confidence in statements that are not supported by evidential proof. So we find ourselves to-day largely basing our beliefs on evidence, either so personal we cannot present it to others, or else sadly destitute of proofs which alone could satisfy the honest but critical unbeliever. For such reasons a book recently written by a trained lawyer, has a value not possessed by any other work known to the present writer. The author kept a diary of his experiences through several years, with the needed names, dates, and names of witnesses now living. And, although to himself much he has written must be humiliating, it is still a record by an honest man of over-confidence in spirit friends. These visitors proved themselves as honest and truthful as himself, but ultimately failed in the work they had enthusiastically commenced. The phenomena produced were startling and convincing, even to hardened skeptics, as proofs of spirit power and presence. The name of the book is "Death—The Meaning and Result." Its author is John K. Wilson, a member of the Pennsylvania bar. It is published at Lily Dale, N. Y., and is, I presume, for sale wherever such works are usually held in stock.

I am not proposing to criticise the work. Every reader who chooses can do that for himself. But, I propose to use its statements of fact in this article because I know of no other similar experience which would not be counted as too personal for publication. Its real value for this purpose is that it presents facts which are really glimpses of the life lived by those who are only separated by a degree or two of temperature from our world of to-day.

SPIRITUAL DIETETICS.

For the Life and Growth of Inner Beauty.

Teach us the way, O Lord, to thy sanctuary; the soul is the sanctuary. True life principles emanate within. Life in the Summerland is determined by the mortal. Cultivate the most beautiful flowers, and the pleasures derived therefrom are fruitful and without number. The minute life-giving principle is always implanted therein, but to develop the spiritual atom, thy life must become purified. Constant watchfulness, truth, morality are the countersigns. God's highway is strewn with broken links caused by the lack of moral strength to resist temptations that will ever be with you. Let the highest within rule; you can defy the demon in thy heart, because the temptations resisted have become the rounds in the ladder of life eternal to lead you through the dark valley.

Spirit is not born, therefore cannot die; it is individualized, not as a whole, but a part of the Infinite. Each soul possesses an atom of supreme consciousness. The outward body develops, grows, so also the inner body. The spiritual body is made out of the emanations of thoughts, life the inner life. These atoms lose their relationships to the Infinite.

The air taken into the lungs furnishes new life to the physical. Fill then the lungs of thy soul and draw from the Infinite One, atoms of Divine life that will give thee life eternal.

The internal world spirit, is the power that controls all. The future life holds divine possibilities for all mankind, even the lowest life holds its measure of sacredness. Over all are stretched his protecting arms. Your soul reflects the light and glory of his presence. Deeds and not words, are the gifts you should bring.

Let humanity season every act of thy life. Humanity is the flower of the soul, and whose fragrance is love. Live out the life of the soul. Let the beatitudes fill thy soul; stretch out thy hand for the manna of life eternal; strengthened and refreshed, continue to climb to the heights.

Strive ever for the attainment of truth; turn on this searchlight and find the weakness of the heart. Bind up the sheaves before the reaper comes; broaden thy life, take in all humanity as thy guest. Then when the sands of thy life are run, the Father will welcome the beloved child as the Good Shepherd who remembers his own, and is known of them.

GOD'S SUNSHINE.

Over this land the brooding sunshine
Breathes a spell of sweet delight,
From early morn till the days decline,
God's censers are kindled with light;
And the chirps of the birdling's echo
Are musical with songs of praise,
As back on memory's stream I go
To my happy springtime days.

I cannot murmur or complain,
That fortune comes not my way,
I know thro' life's sorrow and pain
God brightens my every day;
And from the star-gemmed azure sky
There drops on my dreamy sight
The faces of loved ones from on high,
In the silence of the dewy night.

Not in church or sacred temple
Do I find love's shining path,
From the worldly who dissemble
With the spirit of vindictive wrath;
But in green fields and sunny places,
So glad with the running brook,
Do I see reflected God's angel faces
And read his living book.

God give me the sunshine ever,
In heart, in mind and will,
To gather and hold and to scatter,
And courage and strength distill;
And whatever my faith may be,
Of doctrines old or new,
May my spirit like the sunshine be
Ever sunny, warm and true.

Good News From Rochester, Ind.

Because dire necessity paved the way, an appeal was made through the columns of The Progressive Thinker, for help to sustain the cause of Spiritualism at Rochester, Ind.

The appeal was not made in vain. Generous souls, who care more for the progress of Humanity's Religion, than they do for the saving of dollars for selfish purposes, came to our rescue, and now we stand head and shoulders above the waters of financial failure, which threatened to submerge us. One white soul, who simply wants to be known as "a Spiritualist, of Washington," came forward and paid our rent for a year, others contributed $5, $2 and $1 bills, and we are now out of debt, happy and have hope of holding some meetings this winter, and if willing hands and courageous hearts can win out, Rochester First Spiritualist Church will be wide awake, doing business at the same old stand, when some of our orthodox churches have gone to sleep and forgotten to awaken.

Never was the harvest so ripe in the fields of Spiritualism, as now, and what we need in Rochester, is a competent leader, one who can teach the people intelligently, the truth of our beautiful philosophy.

Our society desires the services of a young man, one who will hold the cause of Spiritualism as something sacred, and make its claims respected by his knowledge and conduct. Such a speaker can find a good home, honest hearts and willing workers, together with a fair compensation, in Rochester. We prefer to settle a speaker for the winter, if one can be found who can fill the requirements, one who is a builder and worker.

Speakers wishing to correspond with the Rochester, Indiana, Society, should address Miss Catharine Daniels, secretary. The church is desirous of hiring a young man for the winter months.

Correspondence is solicited. Thanking all those who have come so nobly to our assistance, we remain, yours for the truth,

MARGUERITE MILLER.

PERSONAL MAGNETISM

A College Chartered Under State Laws, With a Capital of $100,000, for the Purpose of Teaching Personal Magnetism and Hypnotism by Correspondence.

EVERYBODY MAY NOW LEARN

Ten Thousand Copies of a Valuable Work on These Sciences to be Given Away to Advertise the College.

The American College of Sciences, of Rochester, N. Y., is a novel institution. It is chartered under state laws, with a capital of $100,000, for the purpose of teaching Personal Magnetism, Hypnotism, Magnetic Healing, Self-mastery, Self-confidence, and the higher development of Will Power; by correspondence.

At an expense of over $5,000 the college has issued a remarkable work on these sciences, ten thousand copies of which will be given away absolutely free. The book is elegantly illustrated with the most expensive engravings, and it is decidedly the finest and most comprehensive work of its kind ever published. It is the product of the combined talent of thirty distinguished hypnotic specialists and scientists. It thoroughly explains all the hidden secrets of theoe sciences. It is full of surprising experiences, and makes many startling disclosures in regard to the use and possibilities of this secret power.

The college absolutely guarantees that anyone can learn these sciences in a few days at home, and use the power without the knowledge of his most intimate friends.

From the names and addresses of several hundred students which were offered that they might be communicated with, eighty-four were selected. The replies received were more than sufficient to convince the most skeptical in regard to the wonderful benefits to be derived from this mighty power. There were absolutely no failures. All had learned to make practical use of the sciences. The following extracts are taken at random from the letters, for the benefit of readers:

J. H. Schneller, 1344 Avon st., La Crosse, Wis., writes: "Hypnotism truly reveals the secrets of life and the mysteries of nature. My own father could not have convinced me of its wonderful power if I had not actually tested it for myself. I consider a knowledge of it invaluable to those who wish to get the most out of life; to those who wish to achieve success and live up to the full measures of their possibilities."

Mrs. Effie M. Watson, Martinsville, Ind., writes: "Hypnotism opens the road to health, happiness, and prosperity. It should be studied by every one. I would not part with my knowledge of it for any amount. The instructions have developed within me a force of character, an ability to influence and control people that I did not dream I could acquire.

J. W. Clinger, M. D., Springfield, Ohio, writes: "I have used the methods of hypnotism taught by the American College of Sciences in two cases of difficult surgical operations with perfect success. It is a complete anaesthetic, and preferable to chloroform or ether. I acquired a practical knowledge of hypnotism in less than three days. The book is grand."

Rev. T. W. Butler, Ph. D., Idaho City, Idaho, writes: "I have cured a number of chronic cases of rheumatism, dyspepsia and paralysis of long standing; have not had a single failure; I consider a knowledge of Personal Magnetism invaluable. The book has greatly increased my own powers."

Dr. W. P. Kennicutt, 529 State st., Binghamton, N. Y., writes: "I had long suffered from nervous prostration and dyspepsia. My case baffled all medical skill. I studied hypnotism from the American College of Sciences, and tried it upon myself with surprising results. In one week my stomach was better than it had been in thirty years. I could eat anything without the slightest distress. I can hypnotize myself in five minutes and sleep all night; have hypnotized a number of others.

The first ten thousand persons who write to the American College of Sciences will receive, absolutely free, the marvelous book that brought success to the above persons. It is intensely interesting from start to finish. It should be in every home. If you want a copy send a postal card, addressed to the American College of Sciences, News B'ld'g., 242B, Rochester, N.Y., and you will receive the book by return mail, postage paid.

CHAPTER VII.

What for?

She silently glided toward one of the windows, out on the wide veranda that surrounded the stately old mansion we were in, and motioned me to follow her; how I moved from that bed, swinging as it was, was a mystery to me then; no movement on my part was necessary; I was, by some unseen power moved to follow. As I stood by her side, she divined my question, and said:

"Brother, the same force that conveyed you to the ship in the stream, and to the aerial ship on which you rode on your delightful voyage through the air, is the power, or force that has brought you to my side at this moment. This is an exemplification of my statement; to desire, is to have."

"Then," I said, "if this be so; to desire, is to have, why cannot one have all at once?"

"Brother," she said, "the capacity to have, or to hold, is the regulator by which all may have. I have told you that one must receive one thing at a time; were one to receive all at one time, it would be more than they could mentally digest; the understanding is like the material stomach, it must not be overloaded. A mushroom is of quick growth and provides little nourishment. Look at the stately oak; it is many years in coming to maturity, but when fully matured it stands long, and except by the action of the law of nature, it cannot be destroyed with ease."

I recognized her gentle rebuke, and was about to apologize, when she said:

"Brother, you need not offer any excuse for your question, for I well know that it would be natural on Aer to desire all things at once; for there all are in a hurry to acquire much in a short time. The people there are slow to learn wisdom, even by experience. There after one has seen the failure of one or many who have been so selfish as to grasp more than they could hold or contain, that one will almost invariably, through selfishness pass through the same experience in their eagerness to acquire a little more, or all; it is so in all the walks of life there. And if there is an occasional one who is content to go slow, and not seek more than is necessary for health, wealth or happiness, then that one is looked upon by others, as being indolent, and he will be trodden under the feet of the others in their mad rush for gain."

We had now reached the open lawn which extended many rods on all sides of the mansion; we walked on in silence for a few minutes and found a beautiful evergreen covered bower; it was made of stones of some kind which sparkled like diamonds; the structure was ellipse-shaped on the ground, while its roof was oval and supported by pillars of round and brightly polished silver; the floor was like the mosaics I had seen in the room that I had just left. Seats arranged around the room, were made of variegated colors of different kinds of wood. The building covered an area of between one and two hundred feet square; the whole outside was covered with a thick creeping vine with delicate green leaves.

As we entered, and seated ourselves on one of the settees, the gentle breeze coming through the graceful hanging vine sounded like the sweet music of many flutes. It was a place where one could be secluded, and enjoy a siesta with perfect peace and rest.

"This, my brother," said my teacher, "is a place where the occupants of yonder mansion may come for partial seclusion; it was erected to show their ideas of forming a new design, showing what one mind may conceive.'

I thought: Does one person own all this? Is this all under the control of one person?

My teacher seeing my question before I had time to form it into words, answered: "No, my brother. No one person controls anything. Each one conceives something to advance the knowledge of law, and that conception is manifested to the eye or ear and all enjoy it, or learn by it; for it is sure to lead to something of more value. You will find as you advance that it is the same in everything; science and philosophy are thus forwarded for the profit of all. But let us go on, we may find other things that may be of as much interest as this."

We strolled out over the broad lawn, and descending a gentle slope we came to a broad lake covering many acres, nearly surrounded by tall trees and beautiful shrubs of every description; in some places the foliage was so dense as to almost obscure the view beyond, and had it not been for the indescribable something that allowed of no obscuring of anything the view in the background would have been hidden.

Floating on the surface of that beautiful sheet of water, that was so clear that the bottom could be plainly seen, were aquatic birds of all descriptions, the most noticeable of which were the graceful swan in great numbers. A flight of stone steps led to the water's edge from the bank, where were moored tiny boats representing many beautiful things. Shells of many kinds; fishes, great and small; birds, almost exact in form of those in life that could be seen now swimming around.

We entered one of the boats which at first sight I thought to be a live swan. My teacher motioned me to a seat by her side, and instantly our frail craft turned its bow towards the middle of the lake. There were no oars, no sail, and as I could see, not anything to cause the boat to glide so noiselessly through the placid waters. I immediately perceived that that unseen force was at work on this beautiful boat, that I had twice witnessed before.

We sped on at rapid rate of speed; a long wide foamy wake was left behind; I could see the waves as they caused the boats to rise and fall on the shore we had just left; I could hear them as they rolled upon the shore. The birds did not try to shun us as we passed, but my attention was concentrated upon that unseen power that was impelling us on. My teacher had seen the question within me. What was that power?

"Brother," she said, "I would willingly enlighten you upon that question if I was able, but you must remember that I, too, am a student like yourself; I hope to be able sometime to define that power. Suffice it to say now, that it is the same power within you which causes your arm to rise and fall at your will, and that does all the other things which you do not understand; here it is the application of it to inanimate nature; there are those here who are qualified to define it, but as it is not necessary for either of us to understand it at the present time, we may use it and know more of it later; I will accompany you to one of the great halls of learning soon, where those who do fully understand this mighty law will explain it to the people assembled; we will learn not only of the law but its application. What generates this power, you know, as well as I; of its application to ourselves must be a part of the education you are now entering upon.

"I see that you are already becoming interested, and as you proceed, you will become aware of the truth of my statement; that all things here become what you call recreation; the fascination of the mysterious is so great, that as one finds the cause in one direction, it leads to another, and so we are led to investigation. And as one of the most learned and persecuted on Aer once said, 'All science is but the reaching out of natural law'; so here, the searching for cause, or the application of law, or science, as it is called on Aer, becomes the great study and only occupation, it therefore becomes the recreation of all.

"I see you would ask, 'Does not one become weary?' I answer, yes if they follow in one direction continually; but the laws are so numerous, and of such diversity, that when one tires of one law, he can turn to some other, and by so doing lose nothing, for it matters not which way we go or look, there is always some law with which we come in contact, and the application of all is the education which we seek."

We had now crossed the beautiful lake, and our boat stopped seemingly of its own accord at a beautiful grotto that was fashioned of unhewn stone; it was arched in front, and on either side of the arch the ragged rock extended a long distance, and was perpendicular, many feet high. Our boat glided gently through the archway, and we found ourselves in another enchanted spot that was comparatively dark; the first place I had thus far found where the sunlight did not penetrate.

My teacher stood erect in the boat and commenced to rock it; immediately the waves began to roll, and as soon as they broke upon the walls of the subterranean room, the echoes came back to us in strains of music like that we heard in the evergreen bower. This continued for several moments, until my eyes became used to the dim light; then she stopped and pointed upwards and around; my gaze followed where she pointed, and all the beauty I had seen before was now eclipsed. Gems of all kinds in sparkling beauty twinkled with such brilliancy that my sight would soon have been dazzled, had not my teacher caused the boat to speed on again. Soon we came to a flight of glistening steps where our boat stopped, and we alighted upon a broad platform composed of the same sparkling gems, all combined to form a picture representing what seemed to be scenes such as one might imagine were at the bottom of old ocean. Going a little way back on this platform or landing place, my teacher placed her hand on the sparkling wall, and gradually the dazzling light grew less and the beautiful hazy light of the outside world lit up every nook and corner of that vast subterranean grotto, and I could see its every beauty. Above, many feet; around, many acres; beneath, untold depth, was the grand sight, an unbroken wall of sparkling gems, all plainly seen; beautiful birds in the atmosphere, all kinds of fishes in the waters below.

Instinctively I said: "What for?"

My teacher saw the meaning of my forced question, and answered: "Simply to gratify the imagination of those who occupy the mansion we have just left, and satisfy the law, that harmony may be produced in all places."

She motioned me to follow, and crossing the broad platform, we soon came to an opening in the wall and turning back a step, she paused and pointed at the boat we had just left, and said, "Look."

I turned, and as I did so, the boat also turned and darted through the water, and was soon far out on the lake.

Now I again beheld the wonders of that atmosphere that was so clear; I could plainly see the place where we had embarked in that beautiful swan-shaped boat; and in less time than I can tell, it had sped back, and was resting quietly where we had found it. I had seen it all the way back, and although there were several miles, and the thick walls of the grotto intervening between it and me, I could see it plainly.

"Brother," she said, "you may now be able to see that the power may be used even though we do not come in immediate contact with the object."

I could only reply, "I see." I did not understand.

My teacher understood my dilemma, and turning to the opening in the wall, I instinctively followed her. We found a broad path thickly strewn with pebbles imbedded in a soft yielding earth which we followed for a short distance upward, and soon found ourselves on an eminence, from which we could see a city at its base.

"Shall we now go to the city to view the wonders there, or shall we rest here on the soft grass?" said my teacher.

"I am tired," I said.

"I know you are weary," she said, "and that you may enjoy rest such as will be of most benefit to you; yonder car, which you may see above you shall convey you to the apartments I spoke of, and there you shall receive the rest that will be suited to you at present."

Immediately an aerial car like the one I had ridden in, and was now far above and at our right, came swiftly, and stopped about fifty feet above the spot where we had sat down on the soft green grass; again the little basket-shaped car dropped at our side; we stepped in, and all were raised by that unseen power to the car.

As we alighted on the deck of that aerial car, which I found like the one I had been on, the only sign of recognition I noticed between my teacher and those on board, was an affectionate smile by all who looked at us. There was no look from any, as if they would wonder why I was there. There was no knowing looks between any, as if they knew who I was, or why my teacher accompanied me; and as the car sped on, there appeared no officious person who would attempt to assist me a stranger, or to make me feel I was among strangers; each was fully occupied in their own way, and my teacher and myself were left to enjoy ourselves as we were inclined.

The car had now arisen to a great height, and authough we were passing through space at a great velocity, we did not realize any inconvenience from wind, nor was there any sensation of fear. There was no conversation noticeable between any two or more of the people; yet there were groups to be seen all over the car. This, I particularly noticed; it was as if all were riding for the first time, and as if each was awe-struck. While I wondered, my teacher touched my arm, and said:

"Brother, you have now seen what I perceive is another wonder to you. That you hear no conversation here, no doubt would lead ytu to believe that all are mute; but do not be deceived; everyone on this car is in earnest conversation; and although we cannot hear their voices, or see their lips move as yours or mine do, still I will try to tell you how we converse here without the use of the vocal organs. Thought, my brother, is as tangible to the sight as all other more dense matter when the inner sight becomes developed. What you would no doubt term intuition, is nothing but the thinking part of all that has animate life. As all here are attuned, or unfolded to that extent that words are not necessary to express their thoughts to one another. The same power, by the way, which animals of the lower order on Aer converse. Here, the mingling of that great power, or the working of the law conveys from one to another the force that comes from the same power the thought or the understanding. So, a continuous stream flows out from each; no thought is hidden, and all fully understand and comprehend what is being thought by all others. So, you see why this car came to a stop and we were taken aboard; you can also see why we were so warmly welcomed by our friends here. You may also see why no audible words were spoken to inquire who you are, or why I am attending you. All on this car know full well why we are here, and what is our destination; they all know that I have been designated to be your teacher, because I am in just the condition to assume that duty; because of the natural fitness of my particular development, the law demands me to be to you what I am. Then, knowing all this, there is no necessity of superfluous questions or conversations. When you may have developed more, you will no longer have use for your vocal organs."

"Oh, yes; there are those who have to talk as you do."

She had answered my question, even before I had formed it in my mind, as if to substantiate the statement she had just made.

"And soon we shall see some of them, but now we are on the way to your apartments where you may receive the rest you so much need."

I thought, I am not weary; the exhilarating scenes through which we are passing are so varied and wonderful, that it affords all the rest I need.

"But," she said, seeing my thought, "soon this will have passed, then the same condition that was upon you before we came on the car will be upon you, and the law will demand that you rest, and if you do not comply, there will be exhaustion, and the desired effect will not have been accomplished."

Again I thought: She desires to be relieved of me, and this is an argument to aid her.

I noticed that several people looked kindly at me at that moment as if they all understood my thought, and my teacher laid her hand gently on my arm, and in the tones I first heard her voice while I lay in that soft hanging bed, she said:

"Brother, I have no duty to perform, but to attend to your desires. I have no desire to be relieved of you; and my argument, that you should seek rest, is but the explanation of the law, which is the only ruling power here, of which you are so ignorant."

To say that I had received a rebuke from not only my teacher, but from all those who had looked at me, will convey but a slight understanding of my feelings at that time; and as I looked at them, I could feel the hot blood surge to my face, and I know it was flushed to the roots of my hair.

With one accord they all came towards me, and there far above the ground, and swiftly speeding on, for the first time in my existence I was trembling with fear; I did not know what the result might be; and to add to the intensity of my feelings, it seemed as if all on that aerial car understood that something unusual had occurred, they all looked towards that group of which I was the central figure. My teacher took me gently but firmly by my hands, while all concentrated their gaze upon her; thus I remained for one minute, then I closed my eyes, and I lost consciousness.

CHAPTER VIII.

Rest.

When I again opened my eyes, the scene that met my gaze was far different from that which I saw when I opened my eyes when I awakened in that beautifully ornamented room in the old mansion; the things that I now saw were not of the elaborate kind that I had seen on every hand since I became a resident of this wonderful country. I was lying in a bed not unlike those to be found in the more wealthy part of some great city like Paris or London; the furnishings were antique in the extreme; the carpet was of silk tapestry in fancy designs, representing nothing in particular; the windows were shaded by some heavy stuff which might have been damask; for, except through the space where they met, they were so heavy that no light could enter the room, and as it was only enough to allow me to see faintly all the things with which I was surrounded.

It took me a long time to realize where I was. Now, everything looked so tangible, I could hardly believe that I was in any place unlike the world I had been so mysteriously removed from. Here, the walls were not transparent, neither were any of the objects with which I was surrounded. It seem as if I had just awakened from a sweet and refreshing sleep after a long and tiresome journey; and now amid what I should have called luxury, if I had not seen so much grandeur before, I lay as one can in the warm summer morning of earth and let my thoughts work without any fixed purpose.

Where was my teacher? By what power had I been put to sleep? Was I again on earth? Had my unexpressed thoughts been taken as an insult by the people on that aerial car? Had they taken me back to my earthly home again? If so, why had they deposited me amid things with which I was so little acquainted? I thought of all I had seen. I tried to reason out some cause for the peculiar atmosphere. I tried to see the application of that incomprehensible power. I became so interested in my thoughts, that I began to talk aloud, and said:

"Is this what I have heard called will power? If so, it is more mighty than steam, or all the forces on earth combined. Why cannot the people on earth, or Aer, as my teacher calls my original home, understand the application of this mighty force? If they could, what changes could be made there, what advances science could make."

I relapsed into silence, and still my thought flowed on. I thought: Surely, harmony seems to be the great ruling principle; and as all can understand thought without expressing it in words, then all must be able to understand the cause of all things, and so, must know the laws which govern. Then all on that aerial car may know why I had such thoughts; and the putting me to sleep must only have been to allay the fears which were arising within me.

A sweet calm, contented feeling pervaded my whole being; I felt that perfect freedom which my teacher had told me I could enjoy. I felt rested; my mind was free from any vexatious thoughts, and I could reason as I had never reasoned before. I could plainly see by my reasoning, that my teacher, as well as the other people on the car understood that to give me rest, and thus destroy my sense of fear, was a necessity; and that I must be rested in a degree corresponding with the conditions with which I might have been surrounded on earth at that time. So, that indescribable power had been exercised on me, and while under that power I had been conveyed to this place, where I could enjoy earthly conditions such as I was most used to.

Here again, I reasoned, is another illustration of the wonders of this wonderland. They force nothing, here; but work by the law in every instance. Had I been on earth, and showed the fear I did on the car, more than likely I should have been mocked, or someone would have offered a conflicting argument, which in turn I should have combated; the result may be easily imagined; bitter feelings would have been engendered, contention would have arisen, and in the end, no one would have been benefited; while here, a cause was sought and found, a cure was at once applied, and harmony was the result.

I closed my eyes, and was soon again asleep.

I was awakened by the soft hand of my fair teacher; she had silently appeared and laid it upon my forehead as she did the first time I saw her. Again, I felt that same delightful thrill through my whole being, and as she spoke, everything which seemed so tangible before, now assumed the same transparent condition as all things had before I was taken to this place. I could now look through the walls of my room and see the beauties of all nature spread out around us in all directions; the partial darkness which I had before noticed in my room was now dispelled, and the same hazy atmosphere which had so delighted me, now filled the room. I saw my robe had assumed a shade lighter, and I thought, Surely, I have gained a little.

My teacher seemed listening to my thoughts, for presently she said:

"Yes, my brother, I am pleased to say you have gained. You are an apt scholar. When you first awakened, I saw your thoughts as you lay and reasoned. I was in school with my teacher, and he congratulated me on the process you were making; and as soon as I could finish my lesson, I made haste to come to you, that we might again take up our task.

"You certainly have reasoned well, for if the law had not overpowered you, you would have lost all control, and what you have learned would have been of no avail. Now, you have risen one step, that has fitted you for another. It is true you were taken where the conditions resembled those which you would have had, had you gone to rest on Aer in an exhausted state. The fear you expressed on the car was natural; not that you expected a reprimand, but because you fully realized that in your ignorance you expressed a thought that reflected upon your companion's honesty of purpose. You show that you have profited by your lesson. By your thoughts, you show that your companion was judicious in providing you rest, and such as you would have on Aer under like circumstances must be provided. Yes, the same, to you; wonderful power was exercised over you for your benefit; now, you can go forth refreshed, and the lesson will teach you that the only power here is that law which ever works the same on all. You were removed to these apartments with which you were unacquainted, even on Aer, representing luxury there, because they represent wealth, as you call it there; had you awakened amid the more plain surroundings of some of the habitations of Aer, such, perhaps you were better acquainted with, then your rest would have been spoiled by disappointment by thinking you had returned to your former home. Luxury to you as yet, is rest, and you should continue in it until you are able to see where true rest lies. Later, you will be able to understand what I mean; now is your opportunity to decide what shall be your apartments. Shall they be like the ones you are now in, or shall they be more ethereal, as you term it, like the habitations you have seen since your arrival here? This may be your home, where you now find yourself; or you may make or have just what will suit you best. Here you may be as secluded as in a walled castle on Aer; no one will molest you; and if you desire, your thoughts even, shall be as secluded as your person."

"My teacher," I said, "I will be content to remain where you think best. Where you are, there I will think I am satisfied to be. I have learned one thing sure; and that is, that you have given me the only rest I ever know. You are the only woman I ever turned to, for whom I could say I ever had any affection; and if I can ever have you for a companion, I feel that my task, be it what it may, as long as I am in your society will always be light; if I could have you with me in such apartments as this for my home, I should be perfectly satisfied."

I attempted to rise, with the intention of clasping her radiant form to my breast, but I was gently and firmly restrained, and a sad smile played upon her features. She looked at me for a moment, as if to chide me for daring to express anything like love to her.

"Brother," she said, "I can not chide you for your expression of love, as you think it is, for it is natural for people on Aer; there, when two people are brought together, of the opposite sex, in harmony with each other as you and I are now, their thoughts will usually be on the same plane; they learn to look at all things with the same understanding; and according to the custom there, they are taught by that religion I have before spoken of, 'that it is not good for man to be alone;' they are taught that they love each other. But, I must tell you, my brother, that while you now think you love me, I will also tell you, that neither you, nor any of the people of Aer know, or ever can know fully while they remain in that gross sphere, what that principle they call love is. If it was known, there would be less so-called crime, and marriage according to man-made law, would be abolished; less life would be started in that sphere, consequently far less suffering would be known. As it is, what the people there call love, is, properly speaking, simply an expression of the emotions; and it is as apt to work in inharmony as it is to cause harmony between the people. Just at this moment, you are in a very harmonious state, and from the condition you are in, being of the same nature as what pertains on Aer, you reason that you never came in contact with a female with whom you were harmonious; that you love me, and must come in close relation with me, with your body so that you may gratify your passions to the full. You will remember that passion and emotion are the same. You are aware that on Aer, all people are taught that one cannot enjoy love by the mind alone; while here, you will soon learn that the only true enjoyment in any sense, is through the action of the higher self, or that power of discernment which you must at present term the mind.

"We will not further discuss this subject now, but in time you shall become acquainted as fully as possible with true love; you will find that it is perfect harmony at all times, with all things."

I received my lesson with as good grace as possible under the circumstances, and my teacher, whose face seemed to assume an even more angelic expression that it bore before, stroked my forehead with her soft hand which thrilled me to that extent that I could not resist the effort to embrace her. Again I was restrained by some power; and if I had been held down by tons of matter I would not have been more powerless. To be frustrated in my desire for enjoyment which seemed so near to me, kindled all the fire of passion with which I was endowed, and I attempted to throw off the restraint; in doing so, my face must have assumed a scarlet hue; for I felt the hot blood as it surged to my head. I found myself powerless to move, and my love, which I had but a few moments before, now began to wane, and I reasoned that she whom I had learned to look upon as being so gentle, kind and considerate, was, withal, but a woman, and having woman's ways and traits; now, because she had the power, assumed to display them, and her arrogance at this moment was more than I could tolerate. I glared at her with all the fierceness that I could command, and would have madly rushed at her, and by brute force compelled her to submit to my embrace; but the unseen power held me as in a vise; I could not even move a muscle of my body in the least.

Oh, how I struggled within myself; not so much to gain my desires with her, but to release myself from the restraint which was upon me that prevented me from the liberty of muscular action. I was of large stature, and knew my powers, and had in all my life been used to do anything which required strength in my way without ever realizing there could be a limit to it. I had always been able to extricate myself from any restraint easily; and now, to be held helpless by an unseen force, and seemingly applied by a small and apparently delicate female, was more than my superciliousness could stand. My teacher, in the meantime, stood away from my bed a few feet, and with a bland smile contemplated me, as I mentally writed before her.

After what seemed to me an unbearably long time, she reaised her hands above her head and gently waving them with an upward sweeping motion, she moved her lips as if speaking for perably long time, she raised her hands as if raised in prayer, and while looking direct at me, she said:

"While the mind in its undeveloped state, like the iron which is to be forged must be heated and hammered, so, like the iron, it must endure all the conditions necessary to finally bring it to the desired shape. So with you, my brother; as you still contain much of the gross conditions of Aer, until you shall be relieved of that grossness, you must suffer the pangs of remorse and restraint, as well as regret. I shall leave you now, and shall not return to you again, until your desire is strong enough to daw me."

BEYOND THE CLOUDS.

Oh! they tell me that thy cheek is faded now,
And that time has left its furrows o'er thy brow,
That the form is bowed that once appeared so fair,
And the brown has changed to silver in thy hair.

But they tell me that thy voice is soft and low,
Just as sweet as when I heard it years ago.
And they tell me that thy heart remains as true
As when we rambled where the wild flowers grew,

And they say you love the songs we used to sing
When we sal beneath the willow by the spring.
And they say you see the wraiths of vanished years,
And they sometimes see your cheeks suffused with tears.

And they tell me that a gentle voice is still,
And has left a void, no other voice can fill.
And they say the days and nights are lonely now
Since they placed a wreath of laurel o'er her brow.

But although they robed the clay in sombre hue,
And they bore the solemn casket from thy view,
The chord that bound the captive soul was riven
And now comes to guide thy weary steps to heaven.

And, although in life, we ne'er again may meet
To bring words of cheer and each the other greet
Yet we soon shall see the dawning of the day
That will bear our spirit from earth's cares away.

For I know this life is not the end of all,
Buds come again although the roses fall;
And I know sometime we'll sit beside the spring,
And I know somewhere we'll hear the sweet birds sing.

And I feel that soon we'll leave this pall of gloom,
And I know we'll roam where sweetest violets bloom,
Soon the bonds will burst and set the spirit free,
And we'll live and love through all eternity.

A STRANGE QUESTION.

The Old Patriarchs Considered at Patterns.

I was discussing the Hebrew scriptures with a gentleman a few days ago and he asked me this question: "Which one of the old Patriarchs would you wish your sons to pattern after?"

I was about to reply, "Why, any one of them, of course," but he stopped me and said. "Don't answer the question in a hurry, look them up, perhaps in the light of the twentieth century progress you may find that their conduct would furnish but poor example and might not be tolerated at all. I will return to your house some day after you have had time to study the question, and then you may give me your answer."

First, I found out the meaning of the word Patriarch in its restricted sense and in its application to the progenitors of the Israelites—Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and his sons. Second, to know anything of a man's character one must get at his daily life, and as the only history we have of these men is to be found in the Hebrew scriptures, I began to study them with my eyes wide open, just as I would any other book, and the first thing of real import in the chronology of the Hebrews is the story of Abraham and his wife Sarah and their handmaid Hagar.

Hagar, a helpless slave in their hands; Abraham's willingness to obey the voice of Sarah when she told him to go in unto Hagar; Sarah's hatred and abuse of the slave, who had no alternative but to obey the mandates of her masters; their turning her away into the wilderness where her child, their child—Abraham's and Hagar's—was likely to die of thirst; the curse that was put upon Hagar's child: "He will be a wild man, his hand shall be against every man, and every man's hand against him." If you would like to continue the story, read Genesis XVI.

After reading the whole story I laid the book down with loathing in my heart: Surely no pure-minded person would ever think of taking such conduct as that as an example for right-living. No wonder the social condition is awry. If the vibrations set in motion by Abraham have accelerated as they have moved along the centuries, then we know full well the cause of some of the effects that are otherwise unexplainable. When we have so vile a pattern, how crooked and misshapen must some of the copies be.

"No," I cried, "Abraham would never do for my sons to pattern after, if I could have my say in regard to the matter, even if it is recorded that he talked with God face to face and entertained angels."

A man can only be judged by his example, and Abraham's example, viewed from this distance, will not stand the test that true manhood is measured by now.

The story of Isaac's courtship and marriage; the birth of his two sons, Jacob and Esau; his journey into a distant country; his fear of the king and denial of his wife, Rebekah, saying, "She is my sister,"—their following in the footsteps of his father Abraham; the unnatural love the parents had for the children—Isaac's love for Esau, Rebekah's love for Jacob; the deception played on the old man in his blindness; the lies told by Jacob, assisted by his mother, Rebekah; the blessing given to the wrong son; the hatred that sprang up between the brothers; Esau's determination to kill Jacob because he had robbed him, Esau, of his heritage; Jacob's flight from home to escape the just retribution that was sure to follow wrong-doing, all filled me with dismay and I cried out in anguish of spirit, "Why do men hold such people up as examples of rectitude and right living? Surely they are blind to cling to them longer."

And then the baseness of it all, to lay it on to the God of the universe. It is evident that they knew nothing of the law of their being, and laid all their evil desires on to a personal God.

If the Hebrews would study their true origin and the evil vibrations set in motion by their Father Abraham, they would understand the cause of their wanderings, their defeats, their utter inability to find permanent rest for their feet, tired by the long pilgrimage from "pillar to post" seeking a land that shall be their inheritance, a land they will never find, for Father Abraham set the vibration of wandering in motion and while his seed remains the curse will be upon them.

The great immutable law that controls the universe, that holds the planets in their places, that fixes one star and causes another to move, that controls the winds and waves—light and darkness—cause and effect, cries out continually: "When causes are set in motion they must run on forever, 'with God there is no variableness neither shadow of turning.'"

Then came the story of Jacob: His residence in a strange land; the deception practiced on him; his retaliation and the fortune that grew out of the tricks played on his uncle Laban; the wives, the children, the servants, the cattle, the all of it. Theft, deceit, intrigue, lying. His flight from Laban, the stolen goods, cattle and servants; Laban's pursuit of the fugitives, the kind words he speaks to Jacob and the further deception played on the old man, all read like a tale of the Arabian Nights, and I began to wonder how much of it was history, mythology, or tradition, for I knew by the end of the readings that God, the center and soul of the universe had nothing to do with it.

I continued the book of Genesis and read of Joseph's birth and the hatred of his brothers; the coat of many colors; the increased hate of the "brethren" just because the old father loved the young lad; the conspiracy to be rid of him; the lies told to the father and the final disposal of the boy whose only sin was that his father loved him.

Then came the story of the posterity of Judah; the weakness of the old man, and his willingness to burn his daughter-in-law; his repentance when he found out that he was a criminal, copartner in guilt with his daughter Tamar, and how her life was spared. Strange stories, indeed; their equal for intrigue, prostitution and crime can not be matched in any book I have ever read in all my life.

Then the story of Joseph is again taken up, and the famine in Egypt, and how his brother came to buy corn; how, finally they all came to settle in Egypt, which settlement ended in bondage—a just retribution for the crime of selling their brother—proving the truth of "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap."

Jacob's statement to Pharaoh, "Few and evil have the days of the years of my pilgrimage been"; Joseph's settlement of his people in the very best part of Egypt; Jacob's unique blessing of his sons; his death and removal to the home sepulcher—all presented a strange admixture of history, race peculiarities, and cause and effect.

The word Genesis means the act of producing. In the original Hebrew the book has no title. The present title was prefixed to it by those who translated it into Greek. The translators were scholars with logical minds. Men, who understood the law of cause and effect, and knowing, as they must have known, the condition of the descendants of the early Hebrew fathers, they could see in that far-off, dim history the beginnings of those conditions which perplex the whole world wherever this race plants its feet. Inherited traits lay hold on eternity, and if the beginning was so full of intrigue and deception in order to gain wealth, what can one expect of the descendants that follow along the centuries?

Look to the beginning if you wish to know the end. I do not want anyone in my family to pattern after the Patriarchs. MRS. MARTHA GRAY.

They Claim Too Much.

A person would suppose, from reading the claims of ecclesiastics that civil government, and all the institutions subordinate to them were outgrowths of Christianity; that barbarism preceded it, and continued everywhere until that system of religion compelled the new order of things.

Hon Del Mar, in his "Ancient Britain," chapter xi, devoted to "The Writ of Habeas Corpus," not only controverts the church claim, but he crushes it. Having traced the origin of that writ back to the era of Solon and the Athenian Republic when the rights of citizenship, representation in the legislature, trial by jury, the writ of habeas corpus, marriage laws, and other institutions of civilization were secured to the people; that 495 years B. C., a temple was erected to Bacchus near the Circus Maximus, to commemorate the passage of an act having the powers of the writ of habeas corpus; that the British House of Commons, and the jury system arose out of the actual experience of a free people, and belonged to eras of political liberty; that their like may be sought for in vain among barbarian or hierarchial constitutions.

Well, let the good work of reconstruction of history go on. We know that ancient learning was almost wholly limited to the priesthood; that the monks in their cloisters wrote our sacred books and ecclesiastical history; that secular history, or rather that which passes as such, mostly came from their corrupt hands. It is the province of the true historian of to-day to separate the false from the true—a difficult task when we take into account the zeal of fiction writers to make the church the parent of every virtue, and to falsify all the past in the interest of a very gross superstition.

Not a Laudable Sport.

The secular press is displaying, with seemingly great satisfaction, a likeness of his imperial majesty, the emperor of Germany, William, arrayed in hunter's costume, while several dead deer with magnificent antlers, which he has just slaughtered for amusement, are at his feet. The kaiser's love for such sport has been notorious, and it is said when he pays a visit to neighboring sovereigns he is sure to be favored with that class of entertainment. The nobility are said to be exerting themselves "strenuously" to preserve the large game of the country to enable his majesty to enjoy the sport of slaughtering them.

The authority for such destruction of animal life, it is claimed, comes from God himself, as if he created them to educate man in the shedding of blood.

There are mural paintings representing Assyrian, Persian and Sythean monarchs engaged in the chase for lions, tigers and other destructive animals, just as our President Roosevelt is pictured in pursuit of mountain lions. The destruction of poisonous reptiles and ferocious animals, which endanger human life, and their killing is praiseworthy: but monarch, prince or peasant who slaughters harmless birds, or any form of life merely for the pleasure of killing, deserves universal execration. It is a species of savagery which ought not to be encouraged, or even tolerated. The killing of animals for food is a relic inherited from our barbarian ancestors which we ought to be getting away from instead of encouraging.

All life, in our estimation, is sacred, and should never be destroyed, unless absolutely necessary in the interest of a higher life.

John W. Ring.

Mr. Ring's annual report appears this week on our eighth page. He makes an excellent showing in his especial line of work. Last week he was in Chicago for about two days, and during that time he gave two able lectures before the Rising Sun Society. He also lectured for Mr. Schwahn's society, the Bund Harmonie, on the North Side, where he was enthusiastically received. Max Gentzke, the popular representative of Spiritualism among the Germans, also made a few well-timed remarks. From Chicago, Mr. Ring went to Ohio and Indiana where he had engagements to lecture, finally to turn up in St. Louis, to attend the meeting of the N. S. A. Mr. Ring certainly has a bright future before him.

"Death Defeated; or the Psychic Secret of How to Keep Young." By J. M. Peebles, M. D., M. A., Ph. D. Price $1. 10 cents.

"Something Must Be Done."

With modern scholarship untrammeled by scholastic theology, and the batteries of freethought bombarding the old strongholds of established orthodox systems handed down as sacred truth from medieval times—and the onslaught of the Higher Criticism undermining the old notions of Bible history and interpretation—it is no wonder that intelligent thinking minds, still wedded in degree to olden views, are casting about in search of some method whereby religion may be saved from utter destruction.

Hence it is not surprising that Dr. Harper, the rather progressive president of Chicago University, in an address on "The University and Its Relation to Religious Education," should give utterance to such thoughts as the following, as reported in the daily press:

"Theological seminaries have not done a single thing in the last fifty years toward solving important religious problems. The time has come when the universities must take up this work and solve these questions."

In the opinion of Dr. Harper educators have given too little attention to religious education through cowardice, ignorance and indifference. Hence this matter has been allowed to drift along with the result that no tangible results have been reached.

"There is now a feeling that something must be done," said he. "Some of the things that ought to be attempted by the universities are: 1. The elevation of biblical history to a level with other history. 2. Broadening of the whole college curriculum. 3. Psychology made to lift the whole subject to a higher level.

"There has been practically nothing done so far.

"If religious study is associated with philosophy, psychology, literature and history, if theology is associated with ethics and science, how can the universities ignore a sound religious education? The university is the leader in all of these auxiliaries. However, the work of the university should not be substituted for home teaching and work of the church, but should sustain the same relation to these as to every other phase of life. College and university training has been lacking in everything connected with the higher religious life.

"Theological laboratories have not been laboratories for practical religion, but have turned out expert propagandists of exactly the same patterns as their instructors. In fifty years these seminaries have not solved a single important religious educational question.

"The problem before us is to have a wholesome religious life. We must have true religion from an unprejudiced point of view. Our altruistic spirit may show itself in university settlement work and in general work. To develop this practical side of religious education the university is to be the laboratory. It may not call itself a church and in fact it may not have a church, but it must give practical applications of the truths it teaches.

"The solution of these problems will not come from the theological seminaries or from the churches. The churches are too much occupied with denominational questions. No institution except the university can undertake this work. The varied departments of auxiliary work already exist. The university environment is friendly to this labor.

"Just what the university is to do and how it is to be done are questions that are yet to be worked out, but I am fully convinced that neither the seminaries nor the churches will ever solve these important questions concerning religious education."

Why should it be expected of the theological seminaries that they should solve any of these problems? They are not instituted for any such purpose. Their work is to drill old theological notions into the minds of their students; and by no means to grapple with live questions and problems that demand solution to-day. The honest and earnest study of these modern questions inevitably tends to induce "infidelity" toward theology and its belongings. The study of these modern problems demands freedom of thought, and that is a quality not found in theological seminaries bound in the chains of orthodox creeds.

And the universities can do the work only to the extent that they are free from theological trammels, and full freedom of thought is accepted and encouraged without any degree of churchly hampering.

Woman Pastor and Medium.

The Rev. May S. Pepper was installed as pastor of the First Spiritual Church of Brooklyn, Bedford avenue and Madison street, says the New York Sun lately. In the evening Mrs. Pepper preached her first sermon, afterward giving a public seance at which time she publicly talked with the spirits of the departed friends of the members of the congregation, asking questions of the spirits and answering the written questions of the people in the congregation.

The First Spiritual Church of Brooklyn was organized in January of this year. Mrs. Pepper said to the reporters after the congregation had been dismissed:

"I have always had the power to converse with the spirits of the other world. I do not say it is not a wonderful gift, nor that it is such a gift as to call forth the criticism that is absolute skepticism, either. One has a gift of singing—deveopment makes a marvel of that gift. Is that fact a cause for skepticism? Other gifts are recognized, developed and accepted. Why not this one of mine?"

As to the plans of the church, she said:

"After every Sunday night service I will talk to the spirits at the request of any one who may desire. I do not care who places a letter on my desk, nor how it is sealed, nor what the motive that prompts the action. Any skeptic may ask a question. I will take all the questions in their regular order."

Here is a medium who invites the closest inspection. You are at liberty to watch her on the rostrum; you can seal or sew your questions after writing them on paper. She invites your closest scrutiny and criticism. She invites skeptics to come to the front. Skepticism with her is a healthy sign, an indication that a person is seeking for the truth.

NOW IN SESSION.

THE NATIONAL SPIRITUALISTS ASSOCIATION.

The Progressive Thinker Sends Its Annual Report to the N. S. A.

This week the National Spiritualists Association is holding its yearly convocation at St. Louis, Mo. Those who are wise, or otherwise, will be there, to solve the many perplexing problems that confront the Association each year. We think our beloved Cause will be safe in the hands of the delegates, and we hope that the proceedings will be harmonious throughout, and the result be of a character entitling the convention to the sincere thanks of Spiritualists generally. Contrary to our usual custom we did not this year bring to the front any perplexing problems that concerned the National, trusting that all would be well without any particular agitation on the part of The Progressive Thinker. And while the various officers will make their report to the N. S. A., we desire to send in our special report (unofficial) embracing the following:

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER HAS NEVER BEEN MORE PROSPEROUS THAN DURING THE PAST YEAR. IN FACT, ITS FIFTEEN YEARS OF EXISTENCE COMPRISE NOTHING BUT PROSPERITY IN ITS BROADEST AND MOST COMPREHENSIVE SENSE. THE CONDITION OF THE CAUSE THROUGHOUT HAS IMPROVED IN CONSEQUENCE OF THE AGITATION CARRIED ON IN ITS COLUMNS.

An Early Day Clairvoyant.

As set forth in the Kansas City Journal, Mrs. Sara T. D. Robinson, wife of the first governor of Kansas, writes a curious little story for the Lawrence Gazette. The incident occurred in Massachusetts in 1854, when Dr. and Mrs. Robinson were preparing to go to Kansas. Mrs. Robinson was busy packing her trunks when Mrs. Jewett, a neighbor, came in and told her to come at once to Mrs. Dr. Sibley, a woman locally famous for her clairvoyant powers. Mr. Robinson continues the narrative as follows:

"To my inquiry as to who Mrs. Sibley was, she said: 'She is a highly magnetic person. Dr. Blood, the dentist, often calls upon her to assist him by her presence when he has a patient who needs to be placed under a soothing influence. He finds her better than chloroform or other.'

"Soon after we reached Mrs. Sibley's she began her discourse to us in very oratorical fashion, and using many gestures. The message to me was from Henry Clay. He talked a little of the condition of the whole country, of what a turmoil existed throughout its length and breadth, and how dangers lurked on every hand. In a despairing voice, and pointing with her hand, she said, 'See those drunken border men at the hotel in Kansas City; how they threaten all Eastern men who cross their border, saying, "Knife to the hilt, and down with the abolitionists. They may have Nebraska, but Kansas shall be ours."'

"I was astonished and silent. Occasionally Mrs. Jewett asked a question. The idea seemed to be that I should not go to Kansas, that I would be a hindrance, but the doctor must go at once, 'there was danger in delay.' Mrs. Jewett, having heard me speak of the other agents of the Emigrant Aid Company, said: 'Isn't Mr. Pomeroy there?' 'Yes,' was the answer, and as if foretelling what would happen, and with great solemnity, she said, 'Mr. Pomeroy lies there,' pointing to the floor beside her. 'The doctor must go at once. Dangers are all about him. He will have to look to the right hand and to the left. He will be hedged in by many difficulties.' Mrs. Jewett suggested that perhaps he ought not to go. 'Yes, he must go,' was the answer, and with a voice yet lower and more impressive she said. 'He must keep his heart right,' and then still more slowly, 'the end will be glorious.' This last sentence was most consoling to me in the dark days that came after."

We Are Brothers.

When the great Reformation inaugurated by Martin Luther had gained considerable prominence, and multitudes were leaving the Roman hierarchy and identifying themselves with the Protestant movement, each accession brought with him some favorite feature in the old faith which he wished engrafted on the new. The result: A bitter, disintegrating feud seemed imminent among the Reformers. It was then Zwingli, a Swiss, one of the ablest, purest, bravest, best, of the great leaders, at the close of a speech directed to his associates, said:

"Let us confess our union in all things in which we agree, and for the rest let us remember, we are brothers."

Noble words, worthy a great cause! We commend them to Spiritualists every where. We agree in belief of a continued life, and in the ability of the disrobed spirit to return to earth under favorable conditions and communicate with mortality. All more than this are really non-essentials, and should not be unnecessarily pressed to divide us.

100,000 Trial Subscribers Wanted.

15 Cents The Fall and Winter Campaign of The Progressive Thinker will be especially important to every Spiritualist. We want to spread the paper broadcast, hence we will send it out on trial, 12 weeks for 15 cents, or 7 copies to one address for the same length of time for $1.00—sent on trial to those only who have not been subscribers to the paper at least for one year. We want everyone brought in touch with the grand, spiritualizing, and soul elevating thought that the paper will contain each week. In sending in these trial subscriptions always state whether Spiritualists, church members, or investigators.

ARTIFICIAL TOGGERY USED IN MATERIALIZATION.

The Notorious Hugh R. Moore Is Still Posing as a Medium, and at One of His Late Circles, a Materialized "Spirit" Was Caught, and Some of Its Artificial Garb Was Captured, Thus Adding One More to the List of Exposures Lately Made Where the Spirit Proved to Be an Ordinary Mortal.

Here appears to be a case for consideration. It appears in the Brooklyn Eagle of Oct. 8, and other New York papers are treating of it from their peculiar way of looking at things. Mrs. Sawtelle, who headed the raiding is herself a Spiritualist, so says the Brooklyn Eagle, as follows:

Mrs. Lucretia Sawtelle, an uptown Spiritualist who gives brain impressions at stated meetings, held in a hall at Fulton street and Troy avenue, has at her home, 979 Hancock street, a cheap outing flannel garment which she claims she stripped from one of the liveliest spirits she ever came in contact with. She captured the prize after a very lively tussle with the "spirit" at a public seance held on Thursday night in the parlor of a house on Madison street, during which clubs were flourished by friends of the spirit. It was to satisfy her own mind that earthly beings were being posed as dwellers in the spirit world in the seances held here that Mrs. Sawtelle, with a party of friends, visited the Madison street house.

"I got this garment after a hard struggle, in which one of my friends was beaten over the head with a club," said Mrs. Sawtelle to-day, holding up the cheap, coat-like garment to the gaze of an Eagle representative. "What we ought to have done is to have gone to the house with a policeman. We expected to be able to capture the man who posed as an Indian spirit without any outside assistance, but we reckoned not well. That Indian spirit was a wonder, as strong as a man of flesh, and while myself and two men had a hold of him at one time, he got away.

"It was like this: I had heard of seances held at the Madison street house, and was a bit suspicious that things were not altogether on the square. Accordingly, when the announcement was made in Crosby Hall on Sunday last that a public seance, the last of the season, would be held at the Madison street address, I had a talk with some of my friends, and we decided that we would be there and observe closely what went on, and if we were satisfied that things were not as they ought to be, we would take a hand in exposing the people.

"The admission was to be $1 each person, but as the money was not collected when we went in we still owe, for we were hustled out without ceremony when we attacked the Indian spirit. There were more than a score of us altogether and among the number several men. We had heard about the doing of the sweet little spirit child, Pansy, and of the demonstrations by the Big Indian spirit, but we had not been told about the club-swinging folks, and it was due to this unexpected attack that we were defeated.

"We took seats in the back parlor and the cabinet from which the spirits were to emerge was placed in a corner in the front parlor beside a sliding parlor door, over which hung a black curtain. The 'spirits' and they ranged in age from a child of six years to a strong man of sixty, I should say, prepared for their respective parts in the dining-room in the basement. Then garbed in the dress to represent the character they were to portray they ascended the stairs, passed unobserbed by the people in the audience through the curtained door and then appeared from the cabinet to astonish us.

"When we were all seated pads of paper were passed around and we were requested to write messages to our departed friends. Then we were told to retain the slips of paper on which we had written and hand the balance of the pads over to the collector.

"The room was darkened, the only light coming from a box-like affair in the corner of the room, which, as we learned to our sorrow, was controlled by a string operated by the so-called medium. A child of six years robed in white came out of the cabinet and collected the slips containing our messages and finally they landed, I have no doubt, in the dining room.

"Well, a member of our party wanted to hear from one of his departed friends and out came the Indian spirit. The gentleman of our party who had been called for by the Indian spirit greeted Mr. Indian warmly and was alike greeted warmly. The gentleman expecting a message from beyond gently led Mr. Indian over toward some other members of our party, saying he wished to introduce him to other friends. He got him about ten feet away from the cabinet when the medium called out: 'Do not take the spirit too far away, he may dematerialize, bring him back to the cabinet.'

"I jumped up then and called to Mr. Reicht to grab the Indian and turn on the lights. One of our party reached for the string governing the lights but somebody apparently prepared for an emergency, cut the string. Then followed a general mixup.

"A man with a club landed on the head of Mr. Reicht and I told Mr. Reicht and another man who had come to his aid to take care of the clubbers, who now numbered two, and I would handle the Indian. With that the Indian pulled himself out of the coat and dashed for the doors leading to the basement. Would you believe it, that Indian as soon as he could get rid of his paint and feathers came back to engage in the club swinging. My face was cut and my head bruised, but I do not mind that much for I have the coat. We were threatened with a revolver. We left but the end is not yet."

So ends the Eagle's account, which appears to be straightforward and fair. If the affair was as is stated, it belongs to that class of professional conjurers who use the "livery of heaven to serve the devil in," and for which honest people have to suffer; but never forget the fact that there may be bogus raids as well as bogus mediums. Spiritualism has already advanced to such a height of knowledge that it does not now depend upon commercially inspired phenomena to uphold its truths.—Banner of Light.

IMPORTANT.

AN OBJECT LESSON FOR THE N. S. A. TO CONSIDER.

They Can Not Escape the Unpleasant Ordeal, as Every Spirit Lately Caught in a Dozen or More Exposures, Has Proved to be the Medium or a Confederate Dressed in Coarse Artificial Toggery—This Fact Will Not Down.

An exposure took place of a materializing seance, the medium being "Rev." Hugh R. Moore, at his home at 324 Madison street, Brooklyn, on Thursday evening, October 6.

The raiding was done by the members and mediums of the Society of Spiritual Truth. The party consisted of three Brooklyn mediums and several members. The mediums were Mr. Jacob Rassmussen, the president, of 1110 Bedford avenue; Mrs. Ida Vittum of 219 Bedford avenue, and Mrs. Lucretia Sawtelle of 979 Hancock street, she being a member, and myself.

The medium and his wife, Cora Moore, now began their seance, she entering the cabinet and Mr. Moore remaining outside. A child about seven years old appeared as the cabinet guide and was named Pansy. She collected the papers upon which the sitters had written the names of the spirits they wished to see and talk to.

To test Mr. Moore, I wrote a message to my supposed daughter, Olga, in the spirit world. After a number of spirits had materialized, he asked if there was a Mr. August Recht present, who had a daughter by the name of Olga in the spirit world. Now I am but 25 years old, and single, but it being too dark for Mr. Moore to see my age, he tried to palm off on me a young lady about twenty years old.

I went to her, and she was quite embarrassed to see such a youthful parent, but treated me very affectionately and hugged and kissed me, and behaved just as a dutiful daughter ought to, but I found she was very material and regretted it very much when she left me.

My brother, Robert Recht, asked for his Indian control, Running Water. When he appeared he asked permission of Moore to show the people how strong his Indian was; so taking him by the hand he gently led him over to where I and Mrs. Sawtelle sat, constantly leading him to the center of the room. When he came to us we grabbed him, Mr. Rasmussen holding him securely. Mr. Moore instantly drew a club and struck Mr. Rasmussen several times, but we quickly relit the gas and found the Indian very strong, but we finally overpowered him and Mrs. Sawtelle stripped off his red coat which proved to be a kimono, which is in our possession. We preferred charges against him for assault, petty larceny, and endangering the morals of his children. He and his wife are under two thousand dollars bail.

Clergy in Liquor Business.

From a statement in the Union Signal, it seems that the clergymen of Great Britain are far more deeply involved in the liquor business than those of our own country. If any reverend gentlemen in this country are shareholders in breweries and distilleries, we are not apprised of the fact.

According to the Union Signal, "the churches of Great Britain are generally supposed to be in sympathy with the temperance movement, hence it is surprising to learn that in the registers of England, Scotland and Ireland, 1,154 clergymen are shareholders in the liquor trade. Of these 940 are clergymen of the Church of England; Church of Scotland, 16; Non-Conformists, 9; Roman Catholic, 104; and others, denominations not given, 85. In addition to these personal holdings, there are 516 who hold as trustees, making 1,670 reverend gentlemen who have an interest in the trade amounting to more than $8,000,000. It is said, however, that no bishop of the church has anything to do with these liquor shares, and it is unfortunate that their example is not followed by all the clergy.

"The list of titled personages, men and women, who are financially interested in the liquor trade, is an appalling one."

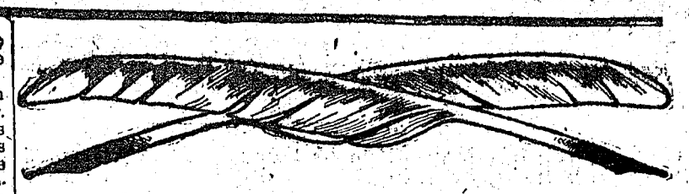
Since Bishop Potter gives his O. K. to the Subway Tavern established to dispense "pure liquors" by the drink, why may not he, and all others of the cloth, engage in the manufacture and sale of the stuff which has in a manner received the churchly blessing?

A TIMELY MOVE.

Common Sense Action by the Illinois State Association.

At a meeting of the official board of the Illinois State Spiritualists Association, held on the 12th day of October, 1904, the following was unanimously adopted:

Whereas, Some of our most earnest and efficient lecturers are delivering addresses in Chicago under the auspices of mediums whom this board has declined to endorse, therefore be it



Resolved, That the official board of the Illinois State Association requests all lecturers and mediums co-operating with the N. S. A., or its auxiliary societies to assist only such persons upon the Illinois field as are endorsed by this association.

Resolved, That we believe in and endorse mental and phenomenal phases of every description when exemplified by genuine manifestations, but steadfastly maintain that ability to express a degree of psychic power is in no wise a warrant for practicing intentional deception. Be it further

Resolved, That we invite mediums wishing recognition by this association to notify Rev. Laura G. Fixen, 429 La Salle avenue, Chicago, chairman of our investigating committee, who will arrange special meetings for the manifestation of their powers, in order to receive endorsement.

The Open Court.

A Fall and Winter Session to be Held, to Try the Case of J. S. Loveland Versus Dr. J. M. Peebles.

This is an important case to be tried at the Fall and Winter Session of The Open Court. The Question at issue is as follows: Shall the book issued by Dr. Peebles, entitled, "Spirit Obsession, or the Demonism of the Ages," be burned and the plates destroyed, as some desire, and the Doctor restrained from employing his pen in disseminating his peculiarly pernicious doctrines in regard to Spirit Obsession or Demons? Prof. Loveland will appear in Court in his own behalf, with other wise counsel, endeavoring to annihilate the book, while Dr. Peebles, assisted by able minds, will endeavor to demonstrate to the jury that every word in the book is absolutely true, and that there is great danger in obsessing evil influences to all mankind. This remarkable book should first be read by those who wish to appear for or against it in The Open Court. It will be sent out, if ordered soon, for $1.00, postage prepaid. There is a vast fund of information in this book, derived from modern and ancient sources, that will prove exceedingly valuable to every reflective mind, especially to those engaged in occult studies. Now is the time to send in your subscription.

DR. PEEBLES' NEW BOOK.

"Obsession, or The Demonism of the Ages."

Perhaps no other book ever issued by a confirmed Spiritualist has created so much interest as the one sent forth by Dr. J. M. Peebles entitled, OBSESSION, OR THE DEMONISM OF THE AGES. He presents what may be regarded as the dark side of spirit return—the evil side, the demoniac side, the side that leads one to a lower plane where misery prevails instead of happiness, and where an all-pervading gloom exists in harmony with the distorted natures there.

The book treats especially of Obsession as it is manifested from the Doctor's standpoint and observation, and does not alone apply to Spiritualism, but to spirit return the world over in all of its kaleidoscopic characteristics.

The author portrays such a vivid picture of Obsession and its multifarious dangers, that one is apt to wonder why these facts—if they are facts—have not been collated before and presented to the world.

If one is looking for pleasure, he will not go where gloom and misery prevail. If in search of merriment he will not frequent graveyards. If he is anxious for the sensations of happiness, he will not seek places of gloom; but if he is searching for absolute facts, a complete knowledge of that which actually exists, he must penetrate every plane of life, however dismal, gloomy or stifling it may be to his sensitive nature. In failing to observe or recognize the unpleasant characteristics of life, the evil or dark side thereof, the planes of gloom and unrest, one becomes one-sided, only half-equiped in his efforts to solve the perplexing problems of existence.

Dr. Peebles in his remarkable book has vividly painted or portrayed what he conceives to be the dark side of spirit return—the elements of evil, discord, licentiousness and gloom. If, as many believe, spirits can obsess mortals for evil purpose, rendering them extremely miserable, and at times leading them to ruin, the world should be fully acquainted with the facts—the sooner the better. If, on the other hand, all these kaleidoscopic phenomena designated as Obsession, are not derived from spirit control, but are the result of hypnotism or auto-suggestion, then again all the facts of the case should be presented to the world, so that each one can judge therefrom.

Spiritualism in its higher aspects is angelic in its nature. It is soul-elevating, and leads one to a higher plane spiritually and intellectually. It has to a certain extent liberalized the whole world, and brightened and spiritualized more or less many of the creeds which have so long afflicted mankind. If there is a dark side to it, as set forth in Dr. Peebles' book "OBSESSION, OR THE DEMONISM OF THE AGES," the world should know it, as that will not in the least injure Spiritualism in its higher aspects. The Open Court will bring all the evidence to the front, and determine whether the book contains knowledge which should generally be known, or, on the contrary be withdrawn from circulation, the plates destroyed, and Dr. Peebles restrained from presenting what he conceives to be the action of evil spirits, devils, or demons. The discussion on the subject will wax warm. Now is the time to read the book; the discussion will follow later.

WORTH REMEMBERING.

A Statement That Should Receive the Cordial Endorsement of Every Spiritualist.

Rev. Minot J. Savage says, in "Life Beyond Death:" "One of the worst enemies of Spiritualism is the dishonest practitioner, the 'fake medium,' or the people who cover them up through any personal favor, or as they mistakenly think, for the honor of the cause and to save it from disgrace. If there is any man on the face of this earth meaner, more utterly contemptible than any other man, it is he who will take money coined from the broken hearts, from the hopeless tears of those who long to know whether or no their dead are alive; and take it, not even for what they believe to be a genuine message from the other side, but simply for the sake of money. When a person will do that, I do not believe there is anything on the face of the wide earth too mean for him to do."

A PECULIAR MANIFESTATION.

It Comes to Hand Well Attested by Those Who Lived in the Vicinity, Yet Sounds Like a Medieval Story in the Ignorant Past.

Owingsville, Ky.—The story of Willie Black's alleged communication with spirits is a queer one. The first intimation he had of his ability to see or communicate with beings not of this world was on Sunday, May 20, 1900, when he went to a pasture near his home to drive home the cows. The Blacks then lived in the old Sandford homestead, between Flemingsburg and Poplar Plains, Fleming county, which was in former times the home of Dr. Bradshaw, a well-known breeder of thoroughbred horses. When Willie went to the pasture before mentioned after the cows he saw spread upon a brush-heap near by what he supposed was a sheet. Willie threw a rock at the supposed sheet and struck it. Immediately it began to wave and gyrate in a peculiar manner. Willie went toward it and the sheet gradually assumed the appearance of a thing not unlike a calf and stood upon the brush-heap. Willie ran home as fast as he could and told his parents what he had seen, and they accompanied him back to the field.

Arriving there, the apparition was not at first seen, but Willie finally saw it in a small ravine close by. It was invisible to Mr. and Mrs. Black, who told Willie to speak to the object. Willie replied: "Mamma, I am afraid; let's go; it is working its big red lips at us." Mrs. Black said, "Willie, how does it look?" and the boy answered, "It has two long legs without joints, a calf's body and a man's head." The head was afterward described by the boy as being bald on top with long white hair, commencing just above the ears and hanging to the shoulders. Its lips were red and red as blood. Mrs. Black insisted that Willie speak to the thing, and he finally asked, "What do you want here?" The apparition answered, "I am here for your benefit and the others' good." The party then went home in a hurry.

Next morning while the family were at breakfast, they heard a peculiar noise coming from the outside of the house. They went to the yard and looked all about, but nothing could be seen. They resumed the interrupted meal and again the noise was heard. This time Willie went to the yard alone and saw the calf standing at the fence. It told Willie it wanted him to accompany it to the pasture as it had something to tell him. Willie and his parents accompanied the strange being to the pasture and there it told Willie the following story, which is corroborated by citizens living in the community up to the time of the disappearance:

Many years ago there lived in the house then occupied by the Blacks, Dr. Bradshaw, a dentist, who was also engaged in the breeding and selling of thoroughbred horses. He opened a track at his home and held races. He was heavily in debt, and when he suddenly disappeared it was believed he had fled to escape payment of his debts. His horses disappeared with him, and it was believed he had driven them away with him. His creditors sent his description to all parts of the country, but no trace of Bradshaw was ever found. The calf told Willie that he was Bradshaw, and that he had been murdered. He said he was in a tree on his farm one night when two men approached, and, catching sight of him, shot and killed him. He fell from the tree and the men lifted him, one hold of each arm, and carried him into his home, where they lifted up the floor and buried him. The calf described the location of the grave precisely and told Willie that he had a toothbrush and a small bottle in his pocket.

Accompanied by Joseph Secrest, Mr. Smithers, Mr. Kissick and Mat Dearing, Willie and his father raised the flooring of the room as described by the apparition. There, in a grave about twelve inches deep they found portions of a human skeleton, consisting of three of four ribs, the end of the humorous, two or three metacarpal and clavical bones, with smaller bones. The toothbrush handle and small bottle were also there wrapped in what seemed to be the remains of some clothing. The bones were taken to a Flemingsburg physician, who pronounced them human bones. The ghostly visitor admonished Willie to be very careful with the bones or they would be stolen. The most important bones were afterwards stolen, but Willie still has a few of the bones and the fragments of clothing. These were shown the correspondent by Mrs. Black.

Willie went to a spot designated by the calf, where the calf told him many things. Among others the calf told Willie he was now a resident of heaven and was known as "Bald Thorn." "Thorn" told Willie that he was very happy where he was and that many of his old friends were there. He also told Willie that he could bring him any resident of the spirit world that he might desire to talk with, but that he ("Thorn") would have to do the talking. If Willie asked for a person that was in heaven he claims that "Thorn" would immediately bring that party to earth. If the party desired was by any chance a resident of the other place, "Thorn" would tell Willie that he was unable to bring them.

"Thorn" told Willie that he wanted him to have a place laid at table for him, and at every meal since then there has been an extra plate laid at the table for Willie's spirit friend. Willie says that "Thorn" frequently comes to eat with him, but that his mother can not miss the food he takes "because God replaces the food as fast as it is eaten."

The above from the Louisville Times of Sept. 25, is certainly a very remarkable narration, and as it comes to hand sustained by the evidence of many parties, its truthfulness can not well be denied.

TAKE TIME TO BE HOLY.

Take time to be holy,
Take time to be true;
God gives you his moments
His labor to do.

Go into the silence,
List there to the voice;
God speaks to your soul-life
And makes you rejoice.

Keep earnestly trying
Your duty to do;
God raises you upward
When to him you're true.

Rejoice in the present,
Gaze not on the past;
Each moment that passes,
Enjoy while it lasts.

Turn you from all evil,
Show others the way;
God ever will help you,
If near him you'll stay.

Take time to be holy,
Take time to be true;
God gives you his guidance,
His law to construe.

Important As To Divinity.

"THERE'S A DIVINITY THAT SHAPES OUR ENDS, ROUGH HEW THEM AS WE WILL."

The lower the animal is in the scale of being the less pain it suffers from injury or sickness. Cut a worm in two and each part sets up housekeeping on its own account and there are two worms instead of one. In human organizations, the degree of sensitiveness varies, not only in regard to physical, but mental agony as well. The savage has not the fine sensibility of the civilized man. The deeper, the more refined the nature the more acute the pain or woe. Suffering seems to be one of the accompaniments of greatness.

Emerson says, "There is a profound melancholy at the base of men of active and powerful talents, seldom suspected." The joyousness, the laughter, the words of jest and humor, are like bubbles on the water, only for a moment—the deeper thought is sad, serious and abiding. Every heart has its grief. There is no spot on earth but has been dedicated to sorrow, sanctified by prayer, and moistened with a tear. The world is one universal sepulchre. "The very turf beneath our feet once lived." Sacrifice is one of the primal principles of nature.

Sorrow is the natural heritage of all. Without travail there can be no birth. Life and death, decay and growth, keep even pace. Neither wisdom, or exceptional ability brings hapiness. The heathen is as contented as the Christian, the fool as the wise man. Froude says, "If you see a man happy; as the world goes, contented with himself and contented with what is around him,—such a man may be and probably is decent and respectable; but the highest is not in him, and the highest will not come out of him." We can only enjoy things by contrast. If there was no death we would have no appreciation of life. If there was no humiliation there could be no exaltation.

Even happiness always contains a certain amount of alloy.

"A central sorrow dwells in perfect joy."

Neither our direst forebodings nor our most sanguine expectations are fully realized.

There are no settled conditions either in nature or life. All beauty of thought and expression comes from the mind's unrest. The sublimity of the mountain, the solemnity of the forest, the calmness of the plain, the wild grandeur of the cataract, the brilliant plumage of the bird, all the harmony and melody of music, and all the joy and sorrow that there is in the world, are the results of nature's and life's unrest.

We know not by what strange forces we are controlled, nor by what power we are lifted up or cast down. Every planet is held in its place by the power of opposite forces. Love and hate, joy and sorrow, laughter and tears are contradictions. Some of the grandest literature the world has ever read has come from prison, garret and exile. Victor Hugo wrote his greatest works, Les Miserables, while in exile; perhaps under no other conditions could he have produce it. The very circumstances that would seem to crush and wipe out, often serve as a lever to lift one up.

Gail Hamilton speaking of Josephine, says: "Strange working of fate, that not her beauty, or her brilliant fortune, but her degradation, was what gave her immortality. The dread of her life and her final despair became her royal and lasting crown. Had Josephine died the wife of Napoleon, she would have been known but derivatively to posterity as Napoleon's wife. Discarded by him, the ages have adopted her as a hero in her own right, and have conferred upon her the distinction of individual remembrance."

The thoughtful mind sees significance in the most trifling act. Benjamin West, the great artist is quoted as saying: "A kiss from my mother made a painter of me." It is claimed that a copy of Burns' poems made a poet of Whittier, and it is written that "Whitman declared he discovered the law of poems in the rock-piled canyon of Colorado." A trivial circumstance or incident becomes a beacon light,—a guiding star in our lives. The memory of a look, a smile, a word, a kiss, a tear, may blossom into perpetual and eternal love and remembrance. How many passages there are in our lives—as we look back—that seem more like visions and dreams than realities. One redeeming trait in a man's character sometimes saves him from a dozen faults. A single presence changes the dullest company and most uninteresting crowd into a scene of brilliancy and glory.

"How is it that one human soul draws out another's grace and power, where a third can find no strength or sweetness, as the sun brings out the blush and flavor of the fruit from which the moonlight draws no taste." All our experiences come veiled. Time interprets their meaning.

"There are immortal moments in each life; they come and go,—
One scarce may of their presence know."

Moments that become historic—moments that either blight or transfigure one's life.

William M. Taylor, D. D., speaking of the death of his little girl said: "Years ago when I was leaving my Liverpool home to fulfill an engagement in the city of Glasgow, the last sight on which my eye rested was that of my little daughter at the window in her grandmother's arms. As the carriage drove me away, she waved her hand in fond and laughing glee, and many, many times during my railway ride the pleasant vision came up before my memory and filled my heart with joy. I never saw her again. The next morning a telegram stunned me with the tidings of her death; and now that earthly glimpse of her has been idealized and glorified and it seems to me as if God had set her in the window of heaven to beckon me upward to my eternal home. I would not give that memory for all the gold of earth. I would not part with the inspiration that it stirs within me for all that the world could bestow."

Those silent voices—what sacredness they have given to words; those vanished hands—what value they have given to the most worthless toy. Affliction has turned the current of many a life. O deep is the plowing of grief! But often times less would not suffice for the agriculture of God. Upon a night of earthquake he builds a thousand years of pleasant habitations for man. Upon the sorrow of an infant he raises often-times from human intellect glorious vintage that could not else have been." Troubles, disappointment and grief clarify the vision. How quickly we respond to any bit of sentiment, feeling or history that touches our own life. A common sentiment harmonizes all minds.

There is a kernel of truth in the most wide-spread error. Myths, fables and legends are crystallized experiences. We laugh at the eccentricities and foibles of others but no man lives without some superstition, some queer practice, habit or belief. People are, as they appear, more by necessity than by choice. Conscience is not instinctive, it is a matter of education, environment, heredity. Evolution is the great redeemer of the world. Death blots out more sins and transgressions than any theory of redemption. If we could take the same considerate view of people when alive as we do when they have passed beyond the hearing of either censure or praise, many a harsh judgment would be suspended. We blazon their faults when living and condone them and pronounce panegyrics upon their characters when dead. But the dead view no funeral pageants; they look at no monuments; they hear neither dirge, requiem or eulogy; they read no obituaries or epitaphs. Words of contrition, and penitence, and prayers for forgiveness, fall upon deaf ears.

Man hath not sworn to life unborn
Or whispered to the dead?"

But death does not produce the greatest suffering. There are others that plow the furrows deeper; others that time does not assuage or age modify. Have you ever seen a home deserted, dismantled, robbed of its household goods?

How quiet the house is to-day,
No footstep is heard but my own,
No voice echoes back from these walls
For I am alone, all alone."

Man is such a paradox—such a compound of all that is good and all that is bad—such a mixture of joy and sorrow, mirth and tears.

But human nature, for all its requirements, needs the masculine, the coarse, almost the brutal, as well as the softened, cultured, and refined. Wit, humor, mirth, and even satire and sarcasm, when chastened, subdued, clarified, become the very marrow of one's power. We are all the while giving expression to past history. The author writes it upon paper, the ortaor speaks it from the platform, the painter paints it upon canvass, the sculptor carves it into marble and stone.

How indelible our experiences stand out in the mind; every joy, every sign, every tear, every sorrow—all these, fixed and abiding. What artist painted those impressions upon the walls of memory? What colors were used that they become fadeless and immortal? There come hours of sadness to all deep souls when memory yields up her long buried treasures. "Thought is deeper than words." "It is only when life is sluggish within us that we speak." There must be an outlet to grief. Some confide it to friends, some give it to tears, some write it in prose, others put it into song, poetry, and art.

"Sorrow," says Talmage, "I see its touch in the grandest painting, I hear its tremor in the sweetest song, I feel its touch in the mightiest argument." It is claimed that Goethe's mother said when her son had any great sorrow he put it into a poem and in that way he was relieved of its burden. But little is accomplished with a mind at perfect peace. Skillful mariners are not educated upon calm seas.

It is only "the agitated soul" that reaches after great accomplishments. There is no limit to the power of the mind over the body. Men school themselves to the trying ordeals of life till they can come up to martyrdom, to suicide, to death, without even a change of habit, expression, or outward manifestation. It is a strange inconsistency in human nature that both Pagan and Christian cling so tenaciously to this life when poetry, prophecy, and revelation all say heaven is so near.

"Would you be young again?
So would not I;
One tear of memory given
Onward I'll hie;
Life's dark wave forded o'er
All but at rest on shore,
Say, would you plunge once more
With home so nigh?

If you might, would you now
Retrace your way?
Wander through stormy wilds,
Faint and astray?
Night's gloomy watches fled,
Morning all beaming red,
Hope's smile around us shed,
Heavenward, away!"

HENRY MORRISON TEFFT.

ALFRED RUSSEL WALLACE.

His Views in Reference to Spiritualism.

In the American Monthly Review of Reviews for the present month (October), may be seen an extract from Mr. Harold Begdie's "Master Workers," contributed to the Pall Mall Magazine (London). Mr. Begbie is thus quoted:

"Darwin and Dr. Wallace differed on the question of the mind and the spiritual nature of man. What has to be acknowledged and recognized is the spiritual nature of man, which separates him completely and absolutely from the highest of all mammals. Dr. Wallace distinguishes between the struggle for existence, per se, and the struggle for spiritual, intellectual, and moral existence. Evolution can account for the land-grabber, the company promoter, and the sweater; but, if it fails to account for the devotion of the patriot, the enthusiasm of the artist, the constancy of the martyr, the resolute search of the scientific worker after Nature's secrets, it has not explained the whole mystery of humanity.

Dr. Wallace is then induced to speak of Spiritualism. He hold that proof of the existence of the soul beyond the grave is already established. The study of the spiritual nature of man, he says, is coming more and more to the front of human inquiry.

"Spiritualism (says Dr. Wallace) means the science of the spiritual nature of man, and that is surely a science which deserves a place among the investigations of mankind. Geology is important, chemistry is important, astronomy is important; but "the proper study of mankind is man," and if you leave out the spiritual nature of man you are not studying man at all. I prefer the term Spiritualism. I am a Spiritualist, and I am not in the least frightened of the name!

"It is only because the scientific investigations of Spiritualists are confounded in the popular mind with the chicanery and imposture of a few charlatans that the undiscriminating world has not studied the literature of Spiritualism. A study of that literature, an honest and unbiased examination of spiritual investigations, would prove to the world that the soul of man is a reality, and that death is not the abrupt and unreasoning end of consciousness.

To this quotation from Dr. Wallace's words, Mr. Begbie adds:

"Dr. Wallace is not one of those men who believe that everything not made by man must have been made by God. His cosmogony is spacious, and finds room for other intelligences than those of humanity and deity. We are compassed about, he believes, by an infinity of beings as numerous as the stars, and the vast universe is peopled with as many grades of intelligences as the forms of life with which this little earth is peopled. To deny spiritual phenomena because some of them appear to be beneath the dignity of Godhead seems to this patient and courageous investigator an act of folly, a confession of narrow-mindedness. No phenomenon is too insignificant or too miraculous for his investigation, and in his philosophy there is no impossible and no preternatural.

"He is, undoubtedly, the most courageous of men of science. Other eminent men have examined spiritual phenomena as carefully and earnestly as he, and some of them have uttered their faith in the reality of these mysteries; but from the year 1863, from the very beginning of his scientific career, on the very threshould of his work in a materialistic and suspicious world, this brave and earnest man with everything to lose and nothing to gain—has been the avowed champion of Spiritualism, and has fought for his belief with a steadfastness which has only increased with time."

The foregoing is too good to be allowed to be hidden in the secular journals, away from the eyes of the majority of Spiritualists, on this side of the Atlantic. It will prove a most emphatic and very recent refutation of the assertion which I have heard boldly made by our opponents, that Prof. Alfred Russel Wallace had renounced Spiritualism.

SPIRIT RETURN.

An Account of a Medium's Peculiar Experience.

Two statements in No. 773 induce me to write you some facts in my own personal experience.

Facts are what we need. They will do more to establish truth than opinions, inferences, or conclusions drawn from one or two sides of the million-sided presentation of spirit forces.

Collation and comparison of facts will at last be the rock on which Modern Spiritualism will rest.

"No spirit ever returned to earth. The space through which they manifest is unmeasured."

The first assertion I do not agree with. The second is grandly and wonderfully true.

This was illustrated to me about thirty-five years ago. Lying quiet, wide-awake at noon-day, a thought was given me; it was vague, unclothed in language, and came from a far dim distance with no sense of time or space. The thought was repeated, nearer and yet again still nearer, till I could locate in space the direction in which it seemed to be—then nearer still. Each repetition marked the approach of my teacher by clearer and more distinct expression till at last, the full thought in beautiful and appropriate words was impressed on the conscious brain.

None but the soul who can receive the seed germs from the higher planes can translate into clear and living words the golden thoughts that emanate from the far distant spheres. I was shown, too, how cross influences often vitiate the meaning of the communication, especially the coming in of an influence as another was about to withdraw.

"My soul cannot be rounded out until I go through all the natural experiences that belong to the first plane of life."—Abby Judson.

Thirty years ago I was a teacher in a children's lyceum. One morning as I was talking with my class, a gentleman, almost a stranger to me, said, "Do you see that little child who is clinging to your dress?"

I said, "No."

He replied, "It is a little boy. I shouldn't think he was more than a year old."

I had often had children come to me, but this one was to open to me a new line of thought. I have felt that the experience I passed through with him would throw some light on subliminal consciousness, that attempted explanation of psychic phenomena.

That Sunday evening at the tea table a spirit controlled, using my voice. She told C. (my husband) that she was the mother of the child, that he had had no experience of earth life, and she thought it would be better for him to know something of life here. She wished to place him with me that he might have contact with earth. She told me his name was Willie.

For three years from that time I was always conscious of his affiliation with me. I use that term as the best one I can think of to express his closeness and one-ness with my life. Truly he was always at the threshold and had I been hypnotized at any time by one who confused inferences with facts, Willie no doubt would have been classed as a sub-consciousness.

His first attempts at using my organs of speech were infantile sounds in a voice wholly distinct from my own. He saw clearly with my eyes. In a short time C. began to teach him letters and words printed, and after a while he sensed the meaning conveyed by them and so learned to put words together to make sentences. C. would often tease him, and nothing vexed Willie more than to have him call him Johnny. He resented it with a kind of angry dignity that was very amusing. He would never, at any time, have anything to say to my son, who was eight years old when Willie came to us.

Whether his aversion to him arose from not being able to enter into his sphere of thought, or because he was jealous of my love for him, I could not decide. I think usually he entered into my feelings much more than I did into his, but sometimes his thought and mine seemed blended into one.

One morning C. brought in a chicken that had been chilled so that it could not move. We put it in the hot closet of the range and when C. took it out it had regained life enough to spring out of his hand and run across the floor. I have not forgotten the feeling of wondering curiosity and surprise communicated to me from Willie. For a moment it was just as if I were experiencing those emotions, till Willie said very slowly, "Is that like you?" meaning had it life and motion. I loved him very much and he was dear to us all.

After three years of this wonderful dual life, during which he grew in vivacity and intelligence, he told me he was going away from me. I soon found he was gradually being detached, and falling into the same relations with me that other spirits had held.

He now came to me and went away. One morning he walked into the room where I was sewing and stood at my knee. He said, "I am going to school; don't you see my new clothes?" Up to that time I had never seen the child (though several clairvoyants had) but now I had a kind of vision of him. It was as if I sensed his form, height and clothing materially without actually seeing him with my eyes. These were better apprehended than his face, which I cannot distinctly remember. He seemed like a child five or six years old. He walked up and down the room several times with his hands in his pockets, taking high steps with a kind of playful importance. He turned around, and coming towards me with a change in his manner, said, "I shall never come to you again in this life, but I will be the first one to meet you on the other side." These were his exact words.

For a long time I could not be reconciled to his loss. It was like losing a part of myself, and I believe I lived through some such emotions as a mother has when the lovely earth child is torn from her embrace. Shall I ever see him again? Was it the idle promise of an affectionate child which years may obliterate from his memory?

When the veil is rent and the glory is seen,
It will more than your hope fulfill."

HONOR TO THE RED MAN.

An Indian's Message to the People.

(Words spoken by Spirit Red Fox, through the mediumship of Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley, at the grave of Red Jacket, Forest Lawn Cemetery, Buffalo, N. Y., Oct. 8, 1904.)

All honor to the red man whose statue graces this spot. His form has crumbled into dust, but his spirit has arisen to the higher realms, ever active, still keeping his people awake that they may learn the eternal truths of nature. We have met this brave spirit many times and we say that many white men would be proud to possess the force of character that is portrayed upon his countenance. His soul is aglow with the sentiment of love. His thought is still for the compatriots. He has seen that his prophecy has been fulfilled, for the craft and avarice of the white man have done it.

The eternal powers intended the red man should have expression on the earth plane, else he would not have been here. 'Twas intended they should have shared the spirit of brotherly love with his white brethren. Nature has bountifully provided enough for all, and the white man with his greater opportunities for intellectual development and law making should have given to the red men such lessons as would have enabled them to educate themselves instead of teaching them evil, such as indulging in rum and other vices known to the white man. Better had they given them tools and implements with which to improve the land, allowing them to remain and cultivate the soil they first magnetized.

It was the red man's footprint which enabled the white man to find the trail, through which he discovered lands and values that fell into his possession and made him prosperous. He was not satisfied with a portion, but wanted all. His greed and selfishness said to the red man: Ye are our inferiors; begone.

The spirit of self-protection was aroused in the Indian's breast, war and trouble followed. Then stories of atrocious murders and the extreme cruelties of the man of the forest were circulated by the white man. 'Tis true that blood was spilt. Where is the mother or father who would not fight for their own? Watch the shiny, glistening eyes of the wild animals as they follow the movements of an approaching enemy. 'Tis not their own safety that they seek, they would ever risk their own lives in order to protect their young. Thus the red man fought, in the spirit of protection for their tribes, and stories of the cruelties of the white men towards them have not half been told.

At last, the red men became the charges of the government, but were they treated as they should be, deprived of many of their natural rights, without fitting substitutes being provided? The brain of the red man is as capable of intellectual unfoldment as the white man's, it contains the same organs and with the same opportunities, the same intellectual unfoldment is assured.

This brave man, Red Jacket, possessed ability to stand as a leader for his people, also fully realized their needs and pleaded for his tribe. He felt through his sympathetic nature the very heart throbs of every one of his people, and his keen reason and perceptive power gave him insight to the suffering that he felt was near. Intuitively he knew the white man's spirit, and though they would speak in praise and promise, his soul knew the words were cold as steel, and from the lips only. The Indian always senses the vibrations that fills his soul with peace and comfort, when the sayings or speech of an individual were stimulated with a true force of soul power, hence they knew when the white man falsified to them. Silvery-tongued orators may thrill the hearts of their listeners, but to the individual whose soul powers are unfolded, words are as naught, unless the stamp of truth and love accompanies the words or expressions.

The red man lacked education, but possessed the soul faculty, hence seldom was deceived. Among themselves they stood as brother to brother, and only fought the white man in self-defense.

On the spirit side of life, where they have equal opportunities, they stand side by side intellectually and spiritually. The spirit of love and kindness reigns in their midst. Those who were leaders while on earth stand in a measure as leaders over there. That is leaders of their groups, which are great in numbers at times.

As the statue on this monument represents the brave chief Red Jacket standing with tomahawk in left hand, and the right outstretched, signifying protection to his loved ones, thus he stands in the higher life, protecting and teaching these he loves so well, and he will continue to work and lead his people upward in the scale of spiritual progress. He is greatly beloved by all who come in contact with him.

The red man lives to-day as in the past. His soul is eternal, and the work done by the returning spirits proves that they have been taught to return good for evil. Through their help hundreds of mediums are furnished with a magnetic force, in order to replenish vitality utilized by other intelligences. Red Jacket, or Sa-Co-Ye- Wa-Ha, which in his language signifies "He keeps them awake," will ever strive to keep all those who come in contact with him, awake to the higher thoughts of life.

LIFE'S PROBLEMS.

Brothers of many races,
One common Fatherhood;
Whose works we trace on nature's face,
For universal good.
But some lives they are shadowed,
And others joyous, glad;
Great wealth possess, they richly dress,
While some go thinly clad.

Alike all have their being,
Born through a natural law;
Behind some acts lie stern, bare facts,
Of an ancestral flaw.
And thus, with small exertion,
Some gain a spotless height;
And little know the crowd below
Who struggle, toil, and fight.

Alike all have their being,
Enter time's mystic door;
Alike they glide o'er death's swift tide,
To love's immortal shore.
Each with his stock of knowledge,
His weight of joy and pain;
To gather there in lands more fair,
These tangled threads again.

O strange, perplexing problems!
Life's wherefore and its why;
We might solve here within this sphere,
So many if we'd try.
But more of hope and sweetness,
We'd find along the road;
Did we but share with thoughtful care
A weaker brother's load.

REMARKABLE IVNENTION

AN INSTRUMENT THAT RESTORES EYESIGHT.

Spectacles Can Be Abandoned.

This instrument is in the form of a pocket battery, which the inventors have patented and which they call "Actina," a word which is their trade mark and owned by them.

In the treatment of eye diseases the inventors of "Actina" claim there is no need for cutting or drugging the eye for any form of disease, cataracts, pterygiums and other abnormal growths can be removed and weakened vision restored by the new and more humane method. If this is a fact, there will be no need to go blind or to wear spectacles. "Actina" has been tested in hundreds of cases and has effected marvelous cures. So confident are the inventors that this device is an article of great merit that they give an absolutely free trial. They want every one interested to make a thorough investigation and a personal test of the "Actina." As it is sent on trial postpaid, any person can give it this test.

They issue a book of 100 pages—a complete dictionary of diseases—which tells all about "Actina," the diseases it will cure, what others think of it, what marvelous cures it has effected, and all about the responsibility of its owners, and it is sent absolutely free upon request. This book should be in the library of every family. Address New York and London Electric Association, Dept. TR, 929 Walnut Street, Kansas City, Mo.

IN THE WORLD CELESTIAL.

BY DR. T. A. BLAND,

Is a wonderful book, being the personal experiences of a man whose dead sweetheart, after appearing to him many times, etherealized, materialized and through trance mediums, has him put into a hypnotic trance by spirit scientists and held in that condition for ten days, which time he spends with her in the celestial spheres, and then returns to earth with perfect recollection of what he saw and heard in that realm of the so-called dead. He tells his wonderful story to his friend who gives it to the world in his best style. This friend is Dr. T. A. Bland, the well-known author, scientist and reformer.

This book has a brilliant introduction by that distinguished preacher, Rev. H. W. Thomas, D. D., president of the American Congress of Liberal Religions, who gives it the weight of his unqualified endorsement.

He says: "This book will give us courage to pass through the shadow of death to the sunlit clime of the world celestial."

Rev. M. J. Savage says: "It is intensely interesting, and gives a picture of the future life that one cannot help wishing may be true."

The Medical Gleaner says: "It lifts the reader into enchanting realms, and leaves a sweet taste in his consciousness.

Hon. C. A. Windle says: "It is inexpressibly delightful."

Everybody will be charmed with it, for it is not only a great spiritual book, but a most beautiful love romance of two worlds. It is printed in elegant style, bound in cloth and gold. Price $1. For sale at this office.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Mrs. Maud K. Gates writes from Winfield, Kansas: "Mrs. Isa Wilson Kayner, missionary for the Texas State Spiritualist Association, has been with us for one week holding meetings every night in the hall. She also gave one flower seance, which was very satisfactory. It seemed every night she was better than the night before, until when the time came for her departure, it seemed we could scarcely give up such a jewel as she proved herself to be. She also gave a benefit seance for our society which we all appreciated. We found her a good, clean soul in her work and everyday life. She left many friends in Winfield."

John Ingram Alvis, 19 years old, son of a prominent furniture dealer of Manchester, Va., shot and killed himself Sept. 19 in his home, because of ill health. The night before his aunt had in a dream a premonition of his death, which was fulfilled in almost every detail.

Saloons in Chicago, 7,300; school teachers, 5,570; private homes (owned), 88,200; the city's drink bill (daily), $200,000. If all were Spiritualists, there would soon be no saloons in Chicago, and the city's drink bill would be next to nothing.

Mrs. E. C. Burgess, of Pacific Grove, Cal., expresses her high admiration for The Progressive Thinker. She is surrounded by a hostile church element, and the paper affords her great satisfaction.

Dr. G. B. Warne lectured before the Indiana State Spiritualist Association last week, at Indianapolis. He is in great demand as a speaker at the present time.

Will J. Erwood writes to the Spiritualists of Southern Wisconsin and Northern Illinois: "As I am to spend the month of November in Rockford, Ill., I would be very glad to hear from all societies in Southern Wisconsin and Northern Illinois, who are desirous of holding mid-week meetings. Will be glad to assist in the organization of societies in those localities, and will make terms for work, within the reach of all. Address me at an early date as the time is filling up rapidly. Until the first of November send all communications to LaCrosse, Wis., after which time send in care of 729 Mulberry street, Rockford, Ill. I would also add that I will be glad to consider a few camp engagements for July of next summer, and engagements with societies in need of speaker during the latter part of this winter, and the season of 1905 and 1906. I would prefer to hear from the eastern associations, but will consider any section."

Georgia Gladys Cooley passed through Chicago this week. She will be present at the convention at St. Louis. She will serve Brother Grimshaw's society in that city, Sunday, October 23. She will leave St. Louis for Denver, Colo. Societies or parties desiring her services enroute as lecturer and test medium can secure the same by addressing her at 4344 Evans avenue, St. Louis, Mo.

The prison reform policy of not requiring first-term convicts to wear the traditional striped clothing went into effect for the 357 inmates of Clinton Prison, at Plattsburg, N. Y., on October 2. Hereafter the first-termers will wear plain gray uniforms.

Mary Webb Baker writes: "The Progressive Thinker leads the van. Each one gets a hearing [so far as space will permit], and the lively expressions of thought keep us alive."

Mrs. N. Gouthrop writes that the circles held by the trumpet mediums, C. J. Barnes, at Camden, Mich., were very fine.

The work in Baltimore under the ministrations of Geo. H. Brooks, is going along nicely; good audiences in attendance, and much interest is manifested. Mr. Brooks still has January and March open for engagements. He is also open for engagement for camp work. He will respond to calls for funerals and week-night meetings within a reasonable distance of Baltimore. Send all telegrams and mail to 636 North Carrolton avenue, Baltimore, Md.

Dr. J. O. M. Hewitt writes: "I am at present serving the Temple Society of Newport, Ky., and am engaged with them until January, 1905; am ready to make engagements from that time. Societies wishing to correspond for that purpose, may address me at 404 East Fourth street, Newport, Ky., or at my home address, 533 W. Madison street, Chicago, Ill."

Mme. Holton-Upson holds musical psychic meetings every Wednesday evening at 7:30, at 495 East 43rd street, Flat 11, where you can receive a message in song from some loved one who has passed to the Beyond. The offering is 25 cents. Private readings by mail and appointment only.

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste-basket.

Isabella M. Powderly writes: "The Spiritual Truth meetings are well attended. We had with us Mr. Saylor of Wheeling, W. Va., also Mr. Marsh and Coe. Mrs. Martin gives messages. She is one of the new workers, and the soul of truth. Her messages are always recognized. On October 16, Dr. Walter DeVoe speaks for us; on the 23d, Dr. Evelyn See will tell us how to live the life. Hopkins' Hall, 528 W. 63d street."

With a corps of physicians and nurses in constant attendance, and his devoted wife, mother and sister anxiously grouped about his bedside, George Arents, Jr., the young millionaire automobilist who was injured in Saturday's race for the William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., cup in the accident that resulted in the death of Carl Mustel, his chauffer, hovered last night between life and death at the Nassau Hospital, in Mineola, L. I., now encouraging the eager watchers by a brief return to consciousness and again throwing them into despair by relapsing into insensibility. Whether Mr. Arents will live or die depends on whether the wound at the base of his skull proves to be a fracture. Mrs. Arents, the young wife, who had a presentiment of evil and begged her husband not to enter the race, remains constantly at his side. Thus it is that the future is revealed through startling presentiments.

On Sunday, October 9, W. J. Colville lectured in Spiritual Temple, Indianapolis, to two very large and enthusiastic audiences. He lectures there daily till Oct. 16 inclusive, and returns to St. Louis, Oct. 17, where his address is 2612 Lafayette avenue.

Mrs. J. M. Elms writes from Jackson, Mich.: "The Progressive Thinker is the best Spiritualistic paper in the whole world for revealing the facts, phenomena and philosophy of Modern Spiritualism."

Jos. Meives expresses his great admiration for the writings of the California philosopher, Charles Dawbarn. He says: "I don't think that when in spirit land we shall need horses, carriages, dwelling houses and many other earthly things, hardly fit for any use there. I do not know what your occupation is, but when you have time to spare, then please give us more of your knowledge and please excuse me for addressing you as an entire stranger, and old German farmer."

Louise E. Zimmermann writes from Elmira, N. Y.: "The summer has passed and with the fall season comes the resuming of active work with the different societies, which have been enjoying a season of rest and recuperation preparatory to renewal of effort in the promulgation of Truth. On Sunday, October 9, the First Spiritualist Church of this city again opened its doors, with the much-loved, earnest worker, Mrs. Tillie U. Reynolds as speaker and message bearer. She was warmly welcomed by two well-attended services and the outlook is bright for the good work which always attends her efforts. Mrs. Reynolds remains with us three weeks, after which she goes to attend the mass-meeting at West Potsdam, N. Y., and will be followed by other speakers during the season."

Curtis A. Gould, secretary writes: "Immediately succeeding the afternoon service, Sunday, September 25, and through the efficiency of Rev. Nellie S. Baade, of Detroit, Mich., a society known as the First Progressive Spiritual Sunday-School was organized at Watertown, N. Y., electing for its present officers Eugenia Rouble, superintendent and organist; Curtis A. Gould, secretary; Mrs. Ida Baldwin, treasurer; Mrs. Fanny Butts, librarian, and enrolling some 20 members through whose unanimous voice Rev. Baade kindly consented to act as teacher as long as she remains in Watertown. The principles of the society are those of a Sunday-school—Bible class and auxiliary to the main society combined and has for its objects firstly, the spiritual education of all children who may attend; secondly, a thorough study of the Bible with whoever may care to join us for the purpose of gaining a better understanding of its teachings; thirdly, to work together in any legitimate way that can be agreed upon to help the main society support our temple and Spiritualism; fourthly, to live our Spiritualism by doing whatever may help us unfold our better natures or be a benefit to those with whom we come in contact. The society is now on a substantial basis and a number of things relative to the cause are under way. This coupled with the regular work Rev. Baade does as a lecturer and test medium is marking as memorable an epoch of spiritual history in our city, as this is the first time a movement of this nature has ever been put afoot, and we feel through all she has accomplished since serving our society that you will hear from us again in good report."

Miss Marie Patschke writes: "The Church and Society Students of Nature, chartered under the I. S. S. A., will have a ceremonial and public installation of officers, Sunday evening, October 30, at Nathan Hall, 1565 Milwaukee avenue, corner Western avenue; pastor, Mrs. M. Schumacher."

Ladies will be especially interested in the report that a Paris hypnotist claims to have discovered a way to make a woman think she has not lived so many years, by ten to thirty, as she has really lived, and that by the simple means of hypnotic suggestion. Of course it will add to the enjoyment of one's life, and even add to one's years on earth, and perhaps also to one's comeliness of features, to be made to think and feel that one is still young. One of the peculiarities of the matter is, that a woman thus "suggested" will manifest the manners naturally pertaining to the age which she thinks is hers, even though she thinks she is an infant.

The Spiritual Truth Society meets every Sunday evening at 7:30, at Hopkins' Hall, No. 528 W. 63d street. Messages follow each meeting. Ladies Auxiliary to the Englewood Union meets every Thursday at 2 oclock. All are welcome to these meetings. Isabella M. Powderly president.

E. Clifford writes from Walnut, Ill.: "Mrs. T. Lindsey is here, speaking and giving tests to large audiences, and is starting a Spiritualist society."

G. Chafee writes of a delightful dream or vision that he had of seeing his wife who had passed to spirit life. She spoke of the pleasant times she was having, and seemed to be supremely happy in her spirit home.

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

Awakening from a dream in which he believed that he had caught a large fish and that it was about to escape, Bernard Schmidt, 44 years old, leaped into the lake from the Fifty-ninth street pier, Chicago, and narrowly escaped drowning. A physician was summoned and after half an hour's work revived him.

Dr. Beverly writes: "The Spiritual Science Society will give its next Dance and Box Party, Saturday evening, Nov. 5. Every lady who brings a lunch will be admitted free, and secure a partner for the evening. Free tea and coffee will be served; also a lunch for those who bring none. We have made arrangements to have a fine time. The grand Masquerade Ball will be held Saturday evening, December 3. These parties are at Arlington Hall. The first prize donated is a clear deed to a lot in a winter resort in the healthiest part of Florida, surrounded by orange groves and flowers. This town is not far from Lake Helen, so you can attend the winter camp-meeting. Every ticket will also have a chance at another lot adjoining, so come and work for this party, and you may strike it rich. Our free reading-room is also being blessed with donations from our friends. Walter DeVoe has given us his book on Healing. Dr. Conger brought us an arm load of choice reading. All are acceptable, for we have a hungry people, and surely that will bring anyone into the light and truth."

Henry Ahrensmeier, whose hypnotic feats in England have attracted wide attention, went to London a year ago from Beloit, Wis. He came to Beloit from Madison about ten years ago and worked in a machine shop until his hypnotic performance and skill in magic brought him before the public. One of Ahrensmeier's favorite feats is the driving of horses while blindfolded. His last Beloit drive will be remembered. Four horses were hitched to a coupe filled with well known citizens and the horses ran away. Ahrensmeier kept his seat and landed its passengers in safety. But it was a thrilling experience and made Ahrensmeier's fortune.

J. Kennedy Magee writes: "I cannot do without your valuable paper; it helps me to think and progress."

People have their experience with fraud in France as well as here. A New York paper says: "Another spirit, recently raised in Paris, that of a dead husband, has shown a good deal of wit. His widow, wishing to marry again, applied to a medium and asked her to communicate with her late husband, to find out whether or not he objected to the woman's remarriage. The initial expense of the affair cost the woman 150 francs, and brought her the information that the dead man was, for his sins, then actually in hell. By orders of the medium a note for 1,000 francs, together with some jewelry formerly worn by the dead man, was placed in a vase and covered with a veil. Then, enjoining upon the widow to spend the night in prayer, and to burn lavender and sugar in the morning, the medium took her leave of the client, informing her that the answer to her inquiry would be found in the place in which the money had been deposited. The following day the widow, accordingly, tremblingly opened the goblet and looked for the promised message. She found a slip of paper containing these words: 'I wish my successor joy, if he is still willing to have you after this exhibition of your folly.'"

At a meeting of the Society of Hypnology and Psychology, in Paris, the other day, report was read from Dr. Korovine, of the Moscow asylum for inebriates, where experiments for the cure of drunkenness by hypnotic suggestion have been carried out for three years. Dr. Korovine claims 22 per cent of radical cures out of some 300 patients. He says that out of 323 patients hypnotized 84.4 per cent did not drink any alcohol for a week, 27.7 per cent for more than a month, but only 3.1 per cent for the whole time of the treatment—that is to say, for six months.

Mrs. Clara L. Stewart writes from Whitewater, Wis.: "Last summer after I was appointed to a new office, financial secretary, with the same old duties, viz., soliciting funds for the Morris Pratt Institute, I conceived the idea of sending out postal cards with a circular letter, asking for pledges annually, semi-annually, or quarterly. Some of them have found their way back to me, and some funds with them, but the most surprising of all is a card from Pittsburg, Pa., signed 'Santa Claus,' promising fifty dollars; and about two weeks ago imagine my surprise on opening a common letter, with no possible way of tracing the sender, to find two twenty dollar notes and one ten dollar note, signed Santa Claus. Not knowing how to reach our benefactor to thank or even receipt him, I placed the matter before the executive committe last week, and obtained instructions to employ the press in the effort to do so. I trust our unknown friend will read this note of thanks and gratitude, and that others will also catch the inspiration. However, I hope for safety to the sender, the receiver, and the school, that if others are as generous, they will employ some means to assure themselves that the letter does not miscarry, or the funds be wrongly appropriated as might easily be done, and no one know where the blame rightfully rested. We are grateful to the sender of this fifty dollars—first, for the school, and second for the faith he certainly must have had in us to trust it in this manner."

Agnes Robinson writes: "The Universal Occult Society, 77 East 31st street, Hall C, was entertained and instructed by a large array of mediumistic talent, afternoon and evening, last Sunday. The conference meeting at 2 p. m. was addressed by Rev. Mr. Fraser, the boy medium from Colorado; Mr. Marsh, Hon Gilray, Mrs. MacMinemen, Mrs. Vaughn, Mr. Hillis and Mme. Holton-Upson. In the evening an instructive address was given by Mr. Fraser under control of Rev. Phillips Brooks, Boston's famous divine, followed by Maud Lord Drake, the old-time worker, who contemplates spending the winter in Chicago, followed by Lora Holton-Upson, the musical psychic, through whom was given a beautiful song message, containing tests to Mrs. Lord-Drake. Mr. Drake made some pertinent remarks upon the present status of Spiritualism and fraudulent mediumship. Mrs. McMinemen, Mrs. Vaughn and Mr. Fraser gave readings, the latter giving full names, all recognized. We hope to see a full house next Sunday. Mrs. Lord Drake will give tests in the evening, and Mme. Holton-Upson will give clairvoyant musical readings. We were also favored with selections on the mandolin and piano, by Mme. Upson and Prof. Georgia."

THERE IS TO BE A TAX ON MEDIUMS. J. M. Holaday writes from Council Bluffs, Iowa: "Our meetings have begun again, with John Hammer as chairman. These Sunday afternoon meetings are in Justice Owen's office. A social circle is held at frequent intervals at the home of Martha Rudd, on North 20th street. The city officials have put a $25 tax on practicing mediums, which Mrs. Rudd has paid. If mediums are to be thus assessed, should not all persons who give private consultations of a professional nature, be served the same way, including lawyers, physicians and phrenologists? The constitution of Iowa says that no such special laws shall be passed, but that the laws must apply impartially. The comparative indifference of the people toward Spiritualism is a curious comment on mankind, though I notice that Harper's Weekly and Mr. Stead's English Review of Reviews, as well as such modest publications as the Literary Digest, give to spirit return a rather eager attention. A revival of ancestral worship seems to have appeared over the civilized world."

The profits of necromancy, which has many adherents in this vicinity, especially among women, have been so great in New York recently that many new fakirs have sprung up in this field. Lately they have taken to the practice of advertising in such woman's magazines as would accept their matter, and a golden harvest has resulted. Over 80 per cent of the "clients" of clairvoyants are women. An astounding case of credulity was developed by the arrest of a fortune teller. A widow of means paid over $1,000 to this charlatan, who promised to rend the veil of her future. He sent a man into her neighborhood and got a line on her acquaintances. Then he told her many things about herself which she thought were close secrets.

N. H. Eddy writes from Buffalo, N. Y.: "Sunday evening, October 9, Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley closed her six weeks' engagement with the First Spiritual Society of Buffalo, Prospect avenue and Jersey street. Mrs. Cooley has rendered very efficient and satisfactory service. She has a very pleasing manner in presenting the philosophy, phenomena and truths of Spiritualism to the people. Good audiences have listened to the teachings as voiced through her mediumship. Mayflower, her guide, has done most excellent work in giving the messages of the spirit, very accurate in description and detail, and acknowledged as correct by those receiving same."

Mrs. Thos A. Beard writes from Brooklyn, N. Y.: "I have just recently been converted to your soul-inspiring religion, and have become a subscriber to The Progressive Thinker. I wish to mention two honest mediums we have with us, the Harvey Brothers, trumpet mediums. We sent for them from the far west—Kansas. They have been with us the past three months and have proved to be thoroughly honest. They are located at 68 Decatur street, and on last Tuesday, October 4, one of our leading dailies had a most commendable article in reference to their work. Their seances are conducted in the most spiritual manner; while religious they are not on the old orthodox idea. With the Harvey Brothers we talk direct to our departed friends, under conditions that there is no room for doubt."

Mrs. John Jaryus writes from Denver, Col.: "After reading the report of Mrs. Alice Gehring's work, and of the test seance, I thought I would say to the readers that her name hereafter will be Alice Gehring Patterson, as she was married Sept. 21, by Rev. Marshal of our faith. Mr. Patterson is a college graduate, a medium, also a fine lecturer. He has for the last two years been connected with the Soper School of Oratory of Chicago. We know that by their combined forces a great work can be done. They have been holding meetings for the last month in How Hall, and every body has been satisfied. The lectures were of a high order. Mrs. Gehring is the only medium in this city who holds all her seances, both private and public under strict test conditions. I say what we know to be pure and true, let us hang up to the public as readily as we do the frauds. We can only say, long may these souls live to carry on their good work."

The following is from Brooklyn, N. Y.: "Sunday evening, October 9, the Chuch of Sacred Communion held its regular Sunday evening service at 1246 Bedford avenue. We had with us the noted speaker, Dr. Lyman of Brooklyn, N. Y., who told us of his experiences, and gave some very grand and good advice for the cause of Spiritualism. Our services are conducted in a very spiritual way by our president, Mr. J. D. Glover. Miss E. C. Resch, our medium, is still doing her noble work of giving visitors messages from their departed friends in the spirit world. Seats free. All welcome."

Chas. H. Green writes: "Sunday afternoon, Oct. 9, 1904, Miss N. G. Warren delivered an inspirational lecture before the Rising Sun Spiritualist Mission, followed by Rev. Thos S. Warner and Mrs. Andrews, one of our mediums. Mrs. Gifford offered some very convincing tests. Mrs. G. W. Greene, president of the Ladies Auxiliary, made a few remarks about the objects and purposes of that body and induced several ladies present to join. That evening, Dr. J. R. McFarland, a speaker of unquestionable merit, addressed a very large and appreciative audience. Mrs. Kirchner, who has just returned from an extensive tour of several of the large eastern cities, addressed the meeting, speaking of the conditions of Spiritualism in the East and of its strength there. Mrs. Kirchner also favored us with a few very convincing exhibitions of spirit phenomena. Sunday, October 23, Mr. Jas. E. Coe will address us. Spirit messages by numerous mediums are a feature of our meetings, to which we cordially invite all."

Dr. Millard F. Hammond, the medium through whom "Compensation" was written, is now in Indianapolis, Ind. He writes: "I arrived here to find there was no regular spiritual meetings being held, although there is a fine church on the corner of Vermont and New York streets, known as the First Spiritual Church. This building is owned principally by one person, and as the Spiritualists of Indianapolis have failed to pay their share of the expense of running the meetings, they have had no regular meetings for some time. I immediately started in to open this church, when to my delight I discovered that W. J. Colville had got the start of me, and was to speak there twice on Sunday, the 9th, and still more good news awaited me, in that the Indiana State Spiritualist Association is to hold a mass-meeting in this church on Oct. 14, 15 and 16, and at this time and place many noted workers in Spiritualism will be present, including President Barrett of the N. S. A., and others who may be on their way to attend the N. S. A. at St. Louis the week following. A good time is expected, and I am fortunate in being here at this time."

Mrs. John Lindsey was employed two Sundays by Dr. Beverly's society. She has been also at Walnut, Ill., where she has done a good work. She would like to make other engagements to lecture and give tests. Address her at No. 326 Ninth street, Grand Rapids, Mich.

H. S. Johnston writes from Dinuba, Cal.: "Allow me to congratulate you on the grand work and the great good you are accomplishing through your noble paper, The Progressive Thinker. When in Los Angeles in July last, I had the pleasure of meeting Mrs. Petersilea, and I found her a most elegant lady."

Dr. A. B. Carnahan writes from Oldtown, Ky.: "My friends, Mrs. Blake and Mrs. Fulks, the psychics, near Huntington, W. Va., have trumpet manifestations in the light, something similar to Mrs. Vestal. They also hold dark seances occasionally where voices are independent. They have a guitar that flies around the room, keeping time with the singing of the sitters, and independent singing. I was at one two years ago that lasted from 7:30 to 12:30. They are good old ladies. They all just sit around the dining-room table. There are no trance conditions."

Devi Wood writes as follows: "Grand Ledge camp is a beautiful grove situated near Grand River, whose banks are indeed romantic and picturesque, with trees of different varieties and overhanging rocks and cliffs. During my stay, I was intuitively drawn to the caves and rocks of wonderful formation to commune if possible with the Recording Angel of past ages, to tell me whence they came? their origin, their age, their history; but all was silent save the overhanging branches, the chirp of the birds and the noise of the meandering river below, all responding in one grand chorus, 'From the bosom of Nature we came.' After the camp closed I stopped at the city of Greenville to visit kindred friends, and during my stay I made some observations on lines of mental growth and unfoldment in the ranks of old Theology on all religious themes."

E. R. Fielding writes from Washington, D. C.: "The Ladies' Aid of the First Association held its annual meeting for the election of officers. Mrs. W. M. Farrow, president; Mrs. M. Price, vice-president; Mrs. F. A. Wood, secretary, and Mrs. Duell, treasurer. The Ladies' Aid met at Mr. and Mrs. Hinkle's to greet them in their new home; also to welcome Mrs. M. J. Stephens, lyceum teacher, who has been absent for nearly a year. After the business of the society was finished, Mrs. Beckman presented Mrs. Stephens with a handsome bouquet in behalf of the society. Mrs. Congdon made the presentation speech. Mrs. M. T. Longley, secretary of the N. S. A., made a few remarks as to the advisability of how we should act, and what privileges will be granted for rooms and cots in the hospitals for sick mediums and Spiritualists. The emergency fund is growing and this fund is set aside for that purpose. J. Clegg Wright, who is the speaker for the First Association for the month of October, was one of the guests of the evening. He responded in his usual way. He paid a glowing tribute to the ladies, especially the bachelor girls; we have forgotten whether he used the term 'old maids.' Mrs. Duell rendered a few selections on the harp. Mr. Duell gave a recitation, and Mrs. Congdon gave several character readings. Mrs. A. M. Zoller and Mrs. Hinkle gave tests. After refreshments were served, the meeting dispersed to meet next Thursday at Mr. and Mrs. Lees' better known as Mrs. Zoller. Mrs. M. T. Longley was the speaker for the Educational Spiritualist Society. Mr. and Mrs. Nobbe hold meetings every Sunday in Woon's Hall. This society is a branch of the German Spiritualist Society, organized by Max Gentske, editor of a well-known German paper, published in Chicago. Mr. and Mrs. William Keeler have returned to their home on Ronoake street. Mr. Wm. Crump, the magnetic healer has returned to his home. Miss Susie Clarke of Cambridge, Mass., was a caller. She is on her way to attend the convention of the N. S. A., to be held in St. Louis."

Mrs. Anderson writes: "Mrs. G. A. Cowen entertained Oct. 7, a large and enthusiastic company at her first social for the winter, at her beautiful parlors in The Roscoe, 1441 Roscoe Boulevard, city. Many strangers were present from Evanston, where Mrs. Hornbeck and Mrs. Cowen have been busy doing missionary work. Mrs. Cowen will hold her next social Oct. 22 and every Saturday evening during the winter."

Geo. F. Perkins writes from San Francisco, Cal.: "Owing to disappointments I shall not be able to start eastward just yet, hence have resumed my meetings after a month of silence, and hold forth at Odd Fellows' Building, Market street, every Sunday evening."

Judd M. Covey writes: "Rev. Harry J. Moore of Chicago, and Mrs. Eva McCoy of Marshalltown, Iowa, conducted meetings in the Masonic Opera House at Oskaloose, last Sunday. These two workers average the largest audiences of any who have been to Oskaloosa within the last three years. Mr. Moore is constantly in great demand all over the country, and wherever he has lectured he has had large audiences. Mrs. McCoy is also one of our thoroughly reliable sensitives and is never out of employment. These two tireless workers successfully organized our society here last November, and we are negotiating for their return and hold meetings again next Sunday."

T. W. Sherk writes: "Services at the Church of Spirit Communion, 4308 Cottage Grove avenue, last Sunday, proved to be a very genuine revival and its effect will long be felt. The programme, besides the lectures by Moses Hull, included messages by Mr. Coates, Mrs. Cochonour and other mediums; and songs by Mrs. Pierce, Dr. Freedman and a mixed quartette. The audiences were large and enthusiastic. We are glad to know that Mr. Hull will be with us again next month. Next Sunday we ask all our old workers to come to the afternoon conference meeting. We want to get together for work. In the evening Mr. Arnold will lecture. Among our other speakers in the immediate future are Clara L. Stewart and Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond. Come and help us."

W. S. Woods writes from Kokomo, Ind.: "The Spiritualists and Freethinkers here have been enjoying a feast of good things since the camp closed. We have had C. E. Winans with us for several materializing seances. In one seance a spirit stood in the doorway of the cabinet, holding the curtains wide apart so the light shown fairly on the medium. All the sitters could see the medium sitting in the chair dressed in black, at least six feet from where the spirit stood, dressed in white. It was a convincing sight. We had Mr. Jessup for two days, giving trumpet seances, all well attended and splendid manifestations, both physical and spiritual, lectures, singing and messages. For the past year, we have had quite frequently Isaac Davis, who is one of the best trumpet mediums; his manifestations are varied, and of a refined and elevating character. He left last night for St. Louis, where he will stop a few days when he will make a tour of the west, and I can say to all whom he may meet that they will find in Isaac Davis a true and honest gentleman, and a refined and genuine medium."

Dr. Louis H. Freedman has removed to 661 W. Monroe street, phone 3203 Ashland, where he has opened a private sanitarium for city and out of town patients. Hours 12 to 2 and 5 to 8 daily. Mrs. Freedman, the well known psychic, gives sittings daily; public circles Wednesday evenings and Friday afternoone at 3 o'clock.

Isa Wilson Kayner writes that when she left her home in Chicago to journey towards Texas, she stopped at Winfield, Kansas, for one week's work, and had good results while there. It was a pleasure for her to be among the people there. She says Kansas is a good field, and ought to have missionaries at work, especially in the small towns. She left there for the San Antonio state convention, Texas, but only remained for one day, as good Brother Ring sent her on to take charge of his Temple at Galveston. She met a warm welcome there. She says that The Progressive Thinker is in great demand wherever she goes and all wish we had continued the Open Court longer, for no honest medium who loves their work need fear the results of such inquiry, but should help, rather than hinder the work.

Dr. C. I. Kehligua of Canton, Ohio, is in the city this week attending to private business. The Doctor is a cultured young man, and being a splendid psychic, he will make his mark in the world, and do much to promote our glorious cause.

L. Bradley writes from Bloomington, Ill.: "We have just had the two good workers for the cause with us for two meetings, Oct. 3 and 4. Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague gave very interesting lectures on the 4th; had full house, people standing and sitting on the floor, which was an excellent start, after having been closed for the summer. After the lecture we held a business meeting and elected your humble servant as delegate to the N. S. A. convention. We will have with us on Sunday, Mrs. A. E. Kibby, a fine lecturer and test medium from Cincinnati, Ohio. We hope to awaken some of the silent souls here."

S. J. DeYoung, a minister who believes in Spiritualism, writes: "In the name of Christianity much crime and evil have been committed but only by those who did not yet fully understand Christianity, or who lacked the power of it in their hearts and lives. Christianity must not be blamed for the barbarisms of Old Testament times. If all lived up to the teachings of Jesus Christ there would not be a war or a crime in all the world. He said, 'Thou shalt love the Lord thy God (perfectly), and thy neighbor as thyself.' This law He considered the essence of Christianity. I believe in Spiritualism, but also in Jesus Christ as the greatest teacher ever known in the world, and in Christianity as the hope of mankind. Dogmas and creeds may come and go in different ages, and some of them cannot stand investigation and are bad, but Christianity, or God as revealed in Christ, is our star of hope. Because some ministers, who are wedded to out-of-date creeds and others who are not open to conviction, do not at once accept Spiritualism is no reason why you should seek to destroy Christianity. True Christianity and Spiritualism are not antagonistic but harmonious. It is only the creeds and personal opinions of many ministers and Christians that oppose you. I can see no reason why one should renounce the Bible and Christianity because he accepts Spiritualism. They are not at all necessarily contradictory."

C. H. Figuers writes from Cleveland, Ohio: "Our hall meetings began the first Sunday in September and have been well attended. One evening in September there was quite a large class of children christened, their parents desiring the same, and being willing to train their children in the beauties of a spiritual life. The hall was profusely decorated with cut flowers, and the music furnished by Mr. Phil Herder, Jr., and Mrs. Mulder, was appropriate and spiritual in its nature. All the other societies are now in full operation and have good audiences. Last Sunday evening the East End Spiritual Society, 1749 Superior street, C. H. Figuers, chairman, gave a musical entertainment for the benefit of our 'Poor Brother Fund,' which was a fine affair, although the audience was small. The music furnished by Mr. Phil Herder, Jr., Mrs. Laura Mulder, Master Alexander Herder, Mrs. Birdie Woodrough, Mrs. Edith Fitzgibbons, Mr. Fitzgibbons and Mrs. C. H. Figuers was of a very high order of excellence, as was also the readings of Miss Nellie Burchwald and Miss Alice Reil. Nearer the holidays we may have another entertainment for the same purpose. After several removals the past summer, we are now located at 391 Willson avenue, and will be pleased to meet any of the friends who may be passing through Cleveland."

G. H. Elliott writes from Edgewood, Iowa: "Mrs. Virginia Bryan of Chicago, who is a worker in the spiritual field, has been with us for a few days, and has created considerable interest and inquiry in the community relating to the spiritual philosophy and subjects connected therewith. While here she gave at the Rosenkranz school house three lectures on Spiritualism. Her lectures here are the first that has been given to the public on the philosophy, and they were well received. We regret she could not have remained with us a longer time, but we feel that the way has been opened for other workers to follow and a warm welcome for her return in the near future if circumstances permit. A good medium who can give the genuine phenomena in connection with lectures on the philosophy, could do a good work among us."

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Passed to spirit life, Mrs. Helen M., wife of Dr. J. C. Schoonover, at her home in Santa Barbara, Cal., of paralysis, at the age of 73 years. She had been an ardent Spiritualist for many years. She was ready and axious to go. She passed away peacefully without a struggle. She leaves (beside her husband) one son to mourn their loss, which is her gain. Deceased had been a constant reader of the The Progressive Thinker since its first publication.

J. C. S.

Passed to spirit life, in Chicago, Oct. 7, 1904, our Sister Margaret Sickel, beloved mother of our Brother Rudolf Sickel, and an honored member of Bund der Warheit No. 18. She left the earth life in her 62nd year, having been a Spiritualist over half the years of her earthly pilgrimage. Interment at Graceland, under the auspices of the above society, and funeral address by the writer. EMIL T. VAAS.

The many summer residents of Lake Pleasant, Mass., will be shocked to learn of the transition of Mrs. L. Barron of Brooklyn, N. Y., wife of Mr. E. Barron, for seventeen years summer residents here. The fuperal occurred on the 7th inst., and was conducted by R. F. Churchill and Francis B. Woodbury. A large company of friends were present, as she was universally respected and loved for her many virtues. Appropriate music was rendered by Mr. Chas. Bickford and Miss Elizabeth Bickford.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give what ever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

F. H. P.: Q. What of the International Spiritual Association? I attended a so-called "ordination," and the medium paid $50 for the same.

A. I have never heard of the association named, and while the National Spiritualists Association grants certificates to capable persons, at a nominal fee, we cannot understand why anyone should give fifty dollars for what practically is of no more value than a certificate recommending a patent medicine. Mediumship cannot be bought, nor influence gained or sustained by "ordination," even of the most popular society. A society can only recognize ability, and introduce it to the public. The benefit is mutual, and it may also be said that if either society or the "ordained" are unworthy, the other suffers from the reflected disgrace. An "ordination," from some societies, like diplomas from some "institutes," "colleges," etc., is more of disgrace than honor. And this recalls the memory of a man who had been very successful and "smart" in business. He had met a medium, and been told by his "spirit guides" that "he had a great mission," and was a wonderful medium. He retired from business, to attend to this mission, whereby he was to be the one man called by the spirit world to turn the world over when ready, like a half-done pancake. His "mission" seemed to be running from one "wonder medium" to another, and he always returned filled with delight at the things he saw—manifestations which a bit of common sense would have told him were impossible. The "spirit control" at last promised through a "medium," for a good hundred dollars, to "materialize" a talismanic medal, or diploma, which would be his passport to carry him forward in his mission. He related to me how he paid the money to the "medium," who acted as treasurer, and as they sat in a dark room, down through the ceiling dropped something into his lap. The light was turned on, and behold a splendid work of spirit art! He proudly drew it from his breast pocket, and held it in triumph before my face. "There it is," he exclaimed. This is my credential from the spirit world, thrust directly through the roof and ceiling into my hand! Who dare say that spirits cannot materialize or push matter through matter, when they see this?"

I took it from his hand for closer examination, gingerly, perhaps, for there might be a magnetic power in it which would produce unknown effects. It appeared to be a disc of thin sole leather, the size of a small saucer, the edges cut in notches. In a circle around the border was written in pen-printed letters: "Adelonzo Blank is hereby certified to be an A. No. 1 medium." This was for him, but there was something added for the public to whom it was to be presented. A donkey cut out of bright tin was fastened in the center and the reader might stop at the image, and catch the remarkable truthfulness of the certificate.

"What do you think?" he brusquely asked. Now it is not always pleasant to be driven into a corner and compelled to tell exactly what you think. It gets you into trouble, usually, unless you think just as you are wanted to. So I replied: "After seeing that medal, no one will dare dispute that the spirits can materialize and pass matter through matter, if they have other conclusive evidence; nor can they dispute that it recommends you for exactly what you are."

Victor Darnell: Q. An Episcopal church member says that his church is older than the Roman Catholic. Is this true?

A. Before Henry VIII, the Catholic religion claiming direct descendance from the Apostle Peter, was the state religion of England. That notorious profligate, was himself a good Catholic. He became enamored with Anne Boleyn, and wished a divorce from his good wife Catharine, which the Pope refused. He appealed to his own archbishop, and not in vain. Cranmer, Archbishop of Canterbury, annulled his former marriage and sanctioned that with Anne Boleyn. The pope annulled the decision of Cranmer, and threatened to excommunicate the king unless he obeyed. To sustain himself, Henry declared himself free and England free from the pope and the Catholic church, and thus the Church of England came into existence. It was to sanction the amours of the most corrupt and immoral man who ever sat on the English throne that the division from the mother church was created and sustained. A full narrative of this matter is given by Hume in his History of England, and the impartiality with which he wrote of these religious affairs has made him one of the most hated of historians. But like Gibbon, his work is so exhaustive and complete that the world's library cannot refuse it a place.

A GIFT OF THE GODS.

The Proof of the Continuity of Life.

To the Editor:—The article that you reproduce from the Chicago Inter Ocean, as coming from Mr. Leadbeater, is decidedly significant of the growth of liberality, and the increased tendency to listen to what "the other fellow" has to say; it has been one of the leading characteristics of humanity, that every one who made a discovery of any kind thought his discovery was the only one worth considering—result: the numerous creeds, dogmas and theories—every one of which is right (?).

I have often wondered if our Spiritualists were not a little inclined to think that they had all there was to be learned in connection with life here and hereafter, and have asked myself, "will they not be brought up with a halt some day, only to find that while they were 'blowing' about the superiority of what they had done some one else had stolen the plums"? Human nature is so much alike, no matter what garb the owner of the body in which that particular specimen manifests, that everyone is a little inclined to think that he, or she, has been selected of all men to receive the only true revelation (?).

Each day the conviction is forced upon me that we, none of us get more than a fragment of the truth, and get so carried away with that that we have no time to grow large enough to comprehend more; as a consequence I begin to see that some of the people we have been condemning have something good to listen to.

Not long ago I heard one of our speakers make the assertion that 'Theosophy is the sum total of all the ignorance of the ages," or words to that effect; I have pitied him a good many times, and do so more and more as I learn that there are many in the fold who are as earnest as we are ourselves—and who really believe in the communion of souls. A good many of us think that we are Spiritualists simply because we believe that the dead live on, and can sometimes communicate with their friends of earth; that, however, does not constitute a Spiritualist—my mother was a Catholic, yet she believed that the dead were at times permitted to show themselves—she not only believed it, but knew it; my father was a man who had traveled all over the world, was an Episcopalian, or Church of England man, who knew nothing about Spiritualism, yet told me that he knew the spirits of the dead were all around us and under some conditions could communicate.

All of this goes to show that we are not alone in this belief that we are presenting to the world—the only thing is we have coined a word for an old truth. Our difference, perhaps, lies in the freedom with which we believe the denizens of another phase of life can talk with those of this degree—also in the difference of opinion as to the means of obtaining salvation, etc; but, do even these make one a Spiritualist any more than watching a carpenter make shavings makes of one a carpenter?

If there is nothing more than simple belief in a few points in the ethics of morals to make up the difference, that difference had better be thrown away, and we had better go back to the status of the "three Rs" in religious thought; what we want is something practical—something useful, logical and beneficial—something in fact that will make us just a little in advance of the adherents of the non-progressive creeds and dogmas. I know that no religion in the world can present finer philosophy than can Spiritualism—all the wisdom of the past, present and future is on tap for us through the wonderful gift of mediumship, when we choose to allow it to develop according to nature's and the spirit world's best evolved plans; but the question that arises is, what use are we making of all of these privileges? Are we allowing them to evolve us to a greater height than others have reached? and receiving those most excellent lessons from the ages of the world of spirits, do we put them into practical application?

How many will deny the truth of the assertion when I say that we are not always putting those principles into use—when I aver that we have proven that we, too, have been guilty of the very thing that we scorn the "orthodox" for; I do not think many will attempt a denial. But lest they should, let us see: The orthodox have a devil of whom they are mightily afraid, and who is responsible (?) for their misdemeanors—and a good many people who call themselves Spiritualists have their guides, or their obsessing influences, who compel (?) them to do these things they would not have done otherwise (?), and the anger of each class waxes mighty if we so much as intimate that they had a little more to do with the misdeeds themselves, and that neither devils or guides are all to blame.

The orthodox says that the Spiritualist is of the devil, and some of the Spiritualists are sure that the devil never succeeded in getting out of the clutches of orthodoxy—and each one is sure that the other is unworthy of trust, and gets belligerent, and wants to drive the other fellow's ideas out of court—to sort o' quash the evidence, as it were. This is not a diatribe against either Spiritualists or Orthodox, it is simply a plea that will rise up in spite of everything, for a little more of that blessed quality of which we so often speak, that humanitarianism that we talk about.

We do not want our Christian friends to lean so much on their God, nor to blame their Devil as much as they do; then, good people, what is the matter with practicing what we preach? Let us learn to think a little without demanding that our "Guides" do everything for us, and let us be honest enough to make a mistake without blaming some decarnate man or woman for the act.

We must learn that every "chill" that we have is not a proof of immortality—it is sometimes a proof of negligence as regards sanitary and health laws; let us realize that we have some soul powers that may be cultivated, that no more prove the continuity of life than A is like B; they simply prove to what extent we as souls may unfold—and I say all of this with my well known faith in spirit phenomena still strong upon me, and growing stronger. I say all of this with the conviction that but few of us have got as far as the foot hills, as far as being Spiritualists in the absolute sense is concerned; and you and I, my dear reader, have probably been numbered among those who have only caught sight of these foot hills.

Again we must learn that no one has a monopoly upon the spirit men, or the inhabitants of the more ethereal world, to the extent that we can compel them to come at our every beck and call; nor yet can all regard for the proper conditions be ignored and still have every seance favored with the most astonishing phenomena; reason tells us that this is an impossibility. Also, let us please understand that we cannot all be the proud recipients of the influence of a Lincoln, a Grant or a Shakspeare, to say nothing of a Buddha or a Christ—a Plato or an Aristotle.

These are some of the things that I find some of our most sincere investigators stumble upon; the thought that there has been such falling away on the part of some of the world's greatest men and women, if it be true that all who claim to have been favored with their influence are not misled.

I have in my possession a letter from a man who has spent years in the Christian ministry. In this letter he says to me, "I have tried everything—I now turn to Spiritualism as my last hope." Think of that, all ye who read these words, see in that the eagerness to pierce the gloom—hear in that the heart cry of a hungry soul who is yearning for knowledge as to whether his loved ones are living or dead, and then tell me—shall we continue to underestimate our cause, and make it the laughing stock of an intelligent world by putting upon our platform that which will not prove the continuity of life? If we tell a man that a member of his household is going to be "sick," does that prove that "my loved ones who have gone before" still live? If we give advice in business, does that necessarily prove that a loved father, mother, daughter or wife who has departed hence has returned to that vast assembly, that great concourse of people.

Thanks to the angel world, we have the phenomena that does prove the continuity of life—let us guard it as a sacred gift—a gift of the Gods; let us elevate mediumship to the highest possible pinnacle, and then say to a curious world: Behold, an angelic one cometh from afar—from that strange country, the beyond, to give thee greeting, go purify thyself, then come and receive love's benediction from the "home of the soul"; then, then only, will a waiting world receive us with open arms.

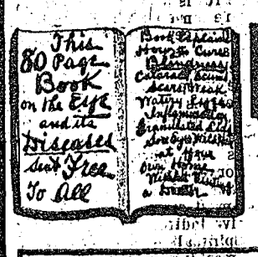
THOUGHTS ARE THINGS.

As Viewed by an Exponent of New Thought.

Dr. J. M. Peebles doubts the truth of the statement that "Thoughts are things." The Standard Dictionary states that a "thing" is "Any separate or distinguishable object, or thought." To the vision of a highly cultivated clairvoyant, thoughts are visible as distinguishable objects. And to the sight of spirits of any degree of unfoldment they are objects of thought. The human body with its positive and negative forces may be compared to an electric generator. The electric machine gives off sparks of electric energy, visible to physical sense; the human battery gives off sparks of intelligent force visible to the senses of clairvoyants and spirits. The prayers and aspirations of mortals become visible before the sight of the ministering spirits of God, and according to their wisdom they read in the auric coloring of thought the desire, purpose and quality of the thinker. Thus through the prayers and aspirations of mortals beneficent spirits are often drawn to aid the suffering, heal the sick and inspire those who make their wants known in heaven.

The nobler the motive of the one seeking help from above, the greater the power and wisdom of those that respond. I know from my own experience that thoughts are creative, for in answer to my prayers for strength to live a pure and spiritual life, thought forces have been sown in my nature that have healed me mentally and physically, and inspired me with that love which ever seeks to uplift and inspire others. I also know from much experience that thoughts as things continue to grow by drawing to themselves more substance of the same quality, becoming veritable imps if their quality is bad, and miniature angels of mercy if their quality is beneficent. Those beautiful cherubs that inhabit the celestial atmosphere and continually "behold the face of their Father" are spoken of by the inhabitants of those realms as the "Thoughts" of God. Surely they are things.



Our thoughts are a very necessary "substance" to our spiritual friends if they would help us in healing at a distance. Every one can generate from his or her battery of energy thought forces that will work intelligently in the body of a patient to harmonize discordant conditions of mind and body. These thought forces are much more beautiful "things" when the soul of the sender is bright and strong with cultivated spiritual power. They are more vital, more intelligent and more powerful as healing agencies according to the soul power of the healer, which power is developed by use. The thought forces sent out by a cultivated soul in the body may be much more powerful than those sent by an uncultivated soul even though it be free from the limitations of the body, because we are spirits now and our influence on this or spiritual planes all depends upon our realization of wisdom and love.

Probably Dr. Peebles wants the statement qualified by the word spiritual, because he states that "if they be things, are they not the subjects of avoirdupois, something like lumps of chalk. Things imply form, weight, color, shape, etc." They certainly have form, shape, and color and therefore are spiritual "things." As to the weight of thoughts, I have met with patients bowed down under the weight of sorrow and condemnation to the extent that the recuperative forces of life could not heal them. But when the truth of immortality and the truth of Divine love had lifted or scattered the heavy ignorant thoughts, life bounded free and joyous through the veins and health was restored. Dr. Peebles' statements have considerable "weight" with the Spiritualistic public, but I trust they may weigh my thoughts also and find them not wanting in reason and truth.

MRS. CLARA WATSON EXPLAINS.

Dr. J. M. Peebles and Pottawattamie Jones Did Not Fully Comprehend Her.

To the Editor:—In view of the fact that you gave space for two "broadsides" of "shot and shell" to be hurled at me at once, will you not kindly allow me opportunity to send a harmless missile back?

One of the most discouraging features of public expression of opinion is, that invariably people misunderstand your meaning and motive.

Both Dr. Peebles and Pottawattamie Jones seem not to have grasped the spirit that prompted my article, and take it all as sound and serious, instead of in the spirit of "pleasantry" in which it was written; and yet after all there was a sense of seriousness that filled my mind, and really I suppose a matter so serious as "demon control" ought not to be trifled with.

The good Doctor thinks I use the words diabolical and devil too freely, and says that devils and demons have a different meaning, and that cultured people make a distinction in their writings. Well, it may be that Noah Webster had no culture, but he was certainly scholarly and is a standard authority, and his definitions of devil and demon are exactly alike, "an evil spirit," and certainly popular teaching has placed devil, demon, Satan, evil spirit, etc., in the same class, and if I used the word demon freely, so does the "review."

But the joke of the matter is that both Friend Peebles and Friend Jones come after me as though I doubted the statements of the book, and questioned the correctness of the data contained therein, when not a hint to that effect occurred in my article. I would no more think of doubting the word of the learned Pilgrim Brother, than he would the fiat of his Almighty God, and speaking of God, let me say the good Doctor did not quite touch the point I made in reference thereto. I knew he did not believe in a personal or Jehovah God, but he said "Almighty God is over all," and whether his god be personal or impersonal, almighty means all-power, and certainly all-power, if it were an intelligent power, would have the power to stop "demonism," if thought advisable. And I am sure that out of all the gods of the past and present, the Doctor would have picked an intelligent one.

I will assume, then, that his god is intelligent; perhaps he has selected "Infinite Intelligence" as his god. But even ordinary intelligence, such as mortals possess would know that "demons" were not nice companions for earth's children.

What would we little mortals think of the great and good Dr. Peebles if he possessed all-power and did not exert it in "demon land," to subdue the evil tendencies of the demoniac class? If he would not, I for one would not desire to worship at his shrine.

And then I knew, too, that the Doctor did not believe in the one big, omnipotent devil of the long ago; did further, I had heard that the old fellow was "dead as a door-nail, and was aware, too, that the good Doctor had helped to bury his "Satanic majesty," nor did I hint in my article that such a creature had existence. I said: "Not one supreme, pompous devil as of yore, but now ten million billion demons crowding the atmosphere." Strange the Doctor could not read as I wrote.

But really I am not sure that the old concept of one supreme demon or devil is not preferable to that of millions of lesser ones, for could we not dodge a great dragon-devil stalking over the earth, better than we can the insidious influence of billions of small demons that the "reviewer" says, "form themselves into bands of angels of destruction," and swoop down upon unsuspecting mortals.

But of course facts are facts, and facts are stubborn things, and if the air is filled with demons, I suppose humanity ought to know it, and in all seriousness I say it is horrible to contemplate. I may be possessed of a "supersensitive soul," as Mr. Jones suggests, but really how any one could have read the "review," say nothing about reading the book, without a sense of horror, I am sure I do not know.

Dr. Peebles says I painted a picture from my fancy. Not so, kind sir. The picture was presented in the "review." Here is a little glimpse of it. "That evil spirits can intrude their crude, selfish, ignorant, malicious, revengeful, and malevolent wills upon unsuspecting denizens of earth; that they can influence, affect, obsess, control and finally possess living mortals; that they can alter, interrupt, divert, twist, disfigure and destroy life's plans and transform its conduct; that they can gratify their most sensual, bestial and wicked appetites through mortal personalities; that they can and do practice every false pretense, lying, deceit and imposture; that dark demoniac spirits have the power to disturb or absorb the vitality, to cause nervous irritability, to partially paralyze; to infuse poisonous auras; that they have power to produce insanity and power to kill; and that crimes of every hue and grade have ever been and now are suggested, instigated, encouraged and abetted by the unseen powers of the air.'" And this is not all the picture. Look again, kind reader. "They (demons) produce convulsive ailments in children."

"A whole legion (of demons) sometimes lie in wait for a person to fall into their hands." "Under cover of darkness demons often surround houses and injure them that fall into their hands." "As to external appearance the shape of demons is mostly human, but they assume various forms at will. Those associated with dirty places often appear in clouds of smoke." And this is what I meant when I said, "What a smoke," and the "Holy Moses" was simply an exclamation of surprise—not that of "excitement," "anger" or "ridicule," as my critics seem to think. It was just an ejaculation of astonishment, and had no reference to Brother Moses, or to him of the "bulrush" fame. I was astonished, for I had never learned before that clouds composed of "demons" formed a part of our atmosphere.

But there is more to the picture: "Demons infest all ill-aired places, the atmosphere of dark swamps, and garbage deposits are charged with them." "Dark vaults are natural lurking places for demons; graveyards are their favorite resorts."

Why should I not be sorrowful to learn that in the beautiful Lake View Cemetery of my own city, where are laid to rest the mortal forms of my good father and mother, that myriads of demons hold high carnival over the silent resting-place of the cherished dust?

But the picture is not yet finished. Here is something rich in coloring: "Millions of human beings to-day are suffering obsessions that began with their very conception, and have influenced their whole lives on the side of evil and misfortune." Is not such a condition of things horrible, as a part of the government in a universe over which an Almighty God reigns? I do not say it is not true, but if it is true it is diabolical and damning.

But really Pottawattamie Jones is a puzzle. He doubts my ability to lecture. Well, that is his privilege; but the good brother seems to have gotten so enraged at reading my article written as I have stated as a little "pleasantry," that he loses all power to reason. He accuses me of condemning a work I had never read, when there is not a word of condemnation in my article; nor did I lisp a word that I thought the "author's data was false," nor yet that I doubted the statements made.

Yes, friend Jones, I would like to read the book, and hope to be in shape to send for it after a time. I have quite a number of the Doctor's works, and always read them with interest and profit.

Really Mr. Jones' spasm of pain over my "unchristian charity" was wholly unnecessary. And if I had censured and condemned it would have been Christian instead of unchristian, for the Christian method has ever been condemnatory and intolerant.

I have met the genial Dr. Peebles several times and prize his friendship, which I believe I have, and I am sure he will take no offense at my innocently causing a little ripple on the placid sea of journalism.

THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM.

To the Twelfth Annual Convention of the National Spiritualists Association of the United States and Canada, in Convention Assembled in the City of St. Louis, Mo., October 18, 19, 20 and 21, 1904.' Spiritual Era 57:—As National Superintendent of Lyceum Work I extend a most cordial greeting and present my report, as your steward, for this department of the work;—truly the weeks have come and quickly formed the months that have made the year for which I report—from September 1, 1903 to September 1, 1904. The days have passed joyously for so many thoughts and words of appreciation have come to us for the efforts made to further the usefulness of The Progressive Lyceum.

There was a balance of $24.87 in the treasury last September. $40. was placed in the treasury by a lecture tour of ye editor in the interest of the Lyceum work, and the National Spiritualists Association donated $100, making a total of $164.87. You will note by the financial statement that $426.30 has been spent and that $53.87 remains as a balance in the treasury. In order to collect this amount and in order to carry forward the work of the National Superintendent of Lyceum Work, as we understand it, we have written 1200 letters. In answer to these we have received many expressions of thanks to the National Spiritualists Association for having appointed some one to this office; surely then you feel in every way rewarded for the outlay of money and the trust placed in the office, for I feel that the National Superintendent of Lyceum Work holds a truly responsible office.

There has been mailed in the fifty-two issues extending from No. 40 of Vol. 1, to No. 40 of Vol. 2, 26,800 four-page and 9,250 eight-page lesson sheets, a total of 36,050. These have borne the glad message of spirit return, expressed in such language as seems best, for adult, the intermediate and the little folks. Many have come forward with contributions, without which the work would have been badly handicapped; I refrain from the use of space to record all their names for I believe they have done all they could just for the sake of the duty which we owe the children.

Sixty dollars was used from the treasury, by permission of the National Board to partially purchase a new typewriter; the Texas State Association of Spiritualists furnished another sum and I gave my old machine in exchange.

Last year there were sixteen Lyceums affiliated with the Progressive Lyceum Family; this year there are twenty-six. There have been some Lyceums started during the year that did not meet with sufficient success to guarantee the continuation, but in most cases, they report growth and progress. In a late issue of the Progressive Lyceum you will find a statement from several Lyceums as to their age, number of attendants, order of sessions, etc. It seems to me that in a few years we will be able to count the enrolled members of the Lyceums of the United States and Canada. Little by little the various Lyceums are "falling into line" and giving support to the aims of The Progressive Lyceum. This co-operation and concentration is absolutely necessary for success in the teaching of our beloved philosophy. May we each do all we can to hasten the time when our Lyceum workers will contribute their ideas, embodied in suitable lessons, to The Progressive Lyceum, and go forth to the thousands of Lyceum members, in proper order.

Six volumes of the issues composing Vol 1 were bound. One of these filed in the office of the N. S. A.; one sent to each of our faithful contributors, Mrs. Eleanor K. Eager and Mr. Alonzo Danforth; one kept by ye editor; one sold to the library of the Home Lyceum in Galveston and the remaining one is here at the convention for the delegates to carefully peruse.

The Spiritualist papers, The Progressive Thinker, the Sunflower, Light of Truth, Philosophical Journal, Banner of Light, and Reason, have been especially courteous in the kindness of printing matter relative to the work of the Lyceum and we also have been noticed by not a few other exchanges—extracts from The Progressive Lyceum have been noticed in the Magazine of Mysteries, Suggestion and various other popular magazines.

The Progressive Lyceum is growing in favor, as a lesson sheet, wherever used; and we hope to, during the next year, gather other Lyceums, and get more directly in touch with the objects and aims of the work.

I am always, JOHN W. RING,
National Superintendent Lyceum Work, Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas.

O, that the wise from their bright minds would kindle
Such lamps within the dome of this dim world,
That the pale name of priest might shrink and dwindle
Into the hell from which it first was hurled,
A scoff of impious pride from fiends impure;
Till human thoughts might kneel alone
Each before the judgment throne
Of its own aweless soul, or of the power unknown!
—Shelley.

Why was not the serpent kept out of the garden? Why did not the Lord God take him by the tail and snap his head off? Why did he not put Adam and Eve on their guard about this serpent? They, of course, were not acquainted in the neighborhood, and know nothing about the serpent's reputation.—Ingersoll.

Why do you make the supreme being resemble an eastern tyrant? Why make him punish faults with eternal torment? Why thus put the name of the Divinity at the bottom of the portrait of the devil?—Helvetius.

You can cram these words into mine ears against the stomach of my sense.—Shakspeare.

THE BOOK OF WISDOM
THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER

A Battle Royal, In The Open Court, Between the Giant Minds of Spiritualism will begin in this paper some time in November, upon the subject matter contained in the late book by Dr. J. M. Peebles, on "The Demonism of the Ages, Spirit Obsessions," Etc., which promise s to eclipse all previous discussions.

After Death—What?

Allow me to express a few thoughts on the question propounded by the "Sage of San Leandro," After Death—What? Were such a thing as death possible, my answer would be, Nothing. But as all science demonstrates there is no death, Brother Dawbarn must mean that "critical point" called death, by the unthinking multitude. The answer must be the same, as at all his other critical points: change. The science of astronomy has demonstrated that no two moments have been the same. No thing has been the same for two moments at a time, since many trillions of ages ago; when this planet we now live on, that we call the earth, with all the other planets of our system, that at that time, or a few more or less ages, formed a part of the gaseous body of what we call the Sun, which at that time filled all the space within the circle described by our planet Neptune, or more—I say no two moments have beheld the same conditions in anything. Everything has been change, change, change. Every particle of matter is subject to this universal law of change. A moment's cessation would bring chaos. What the oucome will be, no being can tell.

Reason and religion are at variance upon the subject; reason says religion is superstition, and as no two persons can write the same account of it, what constitutes it, it seems a very indefinite article.

We have not even a thought that does not originate in matter. Call me a materialist if you will. But first show me something that does not come from matter, and tell me from what it does come. Every breath changes the blood, and that the brain cells, and finally the thought. The eye brings new thought continually, every breeze that blows. So it is ever thus: change, change, change.

Every week as I read my Progressive Thinker, and cull the good thoughts therein, I wonder why you do not have a million subscribers. I am sure that no other paper in the world gives as much food for thought as The Progressive Thinker, at any price.

As to materialization, I have seen it dozens of times, in sunlight, in shade, in the fields, and in the house, many times with no person within two miles of me. But of course my testimony is of no value to anyone but myself. But if the statements of such scientific men as Profs. Crookes, Wallace, Varley and a host of others as capable of observation and as truthful, do not establish a truth, then no evidence can do so.

Combat every fraud. Fear not. Truth crushed to earth will rise again.
JOEL BYRNS.

THE BIBLE New and Revised Edition.
Authenticity, Credibility, Morality.

JOHN E. REMSBURG'S GREAT WORK

The late R. G. Ingersoll stated in one of his famous lectures on the Bible: "Somebody ought to tell the truth about the Bible." John E. Remsburg, former President of the American Secular Union, has taken this obligation upon himself, and the fruits of his studies on the subject are now published in the shape of nearly 500 pages. The "higher criticism" has already plowed this field over quite deeply, but it has reached the ear of the public only in a fragmentary way, and even at that has found a very reluctant echo in the press. So much the more reason for rejoicing that this comprehensive work, got up in simple and popular language, is all contained in a single synoptically arranged book. The separate chapters of the work appeared in consecutive order in an uninterrupted series of articles in the New York Truth Seeker.

The facts set forth in this book about the Bible, its origin, its compilation, its preservation, its falsehoods, its credibility, and the morality it inculcates, are only partially known to the majority of ministers and priests, and it is earnestly to be desired that well-to-do Freethinkers may take it upon themselves to make energetic propaganda of the modern "higher" elucidation of the Bible by gratuitous distribution of this book to public libraries, or to Messrs. the pastors. The enormous expenditure of time and labor which the author imposed upon himself, the astonishingly low price of the book as compared with the attractive form in which it is gotten up, as well as the unanswerable logic of the composer—he lets the holy book for the most part speak for itself—are indeed worthy of the highest praise.

Ingersoll's desire that somebody should at last tell the whole truth about the Bible has been brilliantly fulfilled. No Freethinker worthy of the name can afford to pass over Remsburg's book in silence. Like Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason," may it, let us hope, find admirers and translators in other languages. And again, like Paine's book, may this brilliant work bring to its author the praise of posterity.—Der Freidenker (Milwaukee).

This great work on the Bible by Mr. Remsburg is most valuable—it is an encyclopedia of information in regard to the Bible, and surpasses in importance all other works of the kind now published. It is up-to-date in every particular. Price, $1.25.

"The Truth Seeker Collection of Forms and Ceremonies for the Use of Liberals." Price 25 cents.

"Cosmian Hymn Book." A collection of original and selected hymns, for liberal and ethical societies, for schools, and the home; compiled by L. K. Washburn. This volume meets a public want. It comprises 258 choice selections of poetry and music, embodying the highest moral sentiment, and free from all sectarianism. Price 50 cents.

"The Commandments Analyzed." By W. H. Bach. The Commandments are not only analyzed, but contrasted with other Bible passages, showing great incongruities. Price 25 cents.

IMPORTANT.
Owing to the fact that the courts have in every case decided against Psychic Healers who advertise to cure the sick without drugs, where the case has been between the U. S. government and a Healer (deciding that it is a clear case of intent to defraud) to advertise to diagnose also, without leading symptoms being given. Therefore I have decided, as a physician in good standing, to not advertise my gift of Psychic Healing, but will diagnose disease and not ask a fee for so doing. UNSEEN FORCES.

Rev. R. M. Vaughan, a Prominent Baptist Minister, Expresses His Views in a Comprehensive Manner—He Claims That Unseen Forces Rule the Scientific, Mechanical and Natural Worlds—An Extract From His Sermon.

Rev. R. M. Vaughan delivered Sunday morning at the Baptist church an address on "Unseen Forces." His text was the seventeenth verse of the sixth chapter of II. Kings: "And Elisha prayed and said, 'Lord, I pray thee, open his eyes that he may see.' And the Lord opened the eyes of the young man; and he saw, and, behold, the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire, round about Elisha."

Unseen Army.

He said in part: "Elisha foiled the plans of the king of the Assyrians who had determined to kill him by calling on the Lord to show this man the unseen forces of protection. We do not know what the army of the Lord was, but we do know that all around were the unseen forces. But are there unseen forces? Are there spiritual powers? Nature bears witness of the unseen forces in the flow of the river, the fall of the autumnal leaf and the flaming path of the meteor, all of which demonstrate that there is a force of gravitation but no one ever saw this force; they see the result of the gravitation and know it is there, but gravitation is an unseen force.

Forces of Nature.

"As the electric current is sent through the telegraph wire by the manipulation of the key we are able to see the movement of the receiving apparatus but we cannot see the force that impels this movement—electricity is one of the unseen forces of nature. We can notice the growth of trees, the opening of the flower and the ripening of the fruit, but we are unable to observe that force which organizes and changes the soil and the rain and the sunshine into the tree and the flower and the fruit. Life, too, is an unseen force of nature. The man has not looked upon the surface who says he believes only that which he sees.

Science and Reality.

"All the developments of science prove that there are unseen forces. Reality is a proof also for, who ever saw a thought in the brain of man? The brain has been laid open to view and the nervous twitchings have been watched but these twitchings are not thoughts, they are the accompaniments of thoughts. Intelligence is also one of the unseen forces. Christian Dewett laid down his rifle after the final close of the Boer war and went home with the conviction that no matter how stubborn were his fellow fighters on the veldt they they could not equal the educated young soldiers of the English and now that man is doing all in his power to strengthen and maintain the rule of intelligence in South Africa.

Japan's Power.

"Japan is now driving Russia from the far East because of the superior education of the soldiers who are fighting for the right to work out the destinies of their country over those soldiers from a nation where only one in fifty can read or write. The literary, technical and scientific schools of Japan are conquering the illiterate and ignorant product of a despotically ruled people. In 1776 the British minister paid little attention to the Continental army, but the words of William Pitt proved all too true. 'It is not so much that we must take into account the guns of the Americans as their sentiments of liberty.' It was the sentiment of liberty that existed in the hearts of the men at Valley Forge who left their bloody foot-prints on the snow that won for America her independence; but was ever a sentiment seen? Ideas, not battalions, rule the world.

Love a Force.

"Mightiest of all sunseen forces is that of love. We are capable of seeing a cup of water but we see not the love of the disciple for Christ. In the conquest of Guatemala the army of the Spaniards was thrice repulsed, but a monk set the scriptures into verse, taught the captured Indians his songs and released them. They sang them to the rulers of the land and peace was secured between the Spaniards and the Guatemalans by the love of this Christian monk for these Indians.

"We see the flowers in the summer months but they are only the evidence of the season, we see not the summer itself.

God, an Unseen Force.

"So we shall never see God in any different way than as we do at the present, but we may see him larger and better. What the air is to the bird that God is to us, his soul is the soul of our soul. Our supreme need is to see God, that the eyes of the heart may be enlightened. Jesus said: 'Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God.'

"The unseen forces are not meaningless; they are real; they have a meaning for our lives; they are for us to use. Elisha made use of the unseen forces and saved his servants and conquered the Syrians. The consciousness of the power of the unseen forces gives serenity of mind.

Their Use.

"Abraham went in search of new abodes relying on the unseen force of God to direct his footsteps and preserve him in the wilderness. Moses went out of the land of Egypt trusting that this same unseen force would protect him and his followers from the wrath of Pharaoh. Stephen was stoned outside the gate, but because he believed in the unseen force, the heavens were opened to his view and he beheld Jesus standing on the right side of God.

Quest of Power.

"Everywhere now is there a quest for power. In the industrial realm they seek the power of nature and a method of its use. Science is supremely concerned in the quest for power and they have harnessed the falls of Niagara and the rapids of the Zambesi. The Christians are in search of spiritual power to worship God. One law prevails for all three: If we obey the law of operation of a force the force will obey us. The Chinese discovered gunpowder could be made from a composition of certain substances that had always existed but never used this invention. It was left the European people to discover a practical use for it. So also is electricity as old as the planet. The globe itself is an immense dynamo, but it was not discovered until recent centuries and the discovery of its use belongs to a still later time. First it was found out that it could be generated by mechanical force, then chemical force, then Morse found a means for its transmission and now it shows its power without being sent over wires.

"If we give ourselves up to the forces they give themselves to us—if we yield we wield. Elisha obeyed the unseen forces and they stood at his command. Dominion is our power."

The above from a Baptist minister indicates some progress.

National Spiritualists' Association.

To the Officers, Delegates, Friends and Supporters of the National Spiritualists' Association in Convention Assembled: Greeting:—In compliance with the requirements of the Constitution, By-laws, Rules and Regulations of the National Spiritualists' Association, I have the honor to submit my report as president for the current year.

In Review.

I cannot report any marked increase of interest in Spiritualism as a movement, nor in the National Association, as its official organic representative, during the past year. Some local societies and one state association have been formed and have united with the N. S. A., but fully as many locals have either withdrawn therefrom, or have disbanded and returned their charters; hence the societary membership is not as large as it was one year ago. Some of the largest and most influential local bodies in the United States have canceled their charters during the year. The cause of these withdrawals should be determined by this convention, and I recommend that an investigation be made accordingly.

In some communities public interest in Spiritualism has decreased to an alarming degree, owing to improper management of local meetings, or to the exposure of some arrant counterfeiter of mediumship. In other sections there has been a decided increase of interest, and many people have been led to accept the demonstrations offered by Spiritualism as evidences of the truth of its claims. From my personal experience, I feel that the decrease of interest in the movement as a whole, without regard to the National Spiritualists' Association, or to organization in any form, is far in excess of the increased interest in special centers, or states. Indifference has crept in, and it has seemed next to impossible to bring home to the hearts of our people any sense of the obligations they are under to their religion, or to organization in Spiritualism. The delegates to this convention should look into this matter, and devise methods by which healthy growth along all lines in our work can be stimulated. I recommend the appointment of a special committee to consider these paragraphs, whose duty it shall be to report to this convention some plan by which the needed reforms can be inaugurated.

No Pessimism in the Truth.

I may be accused of pessimism in laying the unvarnished truth before you. The facts are as stated, and it is our duty to meet them. There is no pessimism in an honest statement of the truth. Indifference, indecision, self-satisfaction, and kindred ills have crept into our ranks, and have suddenly made themselves felt in the local and state organizations, also in regard to the movement as a whole. But all is not dark. There are some signs of promise, and it is because of these that I believe the evils named can be overcome, and better work made possible for the coming year.

Encouragements.

The secular press has treated Spiritualism, for the most part, with courtesy and respect. It has, in nearly all cases, reported our conventions fairly and impartially, and has not indulged in sarcasm and ridicule at our expense. Other religious bodies have, in most instances, been uniformly just and fair in their treatment of Spiritualism. They have given courteous recognition to the National Spiritualists' Association as the official head of Spiritualism as a religious movement, and have turned to it for information of an authentic character with regard to Spiritualism as a cult. This is likewise true of statisticians, information bureaux, and business corporations, that are desirous of presenting substantial facts to the world in their published statements, irrespective of denominations. The railor courtesies would have been extended just and fair in all their dealings with our people. These facts are encouraging, but they point to the absolute necessity of proper organization, and a loyal support of the same on the part of Spiritualists. None of these favors or couresies would have been extended to us had it not been for the N. S. A., and the respect paid it by people outside of our ranks. Permit me to urge upon you, as a delegate body, the necessity of doing something to awaken greater interest in the N. S. A., on the part of our people. I recommend action to that end.

Missionary Work.

In compliance with the orders of our last annual convention, missionary work was undertaken by the N. S. A. upon similar lines to those followed in past years. Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague, than whom there are no more loyal and faithful workers in our ranks, were engaged as missionaries at large, at a salary of one hundred and twenty-five dollars per month and all expenses. From January 10 to April 1, your president was also engaged as missionary, at a salary of one hundred and fifty dollars per month, and all expenses, save that of board. Rev. George H. Brooks, Mrs. Lole F. Prior, Rev. W. V. Nigum and Mr. Max Gentzke were appointed missionaries to serve without salary. They are and always have been loyal friends of the N. S. A., and have served it faithfully as its missionaries.

Mr. and Mrs. Sprague worked with might and main. They turned night into day, and did yeoman service everywhere. Their report will give you full information in regard to their work. It was due to no lack of effort on their part that the financial balance every month was on the wrong side of the ledger. They did their duty and tried hard to give full value for every dollar paid them for their services. This is true of your president's efforts as a missionary in the field. His work was a financial loss to the N. S. A. from first to last. In some places where he labored the Spiritualists did not even take up a collection for the N. S. A. When asked the cause of this neglect, the uniform reply was: "The N. S. A. pays your salary; you can afford to do this for nothing." In other places the outspoken answer of the Spiritualists, when money was asked for, was, "Let the N. S. A. foot the bill." It was a plain shirking of duty on the part of the Spiritualists, and evidently rests upon their desire to get something for nothing. In view of your president's experience and the showing financially of the other missionaries, I feel to recommend that all missionary work be abandoned for the coming year.

Editor-at-Large.

In harmony with the instructions by unanimous vote of the delegates present at our last convention, that unselfish, fearless, able and efficient worker, the noble-hearted veteran, Hudson Tuttle, was re-elected Editor-at-Large for the current year. He has done splendid work, and the results of the same have been far-reaching in their influence. His report will give you a full account of all that he has done, and will enable you to form an estimate of the vast amount of good that he has accomplished. I recommend that the office be continued another year; further, that our noble-hearted brother be re-elected to that office, and that, if our finances warrant it, an increase in salary be granted unto him.

Mass-meetings.

A limited number of mass-meetings was authorized by our last convention and directions given to hold the same in company with the state associations wherever they were in existence. No meetings of this kind have been held during the year, owing, in part, to a lack of interest in them on the part of some of the state associations, but more largely to the indifference of the Spiritualists in the cities where said meetings were to be held. For several years these gatherings yielded substantial revenues to the N. S. A. They were wisely abandoned a few years ago, in order that the energy involved in connection with them could be turned into work of a permanent rather than transient character.

I feel that they can now be reinaugurated with profit to local and state associations and to the finances of the N. S. A. I recommend that a series of mass-meetings be held in as many large cities and towns as possible during the coming year, and that the profits accruing therefrom be divided between the state associations that assist in holding said meetings or with the local societies chartered with the N. S. A., provided they co-operate in the work of holding the same, and the N. S. A. itself.

Half Rates.

Our clergymen have been treated with absolute fairness and impartiality by all railroad passenger associations that grant half rates to ministers of the gospel.

I recommend the continuance of the policy of former years, to the end that the same consideration may be extended to our ministers who are worthy of recognition during the coming year. The N. S. A. has received every courtesy at the hands of the Central, Western, South-western, and Trans-Continental Passenger Associations throughout the year; I recommend that a suitable acknowledgment be made of these favors on the part of this convention, through a special vote of thanks, or by engrossed resolutions, to Mr. F. C. Donald, Commissioner of the Central Passenger Association; Mr. Eben E. MacLeod, Chairman Western Passenger Association; J. E. Hannegan, Acting Joint Agent, Southwestern Passenger Association; and James Charlton, Chairman Trans-Continental Passenger Association.

The Pension Fund.

Our last convention ordered the continuance of the payment of pensions to our worthy indigent speakers and mediums. From our secretary you will be informed in detail with regard to this special division of our work. It is a most important branch of the labors of the N. S. A., and should be strengthened in every possible way by this convention. The fund should be largely augmented and steps taken to make it self-supporting through the interest received from carefully invested endowments. But those endowments must be secured before they can be invested in any form. It is therefore the duty of this intelligent body of delegates to provide ways and means by which those endowments can be obtained. The experience of the officers of the N. S. A. this past year in trying to raise one thousand dollars for this fund, to offset the donation of the same sum by one individual, our greatest-hearted treasurer, Theodore J. Mayer, is not encouraging. Mr. Mayer asked the Spiritualists of the nation to give unitedly as much as he gave alone. It took about five months of persistent effort on the part of your officers to raise the sum required. This condition of criminal indifference should be met and overcome by you as delegates.

Our pension list is now a large one and it is constantly increasing. It will take more money to support this policy next year than it has ever taken before. Notwithstanding this fact, I venture to recommend that the pensioning of our needy and worthy workers be continued at least for another year. I also recommend that measures be adopted here looking to the securing of a permanent income for this fund, to support this most necessary and beneficent work.

Lyceum Work.

The children's department in our N. S. A. work was not forgotten by our last convention. John W. Ring of Galveston, Texas, was re-elected National Superintendent of the Lyceum movement, and an increased appropriation granted him that he might extend his labors in this important field during the year now drawing to a close. Well and faithfully has he discharged his every duty, and he will, in his report, render you a truthful account of his stewardship. No better man can be found for this work than Jonn W. Ring. He is the personification of honor in his devotion to duty and has an earnest love for the work itself.

I cheerfully and earnestly recommend that Mr. Ring be continued in his present position, and that as large an appropriation as the finances of the N. S. A. will warrant be made to sustain this important work.

The Morris Pratt Institute.

With the work of this school during the past year, this Convention will be made acquainted both by the reports of its delegates and by that of the committee elected at our last annual convention to investigate its affairs. I will not therefore trespass upon either of those reports in any way, but commit the school and its welfare to the thoughtful consideration of the delegation present. The appropriation of five hundred dollars, made by the last convention, was promptly paid upon demand, and so far as I know, good will and harmony exist between the N. S. A. and the Institute. Educational work should be fostered along all lines, and this school should not be left to the tender mercies of an unsympathetic public.

I recommend earnest moral support, and such financial aid as individual Spiritualists may see fit to offer. Until the N. S. A. has a larger and surer income, I do not feel that its funds should be drawn upon any further in this direction. If the school could be transferred in fee simple to the N. S. A., with perfect title, and no financial obligations imposed, I should favor its acquisition, with the hope that proper endowments could thereby be the more easily obtained.

Usages.

The question of the adoption of usages that shall characterize the Spiritualistic body as a denomination was discussed at length at our last annual convention. The lengthy report of the committee, elected at the National convention in Boston in 1902, was considered in all of its valuable recommendations, but only those that bore upon the subject of ordination tenets, methods of work, etc., were adopted. Other essential matters were laid upon the table and the committee continued, to report at this convention. Serious defections from the supporters of the N. S. A. have already occurred because of the failure of our last convention to act upon these measures in their entirely. Others are likely to follow in case nothing is done at this convention. On the other hand, the N. S. A. may have lost, and may yet lose friends through the adoption of the usages in question. It is a question of grave moment, and cannot be acted upon hastily. It should receive the best thought of this convention, and such action should be taken as will promote harmony among our people, and give to Spiritualism the legal and moral recognition it deserves at the hands of the public. I earnestly request this intelligent body to give this question sympathetic consideration, and recommend action accordingly.

Camp-meetings.

The various camp-meetings have had fairly successful seasons, but with very few exceptions, the attendance has not been as large as in former years. This decrease may be due to two causes—the influence of the World's Fair at St. Louis, and the hard times peculiar to every presidential election. It may not be out of place for me to offer the suggestion that there are too many small, weak camps, therefore very few strong ones. Better a dozen splendidly equiped, progressive, well-attended camps than fifty weak and poorly attended ones. The N. S. A. has no jurisdiction over these bodies, but is in full sympathy and hearty accord with the good work they were formed to do. It is to be regretted that our Spiritualists cannot see the necessity for concentration of effort in camp work, and in all other matters pertaining to the welfare of Spiritualism.

The interests of the camps should be the interests of the N. S. A., and vice versa. They are working for one and the same cause, hence should have reciprocity in labor and purposes. I believe their mutual interests and welfare can be proven to the officers and members of all of these organizations if proper effort is made. During the season of 1904 only one or two camps granted N. S. A. days on their official programs. Some of the camps chartered with the N. S. A. failed even to take up the collection required by virtue of said charter. Onset, Mass., held its old-time loyalty to the N. S. A., and gave us a day that yielded substantial financial returns, despite the rainy weather and small attendance. I urge upon this convention the necessity of proving to all camps that they and the N. S. A. have mutual interests and a common purpose. If necessary, I recommend beyond a heart-to-heart correspondence between our secretary and all of the camp officials—not the secretaries and presidents alone—that a special representative be sent to to the trustees of the camps, at their winter sessions, to place these important issues before them by word of mouth. I earnestly recommend that strenuous efforts be made to secure special N. S. A. days on all camp programs for the season of 1905. I further recommend that special recognition be accorded Onset Bay camp, its officers and workers, also such other camps as gave us a place upon their programs, for the courtesies thus extended to us.

Local Societies.

I have nothing to add to what I have said in past years upon this most important theme. Some local societies, once in a very flourishing condition, have disbanded during the year, while others, that are fairly well equipped for good work, have canceled their N. S. A. charters. For many years I have tried in my annual reports to induce helpful action on the part of our National convention upon this subject. There have been plenty of resolutions, lots of discussion, but nothing as yet has been evolved that has given the local societies the aid they so sorely need. In a few instances local societies have settled their speakers for a year, or for a term of years. As a rule, such societies have prospered, while those that have followed the itinerant system have struggled for existence, and have wasted their energies, financial and otherwise, upon railroads, hotels, boarding-houses, and hall rent. If this matter could be discussed in all candor by this convention and a plan evolved by which weak locals can be strengthened and permanent work done, great good would certainly accrue to our cause.

I recommend that a special hour be set aside for the consideration of this very important question.

Settled Speakers.

The settlement of speakers of ability and character over societies for a year or term of years is such a self-evident necessity as to require no argument whatever from me. A resolution urging all societies to employ speakers for a long time should be adopted by this body, and I recommend that it be framed accordingly.

Counterfeit Phenomena.

A bold, brave and vigorous warfare has been waged against counterfeit mediumship of every kind, and bogus phenomena of all classes during the past year by the able and intrepid editor of The Progressive Thinker, John R. Francis, of Chicago. He has placed every truth-loving Spiritualist under obligations to him by his fearless exposure of sham and pretense. He has proved to the outside world that the rank and file of our people want only the truth, and has shown that they will not condone nor apologize for fraud.

I recommend that the course of Mr. Francis be commended by this convention in the form of a resolution of hearty thanks, conveyed with a pledge of loyal, moral support in his good work during the year to come.

Necrology.

Many of our eminent workers and true friends of the N. S. A. have taken leave of earth during the past twelve months. The list is too long to be admitted into this report as a whole, but I recommend that all of these loved and honored names be handed to our Committee on Resolutions, whose duty it shall be to memorialize them in proper form. There are two names deserving of special mention here. One is that of Miss Abby A. Judson, which was unintentionally omitted last year, and the other is that of Frederic G. Tuttle, treasurer of the Banner of Light Publishing Company. Miss Judson devoted the last years of her life to the unselfish service of our cause, and gave her best thought to its welfare. Mr. Tuttle's services to the N. S. A. and to Spiritualism are best known to your president. He was this organization's faithful friend and did everything in his power to aid it. The lack of his potent influence has been keenly felt throughout the year. Frederic G. Tuttle was one of nature's noblemen, and his sad transition has left a void in our ranks that cannot be filled.

Text Book of Spiritualism.

At the annual convention of three years ago, C. D. Pruden, then a trustee of the N. S. A., introduced a resolution directing the president to correspond with the leading writers and profoundest thinkers in our ranks for the purpose of securing articles definitive of Spiritualism in its every possible phase, to be published in book form for general use and distribution. Owing to complications not necessary to mention here, this excellent resolution has never been carried into effect. I recommend its re-affirmation by this convention, with instructions to the incoming president to act accordingly.

History of Spiritualism.

Work in this department has made some progress, and good results obtained. I feel that it should be pushed more vigorously the coming year. Our veterans are rapidly taking leave of earth, and the sources of information to our historian, Lyman C. Howe, are daily growing less numerous. I recommend an appropriation compatible with the finances of the N. S. A. that will enable Historian Howe to push his work with greater vigor. This work cannot be neglected longer with safety, if an accurate, authentic history of Spiritualism is desired by our people.

Constitutional Amendments.

Several important amendments, affecting the working machinery of the National organization, are to be considered at this convention. One of them, if adopted, extends the term of office of each officer and trustee, excepting the president, to four years. Another will make our conventions biennial, instead of annual as at present; while a third will make Washington, D. C., our permanent convention city. I make no recommendations with regard to any of these, but ask each and every delegate to give his thoughtful attention to them, to the end that no mistake may be made when they are voted upon. These changes are too sweeping and far too vital to be passed upon hastily, or passed over through neglect.

Finances.

The delegates to this convention are to provide ways and means by which the work of the N. S. A. can be carried forward. From year to year I have recommended various plans for raising sufficient revenue to meet the needs of this association. Very few of them have ever been tried, and I do not feel that I have any new plans to submit to this body of delegates. The N. S. A. is in need of funds; its revenues are decreasing rather than increasing; missionary work has proved a bill of expense rather than a source of revenue; camp-meetings, local societies, and individuals have failed to contribute as they should. Money is necessary to carry on our work. As delegates, you are face to face with a condition not a theory, and it is now, in the language of the day, up to you to say what shall be done. The decrease in revenue must be stopped and the tide turned in the other direction if the N. S. A. is to prosper, and do its legitimate work. Indifference must give way to interest, and reciprocity take the place of selfishness.

I ask that your consecrated thought be devoted to this question and recommend that every effort be made to fill the N. S. A. treasury from permanent sources of income. If every Spiritualist in America could be induced to give one dollar per year to the N. S. A., the problem of finance, as related to the national body, would be forever solved. Will you devise some plan to accomplish this object?

I respectfully recommend that personal letters be sent to all Spiritualists, whose addresses are obtainable, asking them for donations to an endowment fund of generous proportions, not less than fifty thousand dollars, for the support of the N. S. A. There should be no trouble in raising this sum, for if each Spiritualist does his duty, no one would miss the small stipend he would be called upon to pay. There should be ten thousand Spiritualists ready and willing to give five dollars, or more, to such a worthy object.

The Voice of the People.

Desiring to get at the opinions of the Spiritualists of America with regard to the needs of our cause as a whole and the N. S. A., as the representative organization of our forces, I sent the following queries to more than one hundred of our leading Spiritualists:

1. What steps shall be taken to popularize the N. S. A. with the people?

2. What measures are, in your opinion, imperative at the present moment, with regard to the needs of our cause as a whole?

3. What can the N. S. A. do along business lines, and in the way of a healthful propagandism, to promote the best interests of our movement?

Vigorous replies have been received from the majority of the persons thus addressed. All of them acknowledge that the N. S. A. is a necessary factor in pushing Spiritualism to the front. As I sent these questions to those who are supposed to oppose organization, as well as to its friends, I feel that these replies are significant, for they certainly indicate a change of sentiment in gard to the N. S. A.

Various suggestions are offered in response to these queries. Some writers advocate making the N. S. A. a business organization, pure and simple, and urge that all other branches of its work be abandoned. Others ask for more missionaries; while others still denounce all missionary effort and suggest that it be abandoned. Every writer thus far heard from pays a deserved tribute to mediumship, and urges the N. S. A. to give it just and honorable recognition. Some writers suggest that the N. S. A. is too near the churches in its methods of work, while others claim that it is too far away from them.

Every writer has made some very valuable suggestions, and has signified thereby his belief in and love for the N. S. A. But in analyzing these opinions of our leaders, all things resolve themselves at last into one essential center; the need of financial support to make the reforms referred to possible. No writer has suggested anything whatever with regard to the question of finance, nor how the revenues of the N. S. A. may be increased.

A New Statement of Principles.

With very few exceptions, my correspondents have declared in favor of a clear, brief and emphatic statement of principles, properly defining Spiritualism to the world. Many of these writers have asked that said statement be based upon spiritual Theism, viewed from the standpoint of science, philosophy and religion. They affirm that such a proclamation would appeal to the hearts and souls of our people, and lead to their according to our movement a generous support. This subject should be made a matter of calm, earnest discussion on the part of this convention, and I recommend the assignment of a special hour for its consideration.

I also recommend that the incoming secretary be instructed to send these queries, or others of similar, or weightier import, to other leaders throughout the country, in order that the trustees may have constantly before them the written requests and instructions of those whom they serve.

Theodore J. Mayer.

Our large-hearted treasurer, Theodore J. Mayer, has, during the past year, signalized his devotion to our cause in many ways, but especially has this been the case with regard to his munificent donation to the Pension Fund. Had it not been for his philanthropic spirit and enterprise, I fear our Pension Fund would have been exhausted months ago. I feel that especial recognition should be accorded him for his generous kindness; also to John R. Francis, editor of The Progressive Thinker, through whose continued efforts Mr. Mayer's conditions were at last met in full, and the Pension Fund made secure.

The Board of Trustees.

The members of the board of trustees have worked together in perfect harmony throughout the year. The results of their stewardship are before you and the world. They have tried to serve the cause faithfully and well, and have endeavored to place the N. S. A. in a position of greater influence before the world. Personally, I am under deep and lasting obligations to each and every member of the board for favors received and for kindly aid in the work of promoting the welfare of the National Spiritualists' Association.

The Home Office.

The work in the home office has been of the same high order of excellence that has always characterized the efforts of our present efficient secretary. Her report will acquaint you in detail with what has been accomplished during the year, but will make no mention of her own untiring labors for the good of the cause, her own devotion to our National movement, nor of the singleness of heart with which she has toiled in its behalf. She has carried on a voluminous correspondence, distributed a vast amount of literature, met scores of visitors, and courteously given all desired information whenever it was in her power to do so. She deserves well at the hands of the Spiritualists of America, and it is with genuine pleasure that I pay her this well-deserved tribute to her worth and work. I take this opportunity to acknowledge the many personal obligations I am under to her for favors received.

Conclusion.

In conclusion, permit me to acknowledge my personal obligations to our honored vice-president and treasurer for their timely and valuable advice during the year; also to all of the Spiritualist papers, The Sunflower, The Progressive Thinker, The Light of Truth, The Banner of Light, Lichtstrahlen and The Philosophical Journal, and their able editors. These papers have rendered loyal and generous support to the National Spiritualists' Association throughout the entire year, and I recommend due recognition of the same on the part of this convention.

I ask all officers, delegates and visitors assembled in this convention and all Spiritualists everywhere to consecrate themselves anew to the cause they love by rallying around the standard of the National Spiritualists' Association, and accord to it a generous, whole-hearted support. I urge that all differences be laid aside, all personalities forgotten, all prejudices overcome, all antagonisms buried, in one common endeavor to aid our beloved cause as a whole, and make the National Spiritualists' Association a power for good throughout the world

Respectfully submitted,

HARRISON D. BARRETT,
President National Spiritualists' Association.

Constitutional Rights.

In this presidential campaign we are hearing much of "constitutional rights."

In all the northern papers there are numerous editorials and cartoons that charge the southern states with the terrible crime of trampling on the "constitutional rights" of the illiterate southern negro.

The Brooklyn Times and the New York Press are especially indignant over this "trampling on the Constitution" which prevails in a few southern states.

But it never seems to occur to these editors that the white women of their own states have "constitutional rights" that have been trampled on ever since the Constitution was framed.

There are Equal Rights Associations in all the northern states. Every year the legislatures of these states are petitioned to give women their "constitutional rights," but no one seems at all disturbed when the petitions are refused or passed contemptuously by.

Until women are enfranchised in all the states north of Mason and Dixon's line, the editors of those states would do well to keep silent on the question of "constitutional rights."

A Mutual Mistake.

Little Willie told his mother that a lion was on the front porch, but when an investigation was made it was found to be the Newfoundland dog, which had been newly sheared.

"Now, Willie," said his mother, "you have told a very naughty story, and you must go up to your room and pray for forgiveness and remain there until the Lord forgives you."

Willie promptly obeyed, but he was gone only a few minutes before he came tripping back.

"Did the Lord forgive you?" asked his mother.

"Yes," was the reply, "and he said he didn't blame me much either, 'cause when he first saw it he sorter thought it was a lion himself."—Collier's Weekly.

A White Cat Seems to Materialize.

When I was 16, the spirits frightened me terribly knocking on the headboard of the bed, and sometimes the room would become illuminated. When I was 24 years old I had a white pet cat. I called it Snowball. A milk wagon ran over it and killed it. Ten years after that event a widow lady and I wanted to know if there was any truth in spirit return. She had a fine square parlor in her home, and we made two black curtains and hung them up. We shut the door and locked it. We did not have anything behind the curtains—not even a chair. We then turned the light low on the center table, and the four present sat quite close to the curtains. All at once a little white ball appeared at my feet. It grew, and all at once it jumped up and ran in front of us all and went behind the curtains. All saw it. Then the curtains parted and we saw a form dressed in a brown morning gown, with flowing sleeves. We did not see the face. The arm and hand were thrust out and waved at one of the gentlemen. MRS. POWER OF IMAGINATION.

It Puzzles Many of the Most Eminent Physicians of the World.

A press dispatch from London, dated Oct. 17, says: "Physicians of London are very much interested in the discussion of the question whether imagination can kill. A woman in this city recently died, suffering evidently the most terrible pain because she had swallowed a perfectly harmless draught which she believed to be prussic acid.

"Coulsen Kernahan tells that he knows of two criminals, both under sentence of death, one of whom was put to sleep in a room in which a woman had died the night before of Asiatic cholera. Being, however, in blissful ignorance of the fact, nothing happened to him. The other was made to sleep in a room which had been unoccupied for months, but was told that a corpse, a victim of cholera, had just been removed from it. His terror was so great that it absolutely created the disease, and in a few hours he developed symptoms of cholera and died before the night was over. This story has been confirmed by several medical men, who give similar instances of the power of imagination.

"Sir William Gull, one of the greatest physicians of the nineteenth century, to whom the cure of the Prince of Wales was attributed during his dangerous illness in the '70s, used to relate that he frequently gave his patients nothing but burnt sugar and water, and that simple remedy had made remarkable cures.

"A prominent doctor connected with the London Hospital tells how a mother once brought a girl to him who was suffering from extreme emaciation. The woman explained that the girl could eat nothing on account of a contraction of the throat which prevented her from swallowing.

"I can cure that in half an hour," said the physician, and then proceeded firmly to impress upon the girl the value of the treatment he was about to give her. At the end of that time he sent her into one of the wards for a good meal, and the girl ate a large plate full of boiled mutton and potatoes.

"The same physician relates other incidents of patients who had been partially operated upon when it was found that nothing was the matter with them, but though they had suffered much pain before, they ceased to experience after the supposed operation."

That the mind has power over the flesh there can be no doubt, at least in the minds of those who have given the subject any consideration whatever.

Mind, according to Webster, is the intellectual or rational faculty in man; the understanding; the power that conceives, judges or reasons; also, the entire spiritual nature; the soul.

To-day that faculty is known as the instrument through which the spirit of man may convey his knowledge to others; through which the soul that perceives can communicate the result of its perception to others.

This makes the mind the link that connects man the mortal with man the spirit, and serves as a basis upon which is built the structure of immortality, by many thinkers of to-day as well as yesterday.

Man has little knowledge of himself and his possibilities.

He gets occasional glimpses of an open door in the dim distance, and shadows pass before him. He says the soul is immortal, for he has seen a face or form like one he knew. His mind—the archives of the soul's memory—retained the lineage of that face and form; they recur to him; they are not dead.

The fact is, unless hindered by some imperfection or derangement of the physical, the mind has power to recall that face and form. The same mind has the power, backed by the spirit, to think its own form into almost any degree of affliction, according to the strength of the will or mind power.

An instance has been recorded where physicians were about to bleed a young woman (at one time bleeding was a fad among doctors), and knowing, by what she said, the sight of blood would make her faint, they blindfolded her, pricked the skin, not enough to draw blood, then started a fine stream of water running from a hydrant into a washbowl so she could hear it, and by telling each other she was growing weaker and weaker they led her to the entrance of the other world and had to administer restoratives to bring her back. Not a drop of blood had been lost, but her imagination had led the spirit almost out.

There are many cases on record, even more wonderful than any of those above related. It all goes to prove there is a power within man to control the flesh. It means that man the spirit rules man the mortal, and that connection understood would prevent untold agonies in the world.

Every magnetic healer uses this power, consciously or unconsciously, over his patient. Every Christian or Mental Scientist must use this power to get good results in treating. In fact, every successful M. D. uses it in connection with a simple decoction, or powder, or pill with good effect, better and more lasting than with his most powerful drug.

But the limitations and possibilities of the mind are but dawning upon the human perception. The unfoldments and discoveries of the day are leading man the spirit up out of the mist and darkness of the clay, and in this majestic process of evolution lies the coming light of the spirit and the higher development of the mortal. Then will there be peace on earth instead of war.

NATIONAL SPIRITUALISTS' ASSOCIATION

Report of N. S. A. Missionaries, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague, for the Year Ending September 30, 1904.

Mr. Chairman and Fellow-Delegates:—Another year of active work by your missionaries has been completed, and we come to you with our report feeling encouraged and gratified with the results of our labors, and with the outlook for our cause in the future.

The cause of Spiritualism in the United States and Canada is progressing rapidly. People in every walk of life are studying its philosophy and investigating its phenomena. Home circles are being held in nearly every place we have visited and sometimes we have heard of a number of them in a single town. This is as it should be, for the home circle is one of the best places to study Spiritualism. It is encouraging that so many are learning this truth and profiting thereby. Undoubtedly local societies are holding more public meetings and employing more foreign talent than ever before.

A number of excellent new mediums and speakers are coming to the front to fill the places of the good old workers who have passed on to their reward.

Organization.

The cause of organization, its aims and objects, as well as the good work accomplished by our National, state and local societies, are becoming better understood, and consequently better appreciated by the mass of Spiritualists.

The people are calling for your missionaries from all parts of the country, especially from the west. We have received many letters urging us to come and work in Texas, Oklahoma, Wyoming, Montana, Kansas, Colorado, Idaho, Washington, and other states. This great territory should receive as thorough missionary work as has been done in New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan and Illinois. The Spiritualists of Texas, Oklahoma, Wyoming and Montana have urged us to spend several months in each of these states. Texas and Montana, through their State Associations, have asked the N. S. A. board to send us there to help them build up their organizations.

The west needs missionary work very much, and we believe this department of the work of the N. S. A. should be extended in that direction. Thorough organization of these states will bring great strength to our association and at the same time will be very helpful to the weak societies in their struggle to build up and sustain our good cause.

Work of the Year.

During the year we have labored in Pennsylvania, New York, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois and Missouri. We have visited 65 towns, held 302 meetings, organized 16 new societies, including one state association. Besides this we attended the N. S. A. Convention at Washington, D. C., the Michigan State convention held at Lansing, Mich., and the Michigan mid-winter meeting held at Jackson, Mich. We have added new members to many local societies that we have visited, created enthusiasm and encouraged their members, leaving the societies in better condition than we found them, always receiving a cordial invitation to return and hold more meetings whenever we could do so.

Camp-Meetings.

We also filled engagements at the following Spiritualist camp-meetings: Snowflake camp, Central Lake, Mich.; Vicksburg camp, Vicksburg, Mich.; Hazlett Park camp, Hazlett, Mich., and Woolley Park camp, Ashley, Ohio. All of these camps are doing great work for the cause of Spiritualism; they are in full sympathy with our organization. The three first named advertised a National Association day at which time your missionaries represented the N. S. A. Our explanation of the good work being done by our Association was received with eagerness and enthusiasm. A collection was taken at each of these camps to assist in the work of the N. S. A.

Indiana State Association.

We organized eight new societies in Indiana, and visited nearly every other society in the state. We also held meetings in many localities where there were no societies; meanwhile we were making arrangements for the state convention which was subsequently held at Anderson, Ind., Feb. 26, 27 and 28. At this convention we had the best of talent. There were 23 societies represented by 52 delegates in this convention. The meetings were held in the Anderson Spiritualist Temple.

The convention was a success in every way, and the entire expense including speakers, test mediums, musicians, printing, advertising, etc., was only $81.34. The reason why the expense was so small, lies in the fact that the Spiritualists of Anderson and of the state, as well as the talent employed, co-operated with us in the good work. They gave every assistance possible to help make the convention the grand success it proved to be. The Anderson society gave us the use of their beautiful Temple, heated and lighted, free of charge. The choir gave its services free, and the services of the mandolin club was furnished without cost to the convention. Miss Wirtz and Miss Bolander, soloists, gave their very efficient services without compensation. Mr. J. A. Wirtz, the leader of the choir, printed the programs, entertained the missionaries, and wrote notices of the meetings for the press. Mr. Chas. A. Gaines assisted in advertising the meetings, arranging for entertainment, and did many other things to help make the meetings a success. We are greatly indebted to him, as we are to many more whose names are too numerous to mention.

The Spiritualists of Anderson entertained the speakers and delegates free of charge, making them welcome in their comfortable homes. The speakers were Harrison D. Barrett, Dr. Julia M. Walton, Rev. Gardner Haines, and Rev. Thos. W. Smith; and Mrs. Flora Russell, the noted singer of Alliance, Ohio, added much to the success of the convention. All came and did excellent work, making no charge therefor. We gladly paid the traveling expenses of the helpers who came from a distance. Your missionaries were also there and took an active part.

The good will of the Indiana Spiritualists and their interest in the movement was again demonstrated in the fact that we raised a fund of three hundred dollars in cash and pledges, out of which the expenses of the convention were paid and the balance of $216.90 was turned over to the new state association to be used in its work.

We received no financial compensation for our services in working up and carrying on the convention, which detracts considerably from the good appearance of our yearly financial report.

We did all of the work of planning, arranging and preparing for this convention, receiving no assistance other than the advice of Mrs. Longley, the N. S. A. secretary. We arranged for the place of meeting, corresponded with and engaged the speakers, wrote and caused to be printed the circulars, posters, blank credentials, etc., sent them all over the state, wrote hundreds of letters, and did it all while keeping up regular correspondence in the missionary work, such as making engagements, writing articles for Spiritual and secular press and at the same time we were traveling from place to place and holding meetings nearly every evening. The convention was very harmonious and the work accomplished could not well have been better.

Cost of the Year's Work.

Total cost of the work for the year ending September 30, 1904:

Expenditures	$2,507.98
Receipts	1,573.44
Deficit	$ 734.54

By-Laws Adopted by the Indiana State Association.

The constitution and by-laws adopted by this state association are of the best. One article of these by-laws we desire to read to this convention; we read it with the hope that it may be adopted by every other state association, for thereby the Spiritualists, the genuine mediums, and the public will be protected.

Art. IX.—Superintendents—reads as follows:

Sec. 2. The president shall appoint one superintendent for each Congressional district of the state; the said appointment to be approved by the board of trustees.

Sec. 2. Duties of Superintendents.—Each superintendent shall have the supervision of his own district under the authority and direction of the board of trustees and shall co-operate with the president in missionary work and together they shall devise ways and means by which missionaries may be employed in his territory.

Sec. 3. The superintendents are authorized to visit and encourage societies, assist in organizing new ones and arrange dates for missionaries.

Sec. 4. Superintendents shall make quarterly reports to the secretary of the state board of trustees of the financial and spiritual conditions of the societies under them.

Sec. 5. The superintendents shall report to the president the presence of any person or persons in their respective districts known to them to be unworthy of confidence, or impostors doing, or attempting to do, business as physical or mental mediums, or both, or teaching the philosophy and religion of Spiritualism.

Sec. 6. It shall be the duty of the president upon the receipt of such information to forward to all of the superintendents a copy of the same together with the instructions to make copies of the same and forward them to the secretaries under their charge, to the end that the public as well as the Spiritualists may be protected.

If this was adopted and carried out by every state association our cause would be protected from the charlatans who are defrauding the innocent, robbing the unwary and committing other crimes in the name of Spiritualism.

State Associations.

In order to show how our work benefits the state associations we deem it proper to use a little of the valuable time of this convention in enlightening the delegates upon this important subject.

In the annual report of our good brother, the president of the New York State Spiritualist Association, we find a paragraph which reads as follows: "We have continued the policy of refraining from organizing societies unless we believed they were strong enough to hold together and do good, effective work. It looks glittering to see reports of societies organized over the country with two or three days' work by the missionaries, but the trail of wrecks that usually follows such glittering reports makes the last estate worse than the first."

In making this statement our good friend thoughtlessly, and unintentionally, no doubt, was throwing cold water upon the most important work of our organization.

We cannot believe that the Spiritualists of this land expect the two missionaries at large to take care of all the societies they organize.

Without doubt nearly every one of the weakest societies we have organized would have become strong and permanent if they had been properly cared for by competent ones sent to them by the state association for that purpose. Some of our smallest societies have the greatest vitality; all depends upon the membership, methods of work, etc. The principal reason why now and then a society, out of the many organized, fails to flourish, is because of mismanagement on the part of the society itself and the lack of advice, instructions, encouragement and assistance from the parent organization.

Weak societies, such as are not able to employ speakers, should form reading classes and developing circles, and in this way study and learn the great truths of Spiritualism, and develop their spiritual gifts.

Course of Reading.

Here let us say we have repeatedly asked that a course of reading be arranged for weak societies to use. We feel sure this would be of great benefit and would be a help in sustaining societies that are not able to keep regular speakers.

At the N. S. A. convention two years ago we succeeded in getting a committee appointed to arrange such a course of reading; that committee did nothing, and last year we urged the matter again and the committee was re-appointed; we have not heard from that committee yet, but hope it may have something good to report regarding what it has accomplished.

Societies to be kept in active service must be visited and encouraged. The N. S. A. missionaries should not be held responsible for their continued existence when they have not been cared for by the state associations after the missionaries have organized and set them at work.

In the published report of the president of the Ohio State Spiritualist Association occurs the following. I quote verbatim: "I found some of our local societies discouraged. Their past experiences with missionaries and missionary work had taken all they could raise for traveling expenses, and to pay the missionary, and the local society holding two or three meetings a year cannot expect to have the interest in our state and national, they are the ones that cannot see the benefit in organization. It is the steady, persistent work that tells in the end. All missionaries should seek to fill the treasury of the local societies; they should not exhaust them, but they must if they only visit them once or twice a year."

Further on this report says: "The missionary is only with them for one or two meetings, and the railroad fare and other expenses, such as hall rent, music and entertainment, and allow the missionary to have door fee, what can we expect; but our local societies will say they had a nice meeting but could not see the good they had derived from the missionary, until it is difficult for a local society to exist."

In reply to the above statements we will say, that we have never impoverished the societies we have visited, but have always left them in better condition than we found them, often helping them to raise money to pay their back dues and reinstating them with their state association or the N. S. A.

Four years ago there was not a single society in the state of Ohio that had paid its dues to the state association; not one society in good standing. In proof of this statement we have a report dated Nov. 13, 1901, made out by John C. Hemmeter, who was at the time the efficient secretary of the Ohio State Association, in which he tells us that the Ohio Association was chartered by the N. S. A., May 24, 1897. This report which was made four years and five months after the State Association was chartered, states that 22 charters had been issued by the state association and all of them were in arrears for dues, with the bare exception of the Elyria society, and that one we had chartered with the state association, Jan. 26, 1901, and it had then paid $8 as its first year's dues. I am glad to say it has fulfilled its duties to our organization ever since.

According to this report there was no record of any society having paid dues up to the time we began missionary work in Ohio. In closing this report Mr. Hemmeter says: "Now if you have any advice to offer, offer it so we may imbue some life into it before it becomes a corpse." This is the condition in which we found the Ohio State Association.

In our work in the state of Ohio we have added new members to local societies, revived those that had lost interest, encouraged members to new effort, leaving them with renewed enthusiasm and with determination to continue the work.

In the last four years we have organized and chartered 15 societies in the state of Ohio. Eleven of these are in good standing with the state association to-day; three of them have ceased to do public work. They failed because of lack of encouragement from the state association and proper management. One society we have not heard from. These three defunct societies never received a visit from a state officer or a state missionary. Do not these facts show where the trouble lies, and also the value of our work to the Ohio State Association?

We feel it is but justice to say that the present success of the Ohio State Spiritualist Association is largely due to the work of the N. S. A. missionaries, more proof of which will appear later on.

Many societies in other states that we have organized have never been visited by an officer of the state. Under such circumstances the National missionaries should not be blamed because occasionally a society fails to pay dues when called upon to do so. The N. S. A. has done its very best to have its societies visited and cared for, and we think the state associations have done the same. We have always urged upon the state associations the necessity of sending missionaries to visit the local societies that we have organized. We have encouraged them to form circuits, placing speakers upon them, thus helping the local societies to become strong and self-supporting. It is the mission of the N. S. A. missionaries to interest the people in the subject of Spiritualism and our organization, to encourage weak societies, to organize Spiritualists into societies and teach them how to carry on the work successfully. After they have done that, the state associations, where such exist, should take enough interest to have these societies visited by competent workers and do everything possible to encourage them. Arrangements should be made whereby every local society could be visited at least twice each year by thoroughly competent missionaries. If this were done very few of our societies would go down.

The following explanation will answer the other statements made in the yearly report of the president of the Ohio State Spiritualists Association, and will make clear to all the question of the cost of the missionary work to the Spiritualists.

Average Cost of Missionary Work to the Spiritualists and Local Societies.

Much has been said about the missionaries visiting local societies and towns where Spiritualists are not numerous and making the work "burdensome" to them. It has been said that they carry away all the money that can be raised and leave the societies impoverished. This is not the case, and such sentiment does not usually emanate from those who help to support the cause; but generally comes from those who seldom or never contribute to its support.

In contradiction to this claim we will present the facts and figures, that this convention and the Spiritualists of the country may know the truth and the missionaries be vindicated.

During the past year we have visited 60 localities where no salary was paid for our services. We held 178 meetings in these places. This does not include the work done at camp-meetings, conventions, societies that paid us a salary for regular work, meetings held for the purpose of organizing societies, seances at which a door fee was charged, nor meetings held with societies with which we divided the door receipts.

Of the 60 localities mentioned above, the Spiritualists paid rent for only 22 places of meeting. In 38 localities no rent was paid for the use of the meeting places. Some of the meetings were held in town halls that were made free for religious and educational purposes. A few meetings were held in parlors and one in a schoolhouse. The others were held in churches owned by the Spiritualists, or in halls controlled by them where no extra charge was made for our meetings. Certainly in these 38 cases the rent was not burdensome. The collections and traveling expenses, which includes our hotel bills amount to 535.59, and when divided by 178, which is the number of meetings we held in these 60 localities, makes the cost of each meeting $3.29. The average number of meetings held in each place is three, which means the cost to each community for the series of meetings, $9.87. The societies that we have organized and those that we have visited average 30 or more members each, and the average collection at each of the meetings if divided by 30 would amount to a trifle less than 33 cents each for the course of three lectures (which were followed by spirit messages and tests) or eleven cents per meeting. We may also take into consideration the fact that the Spiritualists do not even pay all of this, for the collections come from the entire audiences, which usually number from 100 to 200 persons. If the audiences outside of the 30 members constituting each gathering contribute as much as the 30 members, the expense of the meetings would be divided by two and the cost fo each one of the Spiritualist members would be but five and one-half cents per lecture outside of the hall rent and entertainment. The entertainment has been furnished almost invariably by Spiritualists, who were glad to care for and make welcome the missionaries in their homes. They never considered it a burden.

Music.

As to the expense for music, there has been nothing worth mentioning paid out by the Spiritualists for music at our meetings. It has nearly always been furnished free and voluntarily by those who have served in that important capacity.

Briefly told, this is the sum of the "great burden" that our missionary work has been to the Spiritualists.

One thought more: We never visit societies or localities where we hold meetings unless we are invited to do so. We have not been able to reach one-half of those that have written for our services, nor one-tenth of those that want them, as our many letters from state associations, local societies and individuals plainly show.

These facts and figures positively prove that our work is no burden to Spiritualists or societies that we serve.

No religious organizations in this country expect their missionaries to earn their whole salary and expenses. In Spiritualism it has proved to be impossible to make the missionary work self-supporting.

The above lengthy explanation we trust will make the matter plain to all, so that hereafter the great cry that the missionary work is burdensome to the Spiritualists will not be an obstacle in the way of the progress of the work of organization.

Benefit of Our Work to the State Associations.

Our request for an official statement of the number of societies composing the Ohio State Spiritualist Association was refused by the officers of that organization. However, the reports published in the newspapers stated that 22 societies were represented in the last state convention, and as 11 of our societies, at least, are in good standing, the conclusion is reached that the societies that we organized make up at least one-half of the strength of the Ohio State Association.

New York State Association.

Of the number of societies in good standing in the New York State Association at the present time, according to figures given us by the present state secretary, the societies that we organized and chartered number one-half of them, lacking one society.

Michigan State Association.

Of the societies represented in the last Michigan Spiritualist Convention, held at Lansing, Mich., August last, the societies that we organized and chartered only lacked five of making one-half of the whole number.

Illinois State Association.

According to the state secretary's report to us, we organized and chartered more than one-half of all the societies constituting the Illinois State Spiritualists Association.

Indiana State Association.

We organized all but two of the societies that were represented in the Indiana State Spiritualist convention last February.

The above figures show that we have organized and chartered about one-half of all the societies that represented these five state associations in their last conventions. Without our missionary work they would not have become as strong as they are now, and of course would not have been able to do as good work as they are now doing.

And thus the proof is multiplied, showing the value of the missionary work to the state associations and to the cause at large.

Recommendations.

One of the greatest burdens to some of our societies is paying rent for their places of meeting. In fact there are many towns where it is impossible to have public meetings, because there are no halls available, occasionally we have to pass them by on that account, or because the rent is so high the Spiritualists cannot afford to pay it.

Building Fund.

We therefore respectfully suggest that this convention take into consideration the question of establishing a building fund from which weak societies may procure funds at a very low rate of interest to assist them in building halls and temples of their own. It will be much easier for societies to pay a low rate of interest than to pay the usual rent of a hall, besides they could have the full use and control of their church homes. This would remove one great obstacle in the way of success of the local societies and would greatly encourage the members.

We believe there are many Spiritualists in the United States who would willingly furnish the money to supply such a fund if it was handled and controlled by the N. S. A. This is done by other religious organizations and has proved to be a great benefit to them. See the report in the Unitarian Year Book of last year.

We hope to see a move made in this direction by this convention.

Editor-at-Large.

Occasionally we meet with the good results of the work of Hudson Tuttle, as Editor-at-Large of the N. S. A., and we are satisfied that he is doing a great and good work in that capacity. We sincerely hope that his services may be continued.

In Conclusion.

The present month completes the eleventh year of our services as missionaries of the N. S. A. The first seven years of that time our work was almost entirely a labor of love. With the exception of about six months spent in the work of organizing and building up the New York State Spiritualists Association, we received no financial compensation. We did what we could, taking the spare time from our regular work of serving societies. During that seven years we organized 60 societies. We did this missionary work because of our abiding faith in organization and in the good work of our National Association.

The last four years we have received a salary and have devoted our entire time to missionary work.

These four years have been fraught with experiences that have demonstrated the value of, and the necessity for more united effort and co-operative action on the part of the Spiritualists through organization.

Our work has been very helpful to the general movement as well as to the organization.

During these four years we have held over 1,200 meetings, organized and chartered 105 societies including one State Association, added many new members to societies that were previously organized, and have taught and demonstrated the truths of Spiritualism to many thousands of people, a large number of whom heard, for the first time, the truth that Spiritualism teaches.

We followed nearly all the lectures with spirit messages and tests. The benefit of this part of the work to our cause and the blessings bestowed upon the recipients, can hardly be overestimated

Nearly all of the message work was done by Mrs. Sprague, while the lectures were principally given by Mr. Sprague.

The time has been occupied in writing, traveling, speaking, etc. We have set aside no day of the week for a "Sabbath of rest," but have labored continually, week days, evenings and Sundays during the entire four years, with the exception of one month's vacation each year.

We have been very economical in the management of our work, and have struggled hard to keep down expenses. We have tried to make the missionary work self-supporting, knowing if we could do so, many missionaries could be placed in the field and our cause greatly benefited thereby.

This we failed to do, though it was no fault of ours.

We have not been extravagant. In all our traveling the N. S. A., the state association, nor the local societies, have never been called upon by us to pay one dollar for a meal taken in a dining car, or for a seat in a parlor car, and we have taken a sleeping car only twice at the expense of either during the four years.

The total cost for our hotel bills, lunches and board for the last year was only $3.41 per month and this is probably a fair average per month for the other three years.

The good Spiritualists have taken care of us and made us welcome in their homes, and we have not exceeded the limit of economy in this particular.

During the past year your missionaries have overstepped the boundaries of good judgment by doing too much work. The winter was extremely cold, and the excessive missionary work, (which we took upon ourselves) has told upon our constitutions and is undermining our health. In the face of these facts and in justice to ourselves, we feel called upon to decline to continue longer in the active missionary work. We do not wish to be understood as having lost interest in the missionary work of our association. Far from it; we were never more in love with the movement; but we feel compelled to discontinue so much and such extremely hard work.

We shall not cease to labor in the interest of the National, state and local organizations, but will do what we can in connection with our regular work as we always have done in the past.

In closing, we desire to thank the N. S. A. officials for their many favors and for the confidence they have reposed in us. They have always trusted us to make our own engagements, and have expressed themselves as being satisfied with our methods of work all of which is truly appreciated by us.

To Mrs. M. T. Longley, the very efficient N. S. A. secretary, do we especially desire to extend our sincere thanks for her many favors, her kind advice and valuable assistance in our work, also for her many genial, courteous and encouraging letters written to ourselves, as well as to the societies we have organized.

To all the others, throughout the country, and they number many, who have aided us in the missionary work, we hereby extend our heartfelt thanks.

With a deep and abiding faith in our organization and in the good cause it represents and with sincere love for all our dear true workers, we respectfully submit this report for your consideration. E. W. SPRAGUE AND WIFE,
N. S. A. Missionaries.

As stated in our last issue the new botanical discovery Alkavis, is proving a wonderful curative in all diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood, or disordered action of the Kidneys and urinary organs.

The President of the Suffolk Hospital, Boston, states that Alkavis was tested in the hospital on chronic cases of Bladder and Rheumatic trouble. It cured when old and established compounds wholly failed, and our good words are at your disposal, for all should know of the good accomplished by its use. Dr W. H. Hawley, Physician and Surgeon, Penn Yan, N. Y., writes: I have used Alkavis myself and in my practice with satisfactory results. Similar testimony to this wonderful new remedy comes from numbers of others, including many ladies suffering from disorders peculiar to womanhood

The Church Kidney Cure Company, of New York, who so far are its only importers, are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free sample of Alkavis prepaid by mail to every reader of The Progressive Thinker who is a Sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder disorder, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Diabetes, Dropsy, Gravel, Pain in Back, difficult to too frequent passing water, or other affliction due to improper action of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. We advise all Sufferers to send their names and address to the Company, and receive the Alkavis entirely free. Address Church Kidney Cure Co., No. 404 Fourth Avenue, New York.

NEVER LESS ALONE THAN WHEN ALONE.

"Oh, for the soul that feels the solitude
And all the grandeur of its silence there;
Without, the noise and strife to bear with fortitude;
Within, the calm peace and rest its share,
That fears no tumult nor the thunder roar;
The busy din of city life, it seeketh not.
On its own wings, above the world to soar,
And finding God, all else is then forgot.
Ah! this is heaven, my soul's eternal quest,
To find the peace within and hear one sound—
'Tis I, be not afraid' thrice welcome guest.
Now, let's rejoice, for, lo, the lost is found.
So may the billows rise and fierce winds blow
Peace to thy soul—alone, yet not alone—
Where all is sunshine and beauteous flowers grow.
I am, thou art, and we are one."

CHAPTER IX.

My God, why hast thou forsaken me?

With the close of her remark, she vanished; how, or where, was as much a mystery as was the power with which I had been restrained. With her went that power which had held me, and also my desire to rise.

For a long time I lay thinking of what had occurred in the past few minutes. I tried to reason that there was no blame to be attached to my acts. Had she not placed temptation before me? How kindly she had addressed me. With what fondness she had placed her hand upon my face; and with her gentle touch what a thrill had penetrated every fibre of my being. Surely, she had given me reason to believe that she would not resent any advances I could make; and when I had attempted to express my love for her, she not only chided me, but by some unknown power had prevented me from even using my strength, and at last had taunted me by saying that I was gross and ignorant, and still further had said I must suffer remorse and restraint.

I discovered that she was but a woman after all; and while she possessed some beautiful traits; still, like all women who possessed charms, she also had the conceit to think that she could compel me, a man, to acknowledge her superior qualities; and when she discovered she could not conquer me, she had disappeared and left me with hatred instead of love for her. Had she remained while the power with which she had held me had been removed, I should certainly have shown her that even though I was gross and ignorant, I could assert my manhood to that extent that I could resent an insult as well as she. But she had not given me that satisfaction; and now, with my reasoning, I fancied that she had not only proven herself not only a coquette, but at last she had shown herself to be a coward by holding me a prisoner until she had so forcibly expressed herself, and as the last restraint was removed from me she had vanished quickly, giving me no opportunity to prove my ability to at least defend myself against her charges.

I finally resolved to arise and go out and make the acquaintance of some other person and if possible discover where I was, and in what country I might be.

She had called herself "my teacher." Had several times referred to "this sphere"; and instead of speaking of earth, she invariably called it Aer.

As I arose, I found I had no clothes except the robe of sombre-hued gray; my clothes, coat, vest, pants and boots, as well as my hat, with which I had been clothed while on the stranded ship, had now disappeared; and now, in my perturbed state I was disinclined to follow any fashion she who had proven to be a poor guide had offered me; but still, as I had not seen any other garments worn except like the ones I now possessed, I thought I might as well go forth with them; for, if I were now dressed in my former garments, I must necessarily attract the notice of all.

I arose and walked to the window and parted the heavy curtains and tried to look outside, but all outside was shrouded in utter darkness, I could not see; I dropped the curtains and stepped back and looked around the room; the same hazy mellow light that I beheld when I awakened from my refreshing sleep pervaded the whole room; there were no shadows, and yet I could see no means of artificial light; it was as if the sun shone brightly outside, and just enough light was admitted in the room to make the light soft and mellow.

I again looked out of the window. I rubbed my eyes to make sure that my vision was all right, but I could not see anything beyond the walls of my room. I reasoned that night was coming on while I had been so much occupied in my conversation with my would-be teacher; and now I could easily see how she had so mysteriously disappeared. I lay down again, and said. "Well, I can stand this until to-morrow, then she will return, and with her winning and wheedling ways she will relieve me, or if she fails to come, I will then certainly go out and find some way to learn where I am; certainly, there is someone who will enlighten me."

As I lay down, the bed, which had been before so soft and restful, was now filled with lumps and hummocks; my pillow was hard and raised my head to an uncomfortable position; I folded and unfolded it several times. I was cold, and there was not enough covering to keep me warm. I shifted my position several times in hope to find an easy place to lie; I vainly looked around the room to find extra clothing for the bed, and finally in desperation I tore one of the heavy curtains from its fastenings and placed it on the bed, and again lying down, I closed my eyes and composed myself as best I could for what I imagined would be a night's sleep; but I could not sleep; I lay for some time with my thoughts constantly dwelling on the events of the past, and most especially on what had occurred within a few minutes. I was soon warm, that was one consolation, and I congratulated myself with the hope that I should soon sleep and forget what then seemed the greatest disappointment I ever experienced. I soon found myself too warm; presently I was so warm the heavy curtain proved too much, and instead of being just sufficient, I found I was beginning to be not only agreeably warm, but my whole body began to burn; I was fast nearing a condition of fever; I did not perspire, but I could feel the hot blood as it surged from my feet to my head and my hands; my head throbbed with the intensity of the pulsations of my heart. I frantically threw off the extra covering, and as I did so, I opened my eyes, and found the room to be as dark as I had before discovered the outside world to be. Again I rubbed my eyes, believing my sight was affected; but that did no good; all was dark, and to heighten the effect, not a sound of any kind could I detect except what was made by the rustling of the curtain and bed, and my heavy breathing. In my desperation, I had so mixed up my bed that I could not tell where the pillow or any of the clothing was; the darkness was so dense that I could not penetrate it, and after vainly trying to straighten my bed out, I found myself exhausted, and instead of the intense heat which a few moments before had threatened to consume me, I again became cold; I tried to cover myself, but the clothes all seemed to be tied in knots, and it was impossible to find an end of anything anywhere.

All this time I was growing colder; now my teeth began to chatter, my whole frame trembled, and a severe fit of ague seized me. O, how I wished then for a flint and steel; if I could only have a light, just for one moment; if the lightning would come; I could then see what I was doing, where the bed was; for I reasoned that it would be useless for me to attempt to find a light, or anything to make a light with.

As I thought of lightning, there came a flash before my eyes, brighter than any flash of lightning that I had ever seen, and at the same time came a roar, as if all the storms of the past centuries had been concentrated and the last final peal of thunder had been reserved for my especial benefit; and the noise and lightning did not cease with the first, but continued incessantly. It did not help my sight; either the flashes were blinding to me, or else my sight had gone; surely I could not see, and was no better off than before the lightning came.

But one thing was sure with me; the experience I had while on the wreck of the ship, now stood me a good turn; for I had then become so familiar with the noise made by the wind, waves and thunder, that I was not afraid; and now, if it had not been for the loss of my sight I would not have minded my situation; for I could stand the cold; and although the thunder was louder, and the lightning was brighter, still I had no terror from either.

But here, another trouble came to me; not before in all my experience, either on the ill-fated ship, when I suffered all else, or at any time since I could remember, had I ever suffered from pain or sickness, but the pain that now began to rack my body was intense; my head seemed about to burst; my eyes were bulging from their sockets; still, I was in utter darkness, save for the fitful flashes of lightning, and these were of no use to me, as I could only discern a bright flash; I could not see an object in the room.

In my anguish, I threw myself upon the bed, and roared because of the extreme pain which was now tormenting me, which was, as if ten thousand imps with red-hot hooks and pincers were tearing at my flesh, while my bones seemed as if they were being crushed by some powerful pressure, and my joints were being pulled apart; and to add to the horror of my most pitiable situation, I became so thirsty that I could not swallow. Still I remained so cold that I could not lie still, and my bed was in such a mixed state I could not cover myself. In my despair I cried out, and said:

My God. Why hast thou forsaken me? Come, I pray thee, and have mercy on me, and help me in some way to be relieved of this terrible calamity which has now befallen me."

My voice startled me; it was the first sound I had heard except that of thunder and what was caused by my movements; for one moment I felt relieved, but as my astonishment wore away, I again felt the pain, and the past conditions returned with redoubled fury.

What a plight for a man to be in, in a strange country, among strange conditions; blind, freezing; my body racked by excruciating pains with which I was unacquainted; I felt that I could not endure it long. During my sad experience on the ship I had not been troubled by the thought that I should lose my reason; but now, as if I had not already all the ills with which a man could be acquainted, the fear began to haunt me, that unless my troubles were soon assuaged my reason must depart. The thought gave me such a shock, that for a moment I became lost to my harassing predicament; but it was only for a moment; my suffering, both mental and physical, was so violent that nothing but death seemed sufficient to afford relief; but even that great boon to the suffering would not come at my request. How I did pray for it. Never before, do I believe, did human being pray with more fervor for death than I did; at first, it was only by thought, but in time my thoughts were expressed in words; and although it had never been my custom in my life before, now, here alone with my sufferings, like all miscreants, when all else fails them in the hours of misfortune and trials, I turned to my only hope of succor; with what unction did I plead for relief; how I praised the powers and works of the great Father; what promises I made if my anguish could be removed. In my fervent appeal my whole being was electrified. I frantically waved my hands; I shouted as if God was deaf and far away; I sobbed my utterances, and the tears rolled down my cheeks, until as I finally stopped from sheer exhaustion, I found my bed was wet beneath my head. But my prayer was answered, for as I came to a realization of my situation, I discovered I could discern a faint glimmer of light in my room; the objects about me could be faintly outlined; the terrible din of the storm had ceased, and the pain of my body had subsided some. I also noticed that I was again warm; but I lay like one just recovering from a protracted sickness. There was no need now for any power to be exercised upon me to keep me quiet.

Again the recollection of the cause of my terrible suffering began to overpower me; then I felt the pain returning; the darkness began to creep on again; I could hear the distant reverberations of terrific thunder, and several faint flashes of lightning swept before my faint sight. With an almost superhuman effort, I jumped from my bed, and wildly swinging my arms, I cried aloud, and shouting with all the force I could command, I said:

"I will no longer submit to such suffering as I have in the past minutes or hours, I do not know which. Let the spell of her who has brought all this upon me, be broken."

I could not finish my cry of despair and anger. With a loud crash, and a flash of lightning much more vivid than any I had yet seen, I was hurled to the floor with such violence that for a moment I was stunned, and when my consciousness returned, every fibre of my flesh quivered like a piece of jelly, and I was unable to rise. I slowly turned my now inflamed body, and lay upon my back.

Slowly my vision began to return; soon everything in the room was visible, and the soft mellow light with which I had been familiar was about me. I distinctly saw my disordered bed; the curtain that I had torn from the window; I could see outside, and it was as dark as it had been. Presently all things in the room began to vanish; the ceiling of the room became as transparent as was the walls of the room where I was first placed for rest; and far up, and away, as though many miles intervened, and like a bright and twinkling star, encircled by a wreath of most beautiful white lilies, interspersed with sparkling diamonds, was the face of my teacher. I indignantly closed my eyes to shut out the sight; but my curiosity was aroused, and I opened them again, and there, radiant as a sunbeam, was that face, and from it there shone straight into my face a bright ray of light like that through a focussed lens. I lay motionless, even unable to lift my hand. She seemed to be pleading with me to retract my condemning thoughts and words.

In one minute, I suffered in my mind all and even more than I had suffered in the past; and where my body had quivered with the cold, and anguish of pain; now, my whole frame trembled with emotion, and the palpitation of my heart was so rapid that the blood was shot through my veins with such force that it seem as if they must burst, and as the sight of that beautiful face continued before me, it intensified my sufferings beyond my power to describe. My eyes closed involuntarily, and my thoughts returned to her, and what she had said and done to and for me. It seemed as if her very expression was analyzed, and every word she had uttered was being rehearsed from my first introduction to her to the present moment; and the gentleness of her manner was pictured plainly.

Soon, I began to censure myself for my hasty actions, and the more I reasoned about my condition, the more intense was my suffering; the agony of my body was as nothing to what I now suffered in my mind. I tried to close my eyes and shut out the view of her face, but they would open, in spite of all I could do.

The thoughts of how she had so suddenly left me, and the power she had so mysteriously exercised over me, came forcibly to my mind, and like a bad daub on a nearly completed picture, caused a blur on her radiant face. The horrors of the past few moments or hours—I had no means of telling which it was, although as I now contemplated it, it seemed like a very long time—now all came vividly before me, and again my relentless disposition got the control of my better nature, and I thought, if this be her I see, then she is trying her blandishments again, and I will not tolerate anything of the kind. I clenched my hands and set my teeth hard together, and scowled, and tried to look hard towards her, thinking that by so doing, I could convince her that I knew I was right and of course she must be wrong. Gradually, the picture of her fair face faded from my sight, and as it did, the transparency of my room changed, and all began to assume the same darkened condition it was in before I offered my anguished prayer. Then I reasoned that the cause of the sudden change from the beautiful picture to the terrible blackness was my persistent perverseness; and the fear of being punished as I had already been for my opposition to her power and teaching, caused a change in my thoughts; and as before, my eyes had persisted in opening against my will, now, they would close, and I could not keep them open, and I was finally obliged to allow them to remain closed.

This was a new feature of my troubles; I wanted now to see her angelic face as much as before I desired to banish it; but if it was to be seen by me, my vision was of no use to me. Still I could not prevent my thoughts from crowding in on me; they came, but were much mixed. I dared not think ill, for I had discovered that as sure as I did, darkness came. I was not yet ready to humble myself, and acknowledge that she was right and I was wrong. In this mixed and perturbed state, I remained for a long time; how long I can not tell; but gradually my mind cleared itself, and I fully lost consciousness.

This consciousness was not as when I succumbed to the power of cold and exhaustion on the ship; now my surroundings with all their horrors faded from me; I retained my faculties and could understand where I was; but that which had been the cause of my desire to embrace my companion, and which she had called passion, now came before me like a mighty power; but instead of causing in me that intense fire which before I could not control, it now allayed my sufferings in every degree; and I said, as the scenes of my troubles faded from my memory:

"I will conquer myself, and instead of trying to be a leader in what I am totally ignorant of, I will be a meek follower of my teacher; a studious student, and try to be worthy of the attention of my angelic guide, and what she has so devotedly tried to inform me about."

As the words of my resolve escaped me in almost a shout, I was entirely shut out from my surroundings, and when I regained consciousness, I was lying on my bed, everything in my room was in the exact condition it was before I attempted to show my affection for her who had been not only my teacher and guide, but my savior as well; I was perfectly calm, and I felt that I had the power to hold to my resolve let temptations come as they might. I knew I had passed through a refining process; now all the dross in the shape of passion or emotion as well as conceit and hatred had been removed from me.

I was satisfied I was changed in every particular; still, I was the same person. I looked myself over, as far as my physical was concerned, and was satisfied. I examined myself in a critical manner as to my mental condition, and was more than satisfied; for as I reasoned upon the causes that led me to the deplorable state I had just passed, I could plainly see that my physical condition was mainly responsible for it all. I could now see that my physical condition was the result of gross ignorance, the effect of my former education, which, instead of teaching me to rely upon myself for an understanding of my own requirements, it had taught me that I was born with certain propensities; and instead of cultivating, improving, or preventing them from degenerating, all I could do was to seek the pardon of God, through redemption by his Son, the crucified Savior of the world; to leave it all to him.

My parents were both strong religionists, and in my earliest life while at home with them, I was compelled to listen to their interpretation of the scheme of salvation, and although it somewhat passed from my mind as I later became a rover, yet, as it is with most people, it left its impression with me, and I had always borne a faint remembrance of it; and like all who fail to make a personal profession of conversion, I intended to do so some time, and so had constantly left my spiritual welfare in the hands of God, confidently believing in his supreme power. Now, I was sure that moment had arrived, and while my conversion had not come according to the specified plan I had been taught to expect, yet I thought I could detect the workings of God that had now caused the calm that pervaded my soul and body.

I was calm, peaceful and happy; at peace with all the world, and my teacher in particular, and felt that I could forgive her, and also ask her pardon for wrongly accusing her. I began to wish for her return, so I could show her my abjectness. My love for her returned, but in a far different manner; now, I felt that instead of wishing to clasp her in my arms and showing my affection for her by demonstrations of passion, I could now express my love best by silence. As I continued to think about her, my admiration increased; I could understand her worth and superiority; she was to me now, like a rare gem to the connoisseur. Again the wonderful expressions I had listened to from her came vivid to my mind; I could see her radiantly beautiful face and figure, and I found myself calling for her, and reaching forth my hands imploringly for her to come to me; I called her by name, but as I had not heard that yet, I could only say:

"O, my teacher; my dear teacher; come, come to me."

It seem as if a part of myself was absent. I was incomplete. There was no one, or no thing to fill the void that was now haunting me. As I had suffered agonizing torments of physical pain, and the torments of mind in passion, now I began to suffer much more as the time sped by in my now harmonious state, because of her absence.

She had told me, "she would not return until my desire was strong enough to draw her." Had not that time arrived? What more could I do, or say? How could I atone for my conduct more fully than I had? Did she desire more suffering on my part? As she had appeared to me several times at opportune moments, as if she knew at a distance what I required, why would she not know now that I needed her, and was prepared to meet her, and would try to make amends for my heinous offence? I felt that she must surely come to me now in my distress. I reasoned that she could not approach me in my terrible fit of passion, for she was so pure that to enter even the atmosphere that I was polluting, would be to dim the luster of her chastity; but now I felt that all that foulness had disappeared from me, and I had been purified; and while I was far from that high standard of purity and incorruption she was, yet with her high state of development along the line of pudicity, and her capacity of control of self, she could come to me, and by so doing bring me back to the path of rectitude which I had so abruptly left.

O, why would she remain away now, if she intended to return when my desire for her became strong. As I reasoned along this line, I spoke my thoughts aloud, and strained my sight as I looked in all directions in my desire to get a glance at her. Yet I was alone; there was no noise; I could plainly see in all directions, for the walls of my room had again assumed their transparency. I had no desire to leave my apartments now, or to go in search of her, if I had, I should not know in what direction to follow.

I continued in this tranquil state, perfectly restful in body and mind; and my mind seemed satisfied with all things, except that she, that was lacking to make myself whole, was not present.

Again, I thought, is it possible that I am not yet in a purified condition so that I am qualified to meet her?

I reviewed myself again more critically than I did before; I could not discover anything that ought to debar me from the most chaste individual. I felt that I was in such a contrite state that I was humble enough to enter the presence of God; and as I thought of my teacher and her beautiful womanhood, she seemed to me to be almost equal with Deity. I could, would, and did worship her; and as I thought of her good qualities, my littleness in every sense was made manifest to me, and I said:

"Because I have shown so strongly my gross and impure nature, it must require time to make up for all that which has caused our estrangement; and as only as I am free from the causes of that estrangement, which will require far more time to remove it than it took to express it in words and acts, so, must I continue to work out my release from those causes; therefore I will continue to rue the cause which has caused me to lose the only happiness I ever knew.

In this humbled condition, I remained for a long time; it seemed as if hours passed; every act and thought in my whole existence passed before my mind. It was done as if everything I ever know, or had said, or had heard or done, was painted on canvas and passed before my vision in an interminable length. Many acts of my life I had reproached myself for at the time, I was surprised now to see: for instead of seeing them now to cause me shame, they were represented in such a manner as to show a good cause for having been; again, many acts and expressions which at the time they occurred I had commended, were here represented as of little, or no account; I could see now that they were a natural consequence, being the result of the higher tendency, of my best or undeveloped nature.

As the panorama continued to drag its tiresome length along, I could not help but learn a lesson; as it ended, and as I continued to cogitate upon the scenes that had been so vividly portrayed, I said:

"Well, what has my life amounted to? What have I accomplished? That which I thought was right, and which gave me much pride, and what I was sure was good, I here see was faintly represented and seemingly I could not have prevented; but all I have done, which I have condemned all through my life, is plainly represented, but with every such act or expression there seemed to be a palliating circumstance or cause connected; I seemed to have been forced to do it; and yet with all, the meaning seemed now to be impressed upon me that I knew the thing was wrong at the time it occurred, and yet I never attempted to prevent it; because, I thought, it was part of my nature and I must let it work in its own way, and in God's own time and way, I should be changed so that only good would remain. I have never realized until now, that good and bad are both essential to my nature.

"Here I see my whole career reproduced; here I learn the greatest lesson of my existence; which is, that my growth must ever come through my experience; and that experience should constantly be my teacher and guide; that the good should be the incentive to make me happy, while the bad ought to be prevented by my desire to do right or good; and to prevent it, I ought to be able to control my mental as well as physical. As I never have tried in the least to govern my mind or passions; in fact, I never knew that I could; so, my whole life has been of that kind which has led me into the most bitter experiences, and finally this last, which is so fresh in my memory is but the result of my gross ignorance, and could not have been avoided under the circumstances; and most likely my teacher understood me much better than I gave her credit for; and knowing just what the result would be, she has left me to fully receive my lesson, well knowing that I should profit by it. I have learned, and received the full benefit, and I will bide the time, for as she has told me 'she would not return until my desire was strong enough to draw her'; I know she will surely come, when that time arrives. I will compose myself and wait; the longer I have to wait, the stronger I will be, and the stronger must be my desire. I know she will come at last. O, when will I be ready for her?"

As my soliloquy ended, I rested; my mind became free from all condemnation of self, and although I did not feel fully satisfied, yet I was sure I had made an advance and was now in a condition to receive my teacher with neither penitence nor pique. I longed to see her; I would not apologize; I would meet her as my equal. I felt that although she was better able to control herself than I was, yet it was only because she had received her lesson first. Now, although she could inform me upon many subjects with which I was not familiar, still I was ready to receive my instructions because I had been forced to see that it was an impossibility to avoid it. I had a vague understanding that I was a changed being, that all the past was as a passing day and I had entered into a new existence where different conditions prevailed; yet what that state or existence was I did not comprehend. I could see, hear, feel, think, act; in fact I had all my faculties, and yet my surroundings were so different from what I had before been acquainted with, that it gave me a vague impression that I had passed through some change which had transported me to some other planet.

Somewhere, I had either read or heard of the transmigration of souls. Was that my case now? But what of my soul, what was it? I understood it to be spirit, and had no substance: but here, and now, I was as substantial and tangible as I ever was. I had been taught that at death, the spirit returned to the God that gave it. Was I dead? If so, where was heaven, and hell? I had had a taste of the latter, in the immediate past. If I was in heaven, where was God, and his great white throne?

Now, a great sense of joy seemed to possess me. Perhaps my teacher was one of the holy angels; perhaps God in his infinite mercy had sent her to me, and now, oh, ecstasy, I was saved, and was to be fitted to enter the presence of the great God, and my future was secured at last.

What more could I desire? "The ways of God are mysterious, and his works are past finding out." These words I had often read while I was a prisoner on that ill-fated ship, when I had no other book but the Bible; now they came to me with all their force and promise, and I rested even more secure with the thought that in my case, He was working, and now ere long I should be ushered into His mighty presence. I felt now I was prepared; and folding my hands upon my breast, I fully resigned myself to wait for my teacher to come, for the purpose of leading me through the pearly gates, up to the great white throne, to receive my introduction through the Savior to his Father, my God.

In this ecstatic mood I lost myself in contemplation of the joy I imagined I was about to realize; for in all my life, while I had never committed any great criminal act and I had never publicly professed my sins, and had not united with any church, although I intended to sometime; my understanding of the way to heaven, was by public profession and subscribing to some creed; and now, to find I had escaped all that, and that my election was sure; it was more than my exhausted state could stand. I lost consciousness in my enraptured condition, and when I came to myself again I realized that I was not alone. Everything in the room was in the same orderly condition as before I slept, if I did sleep; but there came to me a sense of someone which gave me a sense of restlessness, and yet it was not strong enough to cause me to rise and search for it. I waited in expectancy; fully knowing whose presence I sensed. That part of my being which had been absent was now coming; I could feel it as it came nearer, as one feels the glow of heat when it radiates to warm the person when the cold is intense; but with it there was an alloy that was not agreeable; there was more than I desired, and it seemed to detract from the pleasure that I had anticipated with her return. I was sure that it was she.

Here was an added agony, and although I had not as yet seen my teacher, yet I knew she was near; but with her, I sensed the presence of another, and I could not bear the thought that others would come, or be, to share ever so little a part of her with me. I wanted her all to myself; there must be no divided attention on her part; none to draw her attention from me. As my mind dwelt upon the thought of another, her presence seemed to be put still further from me; I sensed it strongly, and as it grew less, I realized that it was my selfishness that dispelled her presence. Instantly, as if my lessons had been well learned, my sense of ingratitude left me, and I said:

"My teacher is great and good enough, so that all who may come to her can receive all they may desire, and still she will will not be diminished in the least."

As my words echoed through the room, I was made whole; there was nothing wanted in me. I felt as one might whose friend or wealth had been restored after a theft; I felt the warm caress of her soft hand on my forehead, and she said in the same gentle and mild voice in which she had ever spoken to me:

THE GIFT OF THE SPIRIT.

Better than money, or fashion, or fame,
Is the gift of good cheer,
Shining, reflecting, and shining again,
Till all clouds disappear.

Brighter than jewels, or gems from afar,
Is the sunshine of soul,
Lighting sad hearts like a luminous star,
Till their sorrows unroll.

Wear, then, a smile, that is earnest, sincere,
Full of faith, and its grace,
Helpful you may be, to all who are near,
By the light in your face.

Culture of courage, to do—the day's deeds—
And to set them on high,
Battles and burdens—humanity's needs,
Do the brave deify.

Life is of spirit, the day and the hour,
Are God's gifts that we hold,
Let us then use them, with purpose and power,
As each one is unrolled.

THE ANTI-MEDIUM ASSOCIATION.

Meeting of the National Anti-Medium Association at the Coliseum, St. Louis, Mo., Oct. 18. 1904.

Meeting was called to order by the president, J. D. Hagaman of Toledo, Ohio. On motion, O. E. Payne was chosen secretary pro tem.

The president introduced to the convention an article to present to the National Association of Spiritualists, now in convention in this city, which demanded from that body a medium, capable of demonstrating the claims of Spiritualism, which was adopted, to be sent to the National Association of Spiritualists and to the press.

On motion, J. D. Hagaman was made chairman of a national committee of five, which committee was directed to confer with a like committee to be appointed by the National Spiritualists Association, and to act also as committee on investigation, as contemplated in the resolution. The said chairman was also empowered to appoint his four fellow members of the committee, which he did as follows: Clark Braden, Grand Valley, Ontario, Canada; D. R. Dungan, Canton, Mo.; S. M. Martin, St. Louis, Mo., and W. E. Harlow, Springfield, Mo.

We trust that the wishes of this body may receive prompt consideration. Waiting an early acceptance which will prove your faith and ability to provide this association and the world with a medium who is able to demonstrate your claims of spirit return.

Humbly submitted for an unbiased, unprejudiced investigation,

J. D. HAGAMAN, President.
D. R. DUNGAN, Vice-president.
CLARK BRADEN, Chairman Ex. Com.

Reply by President Harrison D. Barrett.

J. D. Hagaman, President; D. R. Dungan, Vice-president, and Clark Braden, Chairman of Executive Committee—Gentlemen and Brethren:—Your favor of the 18th inst., in the name of the "Anti-Medium Association of America, finds us assembled in a convention every moment of which is fully assigned to matters of importance to our cause. It is based on statements reported to have been made prior to the opening of this annual session of our association and before an entirely different body.

It further requests a joint investigation of matters which friends and foes of our truth have already threshed over times without number, and we would commend to your patient and prayerful consideration as an aid to your desires the published proceedings of such impartial and Anti-Spiritualistic bodies as the London Dialectical Society and the Psychical Research Society, including the latter's American branch.

If, with minds free from sectarian bias you are seeking truth for the truth's sake, we will gladly furnish complimentary admission to our evening session on the 19th, 20th, or 21st inst., for any three gentlemen of your number who are candid in motive, fair in judgment and have not in the past defrauded their fellows for their own notoriety and pecuniary profit by dishonest practices. Such committee may be able to witness at that time something of what is know as platform mediumship.

No doubt your members are everyone of them familiar with Camille Flammarion's statement, which he has assured the Executive of this association has never been retracted by him, viz.:

"Positive observation proves the existence of a psychic world as real as the world known to our physical senses."

They may prefer the language of Fichte, the philosopher, who said, "I feel it my duty to bear testimony to the great fact of Spiritualism."

Perhaps the conclusions of Alfred Russel Wallace, D. C. L., LL. D., F. R. S., may be more agreeable to your body when he says:

"My position, therefore, is that the phenomena of Spiritualism in their entirety do not require further confirmation. They are proved as well as any facts are proved in other sciences."

Yours for Truth and Humanity,
HARRISON D. BARRETT,
President of the National Spiritualists' Association.

SPIRIT MESSAGES.

If we could but grasp the meaning of the murmurs in the air,
And feel the gentle touches by the loved ones here and there,
Surely we would be more gentle, and with tenderness care,
For the tiny rappings by loved fingers here and there.

For they come to give you greeting, scatter sunbeams in the air,
Listen! and you will hear them whispering around you everywhere.

So study this religion which teaches return of your dead,
And understand the messages fair by angel voices read everywhere.

A Link in the Chain of Evidence.

Some seventy years ago, Lucy Farr, daughter of Randall Farr, of then West Moriah, Essex county, N. Y., married a Mr. Baines, if the name is correctly remembered. They removed to Warren county, New York, and engaged in agriculture. His farm was partly covered by timber which he wished to remove. To that end he engaged laborers to assist him in felling the forest trees. The morning before commencing work the wife at the breakfast table told of a very impressive dream she had the night before. She said a tree in falling lodged on another; that she saw her husband go forward with his ax, and engage in chopping down the tree in which the other lodged; that unexpectedly the tree so heavily pressed by the lodged tree gave way, and the one in the rear fell upon him and crushed the life out of him. She begged and entreated her husband not to go to the woods that day; but he had laborers engaged to assist him, and went to his work. Mrs. Lucy in constant distress watched in the direction her husband had gone, feeling certain of a calamitous result. But a little time and she saw one of the laborers on a run to the house, which she had also seen in her night visions. She met him and said: "You need not tell me anything. Go to the barn, hitch up the team, and bring the body to the house." He did so. Subsequent facts revealed that every minute detail of that "dream" was realized to the letter.

Every fact herein detailed, with possibly the exception of the name of the victim occurred as herein stated, the wife being a relative of the writer.

While we take no stock in dreams as a general thing, yet it seems a well-established fact that events yet concealed in the future are revaled to mortality in this manner. Relating the above facts to a member of the press, he inquired: "Whence the source of such dreams so frequently occurring?" Who can answer? We cannot, unless they are revealments from the other side of life, and by persons who have complete knowledge of the future as well as the past. It is useless to deny the occurrence of these revelations, for they are too well authenticated to be controverted.

If all other proofs of Spiritualism were wanting, these dreams of themselves are sufficient to establish the fact that there are intelligences without and beyond us linking us with an immorial life.

A Farce, Dull, Weak and Cheap.

It is not often that Bible worshipers, and Bible teachers listen to so much plain common-sense talk as is given them by Rev. Fred V. Hauley, in a recent number of Wayside Tales, in which the Bible as the text-book of religious training for the young is assailed, and the current Sunday-school methods of instruction are denounced as a farce, in an article on "Is the Bible Necessary in Religious Instruction?"

As stated by the Chicago Chronicle, lessons gathered from everyday life and not from biblical history are urged by the writer, and he preaches the doctrine of Walt Whitman that "the bull and the bug were never worshiped half enough" and that "a mouse is a miracle enough to stagger sextillions of infidels."

"The average Sunday-school teacher has a weekly half-hour's trial of patience in a fruitless attempt to maintain order. Fathers and mothers are obliged to coax and threaten in order to secure the attendance of their children and the whole arrangement is coming to be thought of as such a pious, well-meaning farce that anyone wishing to intimate that something is dull, weak and cheap simply calls it 'a Sunday-school affair.'

"We are still trying to get at the study of religion from the wrong end—that is, the remote, the distant and the historical. It has apparently never dawned upon the average arranger of Sunday-school lesson topics that we could really study religion and inculcate reverence and righteousness in any other way. We must always keep going to some Jewish history and old infallible writings, taking little account of the fact that God is speaking now and that we may become conscious of things divine though the things which touch our lives in the closest and most natural relations, regardless of testaments, old or new.

"How long shall we go on supposing that the soul can only be made God-conscious through the study of one particular book? The belief that reverence and righteousness have, somehow or other, been successfully confined and forever shut up to one race and and one book. The old superstition is still in the world that there is only one book that may be read and studied on Sunday and that religion, for grown people or children, can only be taught by funneling it through some old testament or some new testament.

"Heaven forbid that we ever try to teach religion from things less 'sacred' than these! Let all this pass for what it is worth. We know that many a man, unlike the speaker just referred to, never opens the Bible now and could not be easily dragged inside a church or a Sunday-school because in his youth the Bible was made for him a task book, and the unnatural and inhuman restrictions put upon him in the name of religion, one day in every seven, caused his soul to revolt and forever drove him away.

"In many Sunday-schools to-day if the boys and girls who attend cannot be interested in rivalry of class punctuality, reward of merit or the banner ideal, they have to be driven there by the parents. Why? Because lessons are so stilted and unnatural, are dealing with the old historical subjects, and, however enlivened by illustrations and anecdote, are always referring to somebody who, in common parlance, is now dead.

"Who is not interested in the sunshine and the rain, the love of home and friends and all that goes to make our daily common experience? I would rather my children were taught by these near and dear things to understand that the earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof than to have them taught that these things are secular and that the 'sacred and holy' is shut up in a particular, infallible book, which contains, among all its good things, stories strange, obscene, inhuman and cruel.

"When children have been taught to know that a grain of sand is also an expression of the infinite life and that being such it is quite as necessary as Jesus of Nazareth, since without it and the millions of years and processes which alone made it possible, the master could not have subsisted when he came, then they can better understand, reverence, imitate and love him who went about doing good, and who was willing to die an ignominious death rather than to compromise his soul."

Sunburnt in His Dream.

The Inter Ocean relates a peculiar case, in which, as a result of a peculiarly vivid dream, Charles E. Stanley, B. A., of Erin Villas, Newcastle, County Down, Ireland, is suffering from the effects of what appears to be severe sunburn. In relating his almost weird experience he says :

"I am 35 years of age, a student, and very pale-faced. Having been confined to my rooms in the city of Belfast by severe literary work for some months, I paid a flying visit to Newcastle on Monday last, when the little town was deluged with rain and the sun obscured.

"I remained indoors all the evening reading, and retired to bed about 11 o'clock. During the night I dreamed I was lying on the seashore in a strange locality, and that the sun was shining with intense heat, so much so that I felt my hands and face actually being burned. In my dream I remembered thinking what a tanned face I would have after lying so long exposed to the glaring sun.

The dream passed away, and in the morning I arose and commenced to shave. What was my astonishment, on looking in the mirror, to find my face and neck literally tanned dark brown, my nose in a parboiled condition, and the skin broken, my forehead covered with freckles, and my hands also tanned brown and freckled.

"The experience made me uneasy, and accordingly I spoke to a doctor who was staying in the same house. He said I was badly sunburnt by exposure. I explained I had not been in the sun for a single hour for months, and that I arrived in Newcastle in a deluge of rain, at the same time mentioning my dream.

"He was amazed, and said it was the most remarkable case he ever knew, but he believed the force of imagination had in my dream affected the skin and caused the sunburn and freckles.

"The doctor asked me to write to the press, as the case is a most remarkable one. I may add I am a total abstainer, and am free from any disease or skin affection."

Sensible Thoughts of a Bishop.

Bishop W. F. McDowell of the Methodist church, in a statement made to the students of the Garrett Biblical Institute, gave utterance to thoughts that might be received with profit by Spiritualist speakers as well as Methodist. Among other things he said:

"Many preachers are feeding their congregations on ditch water, because they themselves do not feed their own minds on the great poems, the great novels, and the great biographies.

"Beware of the man of one book," continued the bishop to the attentive ministerial students before him. "Why should a man be acquainted with but one book when he may become acquainted with many. Many preachers are well versed in the text-books of philosophy and sociology, but have not read a book where those principles are clearly illustrated as in Hugo's 'Les Miserables.' There was a time when it was considered an essential part of a liberal education to read Tennyson's 'In Memoriam,' Emerson's 'Representative Men,' Hawthorne's 'Scarlet Letter.' I wish those books were considered essential now. Do you students know the saints or the masters in theology, fiction, poetry and science?

"I have been criticised for saying that presiding elders in the Methodist church should not assume that any preacher, no matter how scant his culture, is good enough for the country districts. In the country churches the people are willing to subscribe liberally to the support of a clergyman, if they feel that in return they will receive something substantial on Sunday."

Some have thought it a mark of superior wisdom to be "a man of one book," namely the Bible. This constituted the whole source of their mental and spiritual pabulum—sufficient in itself alone for all the needs of man. That idea seems to be going out of date, even with Methodists—except, perhaps, some of the more densely ignorant and unprogressive minds.

Some of our Spiritualist workers are apparently dominated by the same idea, under another form. Their "guides" are their Bible, and that is all they want or care for. And usually the more ignorant they are in matters of school education, even to lamentable deficiency in a knowledge of the elementary principles of English grammar, the more self-sufficient and averse they are to an education except that given by their "guides," who may be equally ignorant with themselves.

The consequence is, they feed their audiences on "ditch water," because they themselves do not feed their minds on the great poems and other inspired and inspiring literature.

One can receive inspiration from good literature, as well as from one's "guides," and oftentimes of a far higher and more instructive character.

LAST DAY OF THE CONVENTION.

Election of Officers—Resolutions Are Passed to Protect Mediums Against Civil Prosecution.

The National Spiritualists' Association, in convocation at the Temple of Spiritualism, No. 3015 Pine street, the last day of the convention, elected officers, and passed a resolution to the effect that the National Board of Trustees devise ways and means to protect their own mediums from prosecution.

Comment on the prosecution of mediums by the authorities in several of the larger cities was brisk at the afternoon session. It was shown where Spiritualist ministers had been prosecuted under an ordinance in the city of St. Louis, that classed them with charlatans, scoundrels and rascals. The ordinance requires that "fortune tellers" pay a license of $100 a year. C. W. Stewart of St. Louis, said that it was high time for the national body to act in this matter.

One of the delegates cited the case of a certain medium in the state of Ohio whose case was carried to the Supreme court of that state and that there she was acquitted on the grounds that Spiritualism was her religion, and that if the courts denied private persons the right to religion they denied them one of the first rights given by the constitution of the United States.

Thomas Grimshaw, pastor of the Temple of Spiritualism of St. Louis, said that he had been called into court on the case of a certain medium in St. Louis, who had been arrested because she told fortunes without a license. A detective had gone to her house and inquired for the lady who told fortunes. The medium appeared and gave him a sitting. She was arrested accordingly. Mr. Grimshaw stated that in his belief a great many times it was the fault of the medium, and not the fault of the courts. He advised pure and true Spiritualism and he said that that would never be dragged into the courts.

Alonzo Thompson of Nebraska stated that the organization originated with the intention of protecting its own mediums, and it was up to the convention to devise the way to do it. He said:

"Let us use the funds we have in our treasury, if need be, and carry this case before the highest courts in the land and decide the question once and for all."

He was greeted with cheers.

Resolution Adopted.

On motion of Doctor George B. Warne, vice-president of the association, the resolution was passed empowering the national board of trustees to devise ways and means to protect the mediums of the National Association or any of its auxiliaries.

The election of officers took up the time from 4:30 o'clock till after 7. Harrison D. Barrett of Canaan, Me., was chosen president. Dr. George B. Warne, vice-president, Mrs. Mary T. Longley secretary, and Theodore J. Mayer treasurer.

The election of the trustees consumed most of the time. About seventeen names were placed in nomination, and the constitution of the association allows only a majority of the total number of votes cast, to elect.

Two were elected on the first ballot and several of the contestants withdrew. The second ballot failed to carry a name with a majority. The third, fourth and fifth ballots were taken and on the sixth the full ticket was complete.

The trustees are: Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, Westfield, N. Y.; Thomas Grimshaw, St. Louis, Mo.; C. L. Stevens, Pittsburg, Pa., and Steven Dye, of Los Angeles, Cal.

After the election, the custom of swearing in the new officers was carried out. They are sworn before a justice of the peace or a notary public.

The place of meeting selected for the next convention is Minneapolis, Minn., although the fight was strong for Portland, Me.

A vote of thanks was extended by the convention to the secular press for the fair and liberal way the cause of Spiritualism has been treated.

The regular programme, which is an entertainment consisting of music, inspiration reading and the giving of spirit messages, was carried out.

DR. A. A. KIMBALL WRITES FROM ONSET, MASS.: "I HAVE BEEN A VERY MUCH INTERESTED READER OF YOUR VALUABLE PAPER, ESPECIALLY THE REVIEWS OF 'A PSYCHOLOGICAL CRIME,' 'THE OPEN COURT,' 'OBSESSION,' ETC. I ADMIRE THE PUSH AND ABILITY IN YOUR ENDEAVORS TO MAKE YOUR PAPER FULLY UP TO THE TIMES, AND TO MAKE IT, WHAT I REALLY THINK IT IS, THE BEST SPIRITUALIST PAPER PUBLISHED. VERY FEW OF OUR SPIRITUALISTS REALIZE THE MIGHTY POWER OF THE CATHOLIC FORCES IN SPIRIT LIFE, AND IT HAS ALWAYS BEEN A SOURCE OF PRIDE TO ME TO KNOW THAT IN YOU WE HAD A SPIRITUALIST WHO IS NOT AFRAID TO STRIKE BLOWS STRAIGHT FROM THE SHOULDER AT THIS MIGHTY EVIL. NEARLY ALWAYS THE SPIRIT LEADERS IN A CASE OF OBSESSION ARE CATHOLICS; BUT METHODIST AND BAPTIST SPIRITS ARE SOMETIMES THE LEADERS, AND THEY ARE FULLY AS REVENGEFUL AND MALICIOUS. OBSESSION WILL NEVER DOWN, FOR IT IS A GLOWING TRUTH, WHICH IS EASILY INVESTIGATED AND APPEALS TO MAN'S COMMON SENSE. EVER KEEP IT BEFORE THE PEOPLE THAT MAN WILL BE IN SPIRIT JUST WHAT HE IS HERE, UNTIL BY DEGREES HE WORKS INTO A HIGHER CONDITION. I THINK OUR NATIONAL ORGANIZATION HAS DONE MUCH TO GIVE SPIRITUALISM A PRESTIGE AND PROMINENCE BEFORE THE PUBLIC. THIS ALSO SEEMS TO BE THE OPINION OF PUBLIC MEN WITH WHOM I HAVE TALKED IN WASHINGTON, D. C."

THE N. S. A. CONVENTION.

The Proceedings of The National Spiritualists' Association in St. Louis, Mo., Last Week, Were of Unparalleled Interest, and We Devote Almost Our Entire Space This Week in Presenting the Same to the Public.

October 18, opening at 10 a. m., President Barrett in the chair. Meeting called to order by the chairman. Congregational singing, "Throw Out the Life Line."

Invocation by Mrs. M. T. Longley: Oh, thou infinite soul of all light; thou divine presence in whom we live and move; from whom we draw the truths of communion and power, we, who are thy children, turn to thee at this time in loving thought, in tender worship, in the spirit of reverence and of filial love. We ask thy protection at this time and invite thy sweet ministering angels to be wish us. We ask that we may come together in the spirit of knowledge, extending harmony and peace and love and good will one to the other. That we may become a greater power to the universe for the dissemination of spiritual truth and the unfoldment of spiritual thought and the inspiration within ourselves. We ask that in this convention we may receive from divine sources light and inspiration that we may uplift humanity by the power of our combined effort. We ask that the work of the servants of this Association shall be for the highest good to humanity that there may flow from us that force and strength that shall bless human hearts and instruct human minds, and that we may all feel the influence af the angels that the sweet beneficence of their light and devotion may pour in upon us until we respond in hearty co-operation to their blessings with our own, and asking that all things may be for the good of each one and for the betterment of humanity, ask that all who are sick and suffering may be aided to returned health and strength, and that they may be blessed by the truth that shall be borne in upon them; that those who are in need and afflicted shall find the light and strength and comfort and gain a higher and better condition of life.

We thank thee for all that which is called forth, which opens the doorway to a higher existence. We thank thee for the sunshine, the shadow and the storm as well as for the beautiful weather. We praise thee for all these and we turn unto thee for thy aid and blessing now and evermore. Amen.

The Chairman:—It is the privilege of the president of the National Spiritualist Association of the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada, to present to this audience, to deliver the address of welcome, the pastor of the First Spiritual Church, of St. Louis, one of the trustees of the N. S. A., a gentleman to whom the success of the preliminary work incident to this convention will be largely due. I refer to my esteemed friend, the Rev. Thos. Grimshaw.

Mr. Grimshaw's Address of Welcome.

Mr. Chairman, Brother and Sister Delegates, and Friends:—Mine is a very pleasing privilege, this morning, to extend a welcome to you to our city. I welcome you here this morning in the name of the First Spiritual Association. I believe I may say I welcome you in the name of the Spiritualists of St. Louis. Metaphorically speaking, I would shake your hand, and say that I am heartily glad to see you. I hope you have come to work. At the present time we have a strong counter attractfon in the shape of a great World's Fair that is holding forth in the western part of our city. Many of you will be tempted to absent yourselves from the sessions of this convention in order to gaze upon the wondrous signs of progress that are to be seen there, but I sincerely hope that you will resist the temptation. We need you here in this convention.

We need your presence and we need your thought. We are to grapple with some weighty problems and personally I consider that this is the most important convention that has ever been held in the name of the National Spiritualists Association. During the next four days we are to make history, and we shall be confronted with questions of vital importance to the welfare of our movement. I am one of those who believe that the destiny of Modern Spiritualism as a denomination or cult largely rests with us. There may be some good people who prefer to leave everything to the good spirits, but the time has arrived for us to do something to demonstrate that we appreciate the grand revelation of spiritual truths which have been given into our keeping.

It is nice to say, "Welcome angels, pure and bright." It is nice to sit at the feet of the angels and listen to their words of comfort and encouragement. We like to ask the spirit world to bless us and I believe that the spirit world is constantly blessing all those who are trying to bless humanity.

There may be some of you present who think that our movement is getting on all right, that we ought to paint rosy pictures of our future, but, ladies and gentlemen, we cannot close our eyes to the fact that whilst the truths of the Spiritual philosophy are spreading everywhere, whilst preachers are stealing our thunder and are being complimented on their excellent sermons, our societies are weak numerically and financially.

As I have listened to the committee on societies' reports from year to year in our conventions it made me feel sad; sad to think that we are not able to report much progress organically. You may be contented to see the spiritual movement drift but I am not, and in the name of the pioneers; in the name of the men and women who have sacrificed themselves to make it possible for us to enjoy the liberties and privileges that are now ours, I would appeal to you to do something to show the angel world that you are not satisfied.

The voice of this convention will be noted—not because of the number of speeches that will be made, or the length of those speeches, but for the amount of work that we are able to do. We have a great many questions to settle. We must try to discover if we possibly can the cause of our weakness. We must try so far as we possibly can to discover to what extent we agree with one another, and not how far we differ from each other.

In union there is life for our movement. In indifference there is death, and it is for you and I to decide whether Modern Spiritualism shall become the science of all sciences; the philosophy of all philosophies; the religion of all religions; the reform of all reforms, or whether it shall degenerate into a sort of marionette exposition that will be found in the back alleys. I believe that this convention needs to pronounce itself in no uncertain language upon many questions. We need to give the world a practical demonstration that we stand as a people for purity of life. We need to demonstrate to the world at large that we place character above all else.

I would rather be blessed by being the possessor of a character that will bear the closest inspection, than I would be known to the world as the wealthiest man in the community. (Applause.)

We need to let the world know that we stand for, and that we intend to demand purity of life as far as possible upon the part of our workers, that we in no way condone loose morals. (Applause.) We want to let it be known that we stand for intelligence; that we believe that the schoolmaster is of far greater importance in this world than the preacher; that we believe that education in a large majority is to be the savior of the world. (Applause.)

It is delightful to receive communications from our spirit friends. It is delightful to have our spirit friends come to us and assure us of their continued love and interest in our welfare, and I would not for all the world deprive any human being that is struggling against the darkened conditions of the world, all the consolation and encouragement it is possible for them to get in this direction. But I want to see the intercommunion between the two worlds to make better and stronger and more intelligent men and women, and unless our communion with the denizens of the so-called higher life makes us stronger characters; makes us better citizens; causes us to have nobler and more spiritual ideals, it were far better that we had never known what Spiritualism was.

I believe that it is our duty to take our places in the ranks of reform. It is not enough for us to say that we are in favor of peace, in favor of liberties; it is not enough for us to say that we are opposed to capital punishment. It is not enough for us to say that we are opposed to the present system of treating criminals. We must work to try to abolish war; we must be something more than talking Spiritualists if we intend to make our mark in the world and earn the "Well done, thou good and faithful servant," from the lips of our angel friends. (Applause.)

I sometimes have felt the angels must weep over our indifference and our inappreciative spirit. They have been pouring lavishly into our lives an abundance of information. They have placed at our disposal great wealth and yet we have acted like misers and have hugged that knowledge to ourselves that the world was struggling for.

It is nice for you to know that your friends whom you once thought dead, are alive. It is nice for you to know that that father and mother of yours, that those children of yours, whom you loved so well, are making progress in the natural world, where all of the faculties of the human mind can find employment; but out there in the world there are thousands of our brothers and sisters whose hearts are heavy with grief over the loss of some loved one. They have not been privileged with the manna that has satisfied our souls, and I know of no class of people in the world who have greater responsibilities to-day than the Spiritualists have.

We are loud in demanding our own rights; we are loud in proclaiming liberty for ourselves—let us have liberty of thought—let us have liberty of speech—and yet us soon as ever our neighbors claim that same right and begin to express their honest opinion, if their opinion does not agree with ours we pick a quarrel with them, or think there is something wrong with their minds. We need to cultivate the spirit of tolerance, the spirit of toleration. We need to separate the man from the message. (Applause.) We should connect ourselves with societies, not because there is some man or some woman connected with it that we like, but because we can do some good by joining the society.

I feel complimented to have my friends tell me that they appreciate my work. I like to have them say that they love me, but I would like to know that they love Spiritualism better, and that they are willing to work for it through sunshine and sorrow. I like the members of our society to love their temple and their society, but I would like them to love the cause of Spiritualism more. And until we can get into that state of tolerance, and recognize the right of every man and woman to think for themselves, and make up our minds that we will stand shoulder to shoulder: that we will clasp hands with each other—that we will unite our intellects—that we will unite our hearts and that we will unite our pocket books in trying to further the interests of the gospel of Spiritualism, our movement will divide and our societies will complain. Brothers and sisters, I thought of having a motto printed and put up here (over the pulpit) that all the delegates could see it, and that motto would have read, "Spiritualism is here to stay." I wish all the Spiritualists would feel with us that "Spiritualism is here to stay." It is here to make the world brighter, not so much to prepare men to go to heaven, as it is to bring heaven down to the earth.

The time to be happy is now—and the place to be happy is here. This world is in need of our services, and in heaven's name don't let us get so interested in the sweet bye-and-bye that we shall forget the duties we owe to our fellows here. (Applause.)

Brothers and sisters, again I welcome you. I do most sincerely hope that something will be done during this convention that will make our movement stronger. I do sincerely hope that some wise intelligence from the other side of life will spread through this convention and inspire us with wisdom to be able to settle matters aright. I do sincerely hope that personal, petty feelings will be put out of sight, that we will stand as one band working for a common cause. I do most sincerely hope that when Friday evening comes and we say good-bye to each other we shall be able to carry away to our separate homes new strength and fresh courage to go on and fight the battle for the truth. May the good angels bless us in all our labors is my prayer this morning. (Loud applause.)

Remarks by Vice-President Warne.

Ladies and gentlemen of this convention:—What is more fitting than that we should be able to hear the response to the beautiful address of welcome given us by our brother, from the one who has been our standard-bearer all the years of the past, whom we have trusted with great responsibilities, and who has honored our cause by his fidelity to our commission, Harrison D. Barrett, president of the National Spiritualists' Association. (Applause.)

President Barrett's Response:

Mr. President, Delegates, Fellow-Citizens of the State and Nation:—It seems to me that this occasion is one of more than ordinary moment and the deep spiritual impress that is upon this body of people signalizes that something more than ordinary is passing through the minds of the people here assembled. The address of welcome has touched a chord that is vibrating with all that is best and sweetest and truest in human nature. It has given us a purpose. It has shown us an incentive and has inspired, I believe, everyone of us here to rise to the occasion manfully, womanly in endeavoring to work out the very things to which our eloquent brother has referred this morning.

To this earnest, eloquent welcome to St. Louis, I certainly respond and extend the thanks of the National Association and of the Spiritualists here assembled, thanking our brother and those whom he represents from the depths of hearts for this cordial greeting. To the hospitality of the city and the freedom thereof, the use of this beautiful temple, the kindly greetings of those who are in sympathy with us and our work—all these are things of moment to us and we accept them as incentives of that brotherly feeling that should actuate a body of Spiritualists assembled under the name of Spiritualism.

Brother Grimshaw has set us a great task in the address of welcome. The reform issues that he has mentioned, the demands that are to be met in the name of the cause we love—I respond to his request in this direction by promising that so far as my influence shall go and the influence the assembled delegates shall extend, that we will work to bring into being the very things for which he works—that we will do something to tell the world that upon the sun of our beautiful Spiritualism the word "character" stand out in letters of love and light as our motto. (Applause.) We bind ourselves that there shall be no stains that shall cause the world to sneer and say, "that is Spiritualism," and hence that the work of the scandalmonger and the slanderer shall receive its just meed of condemnation here, and that we will have shown to the world that as a people we believe in lifting men up rather than trampling every one down. (Applause.)

I respond from the depths of my heart to the challenge by our brother to work in that direction that shall strengthen our local and state associations, as that is a matter of great moment to every Spiritualist here and all who believe in progressive thought. That which is best for the upbuilding of our cause locally—in the state—or the nation, will receive the earnest thought of every delegate, alternate and visitor, here at this convention, and we pledge ourselves to unite and work in that direction which shall show the world that Maine and Texas and California and Minnesota are only names indicating geographical division arbitrarily on the part of men, and that the citizens of these states are brothers one and all, and that there are no lines for Spiritualism—no township lines—no county lines—no state lines—no national lines, but a universal brotherhood of all mankind. (Applause.)

And then to the other thought that he gave us, with regard to the consecration of the individual to the present day duty—to the working out of something in the life that now is, we respond by promising that we shall make an earnest effort in that direction. We do not believe it is wise or best to form into sects or stand upon the shallow platform of cult, when there is a feeling that some individual is crying for bread, or is seeking for a place to lay his head. We serve God and the angels best by loyally serving suffering humanity. (Applause.)

Then that other thought with regard to the methods by means of which some of these things can be wrought out. I hardly know what to say, but somehow I believe that the things to which he refers may be born out. Somehow, as I grow older the memory of the little red schoolhouse on the hill, and the schoolgirl teacher in her pink dress and white apron comes to my mind as a sign that there is in that school an influence that we should treasure, and should have treasured through the years that have passed—for we have gone far away from them. I believe that we have gone too far from the teachings of the olden time in a mad scramble for place and power, and have a condition of mind to show that we are at variance with everything that our fathers did just because they did them.

Yes, my friends, I know I am charged with having grown orthodox, and I plead guilty to the charge, for orthodoxy means "true doctrine," and under this charge let me say to you what I mean now. We have gone far away from the old markings. We have discarded in many instances the spirit of prayer, said that we would have none of it—but if it be orthodox to send my soul out in search for something that is best—if it be orthodox to cry out in the silence of the night asking for a sound of the voice that is in the far beyond—asking for a glimpse of that angel face—if it be orthodox for me to pray beside my bed, thank God I am orthodox, for I believe in the power of prayer. (Applause.)

I believe that we have a work to do. We are organized for the solving of great problems, and I believe that in the working out and solving of these great problems it will be necessary for us to go back to the anchorage of the soul behind which expression of life lies the infinite—that we will have to go back in search of that life which transcends the condition of the flesh and rise to the heights and recognize the great truth that no man can injure me—that no man can injure me—excepting I myself can injure me. You yourself can injure you. (Applause.) That as I said last year in Washington—in feeble tones perhaps—we should seek to find how many points we have in common, how many points of agreement there are among us as a people, and how few points of difference there are, and magnify the points of agreement and not the points of difference. This means harmony, peace, good will and brotherhood. Then we will come to the recognition that the duty of the hour demands careful effort, not to lay upon the shoulders of some one who is an official of the society the work which belongs to us individually to do—not to call upon some one who is in Washington or in California to do the thing that ought to be done by the man or woman in his own locality, but to take hold with the resolute purpose to work out something that shall build in the hearts and souls of men the temple of truth—the temple of the living God, and then we can enter therein. We must more often remember to express every honest thought and we must be free to give that thought forth in its beauty, and within this which is so precious to us all we will be builded into better lives and cleaner characters—into nobler expressions of being here on this side of life, and show to the world the divine principles that belong to the things of God. So, dear friends, the matter of capital punishment, or peace on earth, good will toward men, all those things which militate against the freedom of the individual—those things which are wanting should receive our attention here, and you who have attended a Spiritualist convention will bear witness to this—that in no instance where Spiritualists have come together have they failed to pronounce against murder of all forms and that wherever Spiritualists have assembled never have they failed to declare for the more humane treatment of criminals behind the bars. Never have they failed to resolve at least, that we are endeavoring to work for more liberty for all comers of every creed or sect, and the demand is now before this twelfth annual convention and to its results, and it is for us to see what we can do, as our eloquent brother has told us, to work these reforms into effect.

Legislatures are to be approached, committees are to be appointed, changes in the organic structure of the state constitutions may sometimes be necessary to give us the things we are desiring before free thought and free speech is permitted. The label of "ism" of a religion means nothing unless it means to be better and to do better.

We can give to the world a nobler perceptive—a more wonderful inspiration than it has ever received before. It is to point out some of the things for which Spiritualism stands, for which we are assembled here to-day, and which with the help of the angels we mean to work out into actuality.

But I must not trespass upon your time this morning, for there is much to be brought before you for your consideration, such as ever comes before its annual conclaves.

Eleven years have rolled by since we met in Chicago a body of people hardly knowing what we wanted to do, but now after the lapse of time, we can see the blessings that have come to us by the pooling of our issues to work together to shape the highest expression of the soul on earth.

The establishment of local churches, the erection of temples, the building of the temple of the soul in every human heart—all of these things have been shown to be possible under the inspiration of co-operation as revealed by the eleven years' history of the N. S. A.

And to-day, in responding to this welcome that has been given us in such beautiful language and tones and eloquence, let us say we accept the freedom of the city. We accept the hospitality of the hearts and homes of the St. Louis people. We accept the call to duty that is laid upon us and we pledge ourselves here as a body of people to give back trust for trust, to put all jealousies and animosities out of our way, and we will rise to the spiritual sealing of the soul and its unfoldment, and on the mountain tops we shall stand together and shall hold aloft, higher and yet higher the pure white banner of Spiritualism, and on its regal folds we will find the word "Excelsior," and below it the word "Eureka"—we have found it. (Loud applause.)

Spiritualists at Genoa, Sycamore, Rockford and all parts of Illinois are hereby notified that C. A. Burdette, "Professor of Psychology," (whether using a self-conferred title or not, I can not say) is not endorsed by the Illinois State Spiritualists' Association. The undersigned had an introduction to that gentleman on the Clinton camp ground in August and was told there that he had been heard to speak against Spiritualism in his public work. It is important to ascertain whether he trims his belief to the breezes of each locality he visits, only professing our faith for purposes of personal revenue.

Dr. E. D. Babbitt.

Dr. Babbitt's Academy of Higher Sciences has been removed from Geneva, N. Y., to 62 East Avenue, Rochester, N. Y., as its permanent location. The Doctor had settled for the time being in Geneva with the expectation of being connected with the William Smith College, but as the building of that institution is at a stand-still for the present, he has chosen a city which is far more progressive than Geneva.

Do not send me manuscripts for examination. I have not the time to examine them, nor have I any printing press to publish them. Do not write me long, social letters, expecting me to answer them; and as over three-fourths of the first edition of "The Demonism of the Ages, and Spirit Obsession" is already sold, will those who have seen mistakes, or have suggestions to make concerning the next edition, do me the favor by promptly writing me. To err is human. Never did I yet publish a book that fully met my ideal. J. M. PEEBLES, M. D.

Human Nature = Lecture by C. W. Stewart.

What is Nature? What is Man? And what is the relationship existing between them? "Know thyself," said the old Greek, and this motto has been the key to the complex human character from that day to this. Many thousands of volumes have been written for the purpose of explaining the mystery of man's existence, the what, whence and whither, but the riddle of the sphinx remained a riddle still until science showed man his relationship with the Infinite and Eternal.

Theology asserted that man was a child of God, and science has proven him to be a child of Nature. Nature, that which brings forth. Hence, the Infinite and eternal mother of all that lives and moves, and the eternal God spirit, the uncaused Cause of all.

All-powerful, because all of power. All-wise, because embracing all of knowledge. Infinitely just, because the same yesterday, to-day and forever. Hence, nothing can be lost or mislaid beneath the care of Him to whom there is no past, no future, but whose existence is an eternal Now! Father God, Mother Nature—uncreated, everlasting, eternal union without beginning, without end. A supernal marriage, blending in everlasting harmony, fruitful of worlds and systems, of angels and men, "the embodied thoughts of God.

"The world of matter is God's tongue,
And from its motion God's thoughts are sung,
The realms of space are the octave bars
And the music notes are the suns and stars."

A Universe! The same elements awaken in the soil, live in the plant and animal, and pulsate in the human brain, are found by the analysis of light to exist in the farthest star that twinkles in the azure fields of immensity. The most distant nebulae whose light is so faint as only to be caught by the photographic plate, is found to be composed of the self-same elements composing the earth on which we tread. And what are those elements, those so-called primates whose combination makes up the infinite variety of life and form upon the earth? The highest thought of science to-day is, that all so-called elements are but differentiated expressions of one eternally existing Principle, and that the great power called attraction which rules in harmony the suns and worlds of space, when reduced to its last analysis, is Love!

"One God who ever lives and loves,
One God, one Law, one Element,
And one far-off Divine event
To which the whole Creation moves."

Thus the world-wide, age-long dispute between Monism and Dualism finds a point of agreement and the central thought of the ages finds expression in natural law and fact.

"The things which are seen are temporal; the things that are not seen are eternal." The unseen world is the real world of principles as cause, and the visible is the world of effects, a changing panorama produced by the "Light that never shone on sea or land." A stereopticon view whose plates are made and changed by Him who holds the universe in the hollow of his hand.

And this is nature, of which man is only a part, but the chief work of the Great Artificer. Made a "little lower than the angels" with the dawning light of immortality touching his brow.

The suns and worlds that sparkle in the realms of space are wonderful and sublime. But how much more wonderful the human soul that measures the distance from sun to sun and weighs the planets in their orbits!

This world is beautiful. Its snow-capped mountains pierce the clouds and its mighty oceans chant their music forever to the cliffs! The canopy of blue with its golden flaming sun by day, and its host of glittering stars by night. The peaceful, verdure-covered hills and valleys, and the majestic rivers flowing to the sea. The flower-bespangled plains, the rivulets that purl and sing in unison with the forest warblers; all are beautiful, but how much more beautiful the soul of man that takes these mystic symbols of the unseen God and makes of them the rhythmic poetry of life and use and joy!

Not only is nature wonderful and beautiful, but vast in its awful grandeur. The volcano with its lurid fires lighting up the murky blackness of the night. The earthquake, that makes the mountain heave and groan, rending asunder the rock-bound hills. The fierce tornado, sweeping over the earth, hideous with the lightning's serpent tongues, and the mingled roar of wind and thunder, leaving desolation and death in its wake. The burning desert with its ever-shifting sands. The trackless forest, the jungle with its crouching beasts of prey! The horrid polar regions, bound with fetters of eternal ice and snow. All these are awful in their fearful vastness, but awfuller still is the human soul that learns through law to conquer them and make of their dread forms the stepping-stones that lead through Nature up to Nature's God!

Atheism? There is no room for such a thing in all the mighty universe! To be an atheist, man must needs deny himself. He who claims to be an atheist is only bewildered by the vastness of his environment and the complexity of his own mentality compared with the vastness of the Cosmos. Atheism is not possible to a well-poised soul.

Man has through all the past, engaged in a fruitless struggle to unravel the mystery of Cause, to know the unknowable, from the plane of finite reason. Hence, we have Ormuzd, Brahm, Isis, Jove, Zeus, Jupiter, and others, representing the divine ideals of the nations of the past. Nineteen centuries ago, Jesus said, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." And nearly seventeen centuries ago, the earliest and greatest critic of Jesus, Celsus, the Platonist, said, "If instead of exercising the senses alone you look upward with the soul, if turning away the eye of the body you open the eye of the mind, thus, and thus only will you be able to see God."

Jesus of Nazareth said, "He that seeth me seeth the Father," and the discordant ignorance of the theological world not only failed to grasp his meaning then, but it has engaged in wrathful disputes and devastating wars for centuries over these simple, beautiful words.

God is Spirit—essence of all that is. Chemists tell us that the atom, the ideal basis of all material things, is not only indestructible, but incorruptible as well—unchanging and eternal. And now, the conviction is growing stronger in scientific minds that even the so-called atom is not an ultimate, but is composed of still finer particles of matter, which leads to the conviction that matter and energy are but two conditions of the same thing.

Spencer says, "We stand in the presence of an Infinite and Eternal Energy from which all things proceed."

Paul told the Athenians that "in Him we live, move and have our being." "Even as one of your own poets has said, we are His offspring."

Jesus was pure-minded and his every act was an expression of that eternal consistency of nature with herself, which is truth.

He was loving, just and merciful, and therefore powerful spiritually, hence Paul said that in him dwelt the fullness of the Godhead bodily. Which meant simply that he was filled with God-like attributes, or qualities. But if, as certain theologians claim, Jesus was a Divine personage in a miraculous sense, Paul never could have said, "Therefore being justified, we are saved by his life," for how could finite man live the life of an Infinite God? Again, if Jesus was a God his resurrection or spiritual appearance after his crucifixion is valueless as a basis for human hope of a life to come, for the very attributes in which he differed from man would be the cause of his anastasis ek nekros, or resurrection out of the dead.

No, man's hope in Jesus is based on the fact that he was a type, not of gods but of men.

When the Jews attempted to stone him for blasphemy or, as they said, "making himself God," he said, "Many good works have I shown you in my Father's name, for which of these do you stone me?" Then they answered, "For no good work do we stone thee, but because thou blasphemest, making thyself God." What had he said? "I and my Father are one." And he at once referred them to their own scriptures: "If they were called gods to whom the word of god (spiritual power), came and the scriptures cannot be broken, how say ye of him whom the Father has sanctified (or consecrated) and sent into the world, I blaspheme when I say I am the son of God?"

This simple truth was the despair of the materialistic Pharisees then, and it has ever been the despair of a theology lost in the letter and oblivious of the true spirit of that great truth that spiritual things must be spiritually discerned.

Man is a spirit now and is in one of the mansions of the Father's house. Man being a product of nature's laws, his future existence is assured by the law of his being. Human nature is Divine, and the very core of Jesus' teaching was the divinity of man. His tender soul could see good where others could observe naught but evil. His life work was to change the environment and conditions which caused men to remain undeveloped, and lead them to a holier and diviner life." "I am the way, the truth, and the life," he said, as though in answer to the question, "what is the way to truth and life?" And when by living the life of truth and spirituality in love, man places himself in rapport with the Everlasting Life, the results will surely follow.

"He that believeth on me, the works that I do he shall do also; and greater things shall he do, because I go to my Father."

Was this true? And if true did it mean that the act of belief would transform human beings into gods and miracle workers? "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." Does this mean a transition from human nature to a deific nature, or rather does it not mean a transformation of the individual from a low state of human nature to a higher grade of human nature? Hence Paul's distinction between the carnal or animal nature, at enmity against God (or love and spirituality) and the spiritual nature. But it is all human nature, or in other words, it is all natural, not supernatural. In fact everything in the Universe is natural, from God who is law, to the smallest atom that is manifesting the law.

Why, then, is carnal human nature said to be at enmity or war with God? "Is not subject to the (higher) law, neither can be." Because the animal nature knows only the lowest form of love, and that is self love. And we see that all that is called evil in man, is the fruit of selfishness. "They that are of the flesh mind the things of the flesh." In the animal kingdom, this is the highest condition attainable. But when this is the dominant element in man it quenches the nobler possibilities and makes him more brutal than the brutes.

Now is it human nature that is to blame? Or is it not rather the environment that is at fault?

Time was when the Chicago river was a pure, limpid stream flowing out through the reeds and grasses of the prairie into Lake Michigan, and perhaps the soldiers of Fort Dearborn quenched their thirst from its waters. But who would now drink from that river, made putrid and pestilential with the sewage from a city of a million people? Is the river to blame? Is it the cause of its own condition? All that would be necessary to restore its old-time purity would be to remove the city from its banks and leave it as it was formerly.

O, the mistake that is forever made by personifying evil. Light is positive, has properties and is susceptible of analysis, but who would attempt to analyze darkness? Because it is only the absence of light. Heat is positive, has qualities, but cold is only the absence of heat.

Good and evil are relative. We call that good which stimulates vital activity, and we call that evil which depresses it, and the same is true of mental and moral nature.

But there is an eternal Good because there is Eternal life, for life is positive, has qualities, while so-called death is a negation like darkness and cold—the absence of life. But even here this absence of life is only apparent, for not a single atom in the universe can change in its essential character, no principle of nature no law can cease to be, and as the soul is composed of those principles in self-conscious activity, a crystallized entity, extinction is impossible.

John G. Whittier was one of the most Christ-like men that has lived in modern times, and he was this largely because he utterly refused to accept any dogma that attempted to personify evil in any form. He said:

"I cannot look where cherubim
And seraphs may not see,
But nothing can be good in Him
That evil is in me.
The wrong that pains my soul below
I dare not throne above,
I know not of his hate, I know
His goodness and his love.
I know not where His islands lift
Their fronded palms in air,
I only know I cannot drift
Beyond his love and care."

To Whittier eternal Goodness was an ever-present fact, while evil was only a transient passing shadow which might obscure the sun for a little time, but could not be permanent. And have not time and events fully justified his great faith? One of the wrongs that pained his soul was African slavery; and while he agonized over "the Branded Hand" some men were weak enough to try to throne that infamy above, and prove that it was sanctioned by the Living God. Did they succeed? He lived to see that shadow pass.

Yet it was all human nature. It was human nature that tore from the mother's arms her babe and left her weeping and desolate. It was human nature that drove the slave beneath the lash to his unrequited toil whilst the master reveled in the price of blood! It was human nature that brought vast armies face to face over this accursed child of greed, to work out a higher destiny for America. And it was human nature, yes, a divine human nature, that penned the Emancipation Proclamation, which bade the crouching slave arise and be a man!

Old Pharaoh's human nature commanded the Israelites to make bricks without straw, and it was the human nature of Moses that said, "Be just, O King!"

Human nature carried the son of Philip against Persia, and while his presence there was simply a brutal invasion, there came out of it the blending of Grecian and Persian ideas which led to higher human nature in Egypt, from thence to Rome, and from Rome to modern times.

It was human nature that platted the crown of thorns, that applied the scourge, that mocked and crucified the lowly Nazarene. It was human nature that said, "Release unto us Barabbas—away with him, crucify him!" and it was human nature that said, "My God! why hast thou forsaken me!" It was human nature that came to Pilate, begged the body of Jesus, and laid it in a clean new sepulcher. It was human nature that said, "it is not meet to give the children's bread unto the dogs," and it was the same human nature, risen to a wider, sweeter height that said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the good news to every creature!"

Paul's human nature caused him to work havoc with the church, and persecute Christians even unto strange cities. And it was Paul's awakened human nature that made him "obedient to the heavenly vision," so that he became the greatest evangelist of them all. That made him endure scourging, imprisonment, shipwreck—dangers on sea and land. Why? Because that heavenly vision had taught him that "the things that are seen are temporal, but the things that are not seen are eternal."

It was human nature that passed the Stamp Act, and the tea tax, and it was human nature that wrote the Declaration of American Independence. Human nature hung witches at Salem and whipped Quakers at Boston, and chased Roger Williams out of Massachusetts into the care of winter and savages, because he mildly protested against ecclesiastical tyranny. And yet, advanced, enlightened human nature makes that same Massachusetts the center of gravity for all that is radical in theological reform.

So we see that human nature is an instrument whose octaves range from the guttural growl of the tiger in his lair, up to the liquid melody of an archangel's song.

Man is a universe in miniature, therefore his nature, that harp of a thousand strings, echoes back when touched the lost chords of the mighty past. Biology shows us man in his ante-natal development passes through all the grades of animated nature from monad to man; that each individual of the race duplicates the whole history of the race itself. That Ontogeny, or individual development, parallels Phylogeny, or race development. Not only this, but the correspondence is still greater as man's frame and form is a copy of the earth upon which he dwells. His life and intelligence correspond with and grow out of the kingdoms of animated nature, while his soul or spirit is the final fruit of all that precedes it, and connects him with the Eternal, Self-existent spirit from which all things emanate.

Man being a child of nature represents her on his mental and physical sides. In his passions he embodies the earthquake and the tempest, the volcano and the sirocco, but only do they thus act when unrestrained or but partially controlled. But as with age the cataclysms of nature grow less frequent because nature is rounding into greater harmony, so man as he comes more and more under the sway of higher spiritual law, and more harmonious environment, is less subject to the sway of the grosser passional forces.

In his mental make-up man represents the kingdoms below him in animated nature. He exhibits the rage of the tiger, the cunning of the fox, the ferocity of the wolf, the slimy sinuosity of the snake.

"Whence come wars and fighting among you," says James. "Come they not hence even of your pleasures that war in your members?" And again he says: "Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God; for God is not tempted with evil, and he himself tempteth no man. But each man is tempted when he is drawn away by his own lusts and enticed."

And just in proportion that man comes under the sway of the higher spiritual nature does he cease to be drawn away by lust in whatever form it may come. The tiger, the wolf, and the serpent are relegated to oblivion, and the lower human nature gives place to the higher, until at last the highest, the angelic is reached.

Herbert Spencer has a beautiful thought illustrative of this point. He shows that a brain organ will atrophy from disuse, as will any bodily organ. And that as man becomes more civilized, the propensities are less frequently called into activity and the higher faculties more frequently. In fact, this is the cause of civilization from outside restraint. That an organ grows by frequent use, while it perishes from lack of use. Therefore, this process will go on, until the propensities will weaken and the higher faculties will strengthen, when the latter will dominate the former, not only individually, but collectively, until man and nations will come to practice universal peace and harmony.

This attitude of the great scientist, forms another point of contact with the highest religious ideal. It also proves that the highest liberty comes with the highest law. For, as the child must be led by another that it may develop strength to walk alone, so must man be led by wholesome laws until he can develop strength to be a law unto himself, having the works of the law written in his heart.

This shows the futility of Philosophical Anarchy. It would say, "take away the prop, and if the child cannot walk alone let it take the consequences." Man can not be a law unto himself until he has the requisite strength, and in order to this, he needs the the restraining influence of wholesome law, to keep the lower self in bounds until the higher self can take control.

Every noble, pure-minded man and woman in the world is a prophecy of what the whole race will become when nature's laws are universally understood and obeyed.

There is something sublimely beautiful in this idea of the oneness of all things. It is like the ladder in Jacob's vision whose feet rested on the earth and whose top reached heaven, and he saw the angels ascending and descending thereon. That ladder is life. Upon it the human race is slowly climbing toward spirituality, and whether the individual soul is on the lowest round, struggling with the preponderating brute within, or on the topmost round with the light of heaven shining full upon his face, all, all is human nature. And it is still more beautiful to think that we can aid each other in the ascent, with all the good and great who have passed on before, testing the strength of each round of the ladder, and when we too shall reach the top, to grasp our weary hands and lead us on to peace and rest beside the River of Eternal Life.

Universe! The Infinite is one! "In him we live, move, and have our being," and "we are his offspring." If so, then reverently speak of human nature, for it is God nature.

But you will say, "Look at the wickedness of A. or B. Can you assert that such a nature as that is of God?"

Why confound A. or B. with his actions? Take a little babe in its mother's arms. Pure as a snowflake, sweet as the breath of a rose. It looks up into its mother's face with clear blue eyes, and she sees in their azure depths the budding soul of an angel. Suppose that mother dies. The child is left friendless, falls into the hands of the vulgar and depraved. She is reared in the atmosphere of vice and crime, and learns in infancy the lessons of sin and shame. In the language of the graphic Blatchford, "she becomes fierce and cunning and vile. Ghastly of visage, under her paint and grease. A creature debased below the level of brutes, with the hate of a devil in her soul, and the fire of hell in her eyes. Lewd of gesture, strident of voice, wanton of gaze; using language so foul as to shock the pot-house ruffian, a laugh whose sound makes the blood run cold. A dreadful spectre, shameless, heartless, reckless and horrible. A creature whose touch is contamination, whose words burn like a flame, whose leers and ogles make the soul sick. A creature living in drunkenness and filth, a moral blight, a beast of prey, who has cast down many wounded, whose victims fill the lunatic ward and the morgue; a thief, a liar, a hopeless, lost, degraded wretch of whom it has been well said her feet take hold of hell, her house is the way to the grave, going down to the chamber of death!"

An awful picture this! But that is human nature in its worst form. But like the river previously mentioned, that child of sin and shame is still at heart a child of God. And Jesus said he came to seek and save the lost. He did not say those who were in danger of being lost, but the lost.

"And God is still for thee, poor struggling spirit,
That once did inhabit this ruin of clay,
Fear not that thou shalt not His mercy inherit,
With those who have wandered as far from the way,
There is never a waif on life's troubled ocean,
By the wild waves of passion so foamingly tost,
But his eye kindles bright and his sweetest emotion
Is the beat of his heart for the beautiful lost!"

In this world, in all worlds, the beacon light of love will forever shine for her and such as she, and though the pathway from the desert be long and dreary, she will sometime be freed from the bondage of sin, and will turn toward the light in the window of heaven that beams out through the murky night of shame and grief and degradation.

Now look on another picture. Take a child born amid the environment of the slums. Place it in a home of virtue and peace, wherein love is the ruling power. It is clean and pure, and soon its surroundings and training will overcome any lurking antenatal tendencies toward vice. It grows up in refinement and is educated in philanthropy. It is never informed of its lowly origin, and becomes a refined and noble woman. A war breaks out. She reads of the suffering, the sick and wounded in the crowded hospitals, the horrors of the battlefield, and she becomes imbued with the desire to relieve the horrors of war. She becomes a Florence Nightingale, forsaking home and wealth and social pleasure, and hies away to the scenes of suffering and sorrow. See her as she passes from cot to cot, now giving a drink of water to one consumed by thirst, now pausing to lay her hand with cooling touch upon a burning brow, but always trying to be a ministering angel. In the silent watches of the night when sighs and moans are the only sounds that break the awful stillness of the midnight hour, she is called to the bedside of a dying soldier. She comes, and by the lamp-light reads to him or prays for him, takes his last message to the loved ones he will never meet again on earth, and when his eyes begin to glaze she wipes the death dew from his brow and closes his eyes in the eternal slumber. And this, too, is human nature.

It is the thorns and briars in life's pathway that make the feet to bleed. Man is a creature of environment and ceases to develop without it. And he will always and ever partake of his surroundings and be just what they cause him to be. The tree that is but a mere bush at the snowline on a mountain, when transplanted in the valley will grow to be a forest king. There are plants growing on the arid plains of the West, that have adapted themselves to the parched soil, but they bear no leaves and their flowers are destitute of beauty. You would pass them by and never see them unless they were pointed out to you, they are so insignificant. But were they placed in a moist soil and favorable climate, they would doubtless in time develop leaves and flowers and become beautiful.

The lesson to be learned from this, is that all reforms must aim to improve the environment of human nature, if they would succeed.

George D. Herron says that Jesus Christ was God's idea of what a man ought to be. And he also says that what the world needs is not a conviction of sin, but a conviction of righteousness. As Paul says, "There is one God, and one mediator between God and men, himself man, Christ Jesus, who gave himself a ransom for all!"

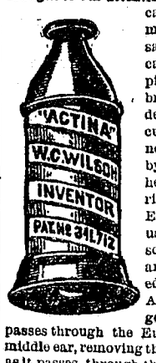
He also says that he was of like passions with other men, and was tempted in all points as others were, yet without sin. What then, made the vast difference between him and the mass of mankind; a difference that has made him the ideal of the world? It is this: All of his mental and moral force was expended through the higher faculties in accordance with Spiritual law. Or in other words, his passions were in absolute subjection to his spiritual nature.

Take the case of Paul himself. He was a narrow, bigoted Pharisee, as bitter, relentless, and persecuting as he was sincere. His mental force did not expend itself in selfish debauchery and vice. He was on a higher round of the ladder than that. But when he was caught up into the third heaven, and heard unspeakable words not lawful for him to utter, he lost his narrow bigotry and persecuting spirit. But did he lose any courage, any persistence or zeal? No, but his mental powers were directed into a new channel, and his native sincerity, backed up the new position even as it had re-enforced the old.

The implement is nothing, but the use made of it is everything. The same spade that digs a grave may plant a rose. The knife that prunes a tree may also destroy a human life. And the same faculties of brain which caused the prodigal to spend his substance in riotous living when misdirected, will, when the true light breaks upon him, start him back in penitence to his father's house.

Infancy with its innocence, is the Eden of every human soul.

"Except ye become as little children, ye cannot enter the kingdom of heaven." Receptive, pure, loving and confiding, these are the distinguishing characteristics of a child. Were the Post-Constantine bishops, wrangling about the Divine nature and the co-eternity of the Son with the Father, the types of little children? Were the thirteenth century scholasticisms, and the ravings of Calvin and Edwards the echoes from a spiritual kingdom? And if not, what of nineteenth and twentieth century wrangling?



The beautiful old allegory of sin entering the world in the Garden of Eden, is re-enacted in every human

DEAFNESS AND CATARRH CURED

BY NO METHOD UNTIL "ACTINA" WAS DISCOVERED.

Ninety-five per cent of all cases of deafness brought to our attention is the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The air passages become clogged by catarrhal deposits, stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Until these deposits are removed a cure is impossible. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying, hence the inability of aurists or physicians to cure. Ear drums are worse than useless. That there is a scientific cure for deafness and catarrh is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. The vapor current generated in the Actina passes through the Eustachian tubes into the middle ear, removing the catarrhal obstructions as it passes through the tubes, and loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, making them respond to the slightest vibration of sound. Actina has never failed to cure ringing noises in the head. We have known people troubled with this distressing symptom for years to be completely cured in only three weeks' use of Actina. Actina also cures asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are directly or indirectly due to catarrh. Actina is sent on trial postpaid. Write us about your case. We give advice free, and positive proof of cures. A valuable book—Professor Wilson's 100 page Dictionary of Disease, Free. IN THE WORLD CELESTIAL.

BY DR. T. A. BLAND,

Is a wonderful book, being the personal experiences of a man whose dead sweetheart, after appearing to him many times, etherealized, materialized and through trance mediums, has him put into a hypnotic trance by spirit scientists and held in that condition for ten days, which time he spends with her in the celestial spheres, and then returns to earth with perfect recollection of what he saw and heard in that realm of the so-called dead. He tells his wonderful story to his friend who gives it to the world in his best style. This friend is Dr. T. A. Bland, the well-known author, scientist and reformer.

This book has a brilliant introduction by that distinguished preacher, Rev. H. W. Thomas, D. D., president of the American Congress of Liberal Religions, who gives it the weight of his unqualified endorsement.

He says: "This book will give us courage to pass through the shadow of death to the sunlit clime of the world celestial."

Rev. M. J. Savage says: "It is intensely interesting, and gives a picture of the future life that one cannot help wishing may be true."

The Medical Gleaner says: "It lifts the reader into enchanting realms, and leaves a sweet taste in his consciousness.

Hon. C. A. Windle says: "It is inexpressibly delightful."

Everybody will be charmed with it for it is not only a great spiritual book but a most beautiful love romance o two worlds. It is printed in elegant style, bound in cloth and gold. Price $1 For sale at this office.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

W. J. Colville has recently given a successful course of ten lectures in the Spiritualist Church at Indianapolis, Ind. The three-day mass-meeting, Oct. 14, 15 and 16, proved very successful. A large array of talent participated.

We speak about a person's being as old as Methuselah. Yet he lived but a brief hour compared with some of the great sequoia trees which are being sacrificed to short-sighted greed in California. A late prostrate monarch of the woods that was fifteen feet in diameter several feet from the ground began its existence in 271 B. C. By 254 A. D., when it was 516 years of age, a forest fire burned on its trunk a scar three feet in width. Then it enjoyed 1,190 years of placid life. But in 1441 A. D. the tree, then aged 1,712, was injured in another fire and it took the scar fifty-six years to heal. The worst attack of all occurred in 1787, when the tree, then 2,068 years old, was attacked by a fire which left a scar which it took 103 years to heal.

A three days' mass meeting of the National and Indiana State Spiritualists' Association closed at the First Spiritualist church, New York and Alabama streets, last night, with trumpet talking in the light by Mrs. Margaret Vestal of Chesterfield and platform communications through Mrs. N. S. Thronsden, of Louisville, Ky. The church was full during the last meeting and so great was the enthusiasm that there was talk among many of the members of reviving the regular Spiritualist meetings during the winter. People lined the aisles waiting their turn for trumpet communications as Mrs. Vestal gave her demonstrations. The voice in the trumpet was plainly audible all over the room. First was the voice of a little girl who called for her sister Anna. "She says it is a woman in black in the rear of the room," said Mrs. Vestal. A woman answering the description came forward and talked to the voice in the trumpet concerning her relatives. The medium called for many people in the audience and they responded and held audible conversation with the voices. One man in the line was a German. Mrs. Vestal told him to talk in his own language. The voice which came through the trumpet was that of an old man speaking German. The man who listened through the trumpet said that he understood every word. Mrs. Thronsden stood on the platform and answered general questions, making prophecies and delivering advice which she said she received from her guides and from spirit friends of those who asked. She called out names which she said she heard and people in the audience rose and said they knew who she meant. She spoke messages from them which the friends in the audience said they understood. W. J. Colville, of St. Louis, who has been lecturing during the week, recited impromptu poetry and delivered the benediction in verse which he made up on the spur of the moment. During the three days' session of the Spiritualists many of the leaders of the faith were present from over the United States. Among those on the program were Dr. G. B. Warne, N. S. Thronsden, the Rev. Moses Hull, Miss Anna Throndsen, Thomas Grimshaw, B. F. Schmidt, Frank T. Ripley and others.—Star and Journal, Indianapolis, Ind.

The executive board of the Indiana Association of Spiritualists was in session at Chesterfield, yesterday, for the first time since the close of the meeting. All members of the board were present and matters pertaining to the recent meeting were considered. Henry Bronnenberg, treasurer of the board, says that after a careful review of the books the report shows the association to be about $600 in debt. At the beginning of the meeting the indebtedness of the association, reached the sum of $1,600 and the six weeks' meeting netted them exactly $1,000. While the amount was not so good as had been hoped for, Mr. Bronnenberg says the association was well pleased with the showing made and the $600 indebtedness is assured of being wiped out next year. Considering the increased rate of fare on the traction line and the travel to St. Louis this summer, $1,000 is considered quite a satisfactory sum to be cleared in one summer. The camp grounds are now almost deserted. —News-Tribune, Marion, Ind., Oct. 8.

Frank T. Ripley, speaker and platform test medium, has the Sundays of November and December, and January, 1905, open for engagement. Write all letters to General Delivery, Seymour, Ind., until Oct. 30; then to Tipton, Ind., thereafter.

David Williams, of Utica, N. Y., writes: "THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER IS THE BEST EXPONENT OF SPIRITUALISM AND MODERN THOUGHT PUBLISHED ON THE FACE OF THE GLOBE."

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

The Chicago Spiritualists' League will hold its next regular monthly meeting in the Blue Room, Handel Hall, on Tuesday evening, Nov. 1. Everybody is cordially invited to attend. Dr. Geo. B. Warne, president; O. E. Kropp, secretary.

The Chicago Chronicle has the following dispatch from New York: "New York is being swept by a psychic wave. From the "five-dollars-a-reading" palmist to the 50-cent card fortune teller, New York is teeming with these occultists, and from the Bronx to the Battery there can be found a clairvoyant or medium or a fortune teller or a palmist, however they designate themselves, in almost every block. The newspapers are full of advertisements offering psychic readings and the solution of all problems, past, present and future. The psychic wave is disturbing every strata of Manhattan social life and the growing popularity of the followers of palmistry, crystal-gazing and card-reading has been noticeable in the number of new psychists who have opened up offices in New York. One of the best known of the psycho-palmists, who is consulted only by people of means, is so busy that engagements have to be made weeks ahead."

The efforts of the police and many citizens of Steubenville, Ohio, are directed in running down the "woman in white" mystery. The nightly appearance of this white-robed creature has created a local sensation. She was first seen by Charles Pressler, a small boy who has been sick and nervous since the vision followed him home. At several homes on LaBelle avenue she has appeared and tapped on the windows. She appears frequently to employes about the yards of LaBelle iron works. Several nights ago the wraith was seen by William Schick gliding across the Carnegie Library lawn. All describe her as attired in a white gown resembling a bride's dress, with white slippers. The newspapers have printed daily accounts of persons seeing the vision in white, and daily reports are made to police headquarters.—Chicago American.

Mrs. Emma F. Jay Bullene, who has been a prominent worker in our ranks, has been stopping in Chicago for sometime. Last week she returned to Denver, Colo. She can be addressed for engagements at No. 329 Sixteenth street.

There is a haunted house in London, England., where four working girls resided. The maidenly quartet left their habitation each morning at 6 o'clock to go to work in the neighborhood, returning to dinner and to tea. Two days after taking the house they were greatly perplexed on returning home at midday to find a large mirror, which had been left on the wall in one of the bedrooms, lying face downward on the kitchen floor. It was replaced, but at noon next day the girls trembled to see the looking glass again hiding its face on the hearthrug. Then other familiar objects in the house became possessed with evil spirits. When the door was opened some unseen influence closed it, sometimes slowly, sometimes with an elastic spring, frightening the girls terribly. The ghost began to manifest itself in nocturnal visitations. Dreadful rumblings kept the girls awake through the long, dismal night. At such times shadows flitted over the ceilings, and the girls hid their white faces under the blankets. At last the terrorized quartet removed their goods and chattels at midnight, and went to live with a relative. Thousands of people went nightly to see the haunted house.

Will Bottomley writes from Toronto, Canada: "There is at the present time six Spiritualist meeting-rooms here, all doing good work in the advancement of our glorious work. I, as a platform worker here and late of Yorkshire, England, can say that Spiritualism is progressing here at a rapid rate. In this city one of the ministers of the Congregational church said before 2,000 people that the loved ones who had passed on were not dead, but nearer to them now than they were in the mortal body. Rev. James L. Gorden said he was locking to the so-called death with a smile, as he knew that it only meant stepping out of the physical into the spiritual. He had proved there was no death. Mrs. L. A. Griffen, England's lady Spiritual missionary and question answerer from the congregation, is coming to America for a time. We shall be pleased to arrange with active centers where no society exists. Societies requiring good meetings should drop me, lecturer and test medium, a line for vacant dates and terms. Address me at No. 32 Belmont street, Toronto, Canada."

Mrs. Powderly writes: "The Sunday night meeting was well attended, and every one expressed themselves as well pleased with the lecture given by Dr. Walter DeVoe. October 30, Dr. Evelyn See will address the meeting. Subject, The Eminent Spirit."

Marion, Ind.—Rising from a trance in which she had lain for eighteen hours after being prostrated at religious services in the home of W. H. Mook, of West Marion, Mrs. Laura Hill declared she had visited heaven. Before she fell in the trance Monday evening she began shouting and shaking hands with the persons in the house. As she was bidding them good-bye she fell to the floor. Efforts to arouse her were without success and a physician was called but he was unable to revive her. She suddenly awoke late yesterday afternoon and rising up in her bed she exclaimed: "I have been with Jesus and He is waiting for me." The young woman then told of being in a heavenly world, and of seeing her grandparents, a cousin, and other relatives and friends, who had been dead for a number of years. The woman's grandparents have been dead for thirty-four years, and never were seen in life by Mrs. Hill. "I saw my grandparents," she said, "and they were at my side. And the angels were all about me. Everything was so beautiful." She spoke of seeing and being with girl friends who have long been dead. While Mrs. Hill lay in the trance, her lips were seen to move at frequent intervals as if in conversation. Smiles played on her face at times, and then again she appeared sad and tears came into her eyes. Mrs. Hill, although revived from the trance is still unable to leave her bed because of being weak from going without nourishment for the long period.—Indianapolis News.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

Mrs. E. Chiffar writes approvingly of the work done at Walnut, Ill., by Mrs. J. Lindsay. She stopped at Mrs. Chiffar's house, where she held her meetings.

B. F. Deniston writes from Kenton, Ohio, expressing his high regard for The Progressive Thinker: "I find The Progressive Thinker is like many another good thing in this world, we do not know how to appreciate it until we are deprived of it. I feel like writing a long letter, telling you what a great paper you are getting out, but will cut it short and say that I will endorse every good word that has been written about the greatest of all spiritual papers, The Progressive Thinker."

Mrs. Emily D. King of Girard Mich., writes: "We had with us the 27th and 28th of September, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague. Mr. Sprague gave two fine lectures, after which excellent tests were given. The last evening, Mrs. Sprague diagnosed for a lady, and the physician being present who had treated her, arose and said it was true. He said that Mr. Sprague's last lecture was the finest he had ever heard on that line. A great many were interested."

The New York Herald has the following from Valdosta, Ga.: "Some happenings, which seem impossible to explain in a rational way, took place last week at the home of W. H. Chitty, in this city. Among the members of his household is a little girl who apparently possesses a power more wonderful than that o. Lula Hurst or Annie Abbott in their palmiest days. This is Sallie Moore, thirteen years old, a niece of Mrs. Chitty, who is boarding with the family and attending school in the city. The first strange manifestations were noticed a few nights ago, when a thimble and other small objects fell to the floor after a flight across the room. Since then many strange happenings have taken place, various objects being thrown across the room or falling apparently from the ceiling, impelled by some unseen force. Mr. Chitty states that while he was standing in one of the rooms of his home a large pearl button, which, with others, was lying in a small glass dish on the bureau, flew across the room and struck the door on the opposite side of the room. It was soon followed by another button. In a few moments a pencil which was lying on the mantelpiece was thrown against the door. A shoe belonging to one of the children left its place at the side of the room and fell at his feet, and a stocking in the other shoe was thrown across the room. Large numbers of persons have been attracted to the home by the occurrences, hundreds going to witness the manifestations. It is said that those who have investigated the matter are satisfied that the Moore girl is endowed with some mysterious power. Her mother is said to have been a medium. It is noticed, however, that these strange things happen when the little girl is not present, and this feature is puzzling the public as much as the occurrences themselves."

H. Brady, of Thorpe, Iowa, writes approvingly of the good work done there by Mrs. Vera Bryan. The people were deeply interested. An unlooked for incident abruptly closed her work there —a case of hydrophobia occurred in the vicinity, and in consequence people remained behind closed doors. In conclusion, Mr. Brady says: "We earnestly hope to see her among us again as the good seed she has already sown will some day need further tillage, and we hope she may yet see a grand spiritual temple erected upon the foundation her noble efforts have placed."

Mrs. M. A. M. Hatton, an active, energetic worker in the cause of Truth, writes from El Paso, Texas: "Last spring I wrote you to send me a sample copy of your wonderful paper, The Progressive Thinker, as by change of residence I had neglected to renew my standing subscription, and I wished to get a few of my friends to join me. It came at once. I headed a list and had secured a few names, when I was stricken down with pneumonia and sent to the hospital where I lay for several weeks. I turned the list over to a lady friend, who informed me that she had secured what she could, and sent it on. My copy comes regularly and I suppose the others get theirs also. Now I am out and on deck again, and I want to say the marvelous amount of spiritual food, intellectual stimulus, and social comfort regularly supplied by that Prince of Papers, The Progressive Thinker, was not only a source of much pleasure but I REALLY BELIEVE WAS HELPFUL IN RESTORING ME TO HEALTH AGAIN. You may laugh at my enthusiasm, but I believe it, all the same. And now I want to compliment a few more of my intellectual friends by sending them a copy for one year. Will give names and addresses on separate slip of paper. Please find P. O. order for $4."

Mrs. S. Garber writes from Des Moines, Iowa: "The Psychic Research Society held its initial meeting Sunday, Oct. 2, at Yeoman Hall. Mr. Julian P. Johnson lectured and Mrs. Marie Kerstein Russell gave tests. They were both cordially received. Max Hoffmann has been here for the past two Sundays. He is too well known to a DesMoines audience to say anything in praise of him. Suffice it to say that he was received with open arms, and in consequence the attendance at both meetings was large. The outlook for a large society is very encouraging."

William Fitch Ruffle writes: "I am pleased to announce that our morning service at 11 o'clock is growing very rapidly. Of course the afternoon is as ever very well attended, and the evening is such that although we have no lecture it taxes our efforts to reach all with tests, but we do not miss any. We know that they go away satisfied. The following classes are held at my residence, 3201 Indiana avenue: Tuesday, ladies' class, 2:30 p. m.; Wednesday and Friday, public, 7: 30 p. m. Tests and messages to all as on Sundays. I am glad to note I get many out of town patrons through your valued paper."

Mrs. Ella Dare writes: "We have been absent in the maritime provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia for three months. I was surprised and delighted to find a lively interest in the subject of the two worlds' communion amongst people heretofore eminently conservative. Surely progressive thought is invading the highways and the by-ways, is searching the secret places, and sowing seeds of freedom in its onward march, and The Progressive Thinker in its fearless leading, may justly claim much of the credit in this work of liberation."

Dr. H. B. Cole writes from Black River Falls, Wis.: "In The Progressive Thinker, No. 778, page 2, the sentence in Spiritual Dietetics should read: "These atoms never lose their relationship to the Infinite.'"

A press item says that medical authorities in London are deeply interested in the claim made by Miss Thorne, a graduate from Sydney University, New South Wales, that she has discovered a new cure for consumption. The treatment consists of the inhalation of hot air up to a temperature of 400 degrees. The Brompton Hospital committee will make tests of the treatment next month.

Isaac Gabrion writes from Ithaca, Mich.: "I take solid comfort in perusing The Progressive Thinker. I find therein a great variety of mental food, food for thought. I need spiritual food as well as food for the physical body. I am an old man, nearly 80, and am sorely afflicted. I have lost a dear wife and mother, and two noble boys who lived to be young men, and it gives me great comfort to be assured that they are still living in a better condition of life than this, and that I shall soon meet them again where there will be no more pain, grief or parting. The Progressive Thinker is like a table spread with a great variety of food, and you can help yourself to such as you like best. You don't have to swallow everything that is set before you, but you will always find enough that is good, nourishing and strengthening. Long may you live to spread the good things before the poor, hungry people. I would like to send for all of your premium books, but I am a very poor man and cannot afford it, but The Progressive Thinker I must have. I could not think of living without it any more than I could think of living without eating."

Mrs. E. Young writes from Louisville, Ky.: "The Church of Divine Truth recently created under a charter granted by the National Spiritualist Association, held its initial meeting Sunday, October 16, at its hall on Shelby street, near Market. The exercises opened with an invocation impressively delivered by the president, Mrs. Theresa Doll. A poem of an appropriate character was then read. Mrs. Doll followed with an address of welcome, which was attentively listened to. After the singing of a hymn, Mr. Geo. C. Heinsohn delivered the address of the evening, in an interesting, instructive and convincing way dwelt upon the beauties of the religion of Spiritualism, logically demonstrating its connection with science. He concluded with a mention of the purposes of the organizers of the new church, urging the co-operation of others. Mr. Heinsohn's address was a masterly effort, attracting special attention because of its earnestness and sincerity which is an indication of the feeling of all of the small band of which he is one in establishing another institution with the desire that others and themselves may be benefited, and the great cause in which they are interested advanced."

E. J. Bowtell lectures at Unity Hall, New London, Ct., Oct. 23 and 30; Nov. 6, 13, 20 and 27. He desires engagements with societies for later dates. Address 21 Washington street, New London, Ct.

Dr. Funk's "The Widow's Mite and Other Psychic Phenomena" has reached its fifth thousand, and the author is receiving literally bushels of letters from readers of the book who wish to discuss some phase of the subject or relate some pertinent experience of their own.

Dr. J. A. Bailey writes from Galesburg, Ill.: "I am still here in Galesburg holding meetings every Sunday, endeavoring to enlighten those who attend, upon the philosophy and phenomena of Spiritualism. At the close of the services last Sunday evening Mr. and Mrs. J. Pembroke gave a short but impressive trumpet seance. Many of those present expressed their entire satisfaction. I feel as though my work was about done here, and would like a call to go somewhere where I could do some good."

Chas H. Green writes: "Sunday, Oct. 16, Mr. John M. Clarke delivered a lecture before the Rising Sun Spiritualist Mission at its hall, 378 S. Western avenue, the subject being 'Life One and Indivisible.' It was an interesting subject, delivered in a very interesting manner. An equally interesting discourse was also delivered that evening by Rev. Mrs. N. E. Hill, the pastor, who held her congregation in a state of expectancy and inspired the strictest attention to her words. Sunday afternoon, Oct. 30, Mrs. Hamilton Gill will lecture. On that evening, Dr. J. H. Randall will also deliver a special discourse. That same evening special ordination services will be held, ordaining several of our mediums as teachers and expounders of Spiritualism. This will be a special service, and we cordially invite all who are interested in Spiritualism and its advancement, to attend. Saturday evening, Oct. 29, we will hold our annual harvest hop, to which we extend to all a cordial invitation. Dancing, old-fashioned, modern, round or square, of all kinds and descriptions, until you have had enough. Supper, pumpkin pie, apple 'sass,' cider, brown bread, po'k an' beans, coffee, etc., will be served, and there will be enough and to spare."

Sauce Piquante has the following: "The great talk in the newspapers about Dr. Funk's book, 'The Widow's Mite and Other Psychic Phenomena,' is making a market for imitations of the famous Jewish coin. Many people are writing to the publishers for an accurate description of the genuine 'Widow's Mite.' Some of these correspondents have been so foolish as to buy imitations, paying from $ 1to $25 for them. Five cents would be an exorbitant price for one. There are only about half a dozen of the genuine coins in the world, and the value of a good specimen is about $2,500. A facsimile of the genuine is to be found in the 1903 edition of the Funk & Wagnalls Standard Dictionary, page 368."

Mrs. LeSieur writes: "We had a very delightful Band of Harmony, Oct. 20, although we missed several familiar faces, as quite a number of our friends are down to St. Louis. Mrs. Richmond gave a most interesting account of her meeting with Mrs. Maybrick (who has been lately liberated from captivity in an English prison) at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Densmore in the Catskill mountains. We also had the pleasure of seeing her latest photograph. The Saturday Evening Post of Oct. 29, will contain the first of a series of articles which Mrs. Maybrick has prepared for publication. The Band of Harmony as a body sent her their love and sympathy. At our next meeting, Nov. 3, we will have our usual afternoon session at 3.30, but our evening meeting is to be a progressive euchre party; score cards, 25 cents. Be sure to come; bring your friends. We always have the best kind of a time. Six sofa pillows are donated as prizes. Supper at six o'clock as usual."

Edna V. Morrison writes about the "Victory Over Death," as follows: "Death—there is no death! Oh! why have we labored so long carrying this heavy burden of fear—the fear of this terrible imaginary monster which we call Death. Why should we fear to throw off this old garment, this old cloak of flesh? True, it has been faithful and served us well through our walks in life, but now it is old, threadbare and worn, and after all it was only an instrument made for our use, and why should we cling to it longer, and grieve to cast it aside only to exchange it for a new, a better, a purer robe of which we have the promise; so, then, when our life is done, let us be content to give up this old garment, and stand in defiance of Death, and triumph over the Grave, and with the apostle say, 'Oh, Death, where is thy sting? Oh, Grave, where is thy victory?'"

Mrs. M. K. Hines writes from London, Ontario: "The four premium books I sent for arrived on Monday, the 16th, and I was very agreeably surprised on examining them. They are all, and more than you claim for them in appearance, and I am certain from the glance through them I shall enjoy, and I hope benefit, by reading them, and I thank you sincerely."

Mrs. Isa A. Cross writes: "The Hyde Park Occult Society will give something a little different from the usual order of things on Oct. 30, the last Sunday in October, at 319 E. 55th street, at 8 p. m., which will be a lecture by Walter DeVoe, who will take his subject from a few remarks made by our president, Dr. H. A. Cross. Although not exactly a debate it will be something on that order. Come and hear it. Perhaps it will be good."

The lecturer, singer and test medium, G. F. Perkins, writes: "I am anxious to work in the Middle states or east of California. On account of lack of funds, I would guarantee any reasonable term of service, at living figures to any society that will furnish me transportation. Address me at Dimond P. O., Alameda county, California, care Mrs. S. I. Darling."

T. W. Sherk writes: "Mrs. Clara Stewart, connected with the Morris Pratt Institute, and known everywhere for her efficient work in the cause of Spiritualism, will lecture at the Church of Spirit Communion, 4308 Cottage Grove avenue, next Sunday, both afternoon and evening. Messages will be given by our president, Mr. Coates, Mrs. Cochonour and others, while good music may be expected as usual. Come out and hear the truth expounded and then go to our mediums and see it demonstrated."

A correspondent, writing from this city, says: "The heroine of Dr. Bland's charming book, 'In the World Celestial,' appeared at a trumpet seance held by Mrs. Montgomery and her daughter, at their home in Chicago recently, and surprised and delighted the members of the circle, by singing in full and melodious voice, 'The Old Oaken Bucket,' and also 'When the Mists Have Rolled Away.' After the singing a member of the circle said: 'Miss Pearl, I read today, for the second time, your beautiful speech at the banquet given by you in your celestial home in honor of your friend Paul, and I think it very fine.' 'Thank you,' she responded; 'I am glad you like that speech. It came from my heart.' Another gentleman said to her: 'I have read Dr. Bland's book with interest and pleasure; and I am delighted to meet you, and I have enjoyed hearing you sing.' 'I am glad you enjoyed the book,' said Pearl, 'and I wish to assure you that it is a truthful revelation of the spiritual world.'" This book is for sale at the office of The Progressive Thinker.

Mrs. Maud Lord Drake, the well known author and medium, has secured the parlor suite of rooms at 2421 Calumet avenue. Take Cottage Grove avenue cars to Twenty-fourth street and walk a half block south. She will entertain her friends there during the coming winter, after which she will go to California for a permanent residence, and assist in building up a liberal camp in the far-famed Santa Cruz mountains at Boulder Creek, among the giant redwoods and sequioas, some of which are thirty feet in diameter. Two hundred acres have been secured for this purpose. The Progressive Thinker will have more to say about this great undertaking a little later.

HE HAS TRIED THEM ALL. L. T. BLEGEN WRITES FROM SPRING VALLEY, WISCONSIN: "I WISH TO SAY THAT AFTER HAVING TRIED ALL THE OTHER SPIRITUALIST PAPERS THAT I COULD FIND IN THIS AND FOUR OTHER COUNTRIES, I FEEL JUSTIFIED IN SAYING, THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER IS THE ONLY ONE OF THEM THAT IS A SPIRITUALISTIC AND PROGRESSIVE PUBLICATION AFTER ALL."

A Minnesota paper says: "Mrs. C. McFarlin returned from Rochester Thursday where she had been to unite in marriage Mr. James A. Henry and Mrs. Jennie M. Harper. The Rochester Bulletin says: 'The marriage was performed by Rev Catherine McFarlin, of Plainview, Minn., who gave a very fine and common sense view of the duties of a useful and complete union of man and woman, not living for each other alone, but for humanity as well. Mrs. McFarlin is an ordained Spiritualist minister, and speaks inspirationally.'"

Will J. Erwood, one of Wisconsin's most efficient workers, was in the city last week.

Mrs. Henry, secretary, writes: "On Saturday evening, Oct. 29, the Universal Occult Society will hold a test social at the residence of Mrs. Vaughn, 2981 Cottage Grove avenue. Good test mediums will be present to give tests and messages. Refreshments served. All are invited to come and have a good time for the small sum of twenty-five cents. On Thursday evening, Oct. 27, Mrs. Burland, pastor of the Light of Truth Church, will hold a test social in her parlors. Good mediums and palmists present to entertain. Refreshments served, and music to harmonize and liven things up. All will have a pleasant time."

Mrs. Catharine McFarlin had a two months' engagement with the Englewood Union of Chicago, but it was canceled on account of the disbanding of that society, hence she is now open to engagements for the coming season with societies, or people wishing parlor circles; also for camp-meetings the coming season. She will answer calls to solemnize marriages or conduct funerals. Her address is still Plainview, Minn.

The Wisconsin State Spiritualist Association will hold a three days' mass-meeting in Milwaukee, Wis., Friday, Saturday and Sunday, Oct. 28, 29 and 30, in Lincoln Hall, to which all Spiritualists in and around Milwaukee are cordially invited. The speakers and mediums will be Moses Hull, Clara L. Stewart, Francis Wheeler, Rev Nellie K. Baker and Will J. Erwood. A good time assured to all.

W. C. Mann writes from Louisville, Ky.: "The People's Spiritual Church will open the first Sunday in November at Odd Fellows' Hall, Sixth and Walnut streets. I would like to hear from any good speakers and test mediums who may be coming this way. I would like to have the address of Mrs. Nora Clayman. I would be thankful to anyone who can inform me of her address. Address me at No. 829 Eighth street, Louisville, Ky."

Mrs. G. Johnson writes: "On and after this date I will be located at 385 N. Clark street, 2nd flat. I will hold developing circles on Wednesdays at 8 p. m., and on Fridays at 8 p. m., Mr. and Mrs. Parker will give trumpet seances. Mr. and Mrs. Parker have been in the field for thirty years, and those wishing to investigate occult phenomena and receive messages from spirit friends, will not be disappointed by attending the Friday evening seance."

G. S. Klock writes from Lincoln, Neb.: "I wish to inform the Spiritualists through your valuable paper of the action of the State Spiritualist Association of Nebraska, took in their tenth annual convention, held in Lincoln, Neb., on the 11th of this month. A Lincoln man, Dr. P. S. George, was elected president for the ensuing year; Fred Wheeland of Exter was elected vice-president, and G. S. Klock, secretary; J. Madsen, treasurer; W. H. Jewell and D. D. Thomas, trustees. Mr. George, the president, is a hummer and the association will take on new life under his leadership. It is the desire of the State Spiritualist Board to secure a good, true medium to help build up a new interest among the people here, and put the association in a good healthy developing condition. We wish to correspond with, and engage such a one, for a month at a time. Parties wishing to engage with us, please write terms and phase of mediumship, to the secretary, G. S. Klock, 2900 P street, Lincoln, Nebraska."

A notice of the Church of Sacred Communion of Brooklyn, N. Y., comes to hand, but the name and address of the writer is not given. That is essential. Otherwise such notices will be omitted.

M. F. Hammond has had an engagement to lecture at Lafayette, Ind. He goes from there to Peru, and then to Kokomo. He is capable of doing an excellent work for Spiritualism.

Fallacy of Theism.

The old stereotyped phrases "God is all things" and "God is everywhere" have been handed down from generation to generation; yet these are assertions and assumptions without proof. The word God is the most uncertain, confused, senseless word in our language, made to mean anything a god believer desires, according to his imagination; and the ideas of it are as different as human minds are.

When a person says God is everywhere we want to know which god he or she has in mind; because there are many specific, individual gods with proper names, such as Jupiter, Allah, Apollo, Baal, Jehovah, and so on, according to the several schools of Theism. Some of these gods are assigned to local departments where they stay, and cannot be everywhere.

Ask a god worshiper: Is God in hell? "No—quite sure he is not there—hell is the place where sinners are banished from his presence." Well, then, the absolute averment "God is everywhere" should be modified to fit this case.

God is a handy word that means anything, in a maze of unintelligible nonsense that serves only to mislead and bewilder the human mind. If God is all things he is all bad things, and gods generally have a very bad reputation and record, according to things affirmed of them and ascribed to them—according to history. And, so far as we are able to judge, the Christian's deity is the worst one of all.

The logic of Theism is badly mixed, and men can only tell what they believe of an ideal thing that has no existence in reality. They say God is so and so —this or that—one thing—all things—a unity—a trinity—male or female or both or neither—good and bad—love and wrath—undefinable—incomprehensible—unknown. God believers are too ignorant and stupid to perceive that they involve themselves in the labyrinths of blasting contradictions. They do not realize their mistakes.

Theism is not a thing to be demonstrated and known, but a doctrine to be believed; and people hold all sorts of beliefs, but no knowledge, no truth; and the chief reason why men believe in gods is because they believe they will be damned if they don't.

Now I sympathize with god believers and I want to help them in their perplexing dilemma. God comes about as near being "everywhere" as anything; and I will specify some particular places where he is; for I have seen him there—that is the name, which is the only part of him that ever was visible. God is (and gods are) in the various departments of Theism, such as Monotheism; Polytheism; Pantheism; Trinitarianism; Catholicism; Methodism; Mythology; Theology; Idolatry; Judaism; Christianity; Mohammedanism; Paganism; Protestantism; Creedism; Dogmatism; Sectarianism; Ecclesiasticism; Supernaturalism.

There is much faith in these isms, based on fables, myths, creeds, errors, ignorance, superstition; but no proof of any god. Nevertheless, on the hypothesis that "God is all things," and "everywhere," he must be in all these antagonistic systems of Theism; and one assumption or statement is as good or bad as another.

Some people carry the god idea with them into the spirit world, and in their messages send back some of the old theological trash and nonsense that has been reiterated by the D. Ds. (Divine Dunces) for centuries. No mortal or spirit ever discovered a god, yet the devotees of Theism are familiar with the names of hundreds of gods, fabrications of imagination. Men create their own gods.

The most inappropriate, unbecoming, improper place for God to be is in the mind of a Spiritualist who undertakes to teach Theism in the name and under the guise of Spiritualism.

'All that any god believer knows of a god is the name, and that is all there is of it—a senseless word by which nothing is learned. We see how "God is all things and everywhere" only by the absurd ideas in the benighted minds of god believers. A. H. NICHOLAS.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Joseph C. Blair passed to spirit life, Sept. 27, 1904. He was born in Ashtabula, Ohio, on Oct. 25, 1863. He embraced the truths of Spiritualism a number of years ago, which was a great comfort during his late illness. He was a member of the Spiritual Church of Ashtabula, Ohio. His father's family were all of the Episcopal faith, and Rev. W. H. G. Lewis read the Episcopal service, after which Mrs. Carrie Firth Curran, of Toledo, Ohio, spoke in behalf of Spiritualism and its blessings; also of the two bodies, the natural and the spiritual body. The deceased leaves a wife to mourn the loss of the physical form. She is blessed with the knowledge that she can converse with his spirit. He is also survived by his parents, two brothers, two sisters and a host of friends.

MRS. CARRIE FIRTH CURRAN.

Passed to spirit life, Sept. 30, 1904, Mrs. Jennie Oles, of East Liverpool, O., aged 75 years. She was the mother of L. M. Oles of the Allegheny Psychic Research Society. Although not a Spiritualist, she was nevertheless a good Christian woman, not bigoted against any particular creed.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. Wm. B. Halford: Q. Can occult science be learned without a teacher?

A. Science permits of no patent on her revelations, and the world over, her true students are only too anxious to make known their discoveries. When any one claims a secret and withholds the knowledge thereof for private gain, he becomes a fakir, and it may be safely affirmed that he has nothing now or valuable to reveal. What is taught in books on occultism can be found in no other books, and if one desires to know what the instructors in occultism teach, they can only learn by paying the fee demanded and listening.

Prospector: Q. Can the location of oil be determined by surface indications?

A. It is generally thought that experts can locate oil-bearing wells by study of surface lines, and prospectors place a good deal of reliance on indications, as of oil appearing on the surface of ponds or springs, escape of gas, etc. It is affirmed that Captain Lucas followed surface indications from Louisiana to Beaumont, Texas, where he tapped the great oil field of that state. The synclinal, monoclines, and autoclines, which are said to have guided him were far below the surface and impossible to be known without excavation. He made the venture of sinking a well, like thousands of others, and was successful while they failed.

The oil-bearing strata are covered over with shale and limestone often more than a thousand feet in thickness, impervious to water and oil. The surface of these beds of rock has been planed off by water and ice or excavated into hills and valleys. The surface hence, does not have any relation to the stratum below it. If there is one thing settled in geology, it is that it is impossible to locate oil-bearing wells by surface appearances. The correctness of this statement is proven by the failures of "experts," and those who by their knowledge of geology flatter themselves that they understand the structure of the earth.

The oil is of different ages and hence is contained in strata differing in character and depth. Like coal, it does not increase, and when exhausted there can be no further supply.

"Correspondent": Q. This correspondent desires to know what evidence Spiritualists have to oppose the overwhelming negation of their belief by Materialists. He cites a recent article in the Truth Seeker wherein the opinions of said Materialists are given.

A. The materialist stands in the outer world and sneers at the efforts of those who would break through its walls, and enter the inner court where the energy manifested may be studied. Carl Vogt, the German materialist, led in the assertion that the "brain secretes thought as the liver secretes bile," and Prof. Larkins reiterates in other words: "Mind is now known to be a product of brain-cell activity."

Huxley said: "The human body is a machine." Herbert Spencer affirms: "We seem obliged to relinquish the thought that consciousness continues after physical organization has become inactive." These quotations show the drift of physical science as interpreted by its leaders. Nor is it strange that such should be their conclusions. They study the machine, not the energy which puts it in action. They take matter as the all in all, and with them energy, life intelligence belong to it and are its expression.

Once before a convention of the world's greatest biologists the question was put, What is the difference between living protoplasm, and dead protoplasm? This substance is matter emerged to that state when though not a living being, has the capabilities of becoming organized into living forms. Hence the question was really, what is the difference between the living and the dead. Not one even ventured to give an answer. The anatomist as he dissects the brain finds nothing lost by the departure of life. The cells are still, there are no pulsations along the fibres.

The materialist devotes himself to the study of the material machine, as a person without knowledge of electricity would take apart a motor, uncoil its wires, and detach its magnets. One finds no trace of thought; the other feels no shock of electricity. One says it must manifest mind by its cells; the other that the power comes from the coils, for they do not see beyond the mechanism.

It is in their methods of study. The materialist would enter the courts of life with a butcher's cleaver, and when he has destroyed the means of thought's manifestation to his material senses, declares it has no independent existence.

There are those who approach from the other side—that of spirit. There have been many scientists, who achieved world-wide distinction in physical research, who comprehending that spiritual phenomena must be studied from a different view-point, have patiently investigated, and arrived at diametrically opposite conclusions. Prof. Hare, Sir William Crookes, Prof. Wallace and Varley and a host of others have become convinced that matter is not all, and that there is beneath it a vivifying spirit.

The evidence Spiritualists have to offer in opposition to materialism, is the vast array of facts which demonstrate spirit existence. If these be granted true, then all the theories and conclusions of materialism are erroneous. The opinions of ten thousand Huxleys or Spencers vanish like a wisp of cloud, at the sound of a single identified rap.

However strong the materialistic position may appear, if spirits exist, it has no foundation.

Do you enjoy poor health?

Wherever I go I am constantly meeting the man or woman who really enjoys poor health and who dotes upon giving you his or her symptoms in detail.

Whenever two or three people are gathered together there is sure to be the woman who is having nervous prostration or the man who has something wrong with his stomach. They are moreover determined that you shall suffer with them.

No use to try to turn the conversation to the war in the east or to politics. Oriental news is very well in its way, but not to be mentioned with one's gastric juices, the next president is small potatoes in comparison with one's liver.

I think now of a man and his wife I have the misfortune to know, who are the hardy possessors of every known and unknown disease. Every time I meet them, they have a new one to spring on me. I have come to shudder whenever I see them; to shudder at the hygienic horrors about to be unveiled for my entertainment.

They are actually proud of their pains, they flaunt their aches before me and defy me to match them. As I am a disgustingly healthy person, I am simply overwhelmed and overshadowed. I have not a word to say for my diaphragm and absolutely nothing to put forward in the way of a thorax.

The house of these people is like a drug store. They have medicines for every hour in the day and each remedy is for a separate ailment.

"I thought I should have died last night," says the husband, when making a social call, never was a man in such agony." Then he looks at you with an air of "Now, what have you to say to that? Can you bring forward anything to surpass my misery? I reckon not."

Then the wife coughs. "My lungs are in the most dreadful condition," she states, "and as for my back—well, there is something very serious the matter with my back." Then she looks, "How does that strike you? Have you a back? Or lungs? I don't believe a word of it."

Every time that man takes a pill he issues a bulletin to all his neighbors and acquaintances. Every time his wife gargles her throat she sends notes to her friends, telling them she has diphtheria and may die before morning.

They are the laughing stock of all their acquaintances, for they actually revel in their aches and pains.

This constant parading of sickness, this eternal discussion of bad symptoms is doubtless provocative of much disease. "As a man thinketh, so is he." If one eternally fancies himself ill, one is always ailing. If one thinks healthful thoughts and makes light of any little ailment, one is likely to be pretty robust.

I think of a man I knew who lived to be 73. He would never admit he was ill. "Never felt so well in my life," was his customary answer to inquiries for his health. He was always alert and youthful in appearance, despite his silver hair. To the day of his death he refused to consider pain. When he went he just quietly, at an instant's notice, pushed aside the veil and stepped into the mysterious beyond.

Have you the doctor habit? Get rid of it. Many times when you think you need the doctor you need only a change. If instead of going to bed, sending for a physician, pulling a long face and cultivating a die-away voice, you would pack your grip, catch a train and go somewhere for a little change you would save money and have a good deal more fun.

"Joy, temperance and repose slam the door on the doctor's nose," says the old couplet. Never were truer words penned. Joy is the greatest panacea, temperance the best stimulant and repose the best soporific this world has ever known.—Edith Sessions Tupper in Chicago Chronicle.

Reading the above brief article in the columns of the Chicago Chronicle, I could not conclude otherwise than that therein Edith Sessions Tupper manifests excellent good sense.

Many people auto-suggest themselves into a state of mental and physical misery, by the very unpleasant habit so well described in the article.

Perhaps some of your readers may see themselves as in a mirror, while they read.

NATIONAL SPIRITUALISTS' ASSOCIATION.

The Annual Report of the Secretary, Mrs. Mary T. Longley, for the Fiscal Year Ending October 1, 1904.

To the Spiritualists of America, and of the Dominion of Canada—Greeting:—It gives me pleasure to submit to your consideration the following report from the home office of the National Spiritualists' Association for the fiscal year, ending October 1, 1904. The work of this association has been wide and far-reaching, and the labors of your secretary have been expended in various directions in behalf of our grand and progressive cause. To her mind, the present outlook for Spiritualism is favorable for its growth, especially among thinking people outside our ranks who are investigating its phenomena and becoming students of its philosophy, though she regrets to announce that the conditions of organized work among our people are not such as to warrant great enthusiasm or boasting on the part of anyone.

During the fiscal year the N. S. A. has chartered twelve local societies, and one state association, as follows: Indiana State Association; locals, one each in Philadelphia, Pa., Wabash, Kokomo, Elwood, Ft. Wayne, Muncie, Sweetsers, Lafayette and Plymouth, all of Indiana, and one each in Grand Junction, Colo., McKeesport, Pa., and Louisville, Ky.

Four of the Indiana locals however, were organized to take the place of societies formerly chartered in the towns, said former societies having gone down. In this connection it is the duty of your secretary to report that as a rule, where societies of but seven or eight members are organized and chartered, interest is not long kept up in their work by the founders, owing to want of encouragement and financial help in the locality, and the common result is, that they either go down for want of support or struggle on with but the few original members, showing but little if any progress during the year—there a few exceptions to this rule, but very few, as our reports and books attest

Since the convention of 1903, the following societies have either withdrawn from the N. S. A. or disbanded: Boston Spiritual Temple, withdrawn; Evansville, Ind., withdrawn; East Aurora, N. Y., withdrawn to join state association; Anderson, Ind., Tell City, Ind., Chrisney, Ind., and Lafayette of the same state have signified withdrawal for purpose of uniting with the state association—a laudable purpose and commended by the N. S. A.

Of those disbanded, are societies in New Haven, Conn., Mishawaka, Ind., and Salt Lake City, Utah. We understand that the society of Elwood, Ind., has also joined the state association.

The general report of societies during the year is one of struggle and hardship, a few have to bear the burdens of finances and do the work. The financial report of the N. S. A. secretary will show our convention and the public the amount of dues collected, also receipts from one and another source and that matter need not be dwelt upon in this paper.

The secretary has sent out regular quarterly circular letters to our societies, with occasional letters to the same as correspondence demanded, has kept in genial touch with all of our people, by letter and has written fifteen hundred letters to various individuals in regard to the work of the N. S. A., the cause of Spiritualism and kindred topics. She has also penned frequent letters and articles for the spiritual papers whose editors have been uniformly kind and courteous, thus keeping our work, and matters of interest in the cause with which the national Association is concerned, before the people through the press.

The courtesies and amenities extended to us by societies, editors, and individuals generally, have been very helpful, encouraging and well appreciated at this home office.

Correspondence with managers of camps relative to securing a special day at those resorts for the work and benefit of the N. S. A., elicited but few replies, and but six of these, mostly in New England, promised to set aside a day for our service—most of the camp managers reported their inability to have the N. S. A. represented during camp season as they needed all the money that could be collected for payment of expenses of their respective camping grounds.

All the work that the convention of 1903 instructed the secretary to do has been attended to, except that of printing list of chartered societies, the board ruling that this would be impossible out of regard to such societies, many of them, through their officers having objected to being named in such a list, as in earlier years when they had been thus known, they had been flooded with circular matter from various firms and individuals, and besieged by strolling persons who claimed to be mediums and endorsed by the N. S. A.

The free library of the N. S. A. and its reading-room are in fine condition; we have between seven and eight hundred books on our shelves, many of which are constantly loaned to readers, some of whom come many miles for our works. Miss Agnes Wink has recently again given personal attention to the library, re-cataloguing and re-numbering books with other important work. We have also received donations of new books from autnors and other friends, among them being, Alfred Andrews, Henry Edmiston, Dr. J. M. Peebles, Mrs. Maud Lord-Drake, Dr. Henry Funk, John Weiss, authors; and T. J. Mayer, to whom we are indebted for a large package of new books including such of those by Andrew Jackson Davis as we did not before possess. To all of those we owe our gratitude and appreciation.

Visitors to headquarters during the year have been many—they have been from all sections, far and wide; these friends invariably state that they cannot leave Washington without visiting the N. S. A., and all pronounce themselves as pleased with our building and the work of our officers. The public cannot appreciate the amount of time which an officer at the home office must spend in entertaining callers and visitors to the headquarters of our association.

Our spiritual literature has done a great amount of good, thousands of tracts have been printed and freely distributed during the year—we have calls for them constantly, and we are assured that they are sent out on missionary work in all directions. The N. S. A. has no tract fund and the amount spent for printing and mailing this literature each year is very large.

Lyceum work seems to have progressed under the jurisdiction of the General Superintendent of Lyceums, Brother John W. Ring, who will give his own report on this important branch; what we hear of lyceums leads us to believe that many are interested in them, and that special workers in that field are needed by the world.

Our Editor-at-Large, Hudson Tuttle, has undoubtedly done a grand work for Spiritualism, as his report will show. We have received quarterly reports from his pen, showing that his work is needed and appreciated by many minds.

The Mediums' Relief Fund of the N. S. A. has done, and is doing a noble work. During the year three of its beneficiaries, Mrs. Tunis Kendall, Mrs. Mary C. Morrell, and Mrs. Emeline Perkins, have passed to the spirit life. The N. S. A. paid such part of their funeral expenses as was needful in each case. The places of these ascended veterans have been filled on our list, and others added.

We have now nine veteran workers who receive each the sum of twelve dollars per month to aid them to exist in the material form; these are Annie Lord Chamberlain and her blind sister, Jennie Lord Webb; Mrs. E. Cutler, Mrs. M. E. Weeks-Wright, Mrs. A. Angell, Mrs. Tryphena C. Pardee, L. C. Howe, Abram James and Dr. Dean Clarke—all veteran mediums and workers tried and true, not objects of charity in any sense, but receiving from our National Association a little substantial recognition each month, of the grand work they have done for humanity, through long and patient years of labor, and no more to feel sensitive over receiving this acknowledgment of their service, than is the veteran soldier of the Civil War who proudly receives his pension from our government in attestation of his arduous service for his country and his flag.

The soldier is proud to be a pensioner of "Uncle Sam"—so may our beneficiaries be proud to be on our list of the Mediums' Relief Fund; our object is to show the world that their good works are not forgotten. Our only regret is that we are unable to place more on that same list, for there are many worthy, deserving, veteran workers who should have an honored place thereon, but until the world wakens to our needs in this line and gives more of its wealth for our workers, we cannot add to the number, for by doing so, the Mediums' Relief Fund would soon be exhausted, notwithstanding the amount collected during the year, as a large sum is monthly expended, and we cannot run the risk of having to turn those we have taken into the relief branch, out into the cold. In addition to the nine already mentioned as beneficiaries, the N. S. A. continues to wholly support Dr. Henry Slade, who is a helpless cripple at the Spinney Sanitarium. It has also temporarily assisted a number of mediums.

Reference has herein been made to the fund recently collected. As is well known, last March a call was made through the papers, and elsewhere, for Spiritualists to raise a thousand dollars in three months, for the Mediums Relief Fund, a member of our board promising to give another thousand to the same worthy object; it took about four months to raise the required amount, and that with the promised thousand from our honored treasurer, added a handsome sum to our work for the veteran mediums. Without that accumulation it would have been impossible for the N. S. A. to have placed on its list as many workers as it now befriends. Societies, mediums and individuals aided in this good work to all of whom this association owes its thanks and praise, while honesty compels us to admit that many mediums appealed to to hold a seance or in some way aid the fund, paid no attention to our plea; also that about two-thirds of the donors to this special fund were the same respondents to every call the N. S. A. has made for aid.

Other matters of importance connected with our work for the year will undoubtedly be given in the report of our honored president, such as the issuing of ordination usages, affairs connected with the convention of 1904, propaganda work of himself and others, therefore of these your secretary need not speak; her recommendations are but few: First, that the matter of missionary work by special workers be most thoughtfully canvassed by the convention. Our missionaries have undoubtedly done grand work in their field; their reports will attest this, the financial returns have not been as satisfactory as might be wished; but finances are not all to be considered; if in the judgment of this convention it is thought wise to continue this missionary work, it seems some special fund must in some way be raised to carry on the propaganda of such missionary work—some of our workers declare the people do not want missionaries, others affirm that the people want missionary help but will not even pay for the halls in which the laborers work; it is a question for consideration, also the uselessness of chartering local societies with only seven or eight members which are too weak to thrive, and many of which soon go down.

Recommendations that the convention give a public vote of thanks to the Editors of The Progressive Thinker, The Banner of Light, The Light of Truth, The Sunflower, The Philosophical Journal and Lichtstrahlen for their willing and helpful service to the National Association during the year; also a vote of thanks to the managers of Onset, Temple Heights, Etna, Madison, Freeville and Grand Ledge camps, for granting N. S. A. days and for their welcome collections in behalf of this association. It may here be mentioned that Niantic camp promised an N. S. A. day, but through some delay or disappointment from our representative, the matter was not carried out.

In addition to the foregoing it is the pleasure of your secretary to report that in response to a call from Indiana for contributions toward erecting a suitable monument at the grave of that grand veteran worker, Mrs. Amelia Colby Luther, the N. S. A. board appropriated the sum of fifty dollars toward that worthy object.

In conclusion, your secretary desires to express her sincere thanks to the spiritual press, to all managers of our chartered societies, to each and every member of the N. S. A. board, not forgetting to mention the special aid and co-operation of Treasurer Mayer—and to Miss Wink and Mr. Longley for valuable help extended to her in the discharge of her many duties and the accomplishment of the active labors incident to her office during a fiscal year.

With love and greetings to all.

Respectfully submitted,

MARY T. LONGLEY,
N. S. A. Secretary.

THE CREATOR.

The Philadelphia Record Expresses Its Views—No Danger to Those Who Do Not Attach Themselves to a Church.

"For every house is builded by some man; but He that built all things is God."—Hebrews iii:4.

There are certain reasons, more or less valid, for which one may decline to adhere to any of the existing forms of religious belief. It cannot be the will of a just Creator that conscience be overruled, even in so high a cause. Compared to mental slavery, physical bondage is no crime at all, and they who attempt to make men believe that present welfare and future happiness are wholly dependent upon the acceptance of one particular doctrine endanger their own prospects far more than those of the masses they seek to influence.

The truth of Christianity has so weathered the defiance of the ages as to fortify itself against the sharpest arrows of reasonable doubt. Yet there are those incapable of sincerely accepting it in its entirety as a guide to right living. Are they to be dispossessed because of the narrow limit of their capabilities? Is a child's responsibility equal to a man's?

But doubt or disavow as we may, one fact common alike to most forms of belief must be taken as truth by every man, and that fact is the existence of God. Without this, life is a rudderless ship, drifting with every wind and tide; unable to follow any given course; incapable of trust, and, on the whole, a menace to all the other ships that sail this shoreless sea. Without this, man is a creature of chance, an accidental part of an accidental whole, whose human conduct is not amenable to any law, and whose existence is barren of cause and devoid of effect. Is this the truth? Are we such fools?

The truth is that evidenced to us by every star of night and every hue of dawn. It is that sung to us by the birds, the winds and the great sea, and revealed to us in the foresight and beneficence of nature. It blooms before our eyes in the flowers and fruits of the golden summer, and awes us with the rising of spring from out the grave of winter. It weaves our every day of honest doing into a fabric of use and beauty, which no sane being could conceive to be other than the result of a system planned by One perfect in knowledge and wisdom—One divine. And we are wise only when we acknowledge this Creatorship, and bow down to it as the source of all we have and all we hope for. This is the beginning of wisdom.

The sight of a vast building unconsciously gives birth to thoughts of the one who planned it. Whatever credit may be bestowed on the builder, the greater credit is his who conceived and made possible the execution. It is so with a beautiful painting, a powerful machine, a stirring bit of music. Every human creation leads us back to the man or woman behind it. And though we can, if we will, comprehend every purely human product, we do not, for this reason, withhold praise or credit from those who deserve it. Why, then, should we hesitate to acknowledge a Creator and Ruler of the vastly more wonderful and inexplicable things all around us? And seeing, as we do, that nothing of worth can come of man without the application of thought to labor, how can we deny the existence of a Supreme Mind allied to Supreme Power when we have ever before us material conditions that defy the deepest learning of man?

It is a fact beyond the realms of logic and philosophy. The heart proclaims it, and the questioning mind is answered by nature, whose smallest blade of grass is proof sufficient of a God Omnipotent.

AM I MY BROTHER'S KEEPER?

This is a question which is being indirectly asked and answered frequently just now among Spiritualists.

There is much talk of liberty of speech and action, great outcry against fetter and bond, but so far little about duty to Spiritualism and to fellow-man.

In connection with the question of the hour, many arguments have been advanced as reasons for leaving things as they are, lest the liberty of any individual should be interfered with; but the value of Spiritualism to the world, and the need for its correct presentation to the inquirer, appears to have been largely lost sight of.

There are some who claim that it is unwise to bar a speaker from the platform for drunkenness, because such ostracism 'may lead to his further downfall."

We are prepared to sustain the argument that one of the worst things which can be accomplished for such a man by his friends is to keep him upon a platform which he has disgraced.

Those who object to closing the rostrum against such a person lose sight of one great fact: The status of the platform is the standard by which Spiritualism is largely judged. They further appear to forget that a man is not necessarily an outcast because he has been barred the platform.

It would surely be greater charity to treat the fallen as a brother, and enable him by kindly sympathy to recover his strength among the rank and file, ere he stood out as leader and guide of the people.

In this sense societies are "their brother's keeper," and would do him and the movement a real service by insisting upon his removal from the platform until such time as he had regained his self-control and self-respect.

But there is a wider sense in which the Spiritualist organization is its "brother's keeper." Every inquirer into the great truths of Spiritualism should be treated with courtesy at least, and should be welcomed with dignity to the study of such a sublime subject.

The movement can scarcely be said to perform this duty until it sees that the teacher is at least qualified to teach, and is not of such a character as will cause a sneer of contempt to mantle the features of the listener.

If mediums are to be considered, surely the public have a right to as full consideration. Societies are ready enough to take collections from the public, to cater for their entertainment and, all too often, for their mere amusement, and they cannot escape their responsibilities by the insolent query of the old-time murderer—"Am I my brother's keeper?"

To put a medium upon the platform because he "draws" and "pays," regardless of his moral character and his influence upon the real inquirer, is making a parody upon Spiritualism, and can but be deemed a descent to the lowest possible method of money-making or notoriety-hunting.

The National Union is bent upon doing its best to relieve itself of the dead weight which has for so long made Spiritualism a term of derision. We put it this way because there are some who object to the idea of the movement striving to make itself more "respectable." We notice, however, that often those who rail most loudly against the introduction of the word "respectability" into an argument are very careful as to their own respectable appearance, both physically and morally. We have yet to learn that what is good for an individual is, in this sense, bad for an organization.

Organized Spiritualism is the "keeper" of its brother, the "outsider," and the sooner this is recognized the better it will be for Spiritualism and the "outsider."

There are some folk who appear to imagine that the stranger is the man to provide the cash; but to us the stranger is the man who needs the aid of Spiritualism, and is a prospective Spiritualist—a possible new recruit for the Cause; and in these days of intellectual development when the Board School contains the Senior Wrangler in embryo, it behooves Spiritualists to look to it that their platform is intelligent, and as free from reproach as it is possible to make it.

If the movement cannot live without the aid of the few grossly immoral exponents who have the audacity to stand as teachers of the people, the sooner it breathes its last expiring sigh, the better.

But the Cause is strong in its fortress of truth, with its ammunition of fact and its weapons of logic, and the expulsion of the few wastrels from the ranks of the garrison will not render less effective the fighting force disencumbered of the worse-than-useless companionship of those who are prepared to sell the fortress and their honored comrades for the "price of a pint," or the sake of a foul caress.—The Two Worlds, Manchester, England.

A FEW MORE YEARS.

We have but a few more years to linger
Aye, only a few more years at best,
Ere the hand of old Time points a finger
And his scythe reaps a harvest of rest.

Ah, only a few more years of worry
Will this soul have, imbedded in clay,
But somehow I don't wish to hurry
From this dear old earth homestead away.

There's only a few more years of blindness
Ere the dawning of brightness I'll see,
But this world seems so filled up with kindness
That the waiting is pleasant to me.

Only a few more years of the bitter,
Only a few more years of the sweet;
Yet the bright stars of hope are a-glitter
O'er the pathway of these weary feet.

Only a few more years of earth pleasure,
Only a few more years of its pain,
And each one must have a full measure,
Or Life shall have been lived all in vain.

Only a few more years of this being
And doing without perfect aim,
But the coming, the doing, the seeing
Are worth all the trouble and blame.

DR. T. WILKINS.

Old folks notice a great deal more—and look further on—than young people imagine. We are given to projecting futures for them, and anticipating their probabilities, in the light of our own past. We put ourselves back to a starting-point like theirs, as we see it, and live on with them, as we think they might live on.—A. D. T. Whitney.

If I find in myself an evil impulse, I find what in itself considered is, indeed, something hateful, lamentable, possibly horrible, something which regarded for itself can apparently form no part of a good order. But suppose I resist the evil impulse, hate it, hold it down, overcome it, then, in this moment of hating and condemning it, I make it part of my moral goodness. —Josiah Royce.

Words are but lackeys to sense, and will dance attendance without wages or compulsion.—Swift.

THE BOOK OF WISDOM
THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER

A Battle Royal, In The Open Court, Between the Giant Minds of Spiritualism will begin in this paper some time in November, upon the subject matter contained in the late book by Dr. J. M. Peebles, on "The Demonism of the Ages, Spirit Obsessions," Etc., which promises to eclipse all previous discussions.

DYSPEPSIA CURED

If you Suffer from Dyspepsia, Stomach, Liver, or Bowel Trouble of any kind, read this liberal offer. IT WILL BE WORTH MONEY TO YOU.

Do you suffer from dyspepsia, indigestion, or stomach, liver, or bowel trouble of any kind? If you do, why not let us cure you? We do not mean Help you by dosing you with a strong, stimulating Soda and Rhubarb Compound, or patent "Dyspepsia Pill." Such things will stimulate and ease temporarily, but in the end will only irritate and further weaken the already diseased and weakened membranes. We Will Completely and Permanently Cure You. We will go to the very foundation of your trouble, will remove the causes, strengthen and tone up the affected membranes, perfect the digestion, regulate and strengthen the bowels, and make you as strong and hearty as you ever were. We could give you testimonials by the thousand of those we have cured of stomach troubles in all forms and stages, but they would not tell to you what the treatment will do for YOU. The only absolute proof is in the treatment itself, and knowing the Wonderful Cures we have made for others, and believing that we have a treatment that will Positively Cure any case, no matter how complicated or long standing, or how many have failed in the past, that we will send a two weeks' treatment to any one desiring to test it. Many are cured by this last treatment alone. Why not make a trial of it yourself and learn what it will do for you. IT IS FREE. HOPE.

Hope lies eternal in the human soul,
The Deific ray of pure love divine.
To human life it is the bright sunshine,
The gift to man from the Great Oversoul.
Hope sheds its glory on our ideal goal,
It buoys our spirit with courage sublime,
It illumes our way as we upward climb,
As the ages silently onward roll.
Hope is inherent in the human race,
Its subtle power elevates mankind.
It is the keystone in development.
In aspiration it is the true base;
In all life's trials hope is entwined—
E'en the change called death brings contentment.

The Open Court.

A Fall and Winter Session to be Held, to Try the Case of J. S. Loveland Versus Dr. J. M. Peebles.

This is an important case to be tried at the Fall and Winter Session of The Open Court. The Question at issue is as follows: Shall the book issued by Dr. Peebles, entitled, "Spirit Obsession, or the Demonism of the Ages," be burned and the plates destroyed, as some desire, and the Doctor restrained from employing his pen in disseminating his peculiarly pernicious doctrines in regard to Spirit Obsession or Demons? Prof. Loveland will appear in Court in his own behalf, with other wise counsel, endeavoring to annihilate the book, while Dr. Peebles, assisted by able minds, will endeavor to demonstrate to the jury that every word in the book is absolutely true, and that there is great danger in obsessing evil influences to all mankind. This remarkable book should first be read by those who wish to appear for or against it in The Open Court. It will be sent out, if ordered soon, for $1.00, postage prepaid. There is a vast fund of information in this book, derived from modern and ancient sources, that will prove exceedingly valuable to every reflective mind, especially to those engaged in occult studies. Now is the time to send in your subscription.

In sending in these trial subscriptions always state whether Spiritualists, church members, or investigators.

IMPORTANT.

Owing to the fact that the courts have in every case decided against Psychic Healers who advertise to cure the sick without drugs, where the case has been between the U. S. government and a Healer (deciding that it is a clear case of intent to defraud) to advertise to diagnose also, without leading symptoms being given. Therefore I have decided, as a physician in good standing, to not advertise my gift of Psychic Healing, but will diagnose disease and not ask a fee for so doing. I will therefore hereafter diagnose disease

HUMAN NATURE. BY C. W. STEWART.

soul, when it realizes the difference between itself and that it sees. It eats the fruit of the tree of knowledge, and knows good and evil. It then awakens to the power of choosing. By a mistaken idea of what constitutes happiness, the soul follows after the lead of the passions until it finds itself outside the gates of innocence, and sees an angel with sword of flame guarding the gateway lest the soul bring back with it its own pollution. That angel is Conscience, and the surest way to get back into the Garden is to make peace with the sentinel. Learn the password to the Inner Life. That, and that alone, will open the gate—that alone will disarm the sentry.

As Tennyson says: "For what is true repentance but to cease to think even in our inmost thoughts, the things which made the past so pleasant to us."

If change of air and scenery are so important to the recovery of the physically and mentally sick, how much more important is change of environment to the morally diseased? If society in self-defense enforces municipal cleanliness, and thus guards against epidemics, even though it is done at the expense of commerce and public convenience, how much greater the necessity for guarding against moral plague.

"Fear not that (alone) which kills the body, but also fear that which pollutes the soul." The moral effect of the city slums is far worse than the physical effect. What then? Abolish the slums! "It cannot be done." Why? "The land and buildings belong to wealth and we cannot reach them." Strange! A city ordinance or a statute will abolish a soap factory if it threatens the public health. Or shut out the cholera or smallpox though all the wheels of industry stand still. The factory only pollutes the air. A den of debauchery pollutes the soul, and, holding the victims in a demon's grasp, drags him downward to the lowest hell!

Who justifies the liquor traffic? Is it the father who sees his son reeling from the saloon with brain besotted and eyes inflamed with the fires of rum? Is it the mother who gazes with tearful eyes upon the loved face of husband or son, as they lie in drunken stupor breathing forth the fetid odors of alcohol? Is it wives and children hovering over a dying fire with wintry winds whistling through open windows, freezing the very marrow in their half-clad frames? Is it the sober, prosperous citizen who has, by thrift and care built a home for wife and children and is taxed to build poor-houses, jails, and criminal courts? Is it the farmer who would fain sell his surplus to the mechanic and the laborer, but cannot, because their earnings go to fill the coffers of the saloon? Is it the merchant who has food and clothing to sell, but must see his goods remain upon the shelves while the steady stream of wealth flows into the till of the murderers of peace?

No! The defenders of the liquor traffic are the men whose love of gain has supplanted all the nobler qualities and who revel in the price of blood and tears. It is the swaggering, bloated wreck of humanity who bathes his brain in liquid fire, and whose rum-soaked soul sees grinning devils and writhing serpents in his path. It is the blear-eyed sot who revels in debauchery, and whose highest aspiration is beneath the level of the brute! It is the wife-beater who drives the roses from the cheek of love, and to whose ear the widow's wail and the orphan's cry for bread are sweetest music!

The man who upholds the liquor traffic, carrying its influence into the arena of political life, upholds and defends murder, debauchery, and theft. He is the defender of harlotry, and the justifier of every form and type of sin. For the accursed love of gain he would rob the world of light and joy, and relegate mankind to the gloom of savagery. He would place upon every brow the brand of Cain, and deluge every home and fireside with blood and tears. He would hold high carnival on the grave of buried love and with demons lost and devils damned in black despair would dance in glee and shriek his fiendish laughter in the face of a lost and ruined world!

There was never yet a blow struck for the elevation and improvement of mankind and human nature but some so-called "vested right" was crushed. Reformer, do you wish to save men from this monster? Then change the environment by banishing the liquor traffic from politics. Abolish the nuisance although in doing it you strike down a thousand fortunes.

The highest vested right on earth is to live and be happy. And strangely enough, the exploiters of the race in all ages have made fortunes by trammeling this particular right. Privilege and prerogative bestowed by kings or by false legislation upon the favored few, have been the destroyer of human liberty and human rights in all ages.

Human greed and lust for gain have marred the beauty of the world, defied the power of the Almighty, reduced humanity to slavery, and the horrors of history are the records of nature's wrath upon those who for gain, became the destroyers of their fellow men. One by one the nations, like old Israel, have been scattered, and Babylon, Egypt, Greece and Rome bear silent testimony to the destroying power of greed.

But as the iceberg, floating from the Polar seas, thaws and melts away as it moves toward Southern latitudes, so the cold and cruel power of Mammon is melting away in the ever-widening gulf-stream of love.

Already the air grows balmy with the fragrant breezes of the new morning. The daybreak of Spiritual truth is gilding the hilltops, and human nature is climbing up from the valleys to catch the radiance. Amour Vincit Omnes. Love conquers all, and God is love, and Good shall be the final victor. At last the light of spiritual truth shall beam in every eye and shine in every human soul. Man shall be saved and human nature redeemed, not from penalties, but from sin and sorrow, and shall make good the prophecy of all time.

Out from the hovel and the hut, out from the palace of vulgar display, down from the tyrant's throne and out from the caverns of superstition, shall march the hosts of beleaguered human souls, and they will leave behind all selfishness, false pride, make-believe humility and mock reverence, and by purifying their human nature they shall become the Sons of God in the Republic of Heaven!

DRINK MORE WATER.

If the span of human life is not greatly increased in these passing years it will not be from lack of exact knowledge as to how it may be done. Recently some three or four "elixirs of life," or preventives of old age, have been announced, all of them sure things. Thus we are told by an old-time physician that the secret of immortal youth lies in consuming large quantities of distilled water every day. He himself drinks about a gallon a day, or nearly thirty barrels a year, and is still hale and hearty, though over eighty years of age. While this recipe for longevity may hardly be considered infallible, there is undoubtedly much virtue in the copious drinking of water, whether distilled or not. The tendency is to drink too little to keep the bodily functions in a healthy state. More water, more sleep, a careful diet, and less worry doubtless constitute as good a platform for attaining health and long life as any that may be put together. —Leslie's Weekly.

LETTER FROM AN INVESTIGATOR.

In Which Some Interesting Incidents Are Related.

To the Editor:—I have recently become a subscriber to your charming paper, and believe you have few more interested readers than myself. I am an investigator, and interested in all psychic phenomena, but do not really know my own attitude towards Spiritualism, as I have seen no demonstrations. However, I know there are many things which occur that cannot be explained by natural law. This paper has opened many new avenues of thought.

I have never seen any instance of spirit return myself, and perhaps my fear of such things have kept me from it. There is one phase of this subject though in which I am particularly interested, and that is what is called psychometry, I believe. I should like to have the opinions of some of your readers on this subject, as I have had considerable experience along this line.

I am a practical person and never have been regarded as visionary, but oftentimes impressions and warnings have been conveyed to me by what means I cannot tell. In the majority of instances these have been literally fulfilled. The first occurred about seven years ago. I was sitting at my desk and having nothing unusual to worry about, when suddenly I had an impression someone was saying to me, though I heard no words, "You are going to suffer as you have never suffered before." I heard this warning, or rather felt it many times and in the course of the next two months I passed through the darkest period of my life.

Another time, while trying to decide what course to take, I heard the same voice, if it may be called voice, "This affair will terminate differently from what you expect, but remember, whatever the end will be it is for the best, and you will find it such." This also came to pass, as predicted.

I have often had these same impressions before the great events of my life. Some mistakes have been made, but they are rare. Usually, I feel such impressions just before I drop asleep, but they are apt to come anytime, and are repeated many times. The advice I have received has always been good, and whenever I have gone contrary have made terrible mistakes. Recently I have passed through another period of trouble, and the advice I received has been helpful, and encouraged hope.

As I say, I have never been fortunate enough to see any spiritual manifestations, and have only recently taken an interest in the subject through your paper, but wish to learn more. After reading Hydson's "Law of Psychic Phenomena," I supposed my impressions were merely the workings of the subconscious mind, which is said never to sleep, but now I do not know. I wish some of your readers would give some of their experiences on this subject. Can we trust to such admonitions and think they come from our spirit friends, or shall we class them as imagination and their fulfillment merely coincidence?

This summer I had a dream which was so vivid that it made a great impression on me. It created an uneasy feeling as it was repeated, but it seemed so improbable that I dismissed it from my mind, yet in two months it was sadly fulfilled in every detail. I never speak of these things to my friends, as they are not interested in this subject, but want to learn all I can, as I am only a beginner. A. N.

OUR DARLING.

Dear little footsteps I hear on the stair,
Pattering, clattering everywhere;
Drawing a wagon over the hall
And now he scampers after a ball.

Back again, noisily, something to bring,
Then out in the kitchen, I hear him sing,
Up the back stair he clambers again,
And now I see him out in the rain.

Calling to Teddy, he runs through the grass,
To wait in the barn for the shower to pass,
Then on the front porch, so clean and neat,
He leaves the prints of his little wet feet.

Ah! Mamma's piano at last he sees,
And soiled little fingers run over the keys;
With his top and ball and railroad train,
He scampers away to the woods again.

As shadows of evening come creeping o'er,
We see our darling peep in at the door,
With a handful of violets fresh and sweet,
He found in the woods near the rustic seat.

At last all is hushed all is quiet and still,
Not a sound is heard but the whip-poor-will,
And softly we steal in the hall to see,
Into what new mischief our boy can be.

And there sits our darling close by the door,
With toys and violets over the floor,
And close by his side, young Teddy and Tod,
Guarding our angel in the land of Nod.

Sweet little Basil, may the angels guide
Thy dear little footsteps over the tide
Of the coming years in nature's span,
And make thee, my darling, a noble man.

VALUABLE HISTORICAL FACTS.

The Origin of Sun-Day in Its Varied Processes of Evolution—Facts That Should Be Filed Away for Future Reference.

In the current number of the Reformer one of the contributors, "Chilperic," writes thus as to the origin of the first day of the week:

The weekly festival was not a Christian invention, but that it was largely observed in Southern Europe before Christianity received Imperial support and authority. The name of dies solis (Sun-day) is itself repugnant both to Jewish and Christian theology. It is a survival of the Sun worship so widely spread in the Roman Empire. If we had no other source for the history of Constantine than his coins, it would be universally believed that he was a zealous devotee of the Sun; for the solar deity is by far the most frequent of his numismatic types, and it was the Imperial edict of Constantine that established the dies solis as an official festival. The names of the days of the week are obviously of an astronomic origin, for they comprise the Sun, the Moon, and the five planets. These names appear to have originated with the Greek astronomers of Alexandria about the first or second century of the Christian era. They were at first only slowly taken up by the rest of the world; but the practical convenience of the nomenclature has led to its universal adoption from Ireland to India. When the Gothic races came into contact with the Empire, and absorbed some part of the Roman civilization, they took over the "week" (so-called from the Latin vicis), but the five planets being probably beyond the range of their astronomical knowledge, they equated four of the Latin terms with the principal Gothic deities, Tius, Woden, Thunder, and Frigga. [These deities are, perhaps, better known under their Norse forms of Tyr, Odin, Thor, and Freya.] Saturn was beyond their capacity for translation, and therefore was taken over bodily in Saernes-daeg, Saturday. The result is, the days of the Christian week have Pagan names. Many attempts were made by missionaries and bishops and by the later Puritans to suppress these obnoxious heathen names; but all in vain. The planets and the Gothic gods would not be suppressed, and they still remain to ornament the Calendar.

"Sabbath," a Babylonian Word.

If the "Day of the Sun" is due to the later Roman Paganism, it must be admitted that the Sabbatarian idea came into Europe from another source—from Judaism, although this involved the curious anomaly that the Jewish Sabbatical reverence became transferred to another day of the week. Like the heathen nations, the Jews appear to have got on very well without a Sabbath for a very considerable period. In the historical narratives the day is not even mentioned until the second Book of Kings. The earlier prophets, Amos, Isaiah and Hosea, had little regard for the institution; and even in the Pentateuch it is only referred to in those portions that are now recognized to be the latest in point of date, while the more superstitious developments of Sabbatarianism are not earlier than the religious outbreaks of the Maccabees. The first chapter of Genesis traces the institution of the Sabbath to the creation; but, not only is this chapter late in date, it reveals upon careful perusal, that the "six days creation" are an insertion; for if the "and the evening and the morning were the first day," etc., be removed, the narrative remains as a series of eight paragraphs commencing with "and God said," and ending with "and God saw that it was good." It is obvious, therefore, that the Sabbath was a late adoption of the Hebrews; and it remains to be seen whether they invented it, or borrowed it.

As a matter of fact, the question no longer exists, for the Jewish indebtedness was demonstrated several years ago by the discovery of a Babylonian heremology reading:

The seventh day is a fast of Merodach and Zirpanit, a fortunate day, and evil day. The shepherd of the great peoples shall not eat flesh cooked by fire, which is smoked; he shall not change the dress of his body; he shall not put on white; he shall not make an offering. The king shall not ride in his chariot; he shall not talk victoriously. In a secret spot the seer shall not act. A physician shall not lay his hand on a sick man. It is not suitable to make a wish. The king shall bring his offering. In the night, before Merodach and the goddess, he shall make a sacrifice. His prayer is acceptable to the deity.

The same formula was used—with the names of other deities—for the fourteenth, the nineteenth, the twenty-first, and the twenty-eighth days of the months. Thus, every seventh day was characterized as being of an especially sacred nature, upon which it was unlucky to perform any manner of work; and, in addition, the nineteenth day was invested with the same character, because it was the forty-ninth from the first day of the preceding month, and therefore completed a week of weeks.

The Jewish Sabbath.

These sacred days of the Babylonians offer the strongest analogy to the Jewish Sabbaths, although they are not strictly septennial. And it was further discovered that Sabbath itself was a Babylonian word. The derivation of this word has long been a puzzle to Semitic philologers; but in the Babylonian syllabaries it occurs under the form Shabattu, which is explained as "day of rest for the heart"; or, as the word for "heart" also has the prepositional value of "middle," it could be rendered "day of rest of the middle." Sha-battu, however, was foreign to the Semitic Babylonian language. It was really an Akkadian word, compounded from sha-"heart," and bat, "rest." Thus it was actually older than the Semitic settlement of the Euphrates valley.

Dr. Theo Pinches [Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, vol. xxvi., pp. 51,162] has recently shown the exact significance of this "day of rest of the middle." He has published a cuneiform text, containing a bilingual list of names, or titles, borne by the several days as they appeared in the calendar. In the Semitic column the name Shabatti, or Shapatti is applied to the fifteenth day of the month—that is to say, to the central portion of the moon's orbit, when she is at the full. As an illustration, Dr. Pinches quotes a portion of one of the Creation Tablets, describing the installation of the moon in the heavens by the god Merodach.

"Nannaru [the moon] he caused to shine, ruling the night—
He set him then as a creature of the night, to make known the days [festivals].
'On the seventh day the crown perfecting;
Shapattu shalt thou encounter half-monthly.'"

We are thus enabled to trace the origin and history of the word "Sabbath" and the Sabbatical institution. The Jews adopted these hebdomadal periods of rest, making them strictly septennial, and therefore independent of the succession of the months. To these seventh days they applied the name of "Sabbaths." Thus, by a perfectly intelligible process of evolution, the Sabbatical institution arose among the Hebrews; and now we know the secret of its origin, it is clear that the Sabbath cannot have been a special divine ordinance. Neither can it be regarded as a humanitarian enactment, for it is obviously due to heathen superstition about lucky and unlucky days, not to any regard for the worker. And as it was originally an essentially lunar festival, it was absurd to transfer its sacred character to the Roman dies solis.

The only good thing that can be said about the weekly day of rest is that in itself it is harmless. The harmfulness comes from the Sabbatarian notion that there is something peculiar or sacred about the day; and from this notion fanatical busy bodies take upon themselves to infringe the liberty of others, and to dictate to other people what they shall or shall not do. Archaeology dispels this Sabbatarian idea, and leaves the theologian no excuse for tyrannizing over his neighbors.

PERSONAL MAGNETISM.

Attraction Our Most Important Primary Life Force.

Beyond all question the most important primary life force is that of attraction. Every other force is secondary when compared with this one, indeed all others are differentiated and complex forms of simple attraction.

I am convinced that the primary form of all substance, all force and all thought consists of a point, call it atom or something else if you wish, which is the power of attraction, observe I do not say which possesses the power of attraction.

We term this primary form of substance, force and thought, magnetism. Now and then some one terms it electricity and those points are designated as electrones. I prefer the term magnetism, for that term seems to be defined to mean just exactly what the nature of the point is, viz., attraction.

Careful observation of the phenomena of life reveals the fact that the power known as attraction and which we term magnetism is the most primary life force, whether it be on the lower planes of life or on the human plane. The amoeba is endowed with the life force to attract unto itself the elements of sustenance. This process constitutes its entire life process until it becomes so large that it is unable to attract elements of sustenance to its center, then comes the earliest and simplest form of reproduction, it divides itself into two parts, and there are two where there was one before. Each one repeats these processes and thus they continue to exist and multiply.

All higher forms of life are constituted of cells similar to the amoeba and possessing the same individual characteristics, and one which is a new form of attraction, it enables them to unite their lives and co-operate in all their life processes. They form themselves into colonies and constitute functions. One colony forms the circulatory system and another the digestive which puts the elements of sustenance in proper form for assimilation; these colonies do this in order to supply the other colonies which constitute the organism with needed elements of sustenance. In the lower forms of life the primary power of attraction is very simple, but in the higher forms it passes from simplicity to complexity, differentiation has taken place, but underlying all complexity and differentiation is the law of attraction. Every cell of the human organism still possesses the primary form of attraction, but the united form of attraction and appropriation presents all the complex and differentiated forms of attraction. We term them personal magnetism.

The wants of the cell do not reach beyond the needed elements of sustenance, but the united cell life has many points, has much to attract. Man is indeed a wonderful magnet, whose magnetism attracts in many ways all that meets his wants.

This primal form or substance, force and thought, seems to have but one aim, that of self-preservation through attraction of all the needed elements of sustenance. It is the medium that expresses all spirit. Every life force is a differentiated aspect of this one psychunity. Nor is the primary aim of attraction lost in the higher differentiated.

"Self-preservation is the first law of life" whether it be on one plane or another. Self-preservation implies the attraction and appropriation of all the needed elements of sustenance. This fact evidences that the law of self-preservation is also the law of magnetic attraction. I am fully convinced that a scientific understanding and adaptation to this law means much to humanity.

Every scientific student of life, and especially those who are devoted to its pathological aspects, knows that as long as the central life sustaining systems attract and appropriate all the needed elements of sustenance there is perfect constitutional health and strength as well as the life force needed for muscular actions.

Any failure in the central life-sustaining systems to attract and appropriate the elements of sustenance means lack of nourishment, weakness and disease. Perfect nourishment consists in prompt attraction and appropriation of all the needed elements of sustenance, and these processes are accompanied or are manifested by perfect constitutional health and strength. Doctors and healers are often astonished at me when I tell them that primarily all healing and curing is consequent to magnetic attraction, but such is the case.

It must be evident to all who recognize the facts that I have just stated, that the possession of the magnetic power of attraction constitutes a primary life force which is absolutely essential in order to exist. A scientific understanding of the underlying laws of this force, personal magnetism, enables us to both increase its volume and more successfully wield it in accomplishing our desires. To be able to increase the ability of our sustaining systems to attract and appropriate the elements of sustenance means addition to our supply of life force which sustains constitutional health and strength and meets all the requirements of mental and physical life.

But some one asks, is it possible to increase the amount of that primary life force or personal magnetism?

In answering this question, let me first say that many believe that personal magnetism must be inherited, or a natural gift, that cannot be increased. This is now known to be a mistaken idea. While it is true that a certain amount must be inherited, it is not true that it cannot be cultivated and increased. The Science of Human Culture now presents the fact that every power, life force and quality that a human being should possess is indwelling either as a potential germ or in some stage of unfoldment or growth. These germs of life forces and qualities and their underlying laws constitute the data upon which the Science of Human Culture is based. This science consists of systematic cultivating processes, and in accord therewith it presents the regime for the cultivation of personal magnetism. I cannot begin to present definite cultivating regulations and processes in a brief essay as this must needs be, but I will give a general idea and refer the reader to the book, The Cultivation of Personal Magnetism for the complete and definite presentation of the system.

I have already stated that the law of self-preservation implies the law of magnetic attraction. It is the underlying law of selfhood. Whatever positively establishes selfhood cultivates the unfoldment and growth of personal magnetism, or vice versa, whatever cultivates the unfoldment and growth of personal magnetism establishes selfhood. This is true, for the reason that personal magnetism is the primary life force that establishes selfhood and preserves it. The central soul magnet constitutes the power that integrates, brings together, all that constitutes selfhood, and the absence of that soul magnet well unfolded means disintegration, the loss of selfhood. This law not only applies to the magnetism of the entire self, but to the magnetism of every function, faculty and quality. When we positively establish the selfhood of a faculty it becomes magnetic. The true selfhood of the complete being or of any function, faculty or quality is attractive. Every function, faculty and quality that is desirable is originated for the express purpose of wielding the power of attraction which in some way contributes to our needs and desires.

Now that I have presented an idea of what constitutes our most primary and essential life force, personal magnetism, and in a general way stated the means to cultivate and thus increase it, I will briefly turn attention to a phase of the subject that is most interesting to me. I refer to the soul's magnetic emanation which we term magnetic aura.

A magnetic aura emanates from and surrounds each and every one of us. A study of human auras is exceedingly interesting, but the particular aspect that I desire to call attention to at this time is the relation of these auras to what we term psychic power. Unquestionably the magnetism emanating from the soul magnet constitutes the medium through which all impressions of whatever charactery reach the soul. This magnetism is the nerve medium that furnishes transit for all nervous impresses and impulses. All the nerves of the ordinary senses are charged with it and thus sense impressions are conveyed.

We now know that there are persons who perceive impresses which they are able to intelligently interpret and which do not reach them, their souls and minds, through the ordinary senses. I refer to those whom we term sensitives and psychics. I believe all students who have observed this aspect of psychic phenomena now agree that there is some medium that furnishes transit to such impressing waves of vibrations. I am convinced that aura constitutes that medium of transit. Our magnetic auras emanate from the soul center and blend off into universal magnetism.

The psychic is one who senses and intelligently interprets impresses not ordinarily sensed in the conscious mind. As far as we understand the phenomena now, it seems that the character or spirit of the emanating magnetism has much to do in determining the character and form of impresses that find transit in the mediumistic aura.

There are psychics so sensitive that they tell us they can see our auras and distinguish their colors. Many psychics do not need their ordinary senses to interpret the character of persons who are in near range.

As I have previously said, this aspect of personal magnetism and its relation to psychic power is a very interesting and fruitful study. I can but just introduce it at this time, some other time we may pursue it further.

In closing let me say that I trust that the reader is now convinced of the fact that personal magnetism is our most essential primary life force. Existence is consequent to its presence and it can be acquired by cultivation.

VALUE OF SPIRITUALISM.

Trials and Triumphs of Mediumship.

If Spiritualism is what it claims to be, it is of more value to the world than any other system of science, philosophy or religion. It is able to establish its truth and utility by many proofs. It is no myth, no delusion, no imaginative theory of existence; but stands solid among the facts of the present century—a glorious revelation of truth from the spirit world, without a doubt in the minds of those who have fairly investigated it. The verdict of people who possess the knowledge of spirit existence and spirit communion is that Spiritualism is not only true, but the greatest and most beautiful truth known to humanity, and gives to life its real usefulness.

The inspired writers and speakers of this age are as divinely inspired as any ancient writers or characters, which is capable of the clearest demonstration. In the light of Spiritual Philosophy the revelations of the past will be seen as still incomplete. That which seems to be the highest truth may give way to a higher one. The expressions of thought that have been given to the world by spirit intelligence are but fractional expressions of fuller truth yet to be made manifest. Beyond proofs of spirit return there are unlimited heights of thought as well as eternal fountains of knowledge yet to be opened up to the seekers after the boundless resources, as yet unknown to the mundane race.

Spiritualism is yet in its minority; and who is able to tell all the wonders it has accomplished in the breaking up of old superstitions, credulities and ignorance; in bringing knowledge superior to the night of bondage in centuries gone by? It has brought to birth a race of thinkers who will not be silenced, and produced the inspiration of religious freedom, as well as civil and social release from many bondages and unjust laws that countless of controversy could not obtain.

This revelation has grown to such proportions, has accumulated such a mass of concentrated evidence and typed its proofs on so many pages he must be deaf who will not hear, and he blind who will not see its progress. One need not be a prophet or seer to see the advancing hosts of its disciples with joy on their lips and gratitude in their hearts.

True and faithful mediums are prompted and moved by as sincere desire to promote the welfare of mankind—to increase the sum of human happiness and knowledge—to aid people who are changing from old lines of thought, seeking higher revelations and fairer hopes to guide them onward—to answer the questions: What does Spiritualism teach? Of what value is it to humanity? to aid those in quest of its truth, and show its utility.

Spirits use the means they find, but cannot create them. Mediumship is developed, in part, by desire, effort and study to attain it. Without struggle and effort there can be no growth. Without difficulties in human life there would be nothing gained, no victory won. Otherwise it would be retrogression or stagnation.

If, in the conduct of an unpopular cause, the thorns of suffering pierce the blossoms that spring from them are worth all the pain endured. Mediums have not the promise of their spiritual allies that they will or can compensate them in a worldly point of view, but the reward of such labor is great now and will be greater in the hereafter. They promise spiritual light, mental unfoldment, individual happiness now, and keep their word. The cross of human suffering is ever surmounted by the crown of divine compensation.

Faithful workers in this cause have expended thousands of dollars and incurred losses of time, property, position that at length culminated in financial burdens that could be no longer borne. Some push devotion to the cause beyond the bounds of worldly prudence; nevertheless, if the figures in the drama pass from the scene, wrapped in the mists of adversity, is that any argument against a belief and practice which has brought knowledge of life and immortality to themselves as well as thousands of others? The tears of unmerited anguish water the seeds which though hidden for a while in the darkness of rudimental growth, are destined ultimately to change the barren land into the fruitful Eden. If faithful mediums lose much of material wealth, name, fame, prosperity, they, like every true Spiritualist, find "the pearl of great price," worth more than all their earthly possessions.

We do not praise the transparency of a window when gazing through it upon some lovely scenery, but admire the picture. When truth dawns upon us in its transcendent whiteness; when justice, mercy, love appear in their beauty, then the world will not stop to admire the medium, the prophet or seer, but will bow at the shrine of these attributes. The self-sacrificing spirit would lay itself upon the altar of human progression and be obliterated or divested of individuality, if these divine qualities could be received and adored for their own sake.

Let us in like manner cease all undue adulation of mere human instrumentality—let us serve in the temple of justice, bow at the shrine of truth, heed its revelations and so behold heaven and earth united.

The immense sacrifices continued for years, and the long untiring fidelity of mediums are strong evidence for their integrity and honesty. Besides the array of incontrovertible evidence and manifestations, the mediums, in some instances, are children, absolutely incapable of practicing a systematic and astute course of deception. We can cite the names and places of persons and details of facts still patent in the knowledge of hundreds and thousands of living witnesses, ready and willing to come forward at any time to prove our statements.

If no opponents are found able, upon sufficient grounds, to invalidate our record, where are the leaders or public opinion in press, school and pulpit who still dare to launch their ribald denial or solemn scriptural platitudes against the phenomena of a cause that can bear such testimony to its truth and worth? Where are the sage philosophers who pretend to explain nature's mysteries, and are yet only able, with rude, blank denial, to dispose of the gyrations of floating bodies and dancing tables? Granted that spurious imitations and puerile attempts at deception have been numerous, could they for one moment impeach the original truth and value of royal coin stamped from the divine mint of spiritual existence? Entrusted to the guardianship of bright ministering spirits and upheld by the fidelity, gratitude and zeal of warm-hearted friends, the flame of Spiritualism may flicker and bend in the winds of public opinion, but its past career seems prophetic of a future as permanent as the ancient hills.

THE WELL OF TRUTH AND THE SPIRIT WORLD.

An Impromptu Dialogue Poem Given by Mrs. J. H. Brown of Texas, and Mrs. R. S. Lillie of California, From Subjects Furnished by the Press Representatives Present at the National Spiritualists' Association Convention, Wednesday, October 19, 1904.

Mrs. Brown:—
Hidden away in this world of ours,
From the common paths where man has trod,
Is the wonderful well of truth divine,
The precious gift of a loving God.
And we who are dust stand footsore and weary,
Warring on in the battle of strife,
Are asking where are these waters rare,
Of truth, and the wonderful well of life.
Oh, this well of truth is waiting somewhere;
Can you tell me the path, my sister, pray?
For my heart is heavy and burdened with care
And I long for its water by night and by day.

Mrs. Lillie:—
I have wandered o'er desert and plain, friend,
For many and many a year,
Seeking the well of truth divine,
With its waters bright and clear.
I have trodden, footsore and weary,
And at last I have thought I found
The waters of truth in a well so deep,
Half hidden in the ground.
I tasted that waters only to know
I tasted the waters only to know
I found not the waters of truth so fair
I wandered and searched for everywhere.

Mrs Brown:—
This well of Truth, could I find it here
In the valley or mountain or level plain,
I should quaff its waters with holy cheer
And bravely go on with my work again.
O, tell me, sister, where you have trod
Of the Well of Life, have you found its glory?
Have you seen its curb, with the green moss shod,
Or felt the touch of its waters holy?

Mrs. Lillie:—
Yes, friend, I have found the well at last,
And tasted its waters bright,
From the desert and weary plain I have passed
To the regions of clearer light.
I sought for a taste of the waters clear,
And the draught, as I tasted it there,
Was sweet and refreshing to body and soul
In the limpid waters rare.
For truth was the water that sparkled bright
In the well of truth that was then in sight.

Mrs. Brown:—
Oh, I ask you this and I fain would know,
Are these Waters of Life in the Well of Truth;
Or must I wait till I cross death's tide
And stand transformed on the other side?
In the spirit world where soul is free
To seek and find what is yet to be;
Where truth immortal shall never die,
And the sparkling well gives its rich supply?

Mrs. Lillie:—
The waters rise in the spirit world
And flow from its mountain high.
They come to us here in rippling streams,
To mortals while passing by.
They ripple and gleam as they pass along,
They flow to the well so deep,
And give us rhythm of sweetest song
As over valley and plain they leap,
Then seek its waters, its taste divine,
As it comes to these lips of ours,
Reflecting the light of life sublime
And the soul's immortal powers.

Mrs. Brown:—
Is not that well beyond death's portal
And just its rivulets here below;
Can we never find it while we are mortal,
O, tell me sister; or do you know?
This well of Truth and the word of spirit
I long so much to understand,
To quaff the waters so pure and holy
And to rest my soul in that beautiful land.
O, I sometimes think in the toil and struggle
I never shall quaff that draught divine,
Till I stand in the realm of the worldless spirit
And drink from the well of that glorious clime.

REAPING AND SOWING.

A Study of Spiritual Causes and Results

Man is ever pressing toward something beyond his present attainment. He may not be conscious of the force impelling him, any more than an apple blossom is conscious of the apple that in time will be revealed. The full blown rose is contained in the bud. The peach is evolved from the pit. All manifestations of life, either in the mineral, vegetable, animal or human kingdoms, are the result of unseen germinal forces. These potencies inherent in the germ are spiritual, they elude the keenest vision.

No one can define or analyze the stuff that spirit is composed of. That it is the vitalizing principle that evolves all that is seen must be admitted. May we not affirm that the life of all life, the soul of all soul, the pith and essence of all being, is wrapped up in the germ, and that germ is spirit, and gets expression through matter.

No substantial good can be attained only as we work in line with natural tendencies. You cannot subvert what is organic and constructive; any attempt in that direction will prove abortive.

Woe unto the wicked, it shall be ill with him, is a universal principle in nature. We reap what we sow; character and conditions are identical, given the one you have the other. Only the one who possesses sterling integrity and is true to principle is reliable. He is in harmony with the divine forces in nature. He who obeys is at one with him who commands, progress in no other way is attainable. Victory is ever perched on the banner of well-doing and high resolves. Trickery, intrigue and cunning are the seeds of death to spiritual unfoldment; you can only build up good on good alone.

It is the part of wisdom to be receptive to the revelations of truth from the higher realms, and may these revelations inspire us to live in harmony with them. If we refuse, it indicates we are living on a low plane, and that our spiritual powers have not been quickened but are dormant, and the loss of vital energy is reprehensible. It is our duty to build up the spiritual forces inherent in our nature, and thus live a normal life; to live otherwise is suicidal.

There is a force in nature working silently yet effectively, that eludes human analysis, undefinable and incomprehensible, that men call God, yet ever evolving the soul life of wisdom, power and intelligence. The result of this power is manifested in every department in nature, but what brain however closely attuned to the harmonies of the cosmos can unravel it; it is nature's sesame that has no key but infinite intelligence that can unlock it. Yet the earnest thinker is ever pressing toward a solution of these phychic problems and is richly rewarded for his efforts.

That progress is being made in the line of the occult is manifest to those who are abreast of the times. Never in the history of the race have men been more earnest in an attempt to enter the realm of cause than to-day. This desire indicates spiritual growth, and is prophetic of grander revelations in the future; it is the soul reaching out after knowledge.

How few comparatively are living in the realm of spirit.

Principle is discarded, or held in abeyance, and policy enthroned as the guide to success. This tendency is manifest in every department of human activity.

Shams, however ingeniously devised and stamped with the authority of truth by the highest earthly potentates, will fail of success. The good and true alone survive; all else nature throws into her waste basket, and is destroyed.

Every word, thought and deed is indelibly registered on the tablets of memory, and can not be erased or concealed, and no blood atonement can wash away the stains.

The only healing balm for these wounds is well doing and right living. A change of attitude involves a change in results.

We are our own builders or destroyers. Helps we have, the right is always asserting itself in our inner consciousness, wooing us ever onward and upward toward the true goal of our existence.

Let us follow the light that leads to inward harmony and deep repose, and thus enjoy the rich fruitage of a well-spent life. Such a life is normal; wisdom suggests it, and nature endorses it; it is the open door that leads to all that is vital and substantial in the realm of spirit.

Spiritualism an Evil Influence.

From the Editor-at-Large National Spiritualists Association.

The following is a reply to the charges against Spiritualism made by Principal Sheraton in an address before the alumni of Wycliffe College, as reported in the Toronto, Canada, Star.

That the subject received such extended treatment and full report, at least indicates that it occupies a large place in the public mind.

Editor Toronto Daily Star:—In your issue of Sept 29, there appears a report of the address of Principal Sheraton before the alumni of Wycliffe College, in which he contends that Spiritualism is an evil influence, and mainly fraud. In behalf of the large number of people who believe in the doctrines of Spiritualism, I have been requested to briefly present their side of the subject.

With all deference to the opinions of Prof. Sheraton, those who have given attention to the matter will clearly perceive that he has not made himself acquainted with the subject he so unequivocally condemns.

I do not propose to burden your columns with a lengthy discussion, but to touch only the most salient points.

The speaker said: "From time immemorial men had been appealing to the dead in behalf of the living, but no answer had ever found its way to earth. One only had returned—to tell us of His victory over death and to assure us of the reality of the life beyond. He came, not as a disembodied spirit, but as a risen and glorified man, challenging the doubters to touch Him and see that He was a real Being."

The lecturer takes the bible as absolute authority, and asserts that it records the only instance of a return from beyond the grave. Is he not mistaken? Is not the bible a record of the return of spirits and their ministrations? There is not a single phase of the modern manifestations but has a counterpart in the bible. Inspiration, I. Cor., vii:8; speaking in unknown tongues, I. Cor., xii:10; materialization, Gen. xvi; I. Chron., xxi., the Hebrew children, Dan., x; trance, II. Cor., xii:2-4; direct spirit writing, as on the walls of Babylon; levitation, Ezekiel, "The spirit lifted me up and took me away;" clairvoyance, as in Acts vii:55-6; visions, Dan., ii: 19; healing, Mark xvi:18, "They shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover; independent spirit voices, Deut. ix:12-13. Only one passage here is given, space forbidding that of numerous others equally clear. Was Christ the only one? Did not Moses and Elias appear to the disciples?

In Hebrews i:14, it is said: "Are they not all ministering spirits sent forth to minister to them who shall be heirs to salvation?"

With these instructions of the bible, how can Prof. Sheraton truthfully maintain that all spirits who return are evil. This is his sweeping assertion:

"Whatever the influence was, it was an evil influence. This was shown by the general effects Spiritualistic practices produced both on the subject and on the investigators. Physical and mental exhaustion and prostration were commonly attendant upon the seances. Even prominent Spiritualists admitted that the moral effects were disastrous."

What are the names of the "prominent Spiritualists" who admit that mediumship causes "physical and mental exhaustion," or that its "moral effects were disastrous"?

I have examined the reports of all the great penitentiaries and prisons in the United States and Canada, and find not one prisoner confined within their walls set down as a Spiritualist or medium. The life-history of all the leading mediums show that they were of average length of life, and some of the most prominent reached more than the usual age. Sir William Crookes, A. R. Wallace, Prof. Varley, Profs. James and Hyslop, and Dr. Isaac K. Funk who has recently contributed the wonderful book, "The Widow's Mite," to the cause, are a few of those equally eminent in science and literature, a list of whose names would fill several columns.

These, as Spiritualists, believe that man exists after the death of the body, and that the spirit may return and under favorable conditions communicate. They believe, as death produces no change in the spirit, if ignorant and evil-disposed, when they return they are the same, and if righteous they will return with their righteousness. They believe that the same law which permitted the spirits to minister unto men in biblical days will permit their departed friends to become ministering spirits unto them. If Moses and Elias could appear to the disciples, our friends in the Great Beyond, can come to us.

As to the "religious and theological teachings," do they furnish the shadow of an argument?

Prof. Sheraton says that as a final evidence of the evil source of spirit manifestations the "teachings" are conclusive.

"This was borne out by the religious and theological teachings of the Spiritualists. They maintained that there was no punishment after death; they denied the divinity of Jesus, and the efficiency of the atonement."

He thus admits that spirits do communicate, but they are "evil," and brings their communication as evidence.

I have been connected with Spiritualism almost from its beginning, over half a century ago. I never saw a communication, affirming that there was no punishment for the deeds of this life. On the contrary it has been repeatedly declared that every wrong done must be answered for. Different spirits have presented this in different ways according to their experience and understanding, and an orthodox person once said to me after reading a communication setting forth the state of those who had been cruel, dishonest and merciless in this life, that a fiery hell were preferable.

I have communications from those who were Catholics and Protestants in this life, and they are of the same faith still. Are the Unitarians led by evil, when they deny the divinity of Christ?

One point more. The lecturer says: "The alleged messages of the dead were for the most part trifling, insipid, devoid of genuine sentiment or helpful counsel." Take the current literature, the vapid stories, novels, newspaper articles, poetry, how small a part of it all does not fall under the criticism of being vapid? How much of it is trivial and harmful!

When all these writers become spirits, were they able to return and under the most favorable conditions write as freely as they do, now, having, as spirits uniformly declare, met with no mental changes, would not their communications be of the same character? The objection rebounds to the other side and proves, not that they are evil spirits, but identifies them.

Amidst the mass of writings both from mortals and spirits, are golden gems.

WAS IT A DREAM?

A Visit to the Spirit Home of Kindred.

My husband, Mr. G. W. Otis, has had a strange dream, and as his right hand is partially paralyzed, he cannot write, by his request I will write it for him, and in his own words:

About one month ago while asleep I started on a prospecting tour toward the west, gently floating above the ground (as I many times do in my dreams), when away in the distance to the west, I saw what I supposed to be a mirage city. Being anxious to test the reality of it, I floated directly to it, and quickly found myself within its streets, surveying the beautiful and numerous houses with their peculiar designs and delightful surroundings.

Everything seemed so peaceful—there seemed to be nothing there to mar the splendor of that place—I could feel that the spirit of peace and content prevailed.

Still I found myself alone, with no one to be seen. I continued to scan the elegant structures, seemingly no two alike, and as I am or have been a builder of many houses myself, my interest grew intense. While I was looking and thinking, my attention became centered on one particular house more than all the others. I opened the door and entered a large room or hall. Still no one to be seen even there. I began to examine the inside finish, etc., when I chanced to look through a back window, and astonished was I to see my two brothers standing outside conversing with each other.

Both passed to their spirit home within the last five years from Butler, Ind. Both were younger than I—Brother William, aged 62 years, and Brother Tim (or Wilson) at the age of 58 years.

In a moment I was with them, asking how and why they were there.

"Why, this is our spirit home," they said.

"Are such homes general, and do they surround the earth?" I asked.

They answere "yes."

"Well, then," I said, "why can't we all see them, as I see this home?"

"Because," they said, "the atmosphere is too dense; it is impossible."

"Now tell me about father and mother—where are they?"

"They are both here in this house; come, we will go in and see them," they said.

We started, but excitement ran too high with me; overcome with joy I found myself suddenly wide awake and back in my old home. Up I got; I could not sleep nor shake off the influence of my, to me, wonderful discovery; neither have I done so yet. For I feel sure that I have discovered their true spirit home. Who can say or dare say that I have not?

The Gospel of Evolution.

Mr. John Maddock, of Minneapolis, Minn., spoke upon the Gospel of Evolution, from the view of the new science of Monism, and made comparisons with Christianity. He traced the evolution of Christianity from a barbarous ecclesiasticism up to more humane Unitarianism and Universalism, where the devolution of ecclesiasticism begins. No further light can come into the world from systems which believe in actual and wilful sin and which teach that a God will reward or punish for deeds called good and bad, gauged by sectarian assumptions. He showed that although Christianity had egotistically exalted itself above its God and above all other religions, the believers in it have labored under a great delusion, the which the Gospel of Evolution now makes plain. The fact that the Christian church cannot produce the divine revelation which it claims to have received and the further fact that it and its Christ are utterly inadequate to convert the world from vice to virtue, is proof enough to Rationalists that it has been deceived by the men who wrote the bible and by taking the vagaries of the human mind to be divine revelation. The human mind, he held, can not be trusted; out of it have come all of the vile doctrines of hells and devils, which every enlightened thinker now despises.

Real revelations cannot come from the mind alone. The metaphysicians have deluded the world into the belief of dualism, when there cannot be a world without substance; and they have not succeeded in making metaphysics a science, nor never can.

After all they have said, it remains for positive materialism to give true light to the world. Apostles, prophets, bibles or churches cannot reveal; they can only declare. The testimony of such men as Swedenborg and "John the Divine" is not revelation; a revelation is a material fact.

The book of Nature is the only one that reveals and that carries its unmistakable credentials with it; all of the evolutions of Nature are true revelations of her works and her testimony can be fully relied upon; no interpolator can get his work in there—no legends can be sandwiched in.

Mr. Maddock traced the evolution of materialism from the crude ideas formed by Lucretius up to the high, intellectual state which it occupies today. First there was the blind, mechanical idea of this system of things being the result of different attempts of the atoms to get into their proper places fortuitously; and that they formed their unions by clinging together with claws and hooks. Then came Newton who familiarized the world with the truth of molecular force, which showed that the atoms came together by their own power of mutual attraction. The next step in the order of the evolution of materialism, was made by the new science of Monism, which gives the material universe the needful property of intelligence, without which all attempts to interpret it by reason are impossible.

In spite of what such men as Sir Oliver Lodge and Lord Kelvin say, there is a conflict between science and religion. Titles may stand for authority, but they do not stand for truth. Such men should be made to corroborate their statements same as Rationalists do. Religion affirms that man is on probation and makes him a wilful, guilty wretch before his creator, and declares he is worthy of severe punishment and that he will surely get it in retaliation for his evil deeds. Science teaches that man has not got anything but what the dynamic forces of the universe forced him to receive; that man is not on probation, but in a school where he is being taught necessary lessons which will be for his future good.

The Gospel of Evolution preaches a Christ within (which is the intelligent dynamic force of the universe); that it is, by gradual evolution, making the only just atonement for the pains and sufferings that were forced upon mankind unsought. As man was forced into this world of misery without his consent he should, in justice, not be placed in jeopardy by a demand to do that which he is not able, but should be freely and fully delivered from all that annoys and be uplifted to a happy state of joy.

The Gospel of Evolution views all men as children of Nature, though in different classes and holds that every person has his or her own specific individuality which is as sacred as that of another, though not in degree as good; and that all should be respected and allowed the liberty of going each one in his or her own way so long as one does not unduly encroach upon the rights of another.

The Gospel of Evolution is based upon the positive science of Monism and therefore cannot be called a religion. The term religion belongs to superstition, and it cannot logically be carried over into the sacred domain of science.

As regards future life, the Gospel of Evolution gives substantial hope by way of re-evolution by the dynamic forces of the universe. As like combinations produce like results, so like mental combinations in the re-evolutions of human forms, will cause them to identify themselves and others, also. Under the Gospel of Evolution no sect can be condemned or ridiculed. The day of the justification of all sects has come—all are natural evolutions of nature, same as every seed or plant. No one was infidel to truth, because truth was not revealed in Christianity.

Protestant Christians tell us that the bible is the Christian rule of faith. This is a truth which no sane man can deny, but we can positively affirmthat it is not the rule of faith for the whole world. Catholic Christians tell us that the church is the supreme authority and that the Holy Ghost keeps it free from error. Every man must admit that the church is the guide of Catholics, but not for the whole world. We know that that church has not been kept from error, and that truth has gradually come into the world by dissenters from its dogmas.

Christianity of all shades is for Christian sects only. In spite of the Christian assumption that it was specially ordained by God to convert the world, the world will not be converted to it any more than it will be brought over to Mohammedanism or Buddhism. Christianity is for Christians—for them only; it is simply one of the world's religions, not the only true religion. The proof of this is in the fact that it does not fit any one else but Christians. All religions are specific adaptations to specific ends, same as organisms to environments; all are working for the same end—morality. The religions of the world wear the same badge of differentiation as every other evolution of nature does in every other domain and they were all born out of the same universal womb, same as every animal and plant—first the nucleus, in the teacher, then the accretions which formed the organization. As the modern religions, "Christian Science," "Dowieism" and "New Thought" were born, so every other religion came into existence.

No man should worry because he is not a Christian; Christians cannot produce any valid credential to show that their church received a divine revelation, nor that they were divinely commissioned to preach the only gospel to the whole world. No book can be a valid witness for itself; no church can—there must be corroboration. We now have the positive evidence that the Christian church has been laboring under a great delusion, in the facts that it neither has the divine revelation nor the means necessary to convert the world. It has not men enough, money enough, nor truth enough to do such a great work. It stands dumb before the inquiring intelligence of the 20th century.

It never had a basis for unity, it cannot find one now nor will it ever find one, because its whole system is based upon the imagination of men who thought they were inspired to preach the truth. Whoever gave the command to preach a specific gospel to every creature, with a penalty attached, if rejected, was wofully ignorant of physiology and of the fact that multitudes were well supplied with religions which they would not give up for a new one; he was ignorant of the physiological fact that all men were mentally organized differently.

Let every man confidently stand upon his own feet and follow his own light—in fact that is what every man does; let him be honored for doing so and not condemned. The Gospel of Evolution is one of justification.

MENTAL LAWS.

Prove Continuance of Animal Soul Life.

Mental laws operating in the dog proves that it has spirit controls as well as man, and are more convincing to me of its soul life than the clairvoyant seeing what he believes to be the soul life of the dog.

Clairvoyance is a mental science embracing a great deal more than most people understand by the term. It is truly a soul-sight, a mental power developed by the unfolding of soul consciousness. To the soul thus unfolded time and space are nothing.

That the dog did live, the clairvoyant learns by seeing him as he was, but that does not prove that it has life beyond the grave, for the dog still living could be seen as if present, when in reality it was far away, if the mind of a mortal or a spirit was strong enough to build a thought form of it for the sensitized mortal to see.

With the power to hold my own consciousness, and study the demonstrations of spirit influence and its laws, I have learned to hear them speak at any time. No noise or confusion can be great enough to prevent my hearing if I listen a second for the word, and I know that what is termed the different minds, different selves, are in reality, separate personalities, relating themselves to the mortal life and expressing an influence over it. I have watched and studied their influence over myself and others, and am satisfied that dreams are produced by control of soul personalities. The clairvoyant powers, dormant when physical consciousness is awake and in activity are readily put into operation by magnetic and mental influence when the physical rests. Therefore when conscious of the physical plane of life, clairvoyant powers in most people are not used, but when the spirit, the force that operates the physical, allows that part of man to rest, it can take up the soul life and exercise the powers pertaining to that part of his being. Time and space become nothing. Like a thought he goes to any place an influence suggests. Other personalities belonging to the soul life are recognized. Coming in rapport with these other personalities, one takes on their condition of thought and experiences, and for the moment experiences what has been a reality to the others. Thus past events in other lives are given to people in dreams by mental laws, but there is a soul relation to produce the result.

The dog that had met death in a watery grave, came to its master for comfort and sympathy, the relation, for the moment, was the same as when the medium comes in touch with the personality of one who has passed from mortal life with a disease its mind still retains a consciousness of, and through mental laws reflects on the medium a consciousness of the condition as if it was her own. Mr. Haggard thought he was the drowning dog. Then as his own soul consciousness asserted itself he saw the dog on the clairvoyant plane, and as soul speaks to soul with a language that needs no words, the dog was able to tell its master it had met the fate his soul consciousness had expressed to him the instant he came in rapport with the soul of the dog.

Each mortal, whether conscious of the fact or not, is made up of several personalities expressing themselves in the one physical life. These personalities are souls that have lived before as mortals. If there is harmony in the relation, all goes well, and each aids to unfold and educate through the laws of their relation, the infant soul having its first experience in mortal life. But if inharmony exists, a conflicting emotional nature is given to the mortal's character, and when the inharmony is very great, peculiar traits of character develop and insanity often follows as a result of these influences. I simply make these statements, but shall not try to explain them all in this short article.

The point I am trying to demonstrate is that soul life exists in man and animal in very much the same condition. Dreams come to dogs. When the physical life rests, the dog often expresses soul life, or the soul consciousness of other dogs expressing themselves through the dog's mortal or physical life, controlling the physical while the dog's real self sleeps.

It is a fact that other spirits, strange ones, often come to the sensitized mortals, and they are not always desirable company, and the home band, if strong enough, guarding the loved one, insists on the unwelcome guests leaving. Thus dogs are often controlled to growl or bark in their sleep, as the souls on guard see the approach of a strange dog, which they have no desire for a companion. Clairvoyant's can see these spirit or soul dogs as well as they can see the spirits or souls of mortal. They can also see the mental picture of them built upon the atmosphere by another mind, therefore the dog dreaming proves to me the soul life more than the clairvoyant vision of a sensitized mortal.

SPIRIT PHOTOGRAPHS.

Wonderful Experiences In Connection With Mr. Keeler's Mediumship.

If there had never been a genuine dollar there would never have been a bogus dollar.

If there had never been a genuine materialization there never would have been a fake materialization.

If there had never been a genuine spirit photograph there never would have been a counterfeit photograph.

We have here in Washington, D. C., a genuine spirit photograph medium in the person of Wm. Keeler. If anyone doubts the genuineness of spirit photography he should have a sitting with Mr. Keeler, and I think would be convinced of its truth. He is a born medium, a slate-writer as well as photographer. When a boy going to school, while studying his lesson in arithmetic, notes would be written on the opposite side of the slate. The teacher on examining his work, discovers the writing, accuses him of loitering away his time from his lessons, writing notes, and proceeds to give him a whipping. This was of frequent occurrence. Young Keeler did not know how the writing got on the slate, did not know anything about spirit slate-writing or Spiritualism, never having heard of them.

When thirteen years old, about the time photography succeeded the daguerreotype, his father bought him a photographic outfit. In taking pictures of relatives and friends, other pictures would frequently appear with that of the sitter, many of them recognized as of those who had previously lived on earth. They could not account for them, so they named them "spook pictures." About this time Mumler was on trial in New York City, charged with making fake spirit pictures. The father of young Keeler, reading in the New York papers of the trial, went to that city with specimens of his son's pictures, to find out from Mumler what they were. As soon as Mumler saw them he said they were spirit pictures. That was the first knowledge they had received of what they were.

Young Keeler then secured a position in a Boston, Mass., photograph gallery, where he stayed a year in perfecting himself in the art of photography. After leaving the gallery his spirit pictures were better, and many of them readily recognized.

One time, having an appointment in a neighboring town to take spirit pictures, he was met at the depot by Dr. Brown. Dr. B. requested young Keeler to go with him to a photograph gallery and use the photographer's camera and sensitized plates, saying he would pay him for the time he would lose at the place of his appointment, and make him a nice present besides. He and the Doctor went to the gallery, took several pictures, and left the proprietor of the gallery to develop them, and then hurried off to his place of meeting. Dr. Brown was so well pleased with the pictures that after paying him for the sittings and the time lost at the other place, he made him a present of fifty dollars, saying it was worth five hundred dollars to him, for he now knew spirit photography was a fact.

Mr. Keeler has been a resident of this city for a good many years, and is now employed, and has been for a long time, by the government, as photographer at St. Elizabeth's hospital for the insane. The only time he has to take spirit pictures is on Sundays at his home.

To test the truth of Mr. Keeler's spirit pictures, Dr. Theodore Hansmann, himself an amateur photographer, went to Mr. Keeler's with his own sensitized plates, marked, sat for pictures, took them to his own dark room and developed them, and found on them spirit pictures that he readily recognized, which convinced him of the truth that spirits can be photographed.

Mr. Keeler has another phase, and that is taking spirit pictures in total darkness. To be absolutely satisfied of this, Dr. Hansmann and Lawyer P. E. Dye, also an amateur photographer, repaired to Mr. Keeler's by appointment, each with his own camera and sensitized plates. All three cameras were trained upon a certain object, the light put out; they then in unison went through the operation of taking a picture. Each then repaired to his own dark room, developed the picture on his plate, made a print, and met again and compared pictures. They discovered that each had photographed the same spirit. These experiments were carried on for some time, getting pictures of some they could recognize, some they could not, and sometimes getting nothing but spirit lights, and these were the same on each plate.

SPIRIT DESCRIPTIONS.

They Vary According to Character and Conditions.

After reading the article in The Progressive Thinker of Oct. 8, of Carl C. Pope, I feel impelled to write in reply to the conclusions of his friend.

When we take into consideration how hard it is to give a description of all the conditions here on earth, so that a listener could get an intelligent and correct idea of it, we need not be surprised at the seeming vagueness of the descriptions from spirit life with its great diversity of conditions.

Let us suppose that we were to call up a dozen different persons here and get them to give an account of their lives and surroundings and what a diversity of descriptions there would be. It is only natural to suppose there are greater diversities of conditions there than there are here. And when we take into consideration the fact that there are many things and conditions in the spirit world that we have no terms in our language to properly describe, when they are referred to the spirits have to do as Jesus did, speak of them in parables; so why need we blame the spirits for not making matters clearer, or chide ourselves, while in our earth surroundings, for not understanding with perfect clearness? or

I have had a spirit give, as best he could, a description of the conditions which surrounded him when another would come and say, "Well, I will have to give a very different account as to my surroundings; not that I wish to say that the account given by the preceding spirit was not correct of his conditions, but mine are very different." When we stop to think of it, were we to call upon a man who is running a low dive of a saloon to give a correct description of his surroundings, and his relationships with his fellow man! and then we were to call upon a professor from one of the higher colleges to give his account, it is very probable that the professor would say, "I hope you will not get the account which I give mixed up in any way with that of the man who has just preceded me."

As to the matter of a continued existence, with us all it is simply a question of testimony. I do not know that there is such a city as Boston, but the testimony to my mind is sufficient to rest the belief upon that there is such a place without question. That I have had communications from persons who have passed through the change known to us as death, I rest as perfectly satisfied, as it is a matter of evidence to my senses. I don't blame persons who are without the testimony, for feeling the dark shadows of doubt creep over them, yet I do not think it is wise for them to give up entirely to those shadows and rest the case in their mind that there is no light anywhere.

We are born very differently endowed as to the power sensing spiritual things, and we are all liable to wonder why everybody else cannot come to the same conclusions we do, when the fact is they are just as natural in their opinions as we are in ours. We may be able to see farther and clearer than our neighbor, but it is hard to make him believe that we can; so all we can do is to go on bearing with one another; presenting our own position in the best light we can, yet flinging no condemnation at others because they do not see as we do.

I have not read Dr. Peebles' book on Obsession, but from what I can gather from the different correspondents I believe it embodies a great truth. In my experience of over fifty years in Spiritualism this fact has been established beyond all controversy; the simple fact of passing through the change called death does not change the nature of the individual to any great extent; if he was one who would lie, deceive, steal, or take the advantage wherever he could while here on this side, he would lie and deceive when he gets a chance through a medium. He is not necessarily more of a devil when coming back from the spirit side than he was when he was acting a similar part here. We have to be constantly on the lookout while here to keep from being deceived, and we think nothing of it because we are used to it, but a lie told from the spirit side seems to upset some people very much. I feel it is my duty to weigh a communication from a spirit just the same as I do a statement of a mortal. In the realm of belief we have to let our belief rest upon what testimony we have, yet always hold the matter open for the introduction of new testimony; but when we come to what we can designate as knowledge through our own experience, then our judgment is the staff upon which we must lean.

Compensation—The Law of the Universe.

CHAPTER X.

Work; unceasing work.

"My brother, I am come at your desire, and with one whose experiences have been along similar lines as yours; he has not appeared here at this moment to rehearse his life, but by his presence to impart strength to you at this time when you need it more than at any time before through your whole life."

I turned my face towards the speaker, but I could see no one, yet I could plainly see every other object in the room; I attempted to arise, but the invisible power with which she had held me before, now prevented me from lifting a hand or foot, so I resigned myself willingly, and made but that one feeble attempt to move; and reading my thoughts, she said in answer to a question I had not yet had time to express in words:

"You cannot see me because you are not yet able to control yourself; you will soon, then I may appear to you without fear of your losing sight of the promise you made to yourself in your agonizing prayer so short a time since; be calm, and in good time all you desire will come. Your prayers shall be answered; for all prayer is but the desire of the soul. So that prayer is answered in the same ratio as the desire of the supplicant is honest.

"I fully realize how you have struggled since I left you; I know that your thoughts towards me were bitter; you judged me, as you would have judged a being on Aer. In time you will discover that you cannot judge; for as you judge, so must you be judged; and to be judged is but to place a barrier in one's path of progression; it does not affect the one judged; but its reflection, for such it becomes, retards the expansion, until it, as a cause of jealousy or inharmony, is removed."

"I solemnly ask your pardon, ask your pardon for my words and acts, and I will try, oh, so hard, to avoid any such conduct in the future." And as I said this, my voice quivered, and tears flowed freely from my eyes.

"You must not ask my pardon; you are not called upon to humble yourself in the least. Every time you ask the pardon of one, you demean yourself and stop your progression. You must abstain from humbling yourself, in order to obtain all that belongs to you. Life is all there is in the universe; all life is equal; none greater than another, and each must have all that belongs to it in that sphere where it exists.

"You have asked yourself what your life to the present has accomplished; give good attention, please, while I answer that question. Your lessons of life when given were of little benefit to you; you did not understand them, or their import. Now you imagine that your existence has been of little or no value; but my brother, as it required all your experiences to expand you to your present position; as all mankind must expand in the same ratio to realize the great lessons that appear in the continuous life, so from now on, you must fully realize their benefits. You will expand faster, which will show that your life has been of great value. You were, while in the gross matter of the body, only preliminary to the higher expansion of the individual life you are. You will never more be hampered by the physical. This is the reason why it was so easy for you to overcome the passion by which you had so long been retarded.

"You have thought much of your state as being good or bad. The panoramic view of life's lessons disappointed you in opposite ways; you thought you must be benefited eternally by the acts and words of your career that you called good; you now realize that those so-called good ways required no effort on your part, and you were satisfied; but that representation of what you called bad, left a blotch; and you would not be satisfied unless you could in some way atone for it; it had left a blotch on your life, and had dimmed the lustre of the good.

"But listen to a most momentous lesson. There is no good or bad. Everything is; it is, because it is the result of previous causes. As one understands a cause, so he may direct that cause in a higher channel, to effect what may be a purer, cleaner, or brighter aspect as it is afterward viewed, or it may be allowed to continue as in the realm of inanimate life to be acted upon by all extraneous conditions, which, instead of cleansing it, only adds still further to the mass of dross that must retard all growth or expansion, and sometime, somewhere it must be got rid of; and now here you have seen your whole life's experience to this time, so pictured that it has enabled you to release yourself in a certain sense; and you seem to yourself as a new, a different being. But allow me to say, you are the same to me that you were before. I see your growth, or expansion, and the causes that led to your present humble and penitent state.

"Please do not consider that you have been punished; it was not for punishment that I left you, or the reason why I remained away; it was because you were not fully prepared to accept me. You reasoned that because you see things differently you were free from the causes that led to your present perturbed state. There is no such thing as compensation or punishment in the abstract; it is but the inevitable result of opposing law. You have in your ignorance gone contrary to law ever since you began to use your old body that you left on the ship among the icebergs."

During this explanation of my crude condition by my teacher, she had remained invisible to me; as she stopped, she appeared plainly before me; and with her, like a shadow, there stood at her side the form of a man about my own age and size; he looked at me with a pleasant expression, and it seemed as if he looked near enough like me to be my own brother. As much as I respected and loved, yes, adored, my teacher, it now seemed as if in the being who stood by her side, that I could sense one of my own kin; for a moment I lost sight of her and her words, which had so startled me; for to once more meet one of my kinsfolk, was a sense of joy beyond anything I had dared to hope for; but in her expression there seemed an answer to a vague question in my mind which I had not dared to formulate in words, and now the full understanding flashed before me; I now realized that I had died, and was now in the presence of the angels; and was passing through the scenes necessary to my introduction to heaven; and if this new being was a relation of mine, then surely, we would be united at last, according to my understanding of the plan of the salvation of souls by the great God of the universe. For a moment I lay motionless and drank in the full meaning of my felicitous thoughts; my companions did not interrupt me; and finally I said:

"Then it is true, I am dead; and on my way to heaven."

"My Brother," said my teacher, "can you realize what you mean, when you say you are dead? If you are dead, how can you think, talk and act?"

"Have you not told me that I had left my body? If I have left my body where is it? Have I not got a body here? If my body has not suffered, please tell me what it was that suffered such torments in the time you have been gone from me?"

She said kindly: "You did not suffer physically, for the gross matter of your body is left in the realm of matter; it can not exist in this finer sphere of spirit. It is mental, or spiritual suffering now; it has always been so; but because your education, what little you have, has taught you only of gross matter, you know nothing else; and although you have emerged from it, the same life continues; still has the same senses and attributes, or imaginations; it was this same imaginary body that suffered. You can, if you will, see that that gross body has gone. All with you is spirit now."

"Yes, my teacher," I said, "But all that long time you were absent, my body was cold at times, then it was burning with fever; and, as it never was before, it was racked with pain; my sight was dimmed; I shed tears. Can spirit sense all this?"

"All this." Answered my teacher, as she sweetly smiled. "All you have said is true; but is it so now? Is your bed wet now? Does your body feel cold or warm? Is it inflamed from intense pain? Are you suffering from the lessons of the past?"

I was silent, for I could not see as I lay there in a most comfortable and easy position, that I was in any sense changed, except in my mind; I was perfectly tranquil, and felt that I was noble, and did not require anything to complete my happiness; all my feelings of hatred and sorrow, fear and passion was gone, and I felt satisfied with myself, and was content for the time when the great final change should take place and I should be ushered into the presence of God.

"Brother, your suffering was intense, for it was the final awakening to a full realization of your real self; you had never seen or sensed yourself before; you had always known the gross matter of your body as yourself, which was not the truth; that was only the covering, the necessary accessory to enable you to continue your existence upon that plane of development. You continued with it as long as possible; you were finally forced out of it, as all are, by that law which governs mortal life; if you had not been forced to leave it, you most certainly would be in it now, and would continue so indefinitely. No one ever leaves the body until forced to do so; it would be better if it were not so, and it will continue until the life in the lower spheres shall have evolved to that extent where it will get all it can in the body; then, instead of being compelled as you have been, to have such an inharmonious awakening, a life can leave that gross condition of matter and enter directly into the sphere it may desire. You were in the midst of your sufferings, as you understand the measurement of time; it was what on Aer would be known as a dream; for the spirit is capable of experiencing much, quickly, when not hampered by gross matter."

She had placed me in a dilemma; she had contradicted all my beautiful thoughts about heaven and all connected with it. I said:

"But have I no body? Have you no body? What is this building we are in? What are the articles in this room, and all things we see, if they are not real, and true matter?"

She answered: "Matter is seen only as one's mental is gross, and will be expressed by it, in the same ratio as the mind is gross or undeveloped. All you see or know now is gauged by the gross condition that has followed you to this sphere. As you have been enabled to govern passion to a certain extent through your last experience, and can see that my motives have been pure, so will you in time be able to loose yourself from the other conditions, and know that spirit, although governed by the same law as grosser matter; yet it is more subtile, is in nearer relation to life itself; therefore being less dense, it becomes less opaque; and as one understanding the law governing it, so can such an one use it in any manner that suits his requirements

"Yes, you have a body; I have a body. This house, and all it contains, is as real as any you ever saw on Aer; but all belong on a higher plane of development or evolution, and you now being on the same plane, you must behold it as it is; and as if you had just emerged from the darkness into light, and your eyes had not been adjusted to the greater light; so, until you are fully adjusted to the new conditions, you will see all things with the same understanding as when you were on Aer.

"You were troubled just before I left you, with a very strong expression of what you called passion; you have since said that you had subdued it; it is not so. Passion cannot be subdued. You have allayed it. Passion is the great power exercised by animated life; when rightly understood, it becomes a mighty power, and is the force, when properly applied, to cause all life to rise to the summit of the highest aspirations.

"People on Aer have confounded love and passion; both are of the same nature, with equal force; but love says come, while passion says go. When they are understood, they become as guiding stars to all who will allow them perfect freedom."

"Then," I said, "will you please tell me where I am now? Where is my body, which you say I left on the ship? I feel, and see as real as I did while I was alone through all my long, weary drifting on that wreck. Where is that ill-fated ship? Where are all the companions I had there?"

"I will fully inform you, my brother, as to your present location, but as to the body you have left, and the ship and your companions, to be informed of them, would be only to gratify your curiosity; you could do them no good, they could not aid you; suffice it to say, they are all in the spheres they are fitted to enter; the old ship and its contents being inanimate or gross matter, like your body, must return to the elements whence they came, to be reformed into other shapes, to occupy other shapes there in the realm of gross matter by the inevitable law of refinement or evolution.

"You are not dead, and never can be; in fact, there is no such state as death, either to life or matter. You are not on your way to meet any God, but yourself. I am not, neither is the one who has appeared here with me, an angel. He is your relation by birth, as you would designate him on Aer; he entered the sphere of Aer long before you did, and left it before you entered it; he has unfolded to his present condition outside, and free from gross matter, and now is far in advance of me; and as I told you, he has come to impart strength to you, and in time you will realize all he gives; you cannot enter his sphere, for you have not yet expanded to the same degree; he cannot come close to you, for the finer spiritual cannot return to the grosser elements; only the influence of the finer can be exerted towards the grosser. While you are finer, much so, than when held by the grosser body, you are yet held by most of the conditions of Aer, and until you are fully free, you cannot reach him. You now notice that he seems to you as nearly transparent; that is because he has unfolded so far beyond your sphere, he cannot articulate sounds which would be words to you so you could hold communication with him; he could only converse with you so you could understand him, by the same manner I have so many times sensed your thoughts and questions so mysteriously to you; as you are not able to do that yet, you will have to be content to know you have those near you who are your friends beside your teacher, and that in time you can see and know them.

"You are not on your way to heaven, unless that be the state of harmony one occupies when they have expanded to a condition where they can understand and control self."

"The more you tell me, the more mixed I become," I said, as I raised myself to a sitting position on the edge of my bed, and looked at her.

"You tell me I have no body; I am not dead. There is no God but myself. No heaven, but harmony. No angels; that I must expand, and that I will sometime. That I cannot do any good to my lost companions; and convey to me the thought that to gratify curiosity is of no value. I think I must be very ignorant about life. Must I understand that life is the all?"

"Your last eight words contain the one great question of eternity, my brother; and eternity will not be long enough to answer the question. Your question becomes the lever by which all unfoldment is attained. You ask where you are. I now answer. You are just where you may desire to be; you may be where your aspirations may lead you: your aspirations will be governed by your understanding of self, and the control of the same. Like water, you can never rise above the fountain; that fountain is yourself; it is propelled by what we have already discovered, and styled love and passion; neither must be prevented; but guided by reason and analysis, they will force the expansion of your individuality along lines which must cause an understanding of not only self, but all causes that have produced all previous effects, and will necessarily become the incentives to aspirations to any and every position you may conceive or desire.

"When in your dream, you suffered the extreme torments of your quickened self, you thought to arise and search for your teacher; had you attempted it, you would have had to go through all the vast universe, and search through all eternity, for time and space are limitless; one can find another only as he is adapted to the one he seeks. Can you understand now where you are? Can you understand that it all depends upon your own ability to be anywhere?"

"Oh, my teacher," I said, standing erect before her. "I can but faintly understand your meaning; as I interpret what you say, I realize that it means work; unceasing work. It is entirely contrary to my teachings while in earth-life. I have been taught to believe that when earth life was done, that if I went to heaven, it would mean eternal rest, but now that I have arrived as near heaven as possible, as you demonstrate it, it would seem that there cannot be so much rest here as I could have if I so desired on earth."

"Please do not disturb yourself about rest, my brother. While you were on Aer, all work was depressing to life; it was exhausting to the physical; seldom harmonious to the spirit; seldom producing satisfactory results to the individual; so, all were weary, and the only consolation was in the anticipation of a long rest.

"Work here, is according to the desire, and in that line which must give harmony. I will soon lead you where you shall see how people work in this sphere. Work here, becomes rest; for all here can choose their occupation. On Aer, you worked because you were taught to be afraid to leave that sphere. So-called death was the great goblin which awed all, and it was called the king of terrors; to escape it through starvation, or sickness, or so-called accident, every means imaginable was devised; and all peoples because of their fear accepted anything handy to keep their material busy, that the mind might not suffer, or see the great king; for that reason, few could choose the work that was agreeable. Therefore few were prepared to meet the change. the false teachers there assumed to tell what they know nothing about; and to help to remove the fear of an existence beyond the stage of life's expansion, they lyingly told the story of eternal rest in heaven; that rest being the balm to assuage the anxiety which all had.

Life is work, in any sense; it is illustrated fully by fermentation. Certain liquids do not choose fermentation to clear themselves, or to make them pure; it is a fixed law or principle that compels them to work, as it is termed by the people of Aer. So life is forced by the same law, to throw off all crude matter or conditions. Animate being able to reason, that reason has been accepted without a full analysis, it has led to error; and so, work has been irksome; all have accepted it in any form as a mere makeshift for the time, with a hope of an eternity beyond where all should pass the time idly, or, as most have accepted the idea, as a kind of compensation or reward for doing that which they were compelled to do but did not desire. Had your people thought more about so-called death, and had reckoned the possibilities of a life beyond that stage, and less of the material existence, they would have lost their fear and been in a far better condition when they came here. Those who enter this sphere from some of the planets are far more advanced than those from Aer.

"Your work is going on now, for you are gaining light; you see your past and know its value; in the little time you have spent in my company you have been made to see your deprivations, and now you are learning how to choose the work agreeable to you. You will not choose, for as you gain light, or learn your qualifications, you will find that you become interested in that which will impart light or knowledge, and the pleasing occupation will be so harmonious with your life, that it will be a rest for you. It is only where inharmony exists, that there is any desire for rest; so, as you enter the realm of harmony you will naturally gravitate to the occupation you are fitted for; there will be work; there will be rest. As you progress, so will the work become more intricate, and the rest will come as a natural consequence, being always the companion of agreeable work."

I seated myself again on the edge of my bed and looked at him, she had said was my relative; he had assumed a more dense form; his garment, which was a simple flowing white robe that hung from his shoulders like a winding sheet, and held at his waist by a girdle, was so dazzlingly bright, that I turned towards my teacher for relief to my eyes; she sensed my perplexity, and smiled as she said:

"You can now, to a certain extent understand as you behold him, how impossible it is for the lesser to approach the more refined. He, your brother by the same mother, has unfolded so much more than you, that his purity dazzles your sight. You were jealous, when you first discovered his presence here; you were not willing to allow others the same things you possessed; you reasoned that you wanted me for yourself alone; could not share me with others. This shows that your love for me was not perfect. He whose being was started at the same fountain head as yours, has become my teacher, and his love for me is as strong as yours, but it is more pure; that is, it is unalloyed by selfishness; so, although he knows your relation to me, yet there is no resentment with him; he knows how you regard me, but your respect for me intensifies his affinity for me. Where true love exists, jealousy can not be.

So, my brother, learn another lesson. That is, that toleration must be one of the cardinal points to ever keep in mind. You will thus discover that it will aid you in advancement; and jealousy will thereby be eliminated.

"My teacher is free from every taint of jealousy, and has perfect control of self at all times. Now that we have met once, it may be a frequent occurrence; he will bring to us both, strength to overcome many obstacles, and as you continue to expand, you will be able to approach nearer his sphere. What that sphere is will be plainly understood by you in time."

"What is the number of his sphere?" said I. I was so desirous of reaching him, I wanted to count the spheres that separated us, so as to, as far as possible, calculate how long it would take me to reach him.

"There can be no number to this, or any sphere," said my teacher, with a pitying smile. "There are as many spheres as there are individualities; spheres are recognized by the capabilities of the personalities, and their graded qualifications. It may seem incongruous to you, but it is a fact, that while some may be in advance of you, yet you may be in advance of them in some respects. So you may see that spheres blend, and interblend; and not until one has mastered all cause and effect up to a certain limit in unfoldment can he go beyond, or to any position far beyond the sphere where he originated; for according to the degree of development of the seed, so must the fruit be; that development does not pertain wholly to he material formation; in fact the material has little to do with it; but the mind, or the life, has all to do that is of any value; for all matter is subject to the mind or life; and in just so far as one is expanded when generated in the first or material sphere, so is that one prepared to accelerate his speed towards broader spheres. But even in that, one must be of a logical, philosophical, and analytical temperament, or such will fail to realize their opportunities and capabilities, and thereby, instead of advancing along the lines of great expansion, they will be compelled to stagger on with no particular point in view.

"Such is your condition. You were generated under such shallow and narrow, and at the same time gross material conditions, that you could not receive any instructions about the control of self; in fact there were very few if any about you, who understood anything about the laws of life and their application to material things; consequently, until you were forced to a position where your actual condition was made plain to you, you had no incentive to attempt to expand your intellect; or, that you may fully understand my meaning, I will say; you never had any thought that you must by your own self, do your own thinking about the eternal future.

"We will stop the subject here; I think that you are now prepared to go out and visit some of the scenes I have promised to show you."

CHAPTER XI.

An Awakening.

She took me by the arm, and as in former times, we glided from the room without any exertion on my part. As we came upon the lawn in front of the house, a most wonderful picture was presented to my sight. To an unlimited extent on every side, the scene was varied and picturesque. We were on a very high mountain; a deep valley lay far down below; between it and us the sides of the mountain were rolling, or of a gibbous nature, interspersed on either hand by deep ravines where were to be seen huge boulders, and at places were high and jagged cliffs; in some places streams of water were splashing over them the mist from which caused beautiful rainbows; these streams flowed on down the mountain, there mingling with larger streams, which flowed away many miles to a great sea that reflected the rays of a bright sun in dazzling grandeur; large forests were numerous to relieve the otherwise monotonous landscape.

The sides of this mountain were many miles in extent, yet far away we could see other mountains and valleys equally as extensive, between which there were numerous broad plains on which could be seen cities and towns of large dimensions.

The most far distant point in all this vast panorama was as distinct and as plain as it was in our immediate vicinity. We stopped long enough near the house to allow me to take a cursory glance, then my teacher said:

"I think our first visit will be among those who have lived lives of ease and idleness on Aer; those who have shown to their fellows that they were to themselves all sufficient, and required no aid or assistance from others."

She led the way down the mountain side, in a straight course for a long distance; we came to a high wall which extended along the path we had followed for several rods; we found a gate and passed through, as we did so, a peculiar odor came to my nostrils, and instinctively I put my hand over my nose and said:

"This smell reminds me of the hold of my old ship, where the bilge water was."

"And no doubt it is of the same origin," said my teacher. "That is, it is caused by stagnation. The people we will see within this enclosure are hermits, and everything, even to the atmosphere, has vecome pregnant with their unchangeable ways; and until they awaken to a sense of their condition, they will remain, and all their surroundings will remain as you will see them.

"They believe they are doing their best; they have been informed to the contrary, but it has had no effect upon them as yet."

We followed a narrow and winding path from the gate towards a house we could see several rods away, almost hidden among large trees; on both sides of the path rank weeds and thistles were growing; while away a few feet the ground was considerable lower than the path, and was apparently wet and marshy and covered with a dark yellow and pale green tinted moss; here and there were scattered trees of different varieties; yet no fruit trees were to be seen; I noticed in particular there were no flowers of any kind to be seen growing there.

As we neared the house I noticed that everything seemed to be in a very dilapidated state. Where once had been fences, the rails were lying either on the ground, or partly so, with one end resting on the post which was already leaning. Limbs of trees were scattered in all directions; and near the front of the house were the remains of a flower garden, which some time had been laid out by some master gardener; now, no flowers were to be seen in it; instead, there were to be seen weeds and sunburned grass.

We stood some time and viewed the neglected locality; no one but my teacher and myself were to be seen; my brother had disappeared as mysteriously as he came, and now, for the first time I had noticed that he had gone, and I said:

"My brother was not interested in such scenes as you propose to show me?"

"That is not the reason why your brother left us; he has other duties and will attend to hem. Like yourself, he is still learning; he is a teacher, as well as you and N; he must attend school, as well as we must. The lessons I propose to instruct you in, have all been learned by him. When necessary, he will come at our request.

"Let us enter this house, and see what the people are busying themselves about."

CATHOLIC INDULGENCES.

A Comprehensive View of the Same.

In The Progressive Thinker for Oct. 15, appears a letter from a correspondent under the above heading. The writer displays considerable, although not unusual, ignorance of the subject. It is not my purpose to advocate the granting of indulgences or to attach any importance to them, but nothing is gained for the cause of Spiritualism by misrepresenting, however innocently, the views of others. Rather does it place a weapon in the hands of our opponents.

The sentences to which special exception may be taken are contained in the concluding paragraph of the letter to which reference has been made. They read: "What a crime to teach poor deluded Christians that any man though he claim to be infallible, can give any one permission to disobey God's laws with impunity. Just think—grant an indulgence to commit sins contrary to nature's laws."

This would be a crime indeed, but it is one of which, with all her faults, errors and imperfections, the Catholic church is not guilty. A few cents invested in a Catholic catechism would enable a person to arrive at a better understanding of the word as used in this connection. An indulgence is taught in that church to be, not leave to commit sin nor ever pardon for sins committed. It is intended to be a remission of temporal punishment supposed to remain after sins have been forgiven and abandoned. It is a substitute for public penance practiced in the earlier days of the church. For instance an indulgence of 300 days is considered equivalent to 300 days canonical penance. No doubt your correspondent and others may judge this to be sufficiently objectionable, but instead of being permission to commit sin in the future it requires, to be valid, that the person receiving it should at least have the present intention of committing it no more.

Report From Geneva, Ohio.

During the year 1903, our society, the First Spiritual Church of Geneva, was lying dormant, but we were only waiting for the opportune time when we could secure the desired speakers. We were trusting and relying on the invisible forces to guide and direct us. We were amply rewarded in 1904, when our state president, Mrs. Carrie Firth Curran, of Toledo, came and rendered us satisfactory services, and through her kindness and untiring efforts, we have survived our difficulties and are now on the road of progression. Previous to this time we were unable to have regular meetings. We are now organized under the O. S. A., and have a flourishing society of twenty-five members.

Since May 1, with the generous aid of friends outside of our denomination, we have placed about seventy-five dollars or more repairs on our church. It is our highest aim and ambition to make our place of meeting so sacred that it will in reality be a Spiritual church in every sense of the word. We have dispensed entirely with all phenomenal demonstrations during or following the service hour. We have a parlor in the upper room of our church, where phenomenal demonstrations will be given on evenings devoted especially to that purpose. They will be made sacred and devotional, and all who come as truth seekers, and with a pure motive, will be admitted.

We also have a class of six members, the Truth Seekers, all ladies, who meet once a week for bible study, and exchange of thought, with a view of explaining the bible from a spiritual standpoint. This is for soul culture and unfoldment. We also grow financially. The proceeds are used to supply the deficiency of the treasury, when other methods fail to supply the demands of the church. Through the magnificent gifts of some of our members, and the many sacrifices of others, we feel amply repaid for all of our strenuous efforts to promulgate the knowledge of spiritual truths.

WANTS TO RETURN TO EARTH.

Some Strong Points in Theosophy, as Illustrated by B. R. Anderson.

Yes, there are a few very strong arguments in theosophy; for instance we are called upon to reflect that one may pass through this sorrowing world, kicked and abused, derided and scorned, deprived, it may be, of all that is calculated to make like sweet, and then we are beautifully asked, "Should such a one not be permitted to return to earth that he may retrieve this blasted fortune?" That seems unanswerable. Of course there would be no means of compensation in the higher spheres, and even if there was, such an argument, instead of aiding our glorious theosophy, would greatly tend to annihilate its usefulness.

Take a mundane comparison. A poor fellow, innocent we will say, may be sent to state prison. There he may be unjustly abused and made to suffer many indignities, but at last the end comes; his term has expired, and he is free. Who will dare to say that he should not be allowed to return to try it over again?

How very absurd such a position would be! Justice demands that he be allowed to return to improve, and to make the parallel complete he ought not to be forced to remember his sufferings in the first term. Let him now return, taste of the sweet and soothing waters of Lethe, his soul discharged from all memories of a past term and enjoy a second! How glorious! My very soul pants to be the victim. How often we hear, "Oh! of I had my life to live over again, how much happier I would be!" Now isn't it sweet to be allowed to dream thus. Oh! ye who claim that if we have lived in other recarnations we ought to remember them, only think how this happy sigh for another trial of terrestrial bliss would vanish if he could remember past incarnations!

Also bear in mind that he does not wish to enter a second earthly life burdened with horrid memories of this—no indeed! He means that he could greatly improve on this life if he could only re-enter the arena of labor once more, freed from all the memories of sad experience suffered in this; but why write for you, Spiritualists! You can't understand these beautiful thoughts. Nor dare you take our faith from the opinions of one alone; we rejoice that we all differ.

B. R. ANDERSON.

How to Increase Your Height

Is a Question Every Short Person Is Interested In.

If You Will Give Me a Few Moments of Your Time I Will Tell You How I Do It.

There is nothing miraculous or supernatural about my method; although I am frank to admit that many were inclined to be skeptical when I first advanced the idea of increasing the height after an individual had reached maturity.

This wonderful result can be quickly accomplished at home without any inconvenience whatever. If you are under sixty years of age it will pay you to investigate. Thousands of all ages have been made several inches taller by following my system, and if it is your desire to increase your height, you cannot afford to lose this opportunity. Any one who is short is seriously handicapped in all the walks of life. The business man would rather employ a tall, well-built man or woman than one who is short. To be unsuccessful in anything through lack of proper height is a misfortune you can avoid, for I can positively increase your height and round out your figure in a few weeks, if you will give me an opportunity. Can you imagine what a wonderful difference it would make in your appearance if you were only an inch taller? Your friends would favorably comment on your improved appearance. Why be short and stunted when it is within your power to be tall and graceful?

This is no idle dream but a demonstrated fact, which thousands stand ready to testify to. Everybody admires a tall man. Every man admires a tall woman. Will you not be one of these? It is impossible to tell you all about it in this article, but I have a book which thoroughly explains it all, and I will send it to you absolutely free. It costs you nothing to have it, and I know you will be amazed at the information and pictures contained in this work. My method is no experiment; it has passed that stage long ago, until today my system is used in every prominent gymnasium in this country, and the results are startling to a high degree. Many, through its use, have been able to pass civil service examinations; hundreds who were barred from the police force through lack of height now hold positions, and if you are short you are making the mistake of your life if you do not write me at once for this wonderful book. It will tell you how you can positively increase your height from two to five inches.

Have you ever seen any cartilage? The chances are you have not. My book contains actual photographs of cartilage which were taken especially for this work. These pictures will give you an idea of how I increase your height. The cartilage can be made to expand by a certain process. My book thoroughly explains it.

How thick do you think the cartilage is between the vertebrae and the joints in your body? Write down your answer on paper, then send for my book and see the surprise in store for you. You will then realize that the process of increasing your height is not so wonderful at all; it rests upon a scientific basis. Remember, the book will be sent to any address absolutely free. Give me an opportunity to prove my assertions. This is all I ask, and I know that just as soon as you glance through this book you will see that it is possible to increase the height of any individual who is not over sixty years of age in a very short time and without any great effort. Jay Gould in Spirit Life.

In her preliminary talk one Sunday lately, the Rev. May S. Pepper, the pastor of the First Spiritualist church of Brooklyn, N. Y., made the statement without qualification that Miss Helen Miller Gould had been in communion with the spirit of her dead father at a Spiritualistic seance and that he had implored her to give herself up to charitable work in expiation of his own mercilessness in the conduct of his business.

The spirit of Jay Gould, Mrs. Pepper declared, said to his daughter:

"I have met the persons whom my methods ruined, and the way they look at me is more than I can stand. They live here in beautiful homes. I live in a hollow. I charge you to bring me out of my present misery by using the money you inherited from me for works of charity."

Miss Gould is now traveling in the west and was to-day in Arkansas. Her friends here are in two minds as to whether to be amused or indignant at the statements made by Mrs. Pepper. One of them, a gentleman who has been associated with Miss Gould in many of her charitable and humanitarian works, said to-day:

"The statement of Mrs. Pepper is so absurd as to be laughable. Miss Gould is a strict Presbyterian. She has inherited a large share of hard common sense from her father, and is the last woman in the world to have any dealings with Spiritualistic mediums or to take any stock in their work.

"You may put it down as a certainty that Spiritualism has played no part in turning her mind to humanitarian work."

The above has been going the rounds of the press. If Mrs. Pepper made the statement attributed to her, it is no doubt correct. She is a most remarkable medium, honest throughout, and the life of Miss Gould's father was such as only fits him to live in a "hollow."

The N. S. A. Convention.

All accounts agree that the platform work at the N. S. A. convention in St. Louis was highly creditable to our cause, while the message giving was untainted by trickery and of a high order.

Mrs. Maud Lord Drake disappointed her friends by non-attendance. Mrs. Eva McCoy of Marshalltown, Iowa, was hurriedly substituted for Mrs. Drake on the first evening and came to the session after a tiresome day at the exposition without any thought of doing public work. Her messages were given in an unassuming manner but with an enjoyable accuracy which interested the large audience.

Brother E. W. Sprague fairly outdid himself in that phase at the same session. If he is not careful he will soon rank as one of our finest test mediums. His work on that occasion surprised his closest friends. It was apparent to even non-believers that he was powerfully impressed by an extraneous influence which enabled him to read for total strangers with a rapidity, exactness and in numbers which everyone felt was an inspiration from spirit world. Our brother's work will not soon be forgotten by those who listened to it.

Mrs. Laura G. Fixen's address at the closing session was not excelled by any other of the convention. With well chosen words, impressive manner and inspired thoughts she held the rapt attention of the audience to the very close. It was an effort instructive in influence and forceful in effect. The Illinois State Association has reason to be proud of its vice-president for she is an honor to our cause.

The convention's reply to the Hagaman challenge was the work of Dr. Geo. B. Warne. The N. S. A. board appointed the president and vice-president to prepare an answer, but Brother Barrett was so ill that the entire work fell upon Dr. Warne, who even signed the president's name to it. It was done pretty well for an "enemy of mediums," with little time and no references at his command, and while giving his superior officer professional care in the hours after midnight.

Dr. Warne is destined to be an important factor in making history for Spiritualism. His fearlessness, his unswerving friendship for honest mediums, combined with a mind that never becomes befogged, and being excellent as a rostrum speaker, he certainly will continue to be an agent for good in our Cause.

Spiritualism and Its Enemies.

It is a well attested fact that Spiritualism is not what it was thirty years ago. Why should it be when one very important feature of its philosophy is "Progression?"

Thirty years ago none but the stoutest hearted dared face the prejudice that was born of the blindest ignorance the world ever knew. It was almost unsafe to be known as a medium, in certain parts of this free country, and most of those so practicing were subjected to many very trying ordeals in attempting to bring Spiritualism forward.

Those times are past and gone, and with them went from the form many of our bravest and greatest leaders, but enough have always remained to do battle for truth.

Many have drifted into other cults and imagined they have made a step in advance of Spiritualism. Perhaps they have and perhaps they have only "switched off" on a side-track that suits them better. If so, we are glad; but they didn't take Spiritualism with them, for it goes marching on as unconcerned as if these people never existed, or had passed on to the higher plane. The awful void they thought they left, was never noticed by the onrushing, hungry throng.

Others have become thoroughly convinced, but to hold their places in society, the worldly society, they only attend a meeting or consult a medium under cover of darkness, and never take or read our literature. Such will never add to our numbers or to the upliftment of their fellow-men, and cannot be counted as full-fledged Spiritualists; and yet, they have advanced far enough to lose the scales from their eyes, and in course of time may advance a little farther. But Spiritualism will not stop growing on account of their absence, for lack of their support, or because of the apathy of a few moral cowards, for such they are in reality.

Joshua is said to have stopped the revolutions of the shining orb, hung in the heavens to light the earth, for the accommodation of certain people, but no one has yet stopped the onward march of Spiritualism. According to science, had Joshua done what is recorded as his great act, for the fraction of a second the whole earth would have gone to pieces. That might have prevented Spiritualism from existing, but nothing short of that could.

As to the "moral cowards," they are harmless. They mean well, but cannot do more than be outspoken when surrounded by people who agree with what they say, and perhaps say as much against us when in company with those who are prejudiced. We must expect this, but cannot pause in our progress, in our efforts to enlighten the world upon this highly important principle in nature. We must continue to educate the spirit of man towards its higher plane of conscious existence, regardless of these infinitesimal stumbling blocks, these mere pebbles upon the great shore of eternity.

We must continue to scatter good seed upon rich ground, though an occasional one may fall upon the rocks and go to waste.

The very ministers, or their pupils, who once were loudest in the condemnation of Spiritualism, as "all the work of the devil," are now claiming that 'it is not new, the bible is and ever has been authentic proof that the spirits of the dead can and do return and communicate with their earthly friends and kindred."

Now, why should it matter where they find their proof? Whether in the history of the dead past or the living present, so they become conscious of the fact that when they step out of the physical body they put on the garb of the spirit, such as they merit, such as they have earned by the life they have lived while in the form.

But, having learned from their bible, that the soul is immortal, gives them no more of the real, beautiful teachings of the spiritual philosophy than the kindergarten teaches the child of mathematics.

The present method of bible study makes it impossible for the individual spirit to make its own future conditions, except through the intervention of a Savior.

While they try to claim the principal feature of Spiritualism—immortality—they only claim it through those who "seek it through the Lord and Master, Jesus Christ."

They lost that independence, that inborn right to make for themselves a home in the future state of existence suited to their own needs and degree of development. They accord to Jesus full control of a natural law.

But, no matter about this; if they believe in a future state of conscious existence, it beats lying in the grave, dead, oblivious, waiting for Gabriel to to sound the notes of immortality, and so far has the advent of Modern Spiritualism been of benefit to its enemies.

The fact is, we know these things are true, and we know they will know in the great eternal sometime, and because they said it was of the devil never caused it to vanish from the face of the earth, and now they are trying to crawl in with the devil and his followers.

But this is a conquered enemy. We have some yet unconquered. We have them under our cloak, they are up under our protecting wings, and are the most annoying of all our foes, because they are looked upon as our own, part of us.

They are gathering up the food we unearth as we dig and delve into the hidden mysteries of the occult realm.

They are picking the crumbs that belong to our own family. They are defrauding the world and leaving the stain upon the body of Spiritualism. They are tearing at the vitals of our cause by presenting the false for the true, by showing to the world that what we claim as coming from the spirit side can be produced, or its imitation, upon this side.

These are our worst enemies. They stand before the world in our own ranks, and the world gives us the credit or the blame, as it receives their manifestations. They are hard to dispose of, because of the fascination their marvelous presentations have upon those who, to become convinced must touch the materialized form of their friends to know it is them. We cannot dispose of them while mediumship is a merchantable commodity. So long as our mediums are compelled to sell their manifestations to the public, just so long will these sleight-of-hand performers, this organized gang of imitators use the name of mediumship as a drawing card for their performances. People are seeking in the occult for the long-hidden face, and for some information of a loved one thought dead, and their great desire leads them into a light that often blinds them and they are made the innocent victims and the easy dupes of these tricksters, for their dollars and nothing else. These are led into our ranks under an imitation of the genuine phenomena. Sometimes they stay with us, and sometimes they become our worst enemies. The problem of the cure is yet unsolved. In the meantime WE MUST URGE FORWARD ALL THE GENUINE WE CAN FIND AND SUSTAIN IT IN THE MOST POSITIVE AND EFFECTIVE MANNER. WE MUST ENCOURAGE OUR GOOD MEDIUMS AND FEARLSSLY SHOW TO THE WORLD THAT AT THE FOUNTAIN WE ARE CLEAN AND TRUE.

We are strong enough now, if we can unite our working forces, to cope with this foe and carry our colors before the world as an institution of pure motives, high ideals and educative and uplifting principles, with proof of our claims in the true phenomena that we are able to demonstrate.

We do not own these phenomena. We can only lay claim to the right of discovery. Records of their occurrence are daily produced in the secular press, as happening among the church people and those having no religious preferences, among the agnostics and the atheists, etc.

Spiritualism is coming through every avenue, not a few, not for us alone, but for humanity's enlightenment and benefit.

A Striking Object Lesson.

A precious item of news comes from Arizona, which is instructive as affording a striking object lesson in the ways of the Catholic church.

We quote from the Denver Daily News:

Morenci, Ariz., Oct. 4.—A drama full of startling scenes and thrilling climaxes is being enacted in this camp, with forty orphans as the central figures.

The trouble started over the distribution of forty American orphan children to Mexican families by a young French priest, who is filling the place of Father Timmerman, now abroad.

The children, fifty in number, left New York September 26, and were sent by the New York Foundling Asylum of 175 East Sixteenth street, for distribution in Arizona and New Mexico. Fourteen of the orphans were placed in a Catholic home at St. Charles, Mo., and the remainder brought to Morenci.

The children arrived at Clifton in charge of G. Whitney Swayne, the agent of the foundling asylum.

At Clifton the priest met the party, and left eighteen of the children in charge of Mexicans of the lowest type. The balance, twenty-two in number, were placed in hacks and brought to Morenci, arriving here Sunday morning. The hacks were met by a crowd of Mexicans, and the children were carried to the priest's house. From the house they were distributed by the priest personally, turning the helpless children over to Mexicans. Many of them cannot properly clothe, feed and educate the children they already possess. Many of them live in hovels.

The arrival of so many children aroused the curiosity of the whole American population. Many of the American women went to the priest's house, and there found that the waifs were being given out without regard to the personal character of the would-be foster parents or of their ability to properly house and support them.

Swayne was called upon by a committee, and stated that he believed the children would be cared for all right and they would be left with the Mexicans to whom they had been given. Indignation grow apace. Clifton was telegraphed and legal advice was sought. Within a short time Deputy Sheriff Dunagan arrived with a warrant for the arrest of the priest and Swayne. Steps were immediately taken by the whites to rectify the wrong. A crowd of 200 Americans congregated at the hotel. The deputy sheriff informed the citizens that he could not take the prisoners until they had produced the children. A committee of fifteen was immediately appointed, who called out the custodians and gave them just one hour in which to produce the children. This they did. The Mexicans, fearing violence at the hands of the whites, became excited and carried the children to the hotel through a drenching rainstorm.

The excitement of the whites continued to grow during Sunday night and many of the white cowboys followed the stage with the prisoners over to Clifton. There the stage was met by another angry mob which had tar and feathers redhot in waiting.

On Monday night another mass meeting was held. Probate Judge Little addressed the crowd, urging moderation. He stated that the children could be legally adopted only with the consent of the foundling asylum. This was refused by the sisters and Swayne. The citizens decided to hold the children at all hazards. Swayne and the priest were told to leave on the morning train without fail. A movement was started to run them out of town and across the Mexican border at once, but cooler heads prevailed and they were permitted to take the stage back to Morenci instead.

These "Mexican families of the lowest type" were Catholic, of course, and so the children would be brought up under Catholic influence, and become "good Catholics," which is what the church cares for more than for all things else.

Retrograding.

The Episcopalians have placed themselves on record as opposing divorce, and against the marriage of divorced persons, prohibiting its clergy from ministering on such occasions.

What an impracticable world we would have if churchmen could bear rule in all their wild schemes! Instead of advancing, medieval barbarism would engulf us, and priestcraft would be supreme.

The farther away from the church and its tyrannical rule the more advanced the nations. The real reforms of the ages have originated outside of the church; of such was the war against slavery, against intemperance, and against polygamy. Not until so-called infidels had popularized the anti-slavery and temperance movements; did the clergy come to their support.

A Fair Question.

The people of a Chinese province compelled to contribute $112,000 to reimburse Christian missionaries for losses during a recent riot, alleged the amount would be gladly paid could they be assured the missionaries would cease to teach their obnoxious religion.

Is it well to force any system of religion on an unwilling people?

THE GARDEN OF THE SOUL.

Some Impressive Particulars in Reference to Grandma Williams, Who Left Her Peanut Stand and Became an Angel of Light and Love in a Fever-Stricken District—The Garden of the Soul Illustrated.

Everyone has got to pass through that magnificent change designated as Death. The king on his throne, the president in the White House, the high official who controls the affairs of State, the czar who wields an autocratic hand and whose will is law, the peasant in his cottage, and the homeless, poverty-stricken beggar, all exist on one common level when this final change comes—not one can escape therefrom.

Death is the grand leveler, a temporary equalizer, reducing to one common plane all classes of people, and illustrating the sublime fact, that there is no monopoly in Death. The monopolist who squeezes the poor, the money-loan shark, the millionaire crushing under his rapacious hands those who cannot compete with him, and those who demand their pound of flesh, cannot drive away the cold embrace of the grim messenger, Death.

Really, Death is an agent that brings to the pure spirit the incense of heaven; to the profligate, the sensual, the sinful and the supremely selfish, it opens the doors to scenes that are wild, desolate and barren. Each one reaps the harvest that the Garden of his own Soul has produced, when the final change comes.

The spirit can only go to that spirit home for which the Garden of his Soul has furnished the material to construct. Extreme selfishness, the hoarding of riches, the oppression of an iron hand, the withholding the hand of charity in times of dire distress of others, and cruelty in the ordinary affairs of life, produce absolutely nothing to beautify the spirit home.

It is a beautiful fact, a sublime fact, a fact scintillating with heaven's radiant light and bearing the divine seal of angels, that each one's Garden of the Soul furnishes the material out of which the future heaven or hell is made.

There are those in the lowly walks of life, poverty-stricken, lonely, neglected, careworn; every breath a long-drawn wail of anguish, and every thought tremulous with tearful emotions, so hard, so severe is the struggle for existence. Yet in the Garden of their Souls are the materials that will enter into the construction of a beautiful spirit home.

Why?

Because their thoughts are kind, forbearing, forgiving, tender, loving, generous. They go forth like incense from a blossom, and the Garden of their Soul bears a harvest so rich in benign spiritual effects, that it furnishes the material for a home in heaven exceeding in beauty and magnificence the loftiest conception of the children of earth. As Eva Best well says in the Ideal Review:

Think beautiful thoughts and set them adrift
On eternity's boundless sea!
Let their burden be pure, let their white sails lift,
And bear away from you the comforting gift
Of your heartfelt sympathy.

For a beautiful thought is a beautiful thing,
And out on the infinite tide
May meet, and touch, and tenderly bring
To the sick, and the weary, and sorrowing
A solace so long denied.

And the soul which hath buffeted every wave
Adversity's sea hath known,
So weak, so worn, so despairing, grows brave
With that beautiful thought, to succor and save—
The thought, it has made its own,

And the dull earth-senses shall hear its cry,
And the dull eyes see its gleam,
And the shipwrecked hearts as they wander by Shall catch at its promise, and straightway try
To wake from their dismal dream.

And radiant, now, as a heavenly star,
It glows with its added good,
Till over the waters the light gleams far
To where the desolate places are,
And its lesson is understood.

And glad are the eyes that behold the ray,
And glad are the ears that hear
The message your sweet thought has to say
To the sorrowing souls along the way,
Who needed its word of cheer.

So think good thoughts, and set them adrift
On eternity's boundless sea;
Let their burden be pure, let the white sails lift,
And bear away from you the comforting gift
Of your heartfelt sympathy!

Do what you may in life, the Garden of your Soul bears the fruitage that will shape your future home.

When old Grandma Williams many years ago, eked out a mere existence by vending peanuts at her lowly, poorly constructed stand in New Orleans, few fully realized that she was an Angel of Light. While her features were pale and emaciated, her lustrous dark blue eyes were radiant with divine qualities that glistened like diamonds in the Garden of her Soul, and their soft, gentle influence seemed to fall like a baptismal shower upon those who come within the sphere of their influence. Her presence and bearing was queenly, even behind a rude peanut stand, and her very presence was uplifting—a benediction. The rough, uncouth colored people, as they listened to the sweet intonations of her voice vibrating on a tender key, and musical to their ears, seemed to be imbued with reverential respect and awe, and in her humble work she was never in the least molested. The Garden of her Soul was radiant with the fruitage of the divine thoughts and purposes, and high and holy emotions that burst forth perennially in her nature, all leaving their benign effects, all contributing something to make her spiritual home very attractive. She constituted a most lovely oasis in a somewhat barren waste, where exceedingly few ideal characters dwelt. There was a tender pathos in the sound of her voice, as if some angel had keyed it to the sweet vibrations of a charming home lying amidst the fragrance of flowers, trees and trailing vines where a spirit poet resided who sent to earth those impulses that gave rise to an Emerson, a Longfellow, and others who were simply the flowering out of a heavenly influence.

Grandma Williams at her peanut stand had a segment of heaven in the Garden of her Soul, and she forget self in high and holy aspirations to see others happy. Verily though in humble life the Garden of her Soul was extremely lovely—and no one could find another in all the earth superior to it. It was composed of the blended effects of her pure thoughts, exalted works and noble deeds.

It was many years ago when it was sadly announced that the yellow fever was raging at Memphis, Tenn., and the great demand was for nurses. Grandma Williams heard the pathetic cry, and disposing of her peanut stand and home, she hastened to that fever-stricken place, and was assigned to duty. Not fearing death, with no selfish thought, seemingly utterly oblivious to the viperous danger that surrounded her, Grandma Williams proved a veritable Angel of Light in this fever-stricken city. In perfect health, never wearying of well-doing, her presence at the bedside of the sick and dying was a balm and benediction.

What a scene was there?

Many of the wealthy, fashionable, aristocratic nabobs had fled to places of safety; others who were stricken down were tenderly nursed by Grandma Williams, who seemed immune against the effects of the disease. Her very presence in the room of the sick and dying seemed to attract a segment of heaven, and it did, for the Angels of Light and Love were there, looking on this large-souled, tender-hearted nurse with evident pleasure, and showering down upon her a spiritual magnetism that gave her vigor and strength. She adjusted the bed of one; cooled the parched tongue and mouth of another; wrote down the dying words of one in utter despair, and in tender tones cheered all with whom she came in contact. And after the ravages of this fearful epidemic had ceased, Grandma Williams returned to New Orleans and without feeling exalted over the results of her wondrous work in Memphis, she resumed her duties at her old stand, vending peanuts.

What a grand spectacle this noble woman presented, returning from the poisoned, malarious city, after the full force of the epidemic had been exhausted, and quietly resuming her labors as if she had done nothing unusual. Mrs. Stanford may pose as the philanthropist of a modern university; Mrs. Hearst may expend her millions in aid of humanity; and Helen Gould and the others may use wisely what they have inherited, but not one can boast of such a beautiful Garden of the Soul as possessed by Grandma Williams, the peanut vender, the guardian angel in an epidemic of death, the sweet-faced nurse by the bedside of the sick and dying. They are simply dispensing what they never earned—wealth, perhaps not attained by righteous means, but accumulated by sharp practices in the arena of bonds, stocks and mines, and tainted throughout with selfish methods, unsavory in the sight of God and angels.

In the Garden of Grandma Williams' Soul all was pure, serene, lovely, sublime! Poverty without; wealth within; externally a pauper, but inwardly she was spiritually wealthy—as beautifully expressed in the Garden of her Soul. While you may sing the praise of Mrs. Stanford, Mrs. Hearst, Miss Gould, favored with enormous wealth, and rehearse their exploits with the money they never earned, tainted though it may be, they are not as yet the peer spiritually of Grandma Williams, and their home in the realm of souls will not equal hers—she whose presence was always benediction and blessing during the ravages of the yellow fever epidemic. Now in spirit life, in the full enjoyment of a magnificent spirit home more palatial, more grand in its various departments, than any that exist on Fifth avenue, New York, or that are occupied by the kings, queens and potentates of earth. Keep the Garden of your Soul clean and pure, cultivate it continually with exalted thoughts and noble deeds and purposes, and your spirit home will be divinely beautiful.

ANOTHER SESSION OF THE OPEN COURT WILL COMMENCE SOMETIME DURING THIS MONTH. AN INDICTMENT AGAINST DOCTOR PEEBLES' BOOK WILL BE SUBMITTED FOR DISCUSSION.

ONE SPIRITUALIST SAYS: "BURN THE BOOK, AND DESTROY THE PLATES."

ANOTHER DECLARES: "IT IS A BOOK THAT SHOULD NOT BE READ BY INVESTIGATORS, AS IT TRIES TO DEMONSTRATE THAT THERE IS DANGER SOMETIMES IN SPIRIT CONTROL."

THEN AGAIN IT IS ASSERTED, "IT INCREASES THE NUMBER OF DEVILS."

ANOTHER WANTS ONLY "THE PURE, THE EXALTED, AND SOUL-ELEVATING THOUGHTS OF SPIRITUALISM TO BE MENTIONED."

ON THE OTHER HAND THERE ARE OTHERS WHO DECLARE: "GIVE US THE TRUTH, THE WHOLE TRUTH, AND NOTHING BUT THE TRUTH. IF SPIRITUALISM CAN'T STAND THE ABSOLUTE TRUTH, AND THE CLOSEST INVESTIGATION, THEN LET IT PERISH!"

LEADING MINDS WILL DISCUSS THIS QUESTION, AND DECIDE WHETHER THE BOOK ENTITLED "OBSESSION, OR DEMONISM OF THE AGES," SHALL BE BURNED AND THE PLATES DESTROYED.

"Burn the Book."

This is an astounding assertion, almost a command, to come from the mind of a Spiritualist. Of all the people on earth who should be charitable, liberal and tolerant, Spiritualists should tower above, and we cannot believe that those who make such an assertion about this late book by Dr. Peebles, on the subject of "Obsession," are well grounded in the teachings of true Spiritualism.

"Burn the book!" How much that sounds like the Inquisitorial days, "Burn the witches!" "Burn Galileo and all his works!" "Burn Thomas Paine and his infidel works!" How does it sound?

That has ever been the cry of Catholicism and Protestantism regarding all freethought literature, and here we are, claiming to be Spiritualists and harboring, nurturing the narrow intolerance of free speech and a free press.

But the book remains unscorched and unsuppressed, and what is more, it is selling more rapidly than any other book published by Dr. Peebles.

It is burning with the friction of success. It was certainly a timely book, or the sale of it belies its worth.

Leading minds everywhere are buying the book, and will review it in the Open Court, a session of which will be opened again sometime during November.

Progress as Pointed Out by a Learned Rabbi.

Dr. J. Leonard Levy, the $12,000 salary rabbi of the Jewish Reformed Tabernacle, Pittsburg, Pa., and one of the most brilliant-minded men in the country, made an interesting observation on the possibilities and probabilities of philosophical speculation working a change in religious practices. He stated that if every theological student in the country would adopt the theory of Herbert Spencer's philosophy it would of course unquestionably make a radical change in religious thought as far as it is influenced by any philosophical system. If a man attends any theological seminary where they take recognition of new facts and discoveries in psychology and is influenced, there can be no question that every orthodox religion must either revise its terminology, or be, in the slow process of the growth of the new truth, thrust aside. As he personally sees the trend of philosophy it is making more and more for a recognition of all the facts which have been scientifically established in the past half century. This, of course, includes the doctrine of evolution, which is antagonistic to many an orthodox creed, and he thinks it will be generally conceded by those who are watching the signs of the times that the spirit of modern philosophy is in sympathy with the doctrine of evolution. The philosophical world for ages has been divided into two schools of realism and idealism, and the outcome of the modern disposition of philosophy will be the establishment of a new school, that will teach that the ideal is alone real, and that what has been conceived for so many ages by the popular mind as real will be taught to be nothing but phenomena. In other words, when the day comes for the establishment of religion on the basis of scientific research and the best philosophical speculation, the doctrine of the unity of nature, and above all the absolute unity of God, of whom nature is but a manifestation, will have received its strongest and most effective support. As a teacher of liberal religion it can be very well understood how heartily the learned Doctor rejoices in the new turn that modern philosophy is taking.

Of course absolute religion, he says, has nothing to fear from any new development in philosophy. Religions may suffer and religions may die, but religion itself is a permanent element of the human constitution and can no more pass away than any other essentially human sentiment. The common error made altogether too frequently in an enlightened age is the confusion of creed, confession and article of faith with pure and undefiled religion. Hundreds of thousands of people are devoutly religious, though unable to accept the creedal assertions of the church, while on the other hand hundreds of thousands are totally irreligious, though they apparently support every creed of the church. It is an old trick of human nature to approve the right while doing the wrong, and many who are religious from the teeth out are rotten with sin at heart and their soul is full of the gall and wormwood of irreligious passions. It seems to Dr. Levy that the tendency of modern philosophy will be in the direction of the sanctification of life in a manner that was not recognized by the older philosophers, though clearly indicated by the prophets of the scriptures. When the teachers of religion, therefore, will have personally assimilated the thought that religion is a life and not a body of doctrine, when they will have recognized the value of historic evidence in connection with the handbooks of religion, a new lease of life will be given to the churches, which, instead of being, as so many are, mausoleums or mortuary houses, will become the centers of every activity having for its object the uplifting of humanity in general and its worshipers in particular. These are advanced words from the learned rabbi's lips.

Very Significant— Dr. J. M. Peebles writes:—"You are selling more Books for me than all the rest of the Spiritualist Papers." This statement is certainly significant, showing that The Progressive Thinker leads in everything that pertains to Spiritualism.

Arbitration Must Come.

The Czar of Russia called the convention at The Hague a few years ago in the interest of arbitration and universal peace. Should it not be reconvened to adopt immediate measure to prevent such a waste of life as is now carried on in the Orient. Both belligerent powers should be compelled to submit to arbitration. This is what will come before the war is ended.

What Is Life and What Is Death?

A LECTURE FULL OF MOST EXCELLENT SOUL-UPLIFTING AND BEAUTIFUL THOUGHTS IN REFERENCE TO THE NEW BIRTH, MISNAMED "DEATH." IT WILL BE READ WITH DEEP INTEREST.

A Memorial Discourse, Given Before the Congregation of the Church of the Soul, by the Guides of Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, Chicago, Oct. 2, 1904.

Within the year several of the members of this congregation have been promoted by the Grand Master of all life unto the higher degree, into the next step of life.

Among those who have passed on, you will recollect Mrs. Parker, of River Forest, who had been a member of this congregation for many, many years. She put off her mortal form early in the year. You will recollect a little later, in the early spring, Mrs. Catherine Davis, one of the oldest members of this church, who passed away at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Faulkner, in Jamestown, N. Y., where she has resided most of the time for the last few years, but her heart and spirit were ever with us. One week ago we officiated at the funeral services for Mrs. Marshall, one of our oldest members.

During our absence in the interval of summer discontinuance of our meetings, our friend and brother, whose memorial we celebrate to-day, passed to the higher life: Mr. J. W. LeSieur. He also had been a member of this congregation for fully twenty years.

It is because of the absence of the pastor and that the congregation could only be summoned by notification that this memorial is held. Nevertheless, you well recollect the words of comfort and beauty that were spoken through the instrumentality of our assistant pastor, Mrs. Ashton, on that occasion. So this memorial is not because services were not given, but because an added service is always in order to remind you that the dead, so-called, are living.

So our especial theme to-day is: "What Is Life and What Is Death?"

In the ancient book of inspiration it says: "God is not the God of the dead, but of the living."

A poet in the Orient has said: "They die who enter into mortal life: they only live who pass into the beyond, the domain of Ormuzd."

A modern writer has said:

"This is not Death,
'Tis the Awakener from sleep,
The great fulfillment for which the mortal breath
As a sacred heritage is given."

That words having such opposite meaning should have become transposed; that people have come to think of human existence as "life," and of the great immortal birth as "death" is owing to the bondage that humanity has been under to the senses, to the bondage of the physical existence, mistaking a manifestation of life for life itself. And this mistake seems to go on notwithstanding nature all around you reveals a different order of things; notwithstanding the religions of the world with one accord teach a future existence, and immortality, no matter with what difficulties they may have been hedged around by theologians; no matter what barriers of creeds and dogmas seem to intervene; the general proposition of all religions is a future life for the soul. Yet people are accustomed to think of the body as all there is of life, and that this brief mortal struggle is the standard of life. Consequently the baby in the cradle is to be hailed with rejoicing, and the one in mature years who passes on is mourned as gone, as dead. In the highest philosophy, in the most exalted religion this is not so.

In the highest philosophy life is continuous, is endless, and people know that when the body fades and fails it is not the passing of the individual, of the soul; it is not eclipse.

We doubt if there is a real materialist in the world. The so-called materialist simply doubts some form or all forms of theology. Unless the materialist is also an idiot—which he usually is not—he must know that the changes that occur in nature are not death, but simply the change of the forms of life. When the "Great Agnostic" stood beside the casket of his loved brother, and said, "We hope to meet again," he voiced the universal hope which is the prophecy of all mankind.

The shadows of theology, the slender thread of theological faith, did not satisfy him. But under the great doubt that had eclipsed his mind concerning the other world he still clung to this immortal hope that springs from the soul, that is aware of its immortality. This is why he said "We hope to meet again."

Every one of those whose names we have mentioned, especially our loved brother, Mr. LeSieur, not only had hope, but that which transcends hope: knowledge of the continued existence beyond the change called death. No doubt was in the mind, it was not a question to be debated. It was as real as the sunshine; as real as the stars above; as real as the principles of nature which are unchanging.

When people mistake this human existence for life, they are mistaking the effect for the cause; they are mistaking what the soul does for what the soul is. If a man paints a picture, you do not point to the picture and say there is the artist, unless he has painted a semblance of himself, then you say that is the portrait of the artist. If a man plans to build a house, you do not point to the house and say, that is the man; you say that is what the man does. So the body is simply the instrument through which the soul manifests. The only thing that can pass through the change miscalled death is the body because that is made of chemical compounds, it is result of organism, it has beginning and growth, and must decay. Notwithstanding, some later day cults who are trying to teach that the body may live forever. God forbid! Because the earth then would indeed be an eternal prison, and all the other worlds and all the other knowledge that you seek for would be cut out from your lives; shut out effectually by the mortal body.

It is only a very limited mind or a very foolish mind that can contemplate the nature around and the soul of man and think for a moment that one physical body in the earthly state would satisfy an immortal soul. Therefore, why be satisfied to think that the body is life?

When the baby begins to manifest intelligence, you say the baby knows more than it can express. If you don't think so, you tell some secret, some mysterious things in the presence of a two or three-year-old and see how quickly the two or three-year-old will understand. The intelligence is only waiting for the mechanism to become more perfect to find expression. Just as you wait until your house is done before you occupy it fully, or for any work that you are interested in until it is accomplished. You wait for the buds and flowers to grow in your gardens, as the farmer must wait for the wheat crop to grow before gathering the harvest. There is time for physical growth; time for the expansion of the mental powers; time for the bearing forward of the work of human life. That is what the soul is doing here, with this house of clay, with this piece of mechanism.

This bodily mechanism is perfect considering what it is made of, and considering that in the expression, as far as the soul is concerned, the body can only approximately express what life is. But that which renders life more endurable and finally exalts it to a divine prophecy of what the life will be in the spirit state is the exaltation of unselfish love, the exaltation of unselfish desire to help others. The great benefactions of life are the real part of life. And when you think of it, the ties of home and friends constitute the real bases of human life. Then because of the larger benefactions for society and for the world, the great sacrifice of self for others, the ideal Christ is the ideal lover of mankind, is He who relinquishes self that others may be saved by the truth.

The wholly physical human existence or the selfish human life is rarely mourned by any one after it has departed. We know of one notable instance among those who were wealthy in the world's goods—and this sometimes occurs with people who are not wealthy—where the life was so selfish that not one human heart grieved when the spirit went away. There was only one love that survived that selfishness: that was the mother love in the world beyond, besides the Infinite love. In exact proportion as human beings in their daily lives are beloved and love, so are their personal presences missed.

These friends of ours were great lovers of their friends, lovers of those who surrounded them, of their society and congregation, and lovers of humanity in the large and enduring sense. It is because of this that their presence in a personal sense is so greatly missed. But in the larger sense of knowing that they are here, and of knowing that their spirits transcend their bodies, and that their powers of the spirit are greater when removed from the bodily weaknesses and physical infirmities, all this is an added life.

Now as our brother has entered into a more perfect life, you would say of him: He was born in Chautauqua county, New York, sixty-four years ago. He lived a number of years in Ohio, and has lived a great many years in Chicago. He had a wife and children and children's children grown up. He left with you his second wife. He was also dutiful to his parents. He was a loving brother. He was a most affectionate father, and he was a devoted husband. He was a true and loyal friend. And then you would say he died last July. Is that the measure of a man's life? Is that the measure of the immortal soul? By no means.

Loyalty, faithfulness, fidelity, generosity, kindness, hope, these are not physical attributes; these are not things that can die as trees die, as inanimate nature dies. That which can sing in praise as you sang today—and his voice might have been heard joining in the song if your ears had been attuned to the finer harmony of that which knows that "the mists have cleared away" from the shadows of human life; that which is aware that hope and promise, and fulfillment abide in the realm which is immortal and cannot die.

Into the great other realm, just as visible as the air you breathe more visible to those whose inner sight is wakened, or has not been clouded by false beliefs, by external sensations, into that inner realm this divine reality enters and abides. It is the taking off of the husk, it is the casting aside of the outward raiment that is too gross to be worn in that other realm. It is the entering into the next step of life.

Here is our friend. He has not left millions for people to quarrel over; he has not left vast estates to be taken to pieces by lawyers of claimants, but he has left the rare possession of memory in the hearts and minds of everyone who knew him. Yet people did not know him very well, excepting his personal friends. People did not understand him very well. His personal friends knew the generous heart; how kind, loving and considerate he was to others; how very helpful he was in the small duties in the household, in daily affairs; how industrious he was in endeavoring to work that he might help others.

Many people object to an optimist. But how much more genial is an optimist than a pessimist. The man who is always predicting disaster, always talking about cloudy days, always says that things will fail, is a failure from the start. Is there anything more successful than hope? Is there anything more beautiful in life than the man who is always hopeful—or the woman, who says, "Though I fail to-day in any outward thing, I will be successful to-morrow." It disappoints the speculator, it might disappoint some particular friend who had builded upon this supposed success. But if success each day is the amount of hope and sunshine that one can bring into human life for the day and for the hour, then our brother has risen into the great sunshine of his own creation in the immortal world.

He never entered a place that he did not bring sunshine. He never entered a place that he was not cheery. Whenever you saw him, even though there were personal trials and struggles, he did not load you down with the recounting of his miseries, his failures, his disappointments. He looked upon the morrow as a day of brighter promise. We tell you, in this kind of a life there is more riches than in the grinding nature that only thinks how much he is going to make out of you every time he meets you.

We would rather have the heritage of the optimist who is full of hope, and the failure of things, than the dollars of the pessimist and the failure of life.

If you measure life, human life, by loving kindness, by the wish to do for others in helpfulness, by a generous disposition—he would share what he had to the very last part with another—then you may make up your mind that the treasures into which our friend has entered are those of spiritual value.

He knows about his own faults, if he did not there were plenty of people to tell him. It is only the wealthy man, the millionaire, that people do not find any fault with. But the shadows of each individual's imperfections are known to oneself and to the Infinite. We know the brightness that was his; we know his loyalty to his convictions, even when opposed by intimate friends. He was not aggressive in his belief, nor in his opinions, but he entered into this spiritual knowledge with great zest and with that certainty that never fails.

Of course he wanted to live the life that was best, to bear forward the added purposes of life, to be near his family and friends and companions who later, in love, walked through life with him. He even hoped to baffle the doctors (the man who hopes to do that is optimistic indeed) and he did. Baffling them in the great and wonderful life into which he has entered, consciously aware and finally willing to take that next great step that bids one enter into one's possessions of spirit life.

Of course the members of the family, such brothers and sisters as remain, such members of the household, his own children and children's children, will miss the presence, the benign influence, the cheerful voice, the hopeful attitude. He perhaps would have wished to leave his children an inheritance of material value, something that would count in dollars and cents. But if they will take his virtues, if they will take his cheerfulness, his self-forgetfulness, his kindly spirit and his toleration towards others it will be a greater inheritance than if he had left them worldly riches. For those who are left behind, the little ones will learn that the possessions of his life held in memory is the treasure that keeps alive the altars of hope, that kindles a better faith in humanity.

He was a generous man who believed everything that was told him, and people often said, "perhaps he would be much more successful in business if he did not believe everybody." But we would rather believe everybody and not be successful in business, than to doubt everybody and have it tied up in gold. Just think what a terrible bondage it is—this suspicion; think what an awful thing it is to believe that every man's hand is against you. We once heard a judge—he was unusually luminous for a judge—who had been a judge for many years in one of the courts in New York state, say: "I would rather of the two believe everything than to doubt everything; because the man who believes everything has something, but the man who doubts everything has nothing. So it is better to believe people than to doubt them." If you have a few defeats you have no corroding consciousness of having suspected that some one was striving to be successful at your expense.

This state of human confidence, this state of human faith will be more and more encouraged when people live more in the spirit and less in the body; when you do not build with the physical body as if you expected it to last forever, and when the great store-house of the spirit is filled with loving kindness, with this good will towards others, with the desire to help them. That will be better.

He says, in his new found existence, that he knows that he made many mistakes. He says that he knows he had many shortcomings, "but I will endeavor to outgrow them." There is not one human being, unless it is the Christ or the perfected human life, that enters into the spirit world without faults and failings.

It is a beautiful thing that the affection you remember, the friends that you remember, those qualities that endear the friends to you are taken up by them in their new found existence. It draws them to you, it makes a better spiritual atmosphere for them to approach you, it enlarges charity and beneficence.

The next great step in human progress is for you to think of them kindly while here; to praise your friends while in your midst; to think of their virtues while in your habitations; to scatter flowers around their pathways here; to remember that the aged mother would like a bouquet in her hands to-day better than when her body is laid aside and she enters into the midst of the immortal flowers of her own life. It is a great thing to appreciate people while they are in your midst; to turn away from the little shadows and foibles, that are oftentimes the result of your own selfishness. Look to them, into their beautiful eyes and loving faces and know that now is eternity, that the great blossoms of eternal life will not shine any more beautiful than they do in those loving eyes. You will have less to mourn for when their bodies go. For usually you remember these things, and you think of them with bitterness then, to know that their pathways have not been strewn every day and hour with flowers, though you think you have never been unloving or unkind to them.

This friend never willingly wronged another. He may have done it ignorantly, but he never did it willingly nor maliciously. Stop the slander right here. When it comes in your ear, let it not come out of your mouth. Stop the word of criticism! Stop the word of calumny! Stop everything that you will regret when the human voice is hushed and the human eyes cannot look back into yours. Then the day that they enter into that immortal presence, that the great gateway of life swings open to receive them, you will not be shadowed; your tears will not be embittered, but there will be your loftiness to hope, wherein you will know that they cannot be separated from you because of the love that you bore them and that they bore you.

The test of true affection is not what people call "worthiness"; the test of true affection is to love your friend. If you make it a matter of bargain and say, I love you if you love me. I will leave you so much if you are so good, if you have such and such good qualities. Is that love? Does the mother cease to love her child because the child wanders in the shadows? Nay! Is it not true that in the night time the light is placed in the window for the wayward son, and sometimes the daughter? We think, and maintain, that it is a great standard of hope that has lately come before the world; that human parents put an advertisement in the popular daily papers that the light shall be left burning in the window for the daughter who went away, they do not know where.

By and by, as you accept God's love, as the Christian accepts Christ's love, so will this great human love reach out unto all the world, and you will feel the loving kindness and sympathy, the great affection and wonderful benefaction of that love that does not measure what it does or gives by the human standards of worthiness.

Now he felt that way. It is a strange commentary on the "Christian charity," that you often hear "this is a place where the worthy poor can be cared for." In the name of God's love! who do the unworthy poor belong to? We can well understand what the theologian will do with them. We know what Christ would do. We know what the Christian ought to do. We know in our religion all souls are the children of God, and we know that our brother did not question when a man or woman came to him for help. If he had a farthing, a penny or a dollar, if they needed it he gave it to them. People tell us that this is a false idea, that it "encourages pauperism," you should not give anything away as long as you owe a man a dollar. This is a good way to pay some debts; for something is due those who are in need, as it is the result of some human condition that you have this kind of a world where there are people whom you call unworthy.

Did you ever dissect your own life, and see how much of the unworthier part there was in yourself compared to the other part? But you have to live with yourself every day.

In the light of the great Infinite love and these companions of the higher birth there comes a solution of all these mysterious difficulties. The light of the "Soul Teachings," which he easily found and understood, illustrates his life. He accepted the trials and struggles, entered into them and entered into their solution.

To-day, dear friends, they draw near to you, those loving ones. Not only those whom we have mentioned, but more than two scores of those who belonged to this congregation a quarter of a century ago, who one by one have passed out of mortal sight into the great immortal and wonderful revealments, and as portions of that larger congregation bend above you at this hour. The veil that divides, the mist that separates you is cleared from their eyes.

So while the tears of nature must flow, and tears of sympathy for the outward human sorrow, the joy of their happiness shall not be marred by any grief.

Friends of the congregation, our friend and brother would give you greeting. He would sing with you, as you were accustomed to hear his sweet voice for many years; he would be one with you in your deliberations, one with you in your hopes and prophecies for the great work you are to do.

To the members of the family, of his household, he wishes he could reach them all, his sisters and his brother, he wishes he could reach all of his children, and the little ones, he wishes that they might understand the great, white light that he has entered into; that these children's children might know that when one passes there is only the shadow of the earthly senses in the eclipse.

Beloved friend, thou wert a son all-dutiful.
We knew thy loving tenderness and care
That made the mother, father seem most beautiful;
That thou couldst help them unaware.

Brother, we know thy tender care and earnest love,
Accept for each one a blest place in thy heart,
May they day by day thy affections prove,
And ever for them a portion of thy life impart.

Children, ye know the father's care and love;
Ye understand all that he would do for you,
And that, within his presence from above
Are ministrations ever kind, and blest, and true.

And children's children, grandpa will come,
Out of the new life and light will sing
More joyous songs than in the human home,
And sweeter blossoms from that home will bring.

Wife, do not think you walk the earth alone;
Every blessedness of love is here;
In its new perfectness and higher tone
It rings out the blessing from that sphere.

Friends all, is it not real that at this hour
Is the birthday of some divine, blessed estate?
You understand the message and the power
Of perfect love; no scorn, nor strife, nor hate,
Nor envy, nor worldliness is there,
But only loving benedictions everywhere.

Words of Admonition and Advice to Those Seeking Spirit Control.

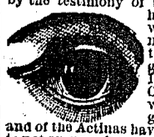
It is a well-known fact that human beings are subject to wayward impulses and intrusive thoughts and feelings which have to be thrust aside and ignored. It was once the fashion to teach children that these naughty thoughts and feelings were the temptations of the devil, but nowadays we realize that they are of more mundane origin and are due to physiological changes and conditions. The relics of the old fear remain, however, and many people seek for causes outside themselves and, being on the alert to find some scapegoat as an excuse for their own weakness or folly, they lay the blame upon evil spirits.

Sensitives who become unstrung as the result of too frequent indulgence in circle-holding, and attempts to develop and exercise psychic powers, are liable (like other people who overtax their energies) to become morbid, pessimistic, and neurotic, and in that state to surrender to their fear-thoughts and imagine that they are obsessed—beset by evil spirits who tempt them and seek to possess them. In all probability they yielded indiscriminately to the first impulses that arose within them, and believing themselves to be spirit-guided, enthusiastically followed up their inquiries at every possible opportunity, regardless of the need for good conditions and ordinary precautions. As a consequence their inspirations, or supposed "controls," may have had no other source than their own unfettered imagination and sub-conscious mental activity, and when they found that they could not obtain definite or satisfactory evidence of the identity of the alleged spirit they became alarmed. Thinking of what they had heard regarding the wiles of the devil and the power of "seducing," "satanic" spirits, they—instead of trying to understand the cause, or causes, of the unsatisfactory results, and studying how to improve the conditions so as to secure success—too readily jumped to the conclusion, and tormented themselves with the notion they were beset by evil spirits, who prompted their thoughts, and exerted an almost irresistible impulse to unwise or improper courses of action; whereas, by their own injudicious conduct, they induced a species of psychological exaltation and intoxication, which was followed by the inevitable reaction and depression. It is at such times of weakness that the wayward impulses of passion are strongest, and the sufferer's alarm is followed by worry, nervous dread and sleeplessness. When fear-thoughts possess the mind it turns inward and exaggerates the danger. The sufferer loses confidence and self-control, and instead of resolutely maintaining a level head and a self-possessed, cheerful frame of mind, dwells upon his troubles and runs great risk of becoming a monomaniac. In such cases Spiritualism is unjustly blamed for the weakness and folly of the victims, who, had they been patient and careful, would have avoided the mistakes which caused them so much unnecessary distress. Those who would tread the path of mediumship and win psychic unfoldment should learn to banish fear, and by concentration and self-possession gain the self-mastery that they can render themselves positive to all unworthy or undesirable influences from spirits both in the body and out. Those who are high-principled and pure-minded cannot be obsessed for any length of time, but those who are timid and afraid should undergo a course of self-study and discipline before they attempt to respond to the thought impulses of unknown spirit people.

Here, as elsewhere, order is heaven's first law, purity and strong purpose, confidence and love are safeguards against evil, and those who are well informed and honest need never fear the threats or influences of those of lower spiritual conditions. The Sister of Mercy, intent on her errands of love and altruistic service, can pass fearlessly through the hells of the slums, uncontaminated and unmolested; so, too, may those who possess their souls in peace and good will join hands with the angels of light without fear, in loving service to suffering humanity.—Light, London, England.

THOU HAST WOUNDED THE SPIRIT THAT LOVED THEE.

Thou hast wounded the spirit that loved thee
And cherished thine image for years;
Thou hast taught me at last to forget thee,
In secret, in silence, and tears;
As a young bird, when left by its mother,
Its earliest pinion to try,
'Round the nest will still lingering hover,
Ere its trembling wings can fly.



Thus we're taught in this cold world to smother
Each feeling that once was so dear;
Like that young bird, I'll seek to discover
A home of affection elsewhere.
Though this heart may still cling to thee fondly
And dream of sweet memories past,
Yet hope, like the rainbow of summer,
Gives promise of Lethe at last.

Like the sunbeams that play on the ocean
In tremulous touches of light
Is the heart in its early emotion
Illumined with visions as bright,
Yet ofttimes beneath the waves swelling
A tempest will suddenly come,
All rudely and wildly dispelling
The love of the happiest home.

Eye Glasses Not Necessary.

Eye Sight can be Strengthened, and all forms of Diseased Eyes Cured without Cutting or Drugging.

That the eyes can be strengthened so that eye glasses can be dispensed with in the great majority of cases, has been proven beyond a doubt, by the testimony of thousands of people who have been cured by that wonderful little instrument called "Actina." Actina also cures sore and granulated lids, Glaucoma, Iritis, etc., also removes Cataracts and Pterygiums without cutting or drugging. Over seventy thousand of the Actinas having been sold, therefore it is not an experiment but an absolute fact. The following letters are but samples of those that are received daily:

Mrs. M. E. Champney, 242 West 135th St. New York City, writes: The "Actina" cured me of Iritis, after the doctors said there was no cure outside an operation. I have been entirely well for over four months, can see to read and sew as well as before. I can honestly recommend "Actina" for all afflictions of the eye.

Emily Kapp, 1030 Galena Street, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, writes: The "Actina" I purchased from you a year ago saved my brother's eyesight. My brother was near-sighted, wore number five and six glasses, and now he can go to school and do all his work and study without glasses.

E. R. Holdbrook, Deputy County Clerk, Fairfax, Va., writes: "Actina" has cured my eyes so that I can do without glasses. I very seldom have headache now, and can study up to eleven o'clock after a hard day's work at the office.

Actina is not a drug or lotion, but a small pocket battery, which can be used by old and young with perfect safety, as it is impossible to do any harm with Actina. Every member of a family can use the one Actina for any form of disease of the Eye, Ear, or Throat or Head. Actina will last for years, and is always ready for use. Actina is sent on trial postpaid.

If you will send your name and address to the New York and London Electric Association, Dept. T. N., 929 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive absolutely FREE a valuable book, Prof. Wilson's Treatise on the Eye and on Diseases in General, and you can rest assured that your eyes can be cured, no matter how many doctors have failed.

IN THE WORLD CELESTIAL.

BY DR. T. A. BLAND,

Is a wonderful book, being the personal experiences of a man whose dead sweetheart, after appearing to him many times, etherealized, materialized and through trance medium, has him put into a hypnotic trance by spirit scientists and held in that condition for ten days, which time he spends with her in the celestial spheres, and then returns to earth with perfect recollection of what he saw and heard in that realm of the so-called dead. He tells his wonderful story to his friend who gives it to the world in his best style. This friend is Dr. T. A. Bland, the well-known author, scientist and reformer.

This book has a brilliant introduction by that distinguished preacher, Rev. H. W. Thomas, D. D., president of the American Congress of Liberal Religions, who gives it the weight of his unqualified endorsement.

He says: "This book will give us courage to pass through the shadow of death to the sunlit clime of the world celestial."

Rev. M. J. Savage says: "It is intensely interesting, and gives a picture of the future life that one cannot help wishing may be true."

The Medical Gleaner says: "It lifts the reader into enchanting realms, and leaves a sweet taste in his consciousness.

Hon. C. A. Windle says: "It is inexpressibly delightful."

Everybody will be charmed with it, for it is not only a great spiritual book, but a most beautiful love romance of two worlds. It is printed in elegant style, bound in cloth and gold. Price $1. For sale at this office.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Ottis Harvey, trumpet medium, wants an engagement. He says he sits under test conditions. He will go to any place in the United States or Canada. Address him at 68 Decatur street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Dr. O. O. Burgess, a prominent Spiritualist of San Francisco, Cal., writes: "As a member of the Society of Psychical Research who is seeking stronger proofs of the continuity of life after death, I find much of value in your 'strenuous' publication—especially valuable because of your fearless admission of evidence on both sides of the question."

Fired to frenzy by the seating of a spook artist in the City Council, the Spiritualists have got into the police courts again. Dr. G. E. Chesbro, a Spiritualist preacher who has been roasting fake mediums in the columns of the Chicago Progressive Thinker, was arrested yesterday afternoon on the charge of practicing his cult without a license. It is claimed his arrest is the outgrowth of a feud in this city between the Spiritualists who believe merely in clairvoyance and clairaudience and those who believe that the spooks come back to earth and toot through tin horns in the dark, squeal out messages from deceased Aunt Marys in the black circles, and dangle through hornpipes dressed in bedraggled sheets, like Howton's famed "Little Willie." Dr. Chesbro is a Spiritualist who was arrested once before and who made a test case of it that was fought all the way up to the Superior Court, Judge Smith decided that a regularly ordained Spiritualist preacher has the right to practice his religion without paying a license fee. The State Spiritualist Association, which is represented in this city by Dr. Chesbro, has retained Earl Rogers to defend Chesbro and his wife, Maud Chesbro, who is also under arrest. They were arraigned yesterday, before Justice Austin. The case was set for trial October 12, before a jury. The Chesbros were released without bail.—Los Angeles (Cal.) Daily Times.

The giving and taking and promising to obey in marriage, common in most usages, are omitted in the new ceremony contemplated, as the Spiritualists contend that no person can give away another, and that the promise to obey is the subjection of one mind to another.

Harry J. Moore and Mrs. Eva McCoy of Marshalltown, Iowa, have been conducting meetings in the Masonic Opera House at Oskaloosa, Iowa, the last three Sundays. They also held four meetings at North English, Iowa, last Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. After succeeding so admirably in their meetings during the last month these two workers have been persuaded to continue their labors in the state of Iowa during the month of November. Mr. Moore can be addressed until further notice at 625 W. Fourth street, Ottumwa, Iowa.

Mr. Chas J. Barnes has returned to Chicago, and is stopping with his sister, Mrs. Hamilton Gill, 522 W. Monroe street, for a couple of weeks. He will be pleased to see his many friends while here. Mr. Barnes had a very successful trip through the state of Michigan, and South Bend, Ind.

..E. W. BALDWIN WRITES: "DR. PEEBLES' 'OBSESSION' RECEIVED. YOU HAVE DONE A GOOD THING FOR THE CAUSE IN BRINGING IT OUT. IT WILL INCREASE THE CONFIDENCE IN THE SPIRITUALIST COLLEGE. NOT ONLY THE ONE, BUT FINALLY MANY IN ALL THE STATES. WE MUST NOW COMMENCE BUILDING FOR COMING GENERATIONS. OUR SPIRITUALISM SHOULD DEVELOP MORE BOUND KNOWLEDGE THAN THE ORIENTALS HAVE ABOUT THEIRS. I THANK PEEBLES FOR BRINGING OUT 'DEMONISM.'"

Prof. W. M. Lockwood delivered two lectures at Butterfield Hall, Syracuse, N. Y., to large audiences. October 24, he commenced his class lectures there. He will return to Buffalo soon. His permanent address is at 415 Delaware avenue, Buffalo, N. Y. He can be addressed there for engagements.

Wm. McVey, speaking of psychic mysticism, says: "Let us take Hamlet, for instance. I feel convinced that in the very name of the chief character we have the quintessence of mysticism, and I would write it in four Hebrew letters, thus: He, mim, lamed, tau, or as these letters sound to us, h, m, l, t, and interpret it as 'The water-god sign,' which carries us back to a time when the rain-god was worshiped as the Lord of Resurrection, known to the ancient Chinese by the name of Ye-Su. I have come to interpret 'lamed,' or 'l' as the symbol par excellence of duty or the deific principle 'el' or 'le'."

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

HARRISON D. BARRETT, PRESIDENT OF THE N. S. A., WILL LECTURE BEFORE THE HYDE PARK OCCULT SOCIETY, 319 E. 55TH STREET, ON THURSDAY EVENING, NOV. 3. THIS WILL BE AN EXCELLENT OPPORTUNITY TO HEAR THIS ELOQUENT ADVOCATE OF OUR CAUSE.

Mrs. Jennie Hagan Brown writes: "Will you please allow me to state in your widely-read paper that the parties who are industriously circulating the statement that I am living on a little farm near Fort Worth, Texas, are quite mistaken. I am lecturing in all the different states in which I have calls, for churches, associations, fraternal orders, societies and clubs, and I am making my permanent home with my husband where his interests are, on our ranch. Our home is called 'The Motts,' in El Campo, Texas, 'the land next the sky,' and about three hundred miles east of Fort Worth. The little farm is a big ranch with cattle, cotton, sweet potatoes, etc., raised on it. A number of our renters have good houses on it, and we are in a condition to give true southern welcome to any of our friends coming our way. Our home is near the Gulf, so we get its soft breezes—warm winters and cool summers. Come into Wharton county and ask for Joe H. D. Brown, Jr., and Jennie Hagan Brown, and you will find us. Our address is El Campo, Texas. I will be glad to receive letters in regard to engagements for the next week, at 40 Loomis street, Chicago; then at Holliston, Mass. I will lecture en route east from Chicago to Boston, and in returning do the same. Prompt attention given all inquiries for dates."

D. J. Moore writes from Fort Scott, Kansas: "We are a little band of brothers and sisters here in Fort Scott, and we are trying a scheme to enlarge the membership of your valuable paper; also our own ranks. We meet every Wednesday night alternately at some of the members' homes, and we put up the Progressive Thinker as the prize. We have tickets from No. 5 up to 20 or 30, as the case may be, and each one pays into the treasury the amount marked on his ticket that he draws; say, for instance, if he draws No. 5, it is five cents, or 20 twenty cents, and thereby we get enough to send for the paper and have some left. One of the tickets is marked prize, and the one that draws that gets the paper for one year. We have already sent for two numbers, Mrs. Staynor and Mrs. Hancock. We had with us Mrs. Virginia Bryan of Ohio last Sunday evening (23rd), in W. O. W. Hall, to a fair-sized audience. She is a noble woman, sincere in her work, and has a powerful strong control in inspirational lectures, and a fine, true message bearer. She leaves here after this week for Oklahoma."

"Hypnotism as a drink cure has been brought forward in recent years by various persons," said Dr. Kiernan, "but no important results have been obtained. In 1899 Arthur MacDonald, a specialist in the United States bureau of education at Washington, began advocating the use of hypnotism as a cure for dipsomania, claiming that where other so-called cures have been effective it has been through suggestion and not through medicine.

Allie Buhland writes from Indianapolis, Ind.: "In looking over The Progressive Thinker of Oct. 22, I note that Mr. Hammond says that when he visited this city a few weeks ago "he found no regular spiritual meetings being held." I am very glad indeed to correct that statement; not only are many mediums of the city holding meetings in their private homes and doing a noble work for the cause, but the Progressive Spiritual Society (and by the way this society was the first to be incorporated under the Indiana State Association) is holding services regularly each Sunday evening. In Pearson's Hall on Delaware Street, and this society encouraged the state association to hold its mass-meeting here, and now to the Spiritualists throughout the state of Indiana: Do you need the help of its missionaries? If so, write to us immediately so that we can fully arrange our route. We have heard from some places but you need us, so let us come to you. Let us, dear Spiritualists, rally around the white banner of Truth and Progression with more zeal than ever before."

Isa Wilson Kayner writes from Galveston, Texas: "An entertainment was given Saturday night, Oct. 22, at the Spiritualist Temple in honor of the 70th birthday of R. F. Ring, perhaps more generally known as 'Grandpa.' Mr. Ring is the father of John W. Ring, pastor of this society, and desirous of showing the respect and admiration which they have for him and for his aged father, they, through Mrs. Kayner, planned and carried out a pleasant surprise for his 70th birthday. A short address was given by Mrs. Kayner, who presented him with numerous boxes and bundles, gifts given with love to him by the society. Afterwards, Mr. Bondman, president of the German Society of Spiritualists, gave a fine address, and presented him with a package, gift sent by his people. Afterwards remarks were made by Mrs. Brockleman and others. Then Mr. Ring responded, and it was more than grand to hear him relate experiences of the past. When through all went down to a banquet provided by the ladies. Then after a lyceum march, all went home, feeling glad and happy over the day that will long be remembered by him."

Mrs. Ellen C. White, an evangelist, in a late address at Battle Creek, Mich., said that she had been a cripple from girlhood, but God makes her His instrument and gives her strength. At times she feels as if her limbs would not sustain her weight, but never, she said, has she felt her weakness when addressing a great audience. She, of course, is sustained by spirits (when addressing a large audience) who desire to assist the orthodox church she represents, the Seventh Day Adventists. Spirit influence extends to every church, but is the most pronounced among the Catholics.

The man who writes a real drama, according to Mr. McVey, lives for the time under the influence of a power which absolutely controls him to say certain things and leave other things unsaid. He claims that this influence is displayed even down to the naming of the various characters in the drama, and that these names are significant, and if analyzed will be found to in themselves typify certain elements or characteristics contributing to the drama's message.

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

Chief of Police George M. Egan of Waterbury, Ct., refused to allow Prof. Herrmann, the magician, to bury a man alive on the green. Herrmann said the chief was czar, and that it was the first time he ever had his efforts in behalf of science thwarted. There were hundreds at the green to see the live man put under six feet of earth. He was first to be put in a hypnotic sleep and then packed away in a casket.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox was invited to attend the National Spiritualist Convention at St. Louis. She failed to do so. Distance lends enchantment to herself, and she proposed to maintain the same.

In a small corner of the National museum at Washington is a unique collection of articles which may be said to represent the superstitions of the nations. Queer charms, amulets and fetiches which constitute the outfit of the "men of magic" are here found in profusion. Among the most ridiculous is a specimen of voodoo practice, and consists of a cotton bag in which are a chicken feather, two or three locks of a woman's hair, a sliver of pine wood and some blood dried on a rag. This wondrous charm is supposed to work remarkable cures.

Dr. A. F. Smith, who has been in charge of the hospital in the Washingtonian Home for the last twenty-two years, regards suggestion as very helpful for the moral uplift of anyone suffering from inebriety. "But we rely mainly on our medical treatment," said Dr. Smith, "which is entirely scientific and tested by long experience. First, we aim to get a patient in good physical condition, and then we use moral suasion in various ways. That is about the extent of hypnotic suggestion in this institution. No whisky is allowed to inmates for what is called the tapering-off process. The medical profession of this city and state recognizes our treatment as the most scientific and effective that can be devised."

Referring to the second letter of challenge, which was printed in the St. Louis, Mo., Republic, President Barrett said: "We will take no further notice of these persons. If they want to come to our meetings and witness for themselves the truth and power of our religion, they may come and welcome. We do not ask them to come and stand before us and give evidence of what their faith can do for them. We can go and see. We are not offering them anything for sale, we are making no contract to perform certain features for their material benefit or profit to ourselves. Therefore, since neither we nor they have anything at stake, we need not recognize these attempts to draw us into controversy with a view to the exposition of what is called by them "a fraud." We have a work to perform, for the accomplishment of the end which we believe is to be ours, so let us continue onward in the right way, nor give a thought to those disconcerting influences, unless it be to call the doubting ones into our midst and convert them to our faith. This challenge has blown up and has fallen of its own weight."

Wm. McVey claims that he has found the fundamental principle around which were clustered, and from which developed all the religions of earth. This principle is typified for him by El and its various forms as they appear in all the ancient languages. He traces corroborative proof in the legends dug out of tomes of almost forgotten lore, by the resemblance of the various names applied to the deity, and in the constellations of high heaven itself. The heavenly manifestation which to the ancients typified the supreme deity and overruling power is what we call the Dipper, and there are reasons, as advanced by Mr. McVey, and they sound very creditable, too, for thinking that the ancients had reason to ascribe wonderful attributes to that constellation.

Mrs. Isabella Powderly writes: "Dr. Evelyn See came to us on Sunday evening, Oct. 23, filled with beautiful thoughts on the subject, 'How to Live the Life,' that the audience seemed as one body entranced. Our meetings are growing in interest. Mediums, Mrs. Martin, Miss Snede, and Powderly. Readings were fine. Oct. 30, Mr. Fraser, the boy medium, will be with us; Nov. 1, Parker C. Marsh. Subject: 'Scientific Answer to the Question, What Is Life?' Mr. Coe will sing for us on that occasion."

Scribe writes from Detroit: "The Sunday evening meetings at Prismatic Hall are increasing in interest and attendance, although the society holding these meetings is known as the International Society of Spiritualists, and is in harmonious working order, there are no officers elected by the grace of any one, but all work together taking a part according to the needs of the hour. Mrs. Jenkins, of Windsor, gives the invocation, address and tests to the happy satisfaction of those present. The meetings are free to all, and many new and prominent faces are seen from time to time. Mrs. Penna holds successful independent meetings at 55 Grand River avenue, and the Earnest Workers have also thrown open their doors to investigators. Mrs. Mary Stein has been appointed pastor for the season. The various mediums hold meetings or circles at their homes, and spread the light in that way."

Mm. McVey says: "In the various Chinese dialects with which I became more or less acquainted, I found no 'el' but many 'le's.' Two of the 'le's' interested me in particular. I found the one which stands for 'strength,' it being in that particular the equivalent of the Hebrew 'el,' which, of course, is but 'le' reversed. Later I became acquainted with another ideograph known as 'le,' standing for the fundamental immaterial principle of the universe and as such worshiped as the basic god, and therefore the equivalent of the El (God) of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. In the course of time I became impressed with the idea that it is with this el or le principle that the enlightened human being comes in psychic touch when a great work is produced."

Mrs. M. A. Burland, pastor of the Light of Truth Church. Meetings every Sunday evening at 26 E. Van Buren street. Messages given. Mediums welcome. Come and take part.

Levi Wood writes from Kalamazoo, Mich.: "It was my pleasure to listen to a sermon lately from an eminent Presbyterian divine on the subject of 'Life's Tragedies,' which diverged greatly from the teachings of past ages, and the purpose and object of the infliction of tragedy. It is the wish of myself and others that through the medium of The Progressive Thinker, from the pen of your many contributors a definition or rendering of what constitutes a 'tragedy' and its benefits may be given. Let me illustrate: On the walls of a magnificent parlor hangs the picture of a young girl of fifteen, with most angelic and expressive loveliness, an inmate of the home. She was the idol of parental worship, and all that wealth could procure was bestowed on her education and the adornment of the physical body. Her fond parents had no conceptions of anything only on this plane; they gave no thought to any future life. A fatal disease suddenly took the life from that form, and in due time she made her presence known to her parents. They were conscious daily of her presence, and they were composed and reconciled that the death of the body opened the gateway to a life of the spirit. Was this a tragedy?"

W. S. Woods writes: "Mrs. Dr. S. E. Pierce and husband of Chesterfield, Ind., are now located in Kokomo, Ind., for the winter, at 718 North Main street, where they would be glad to meet all Spiritualists of the city. Mrs. Pierce is a graduate of two medical colleges. She is also a platform message medium. She gives private readings, both business and spiritual. She will attend meetings in nearby cities, when desired, and give tests if called upon to do so. She is sixty-five years of age, and is one of the old guard."

A recent visitor to a fascinating corner of the museum, Washington, D. C., says that one of the ugliest articles in the collection in appearance is a clay image of a mountain lion. It is one of the principal fetiches of the Zuni Indians of the southwest. The specimen exhibited was carried by a Zuni hunter about his person in order to insure success in the chase. This tribe considers the mountain lion as a sort of supernatural beast, and before going in pursuit of game they frequently invoke its aid by making sacrifices and other offerings. The fetich serves the same object as the bear's claws so commonly worn by the Indians who inhabited the middle west a century ago. A fine specimen of this talisman is included in the collection. It is suspended on a thong of deerskin, and the records show that it was used as a necklace for many years by the chief who collected the claws. Not only were they supposed to aid him in hunting, but tended to ward off disease and formed a protection against injury.

Several prominent Spiritualists of Grand Rapids, Mich., have filed articles with the county clerk calling for the organization of a Spiritual Aid Association. The petition states that the object of this association shall be to promote the general religious, spiritual and social welfare of its members and to build a Spiritual temple in Grand Rapids. The charter members are Martha J. Blandford, Zalmon D. Hinkley, Mrs. Carrie Ford, Mrs. Amanda Coffman, Georgean Pierson, Mrs. Ruby Smith, Mrs. Mary Sourby, Mrs. India Gray and Mrs. Carrie Hinkley.

JOHN WALLACE WRITES: "I WOULD BE PLEASED IF THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER COULD REACH EVERY INQUIRING MIND. IT WOULD NOT ONLY OPEN THE WAY TO ITS READERS TO THE BRIGHTNESS OF TRUTH, BUT WOULD BRING THEM IN TOUCH WITH THE GIANT MINDS OF TO-DAY WHO ARE, THROUGH ITS COLUMNS, SOWING THE GOOD SEED BROADCAST OVER THE FAIR LAND, FOR THE GOOD OF THE CAUSE AT LARGE, AND THE UPLIFTMENT OF HUMANITY IN GENERAL."

Chas. H. Greene writes: "Sunday afternoon, Oct. 23, Dr. J. H. Randall delivered a very interesting lecture before the Rising Sun Spiritualist Mission. That evening, Mr. Jas. E. Coe, probably one of the oldest, if not the oldest, Spiritualists in Chicago, addressed us. Mr. Coe spoke of the rapid strides of Spiritualism as he had observed them and of the condition of Spiritualism forty years ago. After Mr. Coe's address Mrs. Maud Lord Drake, another Spiritualist of long standing, made a short discourse, after which she favored us with a few very convincing proofs of communication with the spirit world. This is the first visit of Mrs. Drake to Chicago in a number of years, and it is needless to say that her return will be welcomed by Chicago Spiritualists. Mr. Drake, her husband, also addressed the audience a few moments after his wife's tests and gave voice to a few thoughts that were extremely interesting to all. Sunday, Nov. 6, 1904, Mrs. Mary Hill will lecture, followed by spirit messages by various mediums. That evening Mrs. L. Frayel will lecture, her subject being 'Who, Why and Where?' Spirit communications are psychometric readings by competent mediums are features of all our meetings, to which we invite all, Spiritualists or not, to attend. Our hall is at 378 S. Western avenue."

THE GREATEST LIGHT BEARER. R. T. HENDRICKS WRITES FROM BURLINGTON, N. C.: "THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER IS UNDOUBTEDLY THE GREATEST LIGHT BEARER IN THE LAND, EVER FULL OF GOOD SOLID READING MATTER. SOMETHING THAT PUTS THE MENTAL FACULTIES TO WORK, TO THINK AND REASON UPON THE DIFFERENT IDEAS GIVEN OUT BY THE VARIOUS WRITERS AND THINKERS, SUCH AS DR. PEEBLES, MOSES HULL, D. W. HULL, CLARA WATSON AND OTHERS; EVERY COPY IS A FEAST OF SPIRITUAL FOOD."

John Wallace writes from Ashtabula, Ohio: Unusually large audience greeted our speaker, D. A. Herrick, Sunday afternoon and evening, at Grand Army Hall. He delivered two very eloquent and forceful addresses. He gave us a genuine soul feast. His subject in the evening, Spiritualism, was presented in a new, convincing and able manner. He claimed Spiritualism to be not only a religion, but an unfoldment as well, a sacred gift, an awakening of all the powers of the whole being, and will live as long as man or time remains. The society here is showing unusual activity and all look forward to a grand awakening of our cause in Ashtabula. We are very fortunate in having good speakers. Much interest is shown in our meetings, which are well attended."

Frank Anlauf writes from Oklahoma City, Okla.: "It gives me pleasure to announce the steady progress of Spiritualism in this city. On the 18th of last month we again opened our meetings, with Mrs. Sears, late of Chicago, as speaker. Our esteemed president, Bro. D. M. Thorp, who is a prominent attorney, and his wife, are earnest workers for Spiritualism, and much of the success of our society is due to their untiring, unselfish efforts. The ladies have organized an auxiliary to help in a practical way, with Mrs. Thorp as president. Our society intends to charter with the N. S. A., an important step that should not be neglected by any society of Spiritualists, whether large or small, in numerical strength. I succeeded this week in getting an extract from Rev. Thomas article, which appeared in your columns, published in one of our daily papers. This man's advanced ideas are sure to reach thousands in this way. We must push Spiritualism energetically ahead wherever a chance offers itself to us; it is our holiest duty."

R. T. Hendricks writes: "Open wide your eyes and look into Nature's open book; ponder well over its lines, and thus unfold your minds to higher aspirations of its wonderful informations. On the law of evolution and the law of involution; both are working hand in hand, marching on to Beulah land, never standing still to rest, but each moving on to do its best. Oh, what a knowledgfe this, that brings to me joy and bliss, in that it feeds my hungry soul, and thus works out the perfect whole."

L. V. Flint writes from Corvallis, Benton county, Ore.: Rev. Jessie S. Pettit Flint opened her fourth season at Barrett Lyceum on Sunday, October 23. We shall hold services regularly every Sunday at 3 p. m. Rev. G. C. Love and wife will be with us the second and third Sundays in November, and will occupy the platform. We expect he will also hold meetings during the week."

A Vierebome writes from Oswego, N. Y.: "I notice in your issue of this week that Hugh Moore has again come to grief in Brooklyn, N. Y., Oct. 6—and they call him a 'Rev.' I believed him a genuine medium twelve years ago because my Spiritualistic friends said he was. I invited five principals of the public schools to attend his seance. We witnessed the manifestations of Pansy, seven years old at that time (I see she has not grown any older), and his Indian control Running Water. We paid $1 each and came away feeling like fools, knowing it was nothing more than a Punch and Judy show. Twelve years have elapsed since that time. Moore's methods have been exposed time and time again. I think, Mr. Francis, that it would be a good plan to devote a corner of your paper to be headed as follows: 'Fraudulent Mediums Exposed,' and as the exposures occur add their names. This Hugh Moore has been working the public in the name of Spiritualism for thirteen years. Put him out of business. The official board of the Illinois Spiritualist Association have made a move in the right direction.'

Wm. Wilkins, of Bedford, Iowa, brother of Dr. T., of The Progressive Thinker force, called at the mechanical department of this office, and besides visiting with his brother, became greatly interested in the marvelous operations of the linotype machine. His wife also called, and was shown the various parts of the machine. They are both old Spiritualists from principle.

Louise E. Zimmerman writes from Elmira, N. Y.: "Sunday, Oct. 23, Mrs. Tillie U. Reynolds closed a successful three weeks' work with the First Spiritualist Church of this city, and will be followed by Mrs. R. W. Barton of Binghamton, N. Y. Mrs. Reynolds has instilled new life in the work and members of the society, and not only won the love of her listeners, but doubly endeared herself to each member by the good work she has accomplished in the short time. A Ladies' Aid has been organized and preparations are under way for a fair and reception to be held when she returns in February. In the meantime, the work will go on; new members are joining and the outlook is bright for the cause of Truth and Humanity."

Elizabeth Delphin writes: "In your issue, No. 779 of The Progressive Thinker, I regret, a misstatement appears; namely, that the Englewood Spiritual has disbanded. I feel sure this statement was made as a result of supposition rather than knowledge—the fact being that our regular meetings of our society have adjourned, but temporarily, owing to financial embarrassment, our recent engagement having resulted unfavorably, and not being desirous of engaging workers until we were able to guarantee the expense of conducting meetings, we are quietly arranging our plans to continue meetings each Sunday, as usual. In the meantime, the Ladies Auxiliary is holding most interesting and instructive meetings every Thursday afternoon with increasing interest. We earnestly invite all Spiritualists to co-operate with the E. S. U., which will ever be found striving to give to humanity the best lectures on the philosophy, and only such test mediums as have been fully endorsed."

Mrs. Isa A. Cross writes: "The Hyde Park Occult Society will be highly favored by a lecture from one of the brightest workers in the Kansas field of Spiritualists, Mrs. Bessie Bellman. She was with us last winter for a short talk, and all who heard her were delighted. Come and enjoy a spiritual feast. She will lecture on Nov. 6, at 319 E. 55th street at 8 p. m. The social dance given by our society, Oct. 27, was a very enjoyable affair. Every one went home feeling they had enjoyed a good time, and plenty of good laughs, plenty to eat, etc. We hold these social dances every two weeks, so come again on Nov. 10. It is worth the 25 cents admission to listen to the famous Norton band. Much credit is due Mr. Norton for the faculty of giving the people just what they want, and putting the life and spirit in his work. Come and hear the music and join with us in a good time."

Wm. F. Ruffle writes encouragingly of his meeting at Schiller Building, Hall 301, third floor. Last Sunday was a banner day at all the services. He would like to see his midweek circles have a larger attendance. Tuesday at 2:30 and Wednesday and Friday at 7:30. They are held at the residence, 3201 Indiana avenue.

Eight cities extended invitations for the next annual convention. They were: Philadelphia, Minneapolis, Washington, Los Angeles, Denver, Portland, Ore.; Topeka, Kans., and Indianapolis. Philadelphia offered several inducements, among them a free hall, entertainment for several delegates, an automobile ride for the women about the city and a trip to the coast, but Minneapolis was chosen as the meeting-place.

T. W. Sherk writes: "Rev. Moses Hull will lecture next Sunday, both afternoon and evening, at the Church of Spirit Communion, 4308 Cottage Grove avenue. As Mr. Hull's lectures at our church are well attended, you are advised to come early to procure a good seat."

"The Marriage Ceremony" created a great deal of interest in the N. S. A. convention. But after the "ceremony" ties two together, the "interest" often assumes a warlike turn and the "interests" of each turns up in court.

A. Vierebome writes from Oswego, N. Y.: "I enclose you clipping from the Post-Standard of Syracuse, N. Y., Oct. 26, as follows: 'Fredonia, Oct. 25.—The complaint against the City of Light Association has been dismissed by Justice Drake. He held there are no evidences that its seances are not religious. This is a victory for the Spiritualists.' Whenever our genuine mediums are persecuted by bigoted, narrow-contracted thinking people, the societies should stand by them and show the world at large that our belief and teachings are entitled to the same hearing and respect as the ancient teachings. I claim we should receive more attention. Why? The orthodox give us faith; we give undisputed facts. The Spiritualists of Fredonia are to be congratulated on their victory. Let the good work continue."

Mrs. LeSieur writes to remind the friends about the progressive euchre party: "Instead of the evening session of the Band of Harmony we will have the card party. Score cards twenty-five cents. Six sofa pillows for prizes. Thursday evening, Nov. 3, eight o'clock sharp."

Prof. W. M. Lockwood has been at work in his especial field at Auburn and Syracuse, N. Y. His lectures are of great value to every reflective mind. Address him for engagements at No. 415 Delaware avenue, Buffalo, N. Y.

W. H. Harrell writes from Texas: "My subscription will soon be out. Enclosed find remittance for my subscription and for six trial subscriptions. I cannot afford to miss a copy of our grand paper, The Progressive Thinker. Every copy is a feast of good things to the minds of all liberty-loving, truth-seeking persons. Your Open Court is an intellectual battle-field where the old warriors, as well as the plumed knights, cross swords without fear or favor, so long as they respect the rights of one another. Too much cannot be said of the great benefits that come to those who have the pleasure of witnessing the test of these intellectual battles fought in this field. Let the good work go on. I will contribute my mite towards spreading the gospel of truth, and may the scales of error fall from the eyes of some who are blinded by tradition as their minds awake to the light of reason."

Elizabeth Johnson writes: "The New Thought meetings held each Sunday evening by Miss Mae Hunt in San Francisco, are attracting good crowds and are very interesting and instructive, as different spiritual inspirers speak from time to time. Last Sunday night we listened to an eloquent lecture on 'Equality of Sex,' given by Frances Willard; who seemed overjoyed for the opportunity of being heard once again. Her very personality and presence could be felt and seen through the medium as in sympathetic words she enlarged upon the glories of womanhood if given an equal footing with man. She said that she, as the mother of the race, could not raise beautiful, intelligent children until her environments were radically improved. She enlarged upon her old-time subject of temperance also. The rostrum was decorated in beautiful flowers and the Star-Spangled Banner. There are no tests given at these meetings, but in their place is substituted a question box, the ballots of which are answered by a guide named Peskalene. They are confined to philosophical questions that are educational. No personal questions are answered as the guides are endeavoring to place the philosophy of Spiritualism on as high a basis as possible and educate people from that standpoint."

M. F. Hammond has been lecturing to good audiences at Lafayette, Ind., in a church controlled by the Spiritualists. He would like to correspond with spiritual societies, with a view of making an engagement to lecture during the winter. Address him in care of General Delivery, Lafayette, Ind.

Mrs. M. E. Cadwallader, honorary vice-president of the N. S. A., and a leading worker in Philadelphia, has been in Chicago for several days, attending to private business.

E. W. Sprague and wife have been engaged for another year to work for the N. S. A. in the missionary field. They have been assigned the territory west of the Mississippi River. Parties, societies, and state associations wishing their services, may address them at 1102 North 18th street, St. Joseph, Mo., until further notice. Write them at once if you want their services.

President Harrison D. Barrett explained his views in reference to the half-fare rates, in the late N. S. A. convention. He said that many of the ministers who had been ordained by the state associations and approved by the National Association, had been "turned down" by the railroads because after investigation the road officials found that the ministers were getting their income from private sources and not from public platform readings. Thus, he said, the actions of the railroads were in accord with the explanation of Mrs. Longley.

At a meeting of the board of trustees of the Haslett Park Association, the following resolution was adopted: Resolved, That in the passing away of Mr. W. A. Teel of Bath, Clinton county, we feel that we have lost a valued companion and worker who labored with us in the cause of Spiritualism and truth as we understand it, and we shall miss his counsel and cheer. We extend the sympathy that only experience can give to the members of his family, remembering as we do, even though we mourn the loss of our friends, we do not mourn as they have who have not the knowledge that our religion gives to us. S. A. Haslett, C. J. Harris, I. D. Richmond.

Mrs. H. L. Bigelow, vice-president of the society, writes from San Jose, Cal.: "The First Spiritual Union of this place is having very interesting meetings; in the forenoon at eleven o'clock a conference meeting, which is growing in numbers and proving to be a good school of instruction. We have a question box at the door, and any who wish can drop a question in the box on any spiritual subject. The questions are read by the chairman, and mediums and others who are present, answer them. At 2:30 o'clock a meeting is held under the auspices of the Union where questions can be answered on any progressive or spiritual subject. For the present month as speaker for the evening we have Mrs. Harriet Heath Ragon, who gives a lecture the first part of the meeting under control. Last Sunday evening her subject was Spirit Identity. The latter part of the evening is devoted to giving spirit messages. Sister Ragon is lately from the east where she has worked in the spiritual field for years. On week-day evenings she also has given several trumpet circles, which are very satisfactory indeed. She is a very pleasant little woman, and is quite earnest in her work. John Slater is also in San Jose, but occupies another hall. There are Spiritualists enough in this place to fill two or three halls if they would only come out to the meetings. Are they worthy of the name when they do not identify themselves with some society, and show to the world that Spiritualism is a grand truth and a beautiful religion."

C. H. Toler writes from Marietta, O.: "Mrs. E. J. Demorest of Pittsburg, has just been with her friends here again the past two weeks and the interest in her seances is unabuated. The social and spiritual atmosphere pervading all these little meetings has been a remarkable feature. All in attendance have been delighted."

Dr. Beverly writes: "Special attractions at our next party at Arlington Hall, 31st and Indiana avenue, next Saturday evening, Nov. 5. Every lady that brings a lunch in a box will be admitted free and have a partner for the evening. Presidential contest will be open to both sexes, and we hope will decide the question satisfactorily. Vogel's orchestra will entertain the dancers. Remember, every Sunday we have fine speakers and first-class, honest mediums. Dr. Peebles is coming. Watch for the date."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give what ever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

"M." writes for advice, how to become a medium, and best serve the world, having a great desire to become a public teacher.

A. The first thing to do, to become a teacher is to become self-instructed. Mediumship may in rare instances become supreme, and the intelligence of the control become identified with the medium, and when it departs leaves its impress as culture and perception on the mind of the latter. But otherwise, those who would become teachers through this power, must train themselves to receive. Hence a severe course of study and mental and spiritual discipline are essential. The idea that if one sits passive, the good spirits will push him into place, is altogether erroneous and harmful. To passivity must be added the strength of activity. The help comes to those who help themselves. If you want to have inspiration from spiritual beings, study in that direction. This concentration prepares the mind for the reception of related, kindred thoughts. In wireless telegraphy, for the messages to be received, requires a receiving instrument adjusted to the transmitting. The reception of such messages is according to the capacity of the receiving instrument. Thus the receptiveness of the mind determines what it receives. If a person ignorant of astronomy should sit in a convention of astronomers, he would not understand their discussions. To one ignorant of mathematics, it would be difficult if not impossible to impress the propositions of the calculus. This must be taken as fundamental:

YOU CAN ONLY RECEIVE ACCORDING TO CAPACITY, HOWEVER GREAT THE OFFERING.

If you go to the ocean with a pint cup, you can only have it filled.

W. W. Walker: Q. Must we love everybody before our kindest act can be received, as Mr. Leadbeater teaches? Is it possible or desirable for an honest, virtuous man to love a vicious, lying villain? Christ tells us we must hate father, mother, wife, etc., and love our enemies. Is this possible?

A. The answer depends, entirely, on the meaning given the word love. The loose and uncertain meaning in which words are taken is the cause of great misunderstanding and contention. If we give the word love its true meaning, we can no more love those who are enemies, than we can heat ice to incandescence. For love there must be correspondence and sympathy. We may have charity, pity and desire to assist and elevate, but all these combined are not love. While we call the warm regard of sympathy and response, of respect, and generous, unselfish devotion, love, the opposite awakens hate, and to compound the two is to rob language of its power of conveying thought.

Mechanic: Q. What is the highest speed practical of electric cars and steam cars?

A. The tests of the past two years made in Germany for the solution of this question, gave for motor cars a speed of 117.32 miles in an hour, or nearly two miles a minute. The steam engine with these cars made 85.12 miles an hour which was the limit. In the United States a speed exceeding a mile a minute has been made for long distances over steam lines, and for shorter distances by motors.

The cost increases in almost arithmetical ratio with the speed, and the danger likewise. With the most perfectly prepared road-bed and constructed cars, fifty miles an hour for steam, and sixty for motors must remain the limit for safety, which cannot practically be exceeded. The limits of steam have been reached, but it is possible to run electric cars two hundred miles an hour, with proper appliances, and there can be no doubt but this speed will be attained in the near future. This will involve a complete change of methods of construction.

S. P. LeRoy: Q. Did Robert G. Ingersoll commit suicide?

A. This astonishing question is called out by a statement made by Rev. Francis A. Strough, in a lecture before the Y. M. C. A., of Utica., N. Y., and reported in the Herald-Dispatch:

"The most interesting assertion made by Mr. Strough, an unusual one, was to the effect that Robert Ingersoll had died by his own hand. He said he knew from the statement of a relative of Ingersoll that the noted infidel killed himself, and called attention to the fact, which had long since been forgotten by most people, that Ingersoll's body was kept many days; that his wife would let no one near it, and that finally it was buried quietly. 'But this was nothing,' said Mr. Strough. 'Ingersoll was an advocate of suicide. I was preaching in Albany when he delivered an address there advocating it, and the next day seven were found dead in New York with the article of his address on their bodies. And many more suicides followed soon after, and in nearly every case the address was found on or near the person who had taken his own life.'"

It is difficult to choose words fittingly to express opinion of such an infamous libel. The strong Saxon word "liar" is too weak. The great and eloquent man cannot meet the falsehood, but not a person in the world, including the Rev. Strough believes that this statement is true. But it has been the method of preachers to resurrect the infidel dead, and reiterate unblushingly the most infamous falsehoods.

For downright lying, and cowardly attack, the Rev. Strough eclipses all predecessors. His whole story is a fabrication of his bigoted fancy. Ingersoll had been indisposed for some days, and had sent for a physician. Yet nothing serious was apprehended, until he was suddenly stricken with heart failure. His advocacy of the right to suicide was qualified and such as every intelligent person would endorse. How would it have been possible for an address delivered at night, to be found next morning on the bodies of seven suicides? The more, Ingersoll's lectures were not reported in the press.

Is there a single "evangelist" in the world that will not lie for Christ's sake? Is there one who believes an infidel has any rights? And this reminds me of an occurrence which happened several years ago. An evangelist was working up a revival and in a hot discourse, said that "Bob Ingersoll when in danger was ready to appeal to the God he scoffed. Recently he was crossing the ocean on the steamship Servia, and a storm came on. Among the first to get down on his knees, quaking with fear was the great infidel, and begged God to spare his life."

There was a progressive lyceum in the town, and one of the members, a boy of fifteen years, had been trained to think. He at once wrote Mr. Ingersoll, and promptly received the following characteristic answer: "I have not crossed the ocean in fourteen years. I never was on the Servia. The story is an orthodox lie."

There is this peculiarity about an "orthodox lie," it cannot be suppressed. The deathbed scene of Thomas Paine has been repeatedly proven to be a fabrication of his enemies, yet is reiterated unchanged from the pulpit. Every preacher who repeats it knows he is telling a falsehood, but it is too good stock in trade to be passed by.

So now that this story of Ingersoll's death has been started by a "Rev." ghoul, it will be repeated in ten thousand pulpits, and each time will receive embellishments.

The dear flocks they feed on their fabrications are not reached by unpleasant denials and will go their way in blissful ignorance that there is any knowledge in the world except that given them in the little pint cups of the preachers.

SOUTHERN CASSADAGA.

Camp News From Lake Helen, Florida.

The cool weather has set the current of travel toward Florida. From New England, New York, Ohio and the Middle West, people are going in unusual numbers—many to Lake Helen.

The foundations of the new pavilion are laid, and soon the building will go up.

Among the late arrivals are E. W. Bond and wife, Mrs. Ella W. Marchant of California, Mrs. Emma J. Huff, Mrs. McGarvey of Halifax, N. S., Judge Underhill and family from Canton, Ohio.

Mr. Meyers has brought a span of fine horses from the north. The neighbors gave him a large house-warming Oct. 21, in honor of his new house. He will let his former house to Bond laborers.

Mrs. Spencer has numerous table boarders, as the Hotel Cassadaga will not be open till Nov. 1.

Mr. Magoon, of Deific claim, is expected. He will bring copies of his unique new book, "God's New Law to Mankind."

The road to DeLand has been covered with a new bed of pine straw.

The orange and grape fruit crops are very promising.

Mrs. Sadie Kingsley of California, intends to winter at camp. She was the able correspondent for spiritual papers at Lily Dale camp, the past summer.

H. M. Clark conducted my excursion from New York, Oct. 28.

Dwellers at camp in summer, find the climate more delightful even than in winter. One resident writes: "Southern Cassadaga has never received justice from the pen of any writer. Some one, I trust, will be touched with inspiration to pen the right words about this charming place. The hot weather is no worse than some days at the north. The nights are cool. I wish you could see this place as it is now. Although it is the last days of September, and the frosts of the far north have blasted the foliage in New England, every thing here is at its best. The landscape in the morning as the mellow light of the rising sun falls upon the dew is a charming sight. I go to the front door to see the million diamonds on the green grass on the lawn."

There have been on an average of twenty-two people in camp all summer.

The alligators have been lessened in Lake Colby, as several have been shot.

The Butler and Hatch families are expected in November.

Mr. and Mrs. Carrique of Rhode Island, will go to camp in November. They will occupy the cottage they had last year.

Mr. Giddings and a neighbor have grown a lawn around the Apartment house and the Philbrook cottage.

Mr. Baker, of tepee reputation, intends to build a cottage on Prospect Heights, as is also the intention of H. M. Clark to build one for rent.

Those who wish for information about cottages for rent, or rooms in Apartment House, or Brigham Hall, should write to Mrs. J. D. Palmer of Willoughby, Ohio (enclosing stamp).

The Webster Hotel is open and ready for guests. This is a well-appointed house, with modern improvements, five minutes walk from the camp. Address Dr. M. I. Webster, Lake Helen, Florida.

My excursions for November sail Nov. 11, on the Apache, of the Clyde Steamship Co., New York (the best line for the South Atlantic coast), and Nov. 25, on the Comanche, of the same company.

For special low rates and other information, write me, enclosing 4 cents in stamps for postage on Clyde folders, etc. H. A. BUDINGTON.

"How Shall I Become a Medium," Fully Answered

In Mediumship and Its Laws, Its Conditions and Cultivation," by Hudson Tuttle. Price 35 cents. Send to Mr. Tuttle, Berlin Heights, O.

THE N. S. A. CONVENTION.

Dr H. A. Cross Has Some Impressive Remarks to Make In Regard to the Same—Fake Mediums Considered.

Being a new delegate to the N. S. A. convention recently held at St. Louis, it was suggested to me that I write my impressions of the convention and any leading issues which may have been suggested by the proceedings of the delegates, for publication in that grand exponent of the cause of Spiritualism, The Progressive Thinker. I, therefore, submit the following.

President Barrett's annual report to the convention contained some intimations of discouragement in the work for the cause, and suggested the advisability of discontinuing the sending out of missionaries.

It also came to light in the outset of the convention that the two prominent and very efficient missionaries had also become discouraged and had resolved to retire from the field, all of which caused considerable surprise on my part.

The primary cause of the discouragement was not touched upon by any of the prominent workers in the convention.

In fact the convention did not appear to be awake to the most important issue of to-day.

Condoning the acts of fakers by remaining silent on the subject in the convention and elsewhere, or by open expressions of sympathy for them on the floor of the convention by such expressions as the following:

"I sympathize with the under dog."

"I shall speak wherever I can find a respectable audience," and it should be added, "without regard to consequences, provided liberal remuneration be forthcoming," for that was the evident meaning, and in other ways blocking the wheels of progress whenever any delegate attempted to arouse the convention to a realization of the importance of making Spiritualism respectable in the eyes of the public outside of its own ranks, clearly indicates to my mind that the convention was not awake to the importance of this subject, which I regard as the foremost issue of the day.

I AM IN FAVOR OF KNOWING WHAT SORT OF A DOG THE "UNDER DOG" IS, BEFORE BESTOWING SYMPATHY UPON HIM, and I am in favor of protecting the individuals who compose the "respectable audiences" from fraudulent manifestations of the fakers who, as a rule, manage to secure respectable audiences at their Sunday meetings. One of the means employed to secure respectable audiences is to engage respectable speakers of wide renown who, by helping to make the faker's meetings respectable and attractive, are aiding or abetting the dishonest worker in his nefarious work, on account of the fact that the Sunday meetings are established for the sole purpose of advertising the seances and various kinds of classes held at the faker's home.

NOT UNTIL HONEST SPIRITUALISTS EVERYWHERE AWAKE TO THE IMPORTANCE OF MAKING SPIRITUALISM RESPECTABLE, CAN THEY CONSISTENTLY LOOK FOR SUITABLE RECOGNITION, AND FOR ENCOURAGEMENTS IN PLACE OF DISCOURAGEMENTS.

President Barrett possesses the happy faculty of presiding over a convention in a very skillful and fair manner, and his earnestness for the cause is always apparent.

The situation as it exists to-day calls for a leader who is courageous enough to make a bold stand before the world, as one in favor OF ESTABLISHING A DISTINCT LINE OF DEMARKATION BETWEEN THE HONEST AND THE DISHONEST WORKERS. Whenever a leador is needed and the supreme hour has arrived for that one to step out upon the stage of action, it is revealed that the great universal laws of nature have been preparing a leader for years so that the supply meets the demand. It was so in the days of our forefathers, which produced a Washington, and later in our country's history, a Lincoln, a Sherman, a Grant and others, and when the N. S. A. was organized, its natural leader was called to his place and we beheld a Barrett. And now the needs of the N. S. A. and Spiritualism as a whole, will soon demand the leader who has been specially prepared for the task that lies before us, that of driving the faker from our midst, and making our cause respectable in the eyes of the world, and we behold a Dr. Warne.

Dr. Geo. B. Warne of Illinois, on account of his bold and outspoken denunciation of the dishonest workers, has been branded by a certain class of unthinking Spiritualists, led on by the faker element, as one who is not a friend to the medium. THERE CAN BE NO WARMER FRIEND OF THE HONEST MEDIUM AND WORKER THAN DR. WARNE.

It was Dr. Warne who, in his remarks at the reception held for delegates and friends, on the evening before the formal opening of the convention, in what is termed Mr. Grimshaw's Temple, sounded the key note of harmony and spirituality among the delegates, which rang all through the sessions of the convention, thus creating good feeling which, as a rule, pervaded the proceedings, with but few exceptions.

Generally speaking, the measures adopted by the convention were wise. At the close of the convention the differences among the delegates appeared to be merged into a general good feeling of fellowship and good will among the delegates.

BOOK REVIEW.

The Gray World. By Evelyn Underhill. The Century Co. New York. 12mo. 351 pages. $1.50.

There are many quaint and striking incidents, episodes and sayings in this book, which is tinged with a weird and mystical, not to say Spiritualistic coloring, strung on a story that to most minds dwelling on the sober realistic plane of life verges on the fantastic outworkings of a lively imagination.

Though not especially lively and interesting to the ordinary mind, the volume is quite readable.

What Is the Bible? By J. A. Ruth.

This volume, while not strictly up to Spiritualist ideas, is one that we can commend to bible students, believers and non-believers. It embodies the conclusions of a Christian man who set out to find the true answer to the question: What is the bible?

It is written in plain, direct, commonsense language, and is therefore better adapted to ordinary readers than a book written upon the plan of the "higher criticism." The book is on sale at this office. Cloth bound, 75 cents.

"Spirit Echoes." My Mattie E. Hull. This pretty volume contains fifty-seven of the author's latest and choicest poems. Neatly bound in cloth, and with portrait of the author. Price 75 cents.

"Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth." By Prof. W. M. Lockwood. The work of a strong, logical thinker, on a deeply important subject. Price, cloth, $1.

USES SPIRIT AS A TELEGRAPH.

Message Sent Across Ocean by Mediumistic Control.—Four Words Are Carried—Prof. Hyslop of Columbia Tells of Public Achievement.

New York, Oct. 18.—A system of wireless telegraphy which works without apparatus has been installed between the United States and England, according to the Society for Psychical Research. The message was transmitted practically instantaneously between Mrs. Piper, the medium whose doings were the subject of a long and sensational report two or three years ago, and an English medium with whom the Society of Psychical Research has made many experiments. It was part of a prearranged plan for the experiment, according to Prof. James Hyslop of Columbia university, who stands sponsor for Mrs. Piper, and conducts the society's experiments with her.

Sent in English, Taken in Latin.

The message was sent in English. It consisted of four English words, but was written off by the British medium in Latin. This, says Prof. Hyslop, is owing to the peculiar manner in which communications are carried on between "controls" on the other side of death and living mediums. It is a process, he says, not readily comprehended by the unscientific mind.

It was not telepathy; that is a straight communication of one mind with another. Prof. Hyslop is certain on that point. It was done through the agency of a spirit.

"I am not at liberty to tell the wording of the message or the exact conditions of the experiment," said Prof. Hyslop to-night. "That will all come out in the next report of the society, together with a great many advanced experiments which we have been making since our last report. The full publication of the facts will explain why the message was transmitted in Latin.

Receiver Did Not Know Latin.

"The conditions were such that it came through the medium's subliminal consciousness in that language. Understand, she doesn't know Latin herself.

"The public does not understand the probable relations between a medium and his control—by 'control' I mean a spirit, or whatever it is which is sending the message. The medium, as every one knows, is in an abnormal mental condition when the message is received—a clairvoyant condition we call it.

"What every one does not know is that the control himself probably enters an abnormal mental condition before he, too, can send a message.

Tells of Another Strange Case.

"This is not the first instance in our experiments, although it is the first instance in which the attempt has been deliberate. Some time ago one of our members who lives near Chicago was holding communication with a deceased relative through a medium. Suddenly the question was asked:

"'Why is Helen playing the piano?'

"Helen is his daughter and was then at home near Chicago. He took the time at once; it was 11:36 a. m. Computing the difference in time he telegraphed to his wife asking what Helen was doing between 11 and 11:40 o'clock that morning, Boston time. The answer came:

"'Practicing on piano.'

"The medium herself know nothing about his daughter Helen and her habits. To the best of my belief, she did not know he had a daughter Helen.

Greatest Precautions Used.

"In the latest experiments with transmission between the United States and England we used every precaution to insure against accident, collusion or fraud. I do not know if it was transmitted instantaneously. It was certainly sent and delivered inside of half an hour. The sentence used was not a stock phrase which might be hit upon at the other end by guesswork. It was an unusual phrase made up at the moment of sending.

"As nearly as we can make out the conditions in the spirit world are such that space is not a factor with them. That ability to command space seems to be common with them. A thousand miles is no more than an inch. However, we have made only a few experiments in that direction.

Why Mrs. Piper Was Chosen.

"I may say while we are speaking of Mrs. Piper that she is not the only medium we have used in our experiments. We have several others. But she is the only one, in this country at least, with whom we have conducted elaborate experiments surrounded by all the precautions of scientific method and carried on through many years. The precautions we took in the beginning were unusual.

"We found her as a professional medium. We tested her for nearly a year by sending to her persons whom she never had seen before and whose names, in all human probability, she had never heard before. Then she was watched by detectives. After that she was sent to England. Her baggage was carefully searched for any lists which form part of the equipment of the ordinary professional mediums."

AFTER MIDNIGHT COMETH MORN.

The years come and the years go,
And the leaves of life keep falling,
And across the sunless river's flow,
With accents soft and whispers low,
The friends long lost are calling:
While autumn his red glory wears,
And clouds oppress the sky like cares—
But the old griefs die and new joys are born,
And after midnight cometh morn.

The years wake and the years sleep,
And the past is full of sorrow;
The thoughtless laughs and the thoughtful weeps,
And each of the fruit of his follies reaps,
For to-day is the fate of to-morrow;
But new loves tempt us to forget
The old and old friends love us yet—
So the old griefs die and new joys are born,
And after midnight cometh morn.

The years laugh, the years sigh,
But the flowers for you are blowing;
As girlhood's days go dancing by,
And womanhood's blithe May is nigh,
With hopes and fancies glowing;
While love his nets for you prepares,
And lurks to catch you unawares—
And the old griefs die and new joys are born,
And after midnight cometh morn.

The years live and the years die,
And all they touch they sadden;
But still the heart can time defy,
Hope still with purple flush our sky,
And sober friendship gladden;
And well as we have loved before,
In autumn we can love once more—
For the old griefs die and new joys are born,
And after the midnight cometh morn.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Passed to spirit life, from the home of her parents at Marcellus, Mich., Oct. 12, 1904, Miss Ella Lockwood, only child of Mr. and Mrs. Guy Lockwood, in the 12th year of her age. Ella was a beautiful child, loved by all who knew her. Her parents have been life-long Spiritualists and the knowledge of our philosophy inspired her in the hour of transition. The funeral was held at the home, Oct. 14, and was largely attended. Services conducted by the writer.

DR. E. H. DENSLOW.

Passed to spirit life, Oct. 24, from the Dayton Hospital, where suffering held him long, Mr. John Albert Schrader, aged 51 years. His remains were brought back to Newport, Ky., his former home. The funeral services were held on the 26th inst., at the Spiritualist Temple, Dr. J. O. M. Hewitt officiating, and his body laid at rest in the beautiful Evergreen Cemetery.

COR.

Passed to spirit life from the Woman's Home and Hospital, in Grand Rapids, Mich., Oct. 8, Mrs. Elizabeth Winch, wife of Caleb Winch. Deceased was in the 79th year of her age, and had been a sufferer from paralysis for several years, but bore her long illness with a sweet fortitude, and when the summons came for release she gladly yielded up the poor clay and departed, we firmly believe, to her well-earned spirit home with rejoicing.

Mrs. Winch was for many years a devoted Spiritualist and medium of quite remarkable powers; a woman beloved by all who knew her for her many sterling good qualities. She was a much esteemed member of the Eastern Star Fraternity of this city, also of the Benevolent Ten. Mrs. Cora Morrell of this city, conducted the funeral services, and the remains covered with flowers, the kindly tribute of all the Spiritualist societies of the city, as also of the fraternities above mentioned, were followed to their last resting place. Her aged husband and three daughters are the immediate relatives called to mourn her loss.

MRS. C. H. HINKLY.

Snatched without a moment's warning from his work as brakeman on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad, Saturday, October 22, by a causalty, Charles H. Stiles, of 2719 Wayne avenue, Chicago.

This young man, who would have been 21 years of age had he remained until next February, was the sole support of a widowed mother, an invalid brother and a little sister 9 years old. A strong, active, industrious, exemplary young life, wrenched from the affections, duties and pleasures of earth by an "accident." Nothing could or can be said at such a time except that which did and does prove the only source of strength at such an hour—a knowledge that the loved ones do not die; are still living and loving. The Brotherhood of Trainmen took charge of the remains from the first until the last rites. Their brief but beautiful service was read at the chapel, Graceland, followed by the writer who conducted the services for the family and friends. A large company of friends, many of them young women and men, nearly filled the chapel, and listened with sympathetic hearts to the services which occurred Wednesday, Oct. 26, at 4 p. m. The beauty of the day and hour, the peacefulness of the surroundings and the strong, immortal presence made the service one to be long remembered. May the mother, brother and sister realize the presence and sustaining power of this young, strong spirit.

CORA L. V. RICHMOND.

Passed to the higher life, Mrs. Rebecca Bingham Coolidge, at the home of her niece, Mrs. J. W. Bennett, at Dunning, Ill., Oct. 21, 1904.

Mrs. Coolidge (whose maiden name was Coggin) was born in Mount Vernon, N. H., May 4, 1827. She was united in marriage to Aaron R. Coolidge in January, 1851. Mr. Coolidge passed on in 1892. Mrs. Coolidge had attained the ripe age of 77 years, 5 months and 17 days. She was a fervent Spiritualist, the writer having known her for 30 years as prominent among the Spiritualists of Boston and Onset. She was a rare character, full of goodness, kindness and fidelity to her friends and to her convictions. She always attended the meetings to hear the discourses from the writer. She admired also the discourses and work of W. J. Colville, and other speakers in the ranks of Spiritualism.

A brother living in Florida, several nieces and nephews, among whom was Mrs. Bennett, whom she greatly loved, survive her, and even the younger generation think and speak lovingly of "Aunt Rebecca." By request of Mrs. Coolidge the writer officiated at the services held over the casket, a brief service at Dunning, and a more lengthy one at the chapel, Graceland. Only the immediate family and friends were present. The remains were incinerated. A large circle of friends in Boston and vicinity will miss the kindly, beaming face of our arisen friend, but will recognize the glad-release from suffering and the loving presence of her spirit. THE MORRIS PRATT INSTITUTE

Mrs. Mattie E. Hull writes: "There has been a marked change in the sentiment of those who take up the psychic work in our class, within three years; (we have persons among us who were with us in the Training School at Maple Dell and Lily Dale) and it is gratifying to know that our students begin to realize it assists the interior unfolding to engage in studies that are along those lines.

"For six years (ever since I have had charge of the psychic work in our Training School), I have looked for a volume, some thing that was in and of itself the cream of the philosophy underlying mediumship. When Mr. Hull read aloud to me from The Arcana of Spiritualism, I said many times, "Eureka!" Hitherto the lessons and lectures have been given to me from the invisibles. The task was severe, and I felt unless I had help I could not go on. In conversation with Mr. Weaver, who is Superintendent of Instruction, he said, 'There must be a book somewhere, if not now, in the near future that coincides with our teachings.' I cannot tell how rejoiced I was, when The Arcana of Spiritualism fell into our hands, and by Prof. Weaver's advice we have adopted it as a text book, and now I find that by its assistance the task is easy. My method is to mark certain portions for memorizing, and interpolate with discussion and my own inspiration."

THE BELIEF IN IMMORTALITY.

The belief in the immortality of the soul has perhaps more than any other belief contributed to make life endurable under circumstances the most adverse. It has been a solace to man in the deepest affliction. It has buoyed him up with courage in the presence of the greatest danger. It has made him resigned to the inevitable in the face of the sternest experiences, indeed of the most terrible tortures. To millions in all ages, in all circumstances of life, amid every variety of condition, its influence has been felt, inspiring man with hopefulness, when without it, he must have sunk in despair.

The evidence of immortality does not consist in any class of "phenomena." It cannot be proven by any special occurrence, whether the occurrence be natural or "supernatural," normal or supernormal. The mere fact of the movement of a table without contact or a communication from an invisible order of being cannot prove immortality. A communication from one who has departed this life can only prove the continued existence of that personality under other conditions. It cannot prove that that personality will exist through the unending ages of the future. This is not susceptible of proof by an appeal to any class of experiences whatever. There are those who will question whether, given the proof of the survival of death, it is even a probability of the eternal persistence and continuity of the individual. Certainly it affords no actual proof that the individual will live forever.

Perhaps the strongest, most universal indication of the immortality of man is to be found in the very intuition of man's nature, in that which makes him bold to look forward to an endless future as his heritage, which makes belief in future life necessary to the conception of the completeness of his being, which makes him shrink from the contemplation of annihilation, to dread passing from the fullness of life to nothingness. Man may argue that as matter is immortal, so is mind, but this does not very much strengthen the conviction in the immortality of the individual being. Man may claim that there is no evidence that the soul in its essential nature had a beginning or will ever have an end, but this is more of the nature of speculation than of absolute certitude. Man may argue that there is no demand in the universe without supply and that, therefore, the demand for immortal life requires the fulfillment of the desire and expectation, but this is an argument, however satisfactory to many, which makes but small impression upon some minds.

The fact is, belief in immortality did not have its origin in experiential proof nor in logical reasoning, nor is it very much affected one way or the other by appeals to evidence and argument. It has its foundation in the nature of man, in the deepest part of his being, in his affections; and it persists through all the changes of this changing world because of its ineradicable basis in the human mind and human heart.

If there were not a life larger than this to which man is destined after his earthly career, the belief would not be so necessary to his happiness. It would not form so dominating a part of his convictions; it would not be the subject of a vast amount of his thought; it would not give rise to altars and temples; it would not make man sacrifice here often everything that he values most, even this life itself, if there were not some basis for it deep in man's nature. It is a faith which has a rational foundation in the consideration that this universe is a cosmos and not a chaos, that there has been a progressive development of life from the moneron up to man, that man is the highest product of the forces which have been in operation for millions of years, that no other rival appears or is to appear in the evolutionary process, that evolution must come to a standstill or continue in man's onward progress; that the final extinction of life on this globe without continued life beyond involves the extinction of all the progress made during the past millions of years; that, therefore, there is a rational demand for personal continuance in the very nature of things as an explanation of the struggle and suffering and progress which have marked the history of this earth through millions of years.

The earliest recorded attempt to demonstrate the immortality of the thinking, sentient, conscious principle in man is that of Socrates in the famous Platonic dialogue, entitled the Phaedo. It is needless to say that the talk on this subject of the old Athenian wise man is readable to this hour. Socrates was pretty certain that his inner man, or self, would elude the undertaker, as he jocosely intimated by his reply to his friend Crito's inquiry as to his burial. He bade his friend not to be afflicted when he saw his body buried or cremated, as if he, the real Socrates, was undergoing that operation.

Socrates maintains the doctrine of the soul's pre-existence before its present entanglement and alliance with the body. Before its birth into this life, he says, it led an ideal existence; so that ideas and principles, such as make us rational, intelligent, and reflective beings in our present life, are merely recollections and more or less dim reminiscences of our antenatal existence, which are revived in us here by the copies of ideas with which the world is filled.

All this, of course, is pure speculation, and Oriental tradition, which Plato probably picked up in Egypt or Mesopotamia or farther East, and put into the mouth of Socrates, the stay-at-home Athenian, whom he uses in part as a ventilator of his own thoughts and theories. But the coolness and tranquil assurance with which Socrates drank the fatal potion indicated at least that he was fully satisfied that, whatever destiny or lot awaited him in the hereafter, it would be all right. He went into the "gulf of night," not only unterrified, but sublimely acquiescent in whatever fate awaited him, after the hemlock should have done its work upon his organization. His sublimely tranquil mood in the presence of death, with all his splendid intellectual faculties in full and even joyous activity, showed human nature at its best and noblest. Death had no sting for him, and was winning no victory over him. In the consciousness of an upright life, actuated and directed by the loftiest and most unselfish motives, he looked not only the here, but the hereafter in the face without quailing or blenching, but joyously, festively, with a humorous sally on his lips aimed at one of his friends, whom he bade to bury him in such a manner as he pleased, if he could catch him.

In the boundlessness of his rational and psychological or anthropological curiosity, Socrates probably welcomed death as an opportunity for exploring the great secret, the unexplored country beyond this mortal stage of being, into which he had endeavored to send his thoughts all his life long.

Ingenious reasoning and subtle arguments on this subject have no effect with the millions who believe that there is life after death simply because they can not help believing it, because their desire is so strong that it takes the form of conviction and their hope is so intense that it takes the form of certainty. They say or feel

"To love is still
To have. Nearer to memory than to eye
And dearer yet to anguish than to comfort, still
We hold him by our love that shall not die.
For while it dieth not, thus he cannot. Try!
Who can put out the motion or the smile!
The old ways of being noble all with him laid by?
Because we love, he is. Then trust awhile."

So speaks the heart and so will it ever speak in the presence of death. If the belief in a future life did not have its foundations deep in the human heart, it would long ago have been extinguished by reason of the frightful superstitions which have been associated with it and which have made it seem to be sometimes instead of the greatest boon possible to man, the greatest curse that could possibly have been inflicted upon him. Its persistence through all the thousands of years of priestcraft, superstition and religious fraud is the best evidence that it has a basis in something deeper than the mere speculations of philosophy or the mere zeal of the religious devotee.

It is in the presence of death that we feel most deeply the heart's need of faith in immortal life, and it is then too that we feel the meaningless of our existence, unless the present state is supplemented by another higher and better than the present. It is, too, in the presence of death that the confidence is often the strongest. It does not, of course, enable us wholly to overcome the grief caused by the loss experienced, but it helps to reconcile us to that loss and gives in the supreme moment of grief, comfort and consolation, without which the heart would break.

So many fall because it is easier than to climb.

A Christian farmer had just returned from church where he listened to a sermon on the proper observance of the Sabbath. As he drove toward the stable, after leaving his family at the house, he noticed a dark, threatening cloud in the west. He had a lot of hay in the field that would be ruined by rain. He was up to this proposition. If he saved his soul he must lose his hay, and if he saved his hay he must lose his soul. Which he decided to save was seen by the state of his hay mound a couple of hours later.

The theological trinity is one of the oldest humbugs preserved by the religious world. Three men do not make one man. Why does it require three gods to make one God? There is an old saying that two heads are better than one. Perhaps it is on the ground that three heads are better than two that the trinity was constructed.—The Truth Seeker.

Communion With the Unseen.

Professor Henry Melvill Gwatkin, of Cambridge, speaking in the Edinburgh University, delivered his fifth Gifford Lecture on "The Knowledge of God," and made good use of "the belief in communion with the unseen" in support of his contention that God is revealed in life, and that religion should not be hastily condemned. We quote from the report of the address in the "Scotsman" according to which Professor Gwatkin said:

"There is strong evidence that the belief in communion with the unseen is not all illusion. Hardly any belief which is not absolutely universal is confirmed by so vast a convergence of sober testimony. It takes a color from everything that influences life, yet seems always essentially the same. No fair-minded student can mistake its general and normal tendency to an intense and vivid life of purity and kindliness. Any attempt to explain so general a fact by partial causes is plain trifling. Morbid conditions, for example, are natural enough in a trying time of moral unrest. But further evidence is needed to show that morbid conditions originate the new life, then that they sustain its later growth; and yet further evidence will still be needed to give us reasonable assurance that this is as commonly a fact. Can they be suggested in the case of John Wesley, of Newton and Faraday, of Butler and Lightfoot? So likewise of countless common men. We can rule out this evidence if we start from the axiom that personal conviction of religion is of itself morbid, but hardly in any other way, and that way is begging the question."

TO THE SKEPTIC.

After all, could you say it were best
That life should cease and be no more,
And we make sleep our eternal guest
When she had crossed our threshold o'er?

Would gladness come if it were true
That all we live should fade away,
And be as gleam on morning dew
When sun proclaims another day?

With hope's exquisite gardens gone,
Where lovely flowers have ever grown
To sweeten life and give perfume
From out the buds—or leaves in bloom?

THE BOOK OF WISDOM

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER

A Battle Royal,

In The Open Court, Between the Giant Minds of Spiritualism will begin in this paper some time in November, upon the subject matter contained in the late book by Dr. J. M. Peebles, on "The Demonism of the Ages, Spirit Obsessions," Etc., which promise s to eclipse all previous discussions.

TO GEORGE MURRAY DRAKE.

(Born Feb. 28, 1841. Died Nov. 3, 1902.)

Good friend, companion of those halcyon days
Ere death called thee, or years had bent my frame,
Of one long near thee in life's strenuous ways,
Receive this tribute to thy stainless name.
Great was thy scorn of greed and unjust gain
Even as thy grief for others' grief and pain.
Much in the spirit was thy life's estate;
Upraised thy thought from things of earth and time,
Resting in faith that bade thee calmly wait
Reunions blest in the blest spirit clime;
All hail to memory dear, comrade at rest,
Yours the goal reached, ours still the toilsome quest.
Destroyer time, incessant quenchless fire,
Reduce to ashes every mortal frame,
All flesh to dust, the spirit mounting higher,
Knowing its source, divine celestial flame,
Even as "fire seeks the sun," seeks heaven from whence it came.

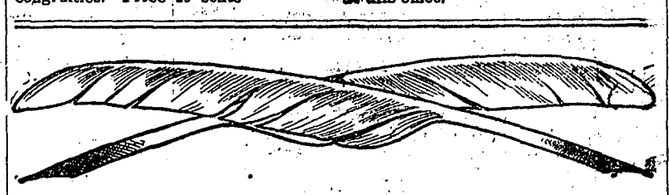
"Critical Point" In Atheism.



In The Progressive Thinker of Oct. 1, under title of "Not Atheists," we read as follows: "More than once in these columns, we have declared, 'There are no Atheists in fact; for all believe the world, and all within it, are governed by fixed and changeless law; that law implies a law giver. * * * It matters not by what name it is known, it is self-existent and eternal.'"

Recognizing the scope of the term "eternal" as being limitless as to the past, as well as limitless as to the future, and also recognizing the absolute independence demanded of things "self-existent," we would beg of the author, though charitably yet thoroughly, to define the etymological meaning, and logical force of the term "law giver," as used in the quotation; and thereby, probably for the first time, in the history of known theological literature, strike a comprehensible demarkation line, between the ideal and only comprehension of an artificial and a natural universe.

The two terms "law giver" and "self-existent" seem to come together in an effective and demoralizing discord; but perhaps the author, in a few lines, can succeed in harmonizing what, in the past has stood, a bulwark to reconciliation, through all changes that have been sung upon this same set of words; always and constantly in a war of discord as the dual arguments, are made to approach each other. Hoping for an elucidation, I am, studiously,

The Open Court.

A Fall and Winter Session to be Held, to Try the Case of J. S. Loveland Versus Dr. J. M. Peebles.

This is an important case to be tried at the Fall and Winter Session of The Open Court. The Question at issue is as follows: Shall the book issued by Dr. Peebles, entitled, "Spirit Obsession, or the Demonism of the Ages," be burned and the plates destroyed, as some desire, and the Doctor restrained from employing his pen in disseminating his peculiarly pernicious doctrines in regard to Spirit Obsession or Demons? Prof. Loveland will appear in Court in his own behalf, with other wise counsel, endeavoring to annihilate the book, while Dr. Peebles, assisted by able minds, will endeavor to demonstrate to the jury that every word in the book is absolutely true, and that there is great danger in obsessing evil influences to all mankind. This remarkable book should first be read by those who wish to appear for or against it in The Open Court. It will be sent out, if ordered soon, for $1.00, postage prepaid. There is a vast fund of information in this book, derived from modern and ancient sources, that will prove exceedingly valuable to every reflective mind, especially to those engaged in occult studies. Now is the time to send in your subscription.
